HOW TO MAINTAIN ASIAN RECORDER FILE:

ASIAN RECORDER news sheets are issued weekly. They are numbered connectively from the first issue in January, 1955.

Events in all the countries of Asia are listed under each country, arranged alphabetically, with a summary for each if necessary.

Events about Asia happenings outside Asia are listed under a separate heading —ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA.

Sport is listed at the end, without regard to country.

Each item is acknowledged to the source from which it is taken—newspaper, periodical, Radio, Embassy or Government Department—to give it authenticity.

Every three months, these news-sheets are accompanied by an INDEX. Each year, the Annual INDEX will incorporate all the three previous quarterly Indices. An explanation of the INDEX is given on the back-cover.

To insert news-sheets in the cover-binder, open the binder by the back-flap, unscrew the nuts, raise the flat rod and insert the news-sheets : thereafter, let the flat rod rest on the sheets, press the flat rod firmly and screw down the nuts.

AFGHANISTAN

A. Mr. N. A. Etemadi's Visit To USSR: The Prime Minister, Mr. Noor Ahmad Etemadi, paid an official visit to Moscow in the second week of October, 1968 at the invitation of the Soviet Government.

Mr. Etemadi had prolonged talks with the Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, and other leaders on matters of common interest, particularly economic co-operation between the two countries.

Mr. Etemadi invited Mr. Kosygin to visit Afghanistan in 1969 and to attend the celebrations of the 50th anniversary of the establishment of friendly relations between their countries.

A joint communique issued on November 14, 1968 said that the discussion of the international problems showed again that the Governments of the two countries had identical or close views on many points.

The communique expressed concern with the situation that formed in the Middle East as a result of Israel's aggression against the Arab countries and the situation that endangered peace. Both sides also expressed profound satisfaction over the fact that the majority of the countries had signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. They also declared that they were invariably striving to help in every way to liquidate completely the remnants of colonialism.

The two sides expressed their will to develop mutually advantageous co-operation over the period when Afghanistan was carrying out its Third Five-Year Plan.

A. Constitutional Reforms: In a bid to make his country's monarchical system the most democratic of any monarchy in the world, King Jigme Dorji Wangchuk announced some constitutional reforms in a speech before the Tsongdu (National Assembly) in the second week of November, 1968.

The King suggested that the Tsongdu pass an amendment to the Constitution whereby if two-thirds of the members of the Assembly were satisfied that the King of the land was not ruling the country to the best interests of the people and demand his elimination, the ruling monarch would have to step down from the throne in favour of his successor. "While the monarchy is certainly a sacred institution, more so if it is popular, no monarch should feel secure on the throne just because he inherited it, even when his rule appears patently unpopular".

By this reform, the King sought to make the continuity of the rule of any individual ruler dependent on his enjoying the support of at least two-thirds of the members of the Assembly. He hoped that this reform would bring the monarch closer to the people, make him more conscious of his direct personal responsibility for the welfare of his subjects and thus ensure political stability in the country.

He said: "I think our country is not so much secure being located between two powerful and big countries. But at present there is no danger of any aggression from outside and there is peace and goodwill everywhere. I think this is a golden opportunity to plan for and provide strong security both for the present and the future."

Last April, the King had given his country its first Ministry.

The Tsongdu earlier approved two other changes proposed by the King towards the process of democratizing the monarchy. Henceforth, the Tsongdu became a near-sovereign body. No decision of the Tsongdu, embodied in any resolution or statute passed by it, would have to receive the assent of the King to be effective and operative. These would automatically be binding on the Government.

Secondly, the freedom of speech, so long limited to the members of the Tsongdu, would now be enjoyed by all Bhutanese nationals.

The 150-member Tsongdu—the indirectly elected National Assembly of Bhutan—comprises monks, Ministers and laymen drawn from rural constituencies.

CAMBODIA

A. Prek Thnot Project—Aid From Ten Nations: An Agreement providing for implementation of the Prek Thnot power and irrigation development project was signed at UN Headquarters in the second week of November, 1968 by representatives of 10 co-operating Governments—Australia, Canada, West Germany, India, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, Britain and Cambodia.

The ten Governments and the UN Development Programme (UNDP), at a conference in September, 1968 had agreed to contribute the equivalent of $17,745,000 towards the $27 million cost of the first stage of the project, which is part of the co-ordinated programme for development of the Lower Mekong River Basin. The remaining costs will be met by Cambodia.

The project, Cambodia's first multi-purpose river scheme, involves the construction of a dam on the Prek Thnot River for power, irrigation and flood control. It is designed to provide, in the first stage, irrigation for 5,000 hectares; a power installation with a capacity of 18,000 kw; a storage dam; a diversion weir; and supplementary construction.

CHINA

A. Cultural Revolutionary Committees Formed In Tibet: According to Lhasa Radio, cultural revolutionary committees—a prestige project of Mr. Mao Tse-tung—were formed throughout the Autonomous Region of Tibet on September 5, 1968.

The Radio admitted that a protracted and fierce struggle had to be waged before the committees could be set up by assembling the "army, cadres and masses" in one revolutionary group.

The Revolutionary Committee for the Tibet Autonomous Region (TARRC), was headed by Mr. Tseng Yung-ya, acting military commander of the occupation forces in Tibet. Of its 12 members, eight Chinese, including Mr. Jen Jung, political commissar of the Tibet military area, and four were Tibetans, including Mr. Ngabo Ngawang Jigme, chairman of the Tibet Autonomous Region.

The first session of the TARRC, which took place on September 19, adopted eight resolutions. They contained the usual eulogies to Mr. Mao Tse-tung but pointed out that all revolutionaries must follow Mr. Mao through Marshal Lin Piao.

One of the resolutions called for greater watchfulness to "Lin Piao's attitude to Mao's thoughts. We must learn from Lin Piao." Another resolution was devoted entirely to quotations from Marshal Lin Piao.

B. Changes In Educational System: Under the impetus of Maoist policy, rural primary schools are rapidly abandoning most conventional studies.

They are becoming community centres where a modicum of reading, writing and arithmetic is mixed with massive portions of the thoughts of Mr. Mao Tse-tung, daily labour in the fields, and peasant-taught classes on how to do farm tasks.

The prospects are that State elementary schools in rural areas will disappear, with some possible exceptions, and that all rural primary schools will provide only the most rudimentary instruction in conventional subjects.

Directives issued from Peking in August, 1968 had called for workers in the cities and peasants in the countryside to assume, with the help of the military, a vanguard role in the Cultural Revolution. Specifically, workers and peasants were told to take over schools, from universities downwards. Workers and peasants have proceeded with school take-over throughout the country.

The Maoist indictment against the rural schools is that they put too much emphasis on book learning and conventional subject matter.

The blame for the whole system was put on the "bourgeois-revisionist" policies that Mr. Liu Shao-chi, as Head of State, was said to have put into effect.

C. Efforts To Re-build Party: China has embarked energetically on the task of re-building the Communist Party after the ravages caused by the Cultural Revolution.

This effort, in the words used by Mr. Mao Tse-tung at the plenary meeting of the Central Committee, consists of "getting rid of the stale air and letting in the fresh." The object, therefore, is to eliminate a certain number of former party members and admit new elements. After the storms and vicissitudes of the Cultural Revolution, it is now the fate of many individuals which is at stake.

Observers believe the Central Committee may have intended to encourage the "most advanced" elements in the lower ranks of the party to proceed vigorously with the necessary purge. The Committee did so by setting the example of formally expelling Mr. Liu Shao-chi.

It also condemned specifically the "adverse February current" of 1967. Though this phrase was not amplified, it probably refers to an "anti-Left" current which was prevalent at the beginning of 1967.

The election of new, dynamic members of the party is a process which is believed to pass through several stages. It appears that each individual case is first discussed at the base, by "units of the masses". After a sifting process, the final decisions are thought to be made at the city or provincial level.

According to Peking reports there appears to be little reason to doubt, however, that the operation will be carried out successfully in the next few months. This will finally permit the holding of the ninth congress of the Communist Party—the first in 10 years—which is expected to take place some time in the first half of 1969.

D. Peking-Washington "Hot" Line: According to "authentic reports", the Pakistani High Commission's New Delhi newsletter said that a Peking-Washington "hot" line has been in use for over a year.

A telephone link between San Francisco and Shanghai had operated since July 14, 1968 by the Pacific Telephone Company. Peking and Washington make use of this on the quiet.

INDONESIA

A. Move To Repeal Sino-Indonesia Dual Nationality Treaty: Antara reported in the second week of November, 1968 that the Government had submitted a Bill to Parliament to repeal Law No. of 1958 concerning the Sino-Indonesia Dual Nationality Treaty.

The main point of the Law was in effect to express agreement with the Treaty which the two countries signed originally in 1955 when the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, was in Bandung to take part in the Asian-African Congress.

Under the Treaty, overseas Chinese in Indonesia could obtain Indonesian citizenship merely by opting for it. Specifically the Treaty provided that overseas Chinese born in Indonesia could choose their nationality within one year of coming of age. This Agreement was gathering dust for three years, but early in 1958 action was taken by Djakarta to activate the Treaty through passage of law. Due to opposition from local people, Indonesia stalled further action for some time, but subsequently when the Sukarno regime's relations with Peking were beginning to warm up, it gave in to pressure from China and the two Governments ratified the Treaty early in 1960 in Peking. The Treaty was to remain in force for 20 years, after which either party could terminate it after one year's advance notice.

The official Chinese news agency, Hsinhua, on November 17, 1968 attacked the Indonesian Government for seeking to annul it unilaterally after it had been in force for only eight years. Hsinhua termed the Indonesian move as "extremely grave" and charged that unilateral abrogation of the Treaty was aimed at persecution of overseas Chinese.

Peking's concern could be noted from the fact that after the passage of the proposed Law, overseas Chinese desiring to become Indonesian citizens could do so only after going through normal procedures like naturalization. Of approximately three million overseas Chinese in Indonesia, half were estimated to be Peking passport holders. It was people in this category who would be most hit by the proposed new Law. It would make it easier for the Indonesian authorities to take firm legal action against Chinese found or suspected of having links with the outlawed Communist Party.

The Bill was regarded as certain to be passed by Parliament because, according to Indonesian sources, no Bill was presented to Parliament unless its approval was certain.

B. Condemned Communists Executed: The Army Prosecutor, Brig.-Gen. Mochamil Effendi, on October 30, 1968 confirmed that three of five condemned Communists had been executed the previous day.

He said they were Party politburo members Sudisman and Njono, and provincial party leader Wirjo Martono.

They were sent to the firing squads after President Suharto had rejected clemency appeals on their behalf from the Soviet Communist Party leader, Mr. Nikolai Podgorny. They were condemned for their part in the 1965 coup attempt.

Djakarta also ignored a strongly worded appeal by the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee which said the execution of two politburo members—Njono and Sudisman—would damage Indonesia's national interest, "a responsibility which rests with those who are interested in maintaining the frenzy of anti-communism in the country."

The Soviet Union had officially maintained that the chief responsibility for the 1965 coup lay not with the Indonesian Communist Party, but with a group of rebel army officers.

Two other communists, the intelligence chief, Mr. Sjam, and the rebel army officer, Brig. Supardjo, were not executed as originally reported by army sources.

Russian Criticism:

The Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda on October 30 described as an "atrocity the execution of three Indonesian Communist leaders accused of participating in the abortive 1965 coup.

It said: "Reaction in Indonesia has apparently set itself the task of physically annihilating and politically suppressing all patriots and anti-imperialists who stand for the country's genuine independence, and primarily Communists."

Tass described the execution as a "criminal act."

C. Agricultural Co-operation With Malaysia: The Ministers for Agriculture of Indonesia and Malaysia met in Djakarta in the second week of November, 1968 to discuss possibilities of increasing co-operation between their countries in the agricultural sector.

A joint communique issued on November 10 said the two Ministers had agreed that closer co-operation between the two countries in the fields of agriculture, fishery and animal husbandry should be along the basic lines laid down at the ASEAN Conference.

Both Ministers agreed to have closer co-operation on the boosting of production and the promotion of research and marketing of agricultural commodities. They held that trade in agricultultural, fishery and animal husbandry products between the two countries should be made direct, without an intermediary. A special committee should be set up where Indonesian and Malaysian representatives could negotiate fishery issues in the Straits of Malacca.

They called for joint projects to meet the demand for cattle protein in the two countries, and also for joint projects for animal husbandry products and a modern cattle breeding centre in Indonesia.

Economic Relations:

Meanwhile, a delegation of the Medan-Indonesia-Malaysia Chamber of Commerce recently visited Kuala Lumpur and conducted discussions with the United Chambers of Commerce in Malaysia. They exchanged views on economic relations between the two countries.

At the meeting, both sides discussed trade implementation, particularly as regards the "Basic Arrangement on Trade and Economic Relations" signed on May 11, 1967.

Both sides were of the view that results of the trade implementation had not yet achieved the level expected. This was especially because the trade regulations outlined were much heavier than those between Indonesia and Singapore.

Both sides also considered the setting up of a "Joint Chamber of Commerce" next to the possibility to conduct a joint venture between entrepreneurs of the two countries in various fields.

IRAN

A. Cabinet Re-shuffle: The Prime Minister, Mr. A. A. Hoveida on November 24, 1968 announced a re-shuffle of the Cabinet and changes in the country's top economic and financial positions.

Six Ministers were involved. They included the Labour and Social Welfare Minister, Mr. Ataollah Khosrovani who became Minister of the Interior, and Mr. Manouchehr Partov who was made Minister of Justice, after having been Under-Secretary at the Justice Ministry.

The Deputy Prime Minister, Dr. Abdul Majid Majidi was appointed Minister of Labour, and the new Agricultural Products and Consumer Goods Minister was Dr. Manoucher Goudarzi.

JAPAN

A. Another Term As Premier For Mr. E. Sato: Mr. Eisaku Sato was re-elected President of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party at a special convention held in Tokyo on November 27, 1968.

The President of the ruling party in Japan is automatically chosen to head the Government. So Mr. Sato is assured of at least two more years in office as Prime Minister for the third consecutive term.

Mr. Sato defeated his two rivals by big margins on the first ballot collecting 249 out of a total of 452 eligible votes. The former Foreign Minister, Mr. Takeo Miki got 107 votes, while the third runner, former Industries Minister, Mr. Maeo could get only 95. Thus, Mr. Sato fully lived up to his own pre-election confidence of winning on the first ballot.

Political observers expressed surprise at the strength shown by Mr. Sato in winning well over the required minimum of 228 votes, because even those among them who had conceded his victory had generally expected he would just squeeze through past the simple majority mark. Mr. Miki and Mr. Maeo who had concluded an election alliance in a bid to prevent Mr. Sato from gaining enough votes on the first ballot and thus force a second ballot failed badly. Mr. Sato's comfortable victory virtually ruled out any serious challenge to his leadership from his Party rivals for the next two years.

B. New Chief Executive Of Okinawa: Mr. Chobyo Yara, Chairman of the Okinawa Teachers' Association backed jointly by Opposition parties, was elected on November 10, 1968 as Okinawa's first popularly elected Chief Executive.

He defeated Mr. Junji Nishime, the candidate supported by the Okinawa Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) by about 30,000 votes.

LDP, however, retained a majority in the Ryukyu Legislature by winning 17 of the 32 seats in the election. The Socialist Masses Party took eight seats, the Socialist Party two and the People's Party three.

From among the 13 Independent candidates, one Leftist and one conservative were elected. The distribution of seats between the conservative and progressive camps was 18.14—the same ratio as before the election.

A notable advance was made by the pro-Communist People's Party, which increased its strength from one to three seats.

Mr. Yara, long involved in the Okinawan reversion movement, strongly opposes the presence of US bases and has called for the immediate reversion of Okinawa to Japan.

At a news conference in Naha on November 11, he said that he would first try to "soothe the nerves of the Okinawan people which have been affected greatly in the unusual warlike atmosphere created by the election." At the same time, he would continue to promote the campaign for the unconditional and immediate return of Okinawa to Japan.

He also pledged to work hard to improve the living standard of his fellow Okinawans. He declared that he would try to shift Okinawa's economic reliance on the military bases USA maintains in Okinawa to a "peaceful" basis.

The election of Mr. Yara as Chief Executive dealt a severe blow to both the Government and the Liberal-Democratic Party. Informed sources said Government and LDP leaders were apprehensive that the election results might adversely affect the timetable for Okinawa's reversion now being contemplated by the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato.

Mr. Sato said that Okinawans were not well-informed about the LDP policy of carrying out its Okinawa reversion programme based on a gradual identification approach.

C. Joint Struggle Against Security Treaty Planned: The Japan Socialist Party (JSP) has decided to form a joint front with the Communist Party "to the minimum possible extent" in the struggle against extension of the Japan-USA Security Treaty in 1970.

The Democratic Socialist Party (DSP) and the Komeito were excluded from the campaign. The reasons given for their exclusion were that DSP recognized the Security Pact, while Komeito refused to carry out the anti-Treaty struggle outside the Diet.

A special committee of JSP has prepared a draft programme of struggle for the abrogation of the Security Treaty.

Headed by Chairman Tomomi Narita, the special committee was entrusted with the task of co-ordinating all activities of the party connected with the anti-Treaty campaign.

The draft struggle policy stressed the party's strong desire to make the 1970 struggle fruitful by asserting Socialist leadership and carry out the rehabilitation of the party during the struggle process. In analyzing the situation surrounding the 1970 anti-Security Treaty struggle and its characteristics, the draft defined that the party's struggle against the automatic extension of the Japan-US Security Treaty in 1970 envisaged by both the Government and Liberal Democratic Party was entirely different from the 1960 anti-security pact movement. The 1970 struggle, therefore, should be consolidated by new forces, new policies, and new strategies as well as tactics.

D. Mr. Lee Kuan Yew's Visit: The Singapore Prime Minister, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, paid an official visit to Tokyo in the third week of October, 1968.

He had discussions with the Premier, Mr. Eisaku Sato, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Takeo Miki, and other leaders concerned with foreign and economic subjects.

During the discussions, Mr. Lee told Mr. Sato that continued US commitment in South-East Asia was of decisive importance for the stabilization of the region. Should USA abandon its role, the countries of South-East Asia would be compelled to re-examine totally the question of security for the whole of South-East Asia.

He pointed out that the two major sources of instability were the communist subversive activities in Malaysia and the influences of a still unstable Indonesia.

Mr. Sato proposed to Mr. Lee that Singapore join the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC). Mr. Lee said Singapore was ready to consider joining ASPAC positively, if it become clear that the regional organization would bring benefits to his country.

In reply to a question by Mr. Sato on the planned British withdrawal from South-East Asia, he said Singapore had had to accept the British decision taken to cut her overseas expenditures. He would continue to watch what Britain would do in the event a Conservative Government took over, pointing out that the Conservative leader, Mr. Edward Heath had declared that his party supported continued presence of British forces in South-East Asia.

On Japan's private investment in Singapore, he expressed satisfaction over the management of the Jurong Shipyard in the suburbs of Singapore City by a Japanese staff of Ishikawajima-Harima Heavy Industries. He disclosed that some 500 shipbuilding workers would soon be sent from Singapore to Japan for training.

The Joint Communique:

In a joint communique, Japan said Singapore pledged to facilitate the growth of bilateral trade relations and to encourage the development of economic co-operation between the two countries.

In it, Mr. Lee and Mr. Sato hoped that an early solution in Viet-Nam would greatly enhance the prospects of peace and stability in South-East Asia.

They welcomed the sign of growing regional and sub-regional co-operation in East and South-East Asia and South Pacific.

They saw a widening sphere of co-operation between the two countries within the frame-work of various regional organizations, particularly those for the enhancement of regional economic co-operation.

Their cordial discussions revealed an identity of views on a number of matters of common concern and confirmed the usefulness of personal contacts to further develop friendly relations between the two countries.

E. Ten-Fold Expansion Of Economy Predicted: A fantastic ten-fold expansion of the economy with the Gross National Product reaching the $1,000 billion level within the next two to three decades is the projection made by the Japan Regional Development Centre in an interim report on the basis of a survey it carried out recently.

Already, Japan's GNP in 1967 was about $120 billion, making it the third largest in the world. A level of $1,000 billion would probably place Japan's GNP next only to that of the United States, which is now of the order of $800 billion but which can also be expected to grow correspondingly during the same period to retain top spot in the world.

The survey also brought out a number of other salient points, which add up to painting the following future picture of Japan:

The country is expected to have something like 8,000 km. of expressways as compared with the present modest total of a mere 300 km. The study also indicated the need for large-scale airports and harbour facilities.

Demand for energy is expected to expand by ten times the present level, while the birth of new large-scale industrial establishments such as petro-chemical complexes is expected to call for the reclamation of something like 330 million square metres of land.

F. World's Strongest Steel Developed: The development of the strongest steel in the world was announced at a recent meeting of the Japan Metallurgical Society in Senai, north-east Japan.

Called "IN-U Steel," it is ultra-high-tension steel, developed by Dr. Hajime Nakamura, director of the Technical Research Institute of the Ishikawajima-Harima Heavy Industries Co., known for the construction of the world's biggest tanker. It has enough tensile strength to resist up to 250 kg of pressure per square millimeter.

Dr. Nakamura is also the inventor of the high-tension steel "IN Steel"' used for high-pressure containers, such as spherical tanks for propane gas, as well as ships and bridges. But the tensile strength of "IN Steel" is 100 kg or considerably lower than 180 kg of American-developed steel for jet aircraft. The newly developed "IN-U Steel" is 1.5 times stronger than the American steel. Ishikawajima-Harima Heavy Industries has applied for patent rights in not only Japan but also the United States, West Germany and Britain. At the same time, it is conducting intensive research for practical application of the new steel.

Several problems, including a welding method, remain to be resolved before the full practical application of the new steel. But Dr. Nakamura is optimistic in this respect. He says: "IN-U Steel is characterized by low cost, great strength and light weight. In the near future, it will be used as material for a wide range of products, such as super-high-speed engines and gas turbines. The new steel will also meet the needs of space science."

G. Heart Transplant Patient Dead: Japan's only heart transplant patient, Nobuo Miyazaki (18) died on October 30, 1968 after his trachea became obstructed by phlegm.

The death came 83 days after the successful heart transplant operation, conducted at the Sapporo Medical College Hospital on August 8.

The death was sudden and unexpected, according to Dr. Juro Wada who had conducted the operation.

A medical bulletin published by Dr. Wada in mid-October had said Miyazaki had tided over hepatitis from which he had suffered after a month-long smooth recovery from the major surgery. Later, Miyazaki died of acute respiratory insufficiency induced by bronchitis.

JORDAN

A. Parliament Calls For All-Out Effort Against Israel: The House of Representatives on October 7, 1968 called for doubling of efforts to develop the armed forces and stressed that the struggle against Israel would not end until all Arab territory was liberated.

It also paid a tribute to Iraqi and Saudi Arabian forces stationed in Jordan and to other Arab forces facing Israel. It said Jordan would not end its struggle "until the usurped Arab territory is liberated and the great sanctities and the Aqsa Mosque (in occupied Jerusalem) are saved".

It added that all activities in Jordan should be "consistent with the requirements of the battle (with Israel) and the country should be placed in a state of austerity, preparedness and general mobilization."

The House thanked Arab countries which supported Jordan politically, militarily and financially. It also expressed support for Jordan's Arab and foreign policies, and appreciation of the attitude of "friendly countries which stand on the side of the Arabs."

The House of Notables (the Upper House) also expressed support for the Government's domestic and foreign policies.

B. Economic Agreement With Rumania: Representatives of Jordan and Rumania signed in Amman on November 20, 1968 an Agreement under which Rumania will prospect for oil in an area east of the Jordan River. It also provided for technical and economic aid to Jordan.

Rumania, which also has an Economic Agreement with Israel, will supply equipment and technical knowledge to Jordan for the building of fertilizer, super-phosphate and mineral plants and power stations during 1968-77. Jordan will repay the cost with phosphates and other minerals.

Under the 10-year petroleum co-operation agreement, Rumania will provide technical knowledge, aid and equipment for Jordanian geological and oil prospecting and production projects, as well as prospecting themselves.

A 10-year Trade Agreement allows Rumania to buy phosphates, cigarettes, vegetables, fruit, textiles and other products to the extent of 30 per cent of its exports to Jordan. These will mainly be industrial machinery and equipment, trucks, timber and sugar.

KUWAIT

A. Shah Of Iran's Visit: The Shah of Iran visited Kuwait from November 13 to 17, 1968.

At the end of the visit, the Shah and the Emir of Kuwait issued a joint communique on November 17 urging the withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied Arab lands and the return of Jerusalem to its former status.

It said that the Shah and the Emir reviewed the current West Asian situation and declared their support for the rights of the Palestine Arab people.

The two rulers studied the situation in the Persian Gulf area also and asserted their belief in continued stability there and co-operation towards prosperity and progress.

LEBANON

A. Dr. A. Yafi Withdraws Resignation As Premier: The Prime Minister, Dr. Abdullah al Yafi, on November 13, 1968 withdrew his resignation 24 hours after submitting it to President Charles Helou.

Sources at the Prime Minister's office said that Dr. Yafi had withdrawn his resignation after numerous approaches by parliamentary groups and people's organizations.

President Helou had refused to accept Dr. Yafi's resignation, although the Premier had been insisting on the Government's departure in its present form. He favoured a more broadly-based Cabinet. It was now formed by four men, the three others being Mr. Hussein al-Oweiny, Mr. Pierre Gemayel, and Mr. Raymond Edde.

Dr. Yafi had tried to form a Government eight days before, but the Ministers named had rejected their appointments, insisting that the country needed a more broadly-based Cabinet, with all or most parliamentary groups represented. Dr. Yafi then formed his tight little team, with himself holding the Finance, Information, Social Affairs and Education portfolios, Mr Hussein al Oweiny was Minister for Foreign Affairs, Defence, Justice and Economy. Two other Ministers, Mr. Pierre Gemayel and Mr. Raymond Edde shared the other Ministries.

B. Birth Control Policy: In line with the policy of the Roman Catholic church, Lebanon has become perhaps the first country in Asia to take a step back from population control.

Until the third week of November, 1968, contraceptives of every sort were freely available at any pharmacy. But the Ministry of Health has now decreed that they will be supplied only on a doctor's prescription.

The move is the work of the Health Minister, Mr Pierre Gemayel, a former pharmacist himself, and a member of the Maronite church, an indigenous offshoot of Roman Catholicism.

The Maronites claim that theirs is the "national" church of Lebanon, even though they make up no more than 25 per cent of the country's population.

So when Mr. Gemayel heeded the Pope's recent encyclical condemning the use of contraceptives, he was imposing a minority view on the majority of his countrymen and on his own co-religionists, because recent inquiries have revealed that a great many Roman Catholics in Lebanon, as in other countries, quietly ignore their Church's ban on contraception.

PAKISTAN

A. Disturbances Continue—F-M. Ayub Khan's Broadcast: In his first-of-the-month broadcast to the nation on December 1, 1968, President Ayub Khan made major concessions to protesting students in efforts to end three weeks of anti-Government demonstrations.

He defended the recent arrest of Opposition political leaders, defended his administration against corruption charges and warned the people that "the whole nation may have to face turmoil and chaos" if the disturbances continued.

He devoted the major portion of his 22-minute speech to the students, saying "it is the duty of the Government to redress (their) genuine grievances."

He then ordered the repeal of a seven-year-old law that enabled the Government to withdraw college degrees from persons considered to have engaged in subversive activities after graduation. Opponents have charged that it limited political activities.

He also ordered a lowering of the minimal qualification marks for second division ranking from 50 to 45 per cent throughout the country and the lifting of promotion restrictions on students who fell in the third division.

Referring to the detention of Opposition political leaders, including the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, on November 13, 1968 on charges of inciting violence, he expressed "deep regret" that the arrests had been made. "The Provincial (West Pakistan) Government did everything possible to end these disturbances, and when no other alternative was left, it was forced to detain those who were promoting these disturbances."

President Ayub Khan added that the Government had enacted anti-corruption laws, but their effective enforcement was not possible unless persons brought forward evidence that someone was corrupt. "What is regrettable is that very few people have helped the Government in the application of these laws and in the eradication of bribery and corruption."

He lashed out at political opponents, who, he said, had no solution to offer for any basic problem. "All they say, in effect, is that what exists should first be destroyed and that the future will take care of itself. Such talk is clear proof that it comes from the morbid minds of irresponsible persons".

He also denied accusations that there were limits on freedom of speech, although he made no reference to similar charges about freedom of the Press.

He warned the nation that Pakistan might face increased "external pressure" if internal disorders continued.

Using language reserved for India, he said: "Unfortunately, there are certain Powers who are not reconciled to our existence and who want to weaken our national unity. They are always on the lookout for occasions which they can use for harming Pakistan. Our internal unity is the strongest front against the enemies. We should not allow this front to be weakened at any cost."

Air Marshal Asghar Khan Enters Politics:

The former Commander-in-Chief of the Air Force, Air Marshal Asghar Khan, who is regarded as a possible opponent to President Ayub Khan in the next Presidential election in 1970, announced on November 17, 1968 that he would enter politics.

The announcement, which followed a week of political and student unrest in Pakistan, apparently took the Government and country by surprise. Official Press agencies imposed on November 17 a clamp on all news of the 47-year-old Air Marshal's decision.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan, who retired as C-in-C in 1965, resigned his post as Chairman of Pakistan International Airlines earlier in 1968. In recent weeks he published a series of 12 articles criticizing the present regime and President Ayub Khan's policies.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan's Allegations:

Air Marshal Asghar Khan, former Chief of the Air Force, on November 17, 1968 accused the Ayub Government of keeping power through use of force and repression.

He also accused the Government of "nepotism, graft and administrative incompetence".

He stated this at a surprise news conference called in Lahore, where the Government had earlier detained the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto.

He said that the values for which Pakistan was created were being "blatantly ignored". "I have been watching for some time the deterioration in the political, social and economic conditions in the country. Social inequality and economic disparity are increasing and the gap between the rich and the poor is widening day by day.

"As a result of these conditions, the vast majority of our people have lost confidence in the Government's ability to discharge its responsibilities. The law and order situation has therefore been inevitably affected".

He deplored the arrest of Mr. Bhutto. "The arrests are very regrettable. People should be allowed to express their views".

Asked about his role as Chief of the Air Force in 1958 when President Ayub staged his coup, he said: "I had a job to do, to run the Air Force and I continued to do this until my retirement. It wasn't a question of supporting any one".

Air Marshal Asghar Khan's Call To People:

Air Marshal Asghar Khan called on his countrymen on November 22, 1968 to start a massive campaign modelled on the Indian Independence movement to bring down the present Government of President Ayub Khan, and said that he saw no reason why the Ayub Government could not be forced to resign through "lawful means."

If the people of undivided India could force the British out, then Pakistanis could do the same thing through peaceful agitation. "But, of course, it shouldn't take that long."

He claimed that a "national crisis of confidence has been created in this country" through the ten-year rule of President Ayub. He urged the people to press the Government for restoration of "liberty and democracy", but stressed that any changes must be brought about lawfully.

He criticised Mr. Ayub Khan for backing a semi-independent Government in occupied Kashmir. "The present Government in 'Azad' Kashmir was a farce. Had it been a democratic Government, it would have inspired people on both sides of Kashmir to make a positive move towards Independence."

Mr. M. Murshed Also Joins Politics:

Another well-known national figure, the former Chief Justice of the East Pakistan High Court, Mr. Mahboob Murshed, announced his intention in Dacca on November 26, 1968 of entering politics, posing a new threat to President Ayub Khan.

Observers in Dacca said that the decision by Mr. Mahboob Murshed could lead to his running in the 1970 elections against President Ayub Khan.

In a statement, Mr. Murshed condemned "the repression with which free expression of unpalatable views is suppressed" and expressed his dissatisfaction with the current situation.

He said: "I have been noticing, with deep concern, the steady deterioration of the political life of the country. My irrepressible optimism, however, makes me feel that truth and justice must triumph in the end if we put up a determined and united resistance to evil.

"Against this background, I have read with profound interest the recent pronouncements of Air Marshal Asghar Khan. I fully endorse them. The problems are insistent."

Mr. Mujibur Rahman's Criticism:

In his book—"Friends, Not Foes"—Mr. Mujibur Rahman, the East Pakistani leader and author, has said that in Pakistan "democracy has been fettered and its apologists have been handcuffed".

The 202-page book, which analyses in depth the inherent weaknesses of the present administration in Pakistan, has been banned by the Government. A few copies of the book have, however, reached India.

It says that "democracy has been declared unsuited to the genius of the Pakistani people and replaced most unceremoniously by an executive fiat which goes by the name of Basic Democracy, a nomenclature hitherto unknown not only to the political thinkers and philosophers but to the most autocratic rulers of the world.

"The accredited national leaders have been politically ostracised by a sham show dubbed as legal, disabling them from participating in national affairs with a view to reducing them into political limbo or obscurity".

He says that the "prostrated nation is gasping for want of free thought, self-expression and freedom of Press".

"The octopus of autocracy has spread its tentacles to the sacred precincts of the educational institution, eroding the last vestiges of liberal and democratic values of both the autonomous character of the institutions and the students' own forum—the unions."

Mr. Rahman has described the development policy of the Government as "lopsided and unplanned" and "sometimes pursued on political consideration".

"The few privileged families have grabbed almost the entire wealth of the nation—each one monopolizing at a stretch the means of production and distribution, right from industry, banking, insurance, export and import down to the wholesale and even retail business in the country."

More Disturbances:

Shops in many Lahore markets were closed on November 25, 1968, after only an hour's business, in protest against the recent arrest of political leaders and students.

On November 25, about 300 students damaged Government buses, battled with policemen and tore and burnt President Ayub Khan's photographs as they paraded the shopping centres.

Earlier, Mr. Mustaq Ali Bhutto was served with a notice under Section 5 of the Ordinance requiring him to leave the revenue limits of Sukkur district.

A similar notice was also served on Mr. Qutubuddin Sultani, an externed student of Quetta, asking him to quit the revenue limits of Sukkur district.

On November 26, about 3,000 college students marched through the streets of Rawalpindi shouting anti-Government slogans. The students walked out of their colleges which opened on November 25, after being closed for 18 days because of the riots.

The students chanted slogans against the Government. They shouted that they were "for Bhutto".

It was the latest in a series of demonstrations in the wake of the arrest of student and political leaders. No casualties were reported.

Schools and colleges in Islamabad and Rawalpindi were closed indefinitely on November 26, 1968. Colleges in the Lahore region and Peshawar division also remained closed until further notice.

This step seemed to have been taken in view of the massive student demonstrations in connexion with the "protest day" observed on November 25.

On November 27, 1968, police used tear gas and a baton charge to disperse students who sacked the United States Information Service library in Peshawar.

In Bahawalpur, a mob set fire to the Muslim League office and attacked the premises belonging to the brother of the League's Secretary-General, Sardar Mohammed Aslam Khan.

The police clashed with students in Rawalpindi on November 26, 1968 after they had stoned buses parked in a municipal enclosure. The clash followed a seven-hour anti-Government student demonstration by about 10,000 students including women. Women students took part in a demonstration for the first time in the history of Rawalpindi University.

The authorities promptly announced the closure of all educational institutions in the city—which were only re-opened on November 25, 1968 after an 18-day closure.

Police charged with steel-tipped staves and fired tear-gas in Rawalpindi on November 29 to disperse a crowd of over 5,000 people, mainly students. Troops guarded strategic points in Rawalpindi where three people died when police fired on rioters earlier in the month.

In Lahore, lawyers staged a silent march, carrying placards reading "Restore Democracy", 'Release Political Detainees", and "Restore Free Expression."

About 400 lawyers took part in another procession in Karachi demanding the release of political prisoners.

Lawyers had been playing a prominent part in the current agitation against the Government. They have provided a forum for Air Marshal Asghar Khan, former Air Force Chief, who entered politics to campaign for reform four days after Mr. Bhutto's arrest.

Processions were held in Peshawar and Karachi on December 2, 1968, and students attacked a train in Chakwal, 100 miles south of Rawalpindi.

On December 3, the police baton-charged demonstrating students in Karachi and arrested 13 persons, including three members of the People's Party.

Authorities in Rawalpindi re-imposed the ban on all meetings.

Two Persons Released By High Court:

The West Pakistan High Court ordered the release of two persons arrested under the Defence of Pakistan Rules with the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto on November 13, 1968.

They were Mr. Ahmed Raza Khan, an advocate and a leader of the People's Party and Mr. Ghulam Mustafa Khar, a member the National Assembly.

Directing their release forthwith, the Court said that they were held in custody without lawful authority.

Mr. Ghulam Mustafa belongs to the ruling Muslim League Party.

President Rules Out Talks With Opponents:

Talking to newsmen in Lahore on December 4, 1968, President Ayub Khan ruled out any dialogue with his political opponents unless they had constructive suggestions to make.

But, he asked: "What basis have they got? Eight points, nine points, 12 points? Do you want to tear up the country into bits? Do you think any sensible Pakistani can contemplate such a thing?"

He defended the detention of Opposition political leaders and said: "They have not been detained for the sake of pleasure. The Government accepts that there is democracy in the country. The people have the right to express their views provided it does not endanger the life of the community."

He arrived in Dacca on December 5, 1968 and expressed "deep concern" over the continuing agitation in the country and added: "Pakistan is passing through critical times."

President Ayub's visit marked a ten-day anti-Government demonstration throughout East Pakistan launched by the Pakistan Democratic Movement. Marchers bearing black flags paraded through the main streets of Decca chanting anti-Government slogans.

Addressing newsmen in Dacca, he said that agitations would only weaken the country and undermine the country's plans to build it up.

Referring to internal and external dangers, he said: "The need of the hour is to maintain peace and security so that the country could progress unhindered."

President To Name His Successor:

President Ayub Khan announced in Decca on December 6, 1968 that he did not intend to be President of Pakistan for life nor had he any desire to continue his post indefinitely.

Addressing a rally of farmers and educators, he said: "The time will come when I will name the persons who will succeed me and continue the work left by me. There is none among the Opposition who can run the country."

Students Committee's Statement:

In Rawalpindi on December 4, 1968, the Pakistani Student Action Committee welcomed the acceptance of some of their demands by President Ayub Khan, but regretted that their complaints had not been entirely settled.

In a statement, it said that the repeal of only one provision in the recent university law—relating to the forfeiture of degrees previously awarded—could not solve the real problem. They had wanted this "black law" done away with altogether.

In Karachi, the pro-Chinese National Students' Federation decided to continue the "struggle" until all imprisoned student leaders were released.

B. Border Trade Pact With China: The conclusion of a border Trade Agreement between China and Pakistan early in November, 1968 (following negotiations held in Kashgar in China's Sinkiang-Uighur Autonomous Region) was disclosed by the official Chinese news agency, Hsinhua, on November 15.

The Pakistani delegation to conclude the Agreement went to Kashgar on November 3 and returned home on November 8 after exchanging letters with the Chinese side on the question on November 7.

About the Agreement, Hsinhua only said both sides held that "unfolding of Sino-Pakistan border trade would further promote friendship and friendly trade between the peoples of the two countries."

D. Auction Of Indian Evacuee Property In West Wing: The Government announced on November 26, 1968 an auction of Indian evacuee property in the West Wing.

The announcement said: "As approved by the Chief Settlement and Rehabilitation Commissioner, West Pakistan Government," the auction of certain "evacuee industrial concerns, big mansions and cinema houses" would be held on various dates in November and December.

The property listed for auction on the first day included a "big mansion known as Ishar Dass Building, McLeod Road, Lahore, Bankey Mal Narinjan Dass Cotton Factory, Pattoki Kirpa Ram Bakshi Ram Cotton Factory, Qasur and Prema Ice Factory, Sheikhupura.

India's Warning:

On October 6, 1968, India warned Pakistan that if she persisted in her attempt to auction Indian properties and assets, seized after the 1965 conflict, a serious threat to normalization of relations between the two countries would develop.

The warning was contained in a Note handed to the Pakistan Deputy High Commissioner at the External Affairs Ministry in New Delhi.

Attached to the Note was a list of Indian properties proposed to be auctioned by the Pakistan Enemy Properties Management Board. Among them were two tea estates in Sylhet, eight factories and a cinema house.

It repeated the Indian Government's readiness to discuss the subject of the return of property and assets taken over by either side and recalled the many invitations extended to Pakistan in this regard to implement the undertaking given by the two countries at Tashkent.

Indian Premier Insurance Taken Over:

The Pakistan Government directed on November 25 that, under the Defence of Pakistan Rules, all assets of the Premier Insurance Company of India would vest in the Managing Director of the Pakistan Insurance Corporation as the Additional Custodian of Enemy Property to West Pakistan.

The Order covered movable and immovable assets and all rights and interests under contract belonging to or held by the manager on behalf of the firm.

G. Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Allegations Against Ayub Regime: In his controversial book, The Political Situation in Pakistan, Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto has debunked the stability of President Ayub Khan's Government as a "myth."

A copy of the book, which had been banned by Pakistan, has reached New Delhi. Its blood-red cover describes the publication as the first issue of a political series of the Pakistan People's Party.

The book spells out Mr. Bhutto's philosophy vis-a-vis China and its importance for Pakistan. It also refers to Indo-Pakistani relations in general and the Kashmir issue in particular.

Mr. Bhutto has said that "the sickness of the President showed that this regime is not founded on permanent institutions. The stability is a myth because there is no trace of continuity in the politics of this Government. Both internal and external policies have been erratic and contradictory. They have swung from one side of the pendulum to the other".

"Stability," he points out, "certainly does not mean that a regime should remain in power for a decade. It means that a Government's policies should be given time to show results and not keep changing. It means that there must be institutions to provide for an orderly transfer of power from one Government to another. Neither of these conditions exists in Pakistan."

According to Mr. Bhutto, President Ayub's "recent illness had thrown open a question of succession. For over two months, the Government operated mysteriously and in violation of its own Constitution. To give one example only, the Speaker of the National Assembly administered the oath of office to a judge of the Supreme Court in violation of the Constitution which gives him authority only when he is declared as the Acting President. Instead of being kept close to the scene, he was bundled out of the country on a delegation to avoid the embarrassment of his presence which would have put into focus his constitutional position. There are other instances of flagrant violation of the Constitution."

Referring to Indo-Pakistani relations, he says that "recently however, under the advice of foreign friends, India has adopted a more sober attitude towards Pakistan. Does this mean that another endeavour is to be soon made to negotiate a broad settlement? This is not a new development in Indo-Pakistani relations. It has come and gone periodically. Beginning with Liaquat Ali Khan, every Prime Minister of Pakistan has had to contend with it.

"The spirit of reconciliation and of animosity recorded the highest and lowest points during the regime of President Ayub Khan. Now the cycle is being repeated for the second time during this regime. This is the only difference. India is gaining time and weakening Pakistan in the process".

On Kashmir, he was of the view that "bilateral negotiations with India on Kashmir would be even more futile. Circumstances make it imperative for the Government to return immediately to the Security Council and seek its authority to fulfil its own solemn obligation made in unequivocal terms in the resolution of September, 1965."

Referring to Sino-Pakistani relations, he said that "China is the only country which will be sympathetic to Pakistan's real requirements. This is so because that country's interests in the sub-continent coincide with those of Pakistan. It is strictly a question of mutuality of interests."

"If we look around us, the only Great Power whose objective interests coincide with Pakistan's and the only country capable of assisting Pakistan is China. That country alone is capable of reducing the imbalance, either by the supply of military equipment or by political means or both.

"Pakistan will always need a plus-factor for coping with India. Whether the Government likes it or not, it so happens that the plus-factor is the People's Republic of China. If that factor is removed, Pakistan will always be at the mercy of all the three Great Powers and India."

H. No-War Pact Offer To India: In a nation-wide radio and television broadcast by President Ayub Khan on October 26, 1968, the eve of the 10th anniversary of his assumption of office, he said the Pakistan was "most willing to sign a no-war pact with India provided it was accompanied by another pact defining how the two countries could settle their present and future problems.

He said: "If India was to come to an agreement with us on the substance of such a pact, we shall be very happy indeed." He, however, regretted that there had been no settlement with India so far and that it continued to build its armed forces at an alarming rate and at the cost of enormous hardship to its people. Pakistan could hardly remain oblivious to all this. Pending a settlement, it must build a deterrent force to deal effectively with any possible threat.

He said that because of Pakistan's geographical position and the fact that it had to deal with so many major Powers, her foreign policy was based on bilateralism. Bilateralism, he underlined, was not the same thing as neutralism whose object was to use one against the other. Pakistan, he said, wanted to have sincere and straightforward dealings with all countries. It must keep out of the Big Power politics for the simple reason that it still had the task of national reconstruction before it.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Franc Not Devalued—Parity Maintained: The French President, Gen. Charles de Gaulle announced on November 23, 1968 that the parity of the French franc would be maintained and that there would be no devaluation.

The news came as a bombshell to a nation that had been expecting devaluation.

Earlier, the French Cabinet had met under President de Gaulle for more than 3½ hours to decide measures to cope with the franc crisis.

President de Gaulle's decision meant that he had decided to give battle to all international currencies challenging his regime.

In a dramatic Cabinet session, Gen. de Gaulle, facing the most challenging crisis since the Algerian war, told his Ministers, according to top Gaullist sources: "I will not give in."

Next evening (November 24, 1968), in a nation-wide broadcast, Gen. de Gaulle said that he intended to cut next year's expected Budget deficit from 11,500 million francs to 6,500 million francs. The saving would be achieved by extensive cuts in Government spending. But, he gave an undertaking that prices would remain firm and that the wage increases created in the wake of the May-June, 1968 strikes would be maintained.

He explained how he meant to back up his unexpected decision not to devalue the franc, and said that cuts would be made in subsidies to nationalized industries and in "our ambitions of the moment" in the civil, military and university spheres.

He declared: "It goes without saying that the necessary controls will have to be applied rigorously, both in the matter of exchanges and in the matter of the effective collection of all existing taxes."

He said that the French monetary crisis was the consequence of the moral, economic and social shock which shook France in the May and June, 1968 strikes.

Explaining why he had refused to devalue the franc, he said: "Such an operation would have been no remedy at all but a ruinously easy and monetary device as well as the bonus paid to those who have gambled on our decline.

"One can see the time approaching when, as a result of numerous annoying experiences, the whole world will agree to the establishment of an impartial and reasonable monetary system affording each country—as soon as it deserves it—protection from the sudden and absurd movements of speculation."

World Reactions:

President de Gaulle's decision not to devalue the franc shocked world financial circles.

World financial experts wondered how, even with the aid of new austerity measures and the newly-arranged $3 billion international credits, France could ward off the speculative assault on the franc without devaluation.

Swiss Government and banking officials expressed surprise but withheld any immediate official comment. "We shall have to wait for the speech of the General," the Director of the Swiss National Bank, Mr. Alexandre Hay, said.

President de Gaulle's decision was regarded by leading Swiss bankers as an attempt by him to "put the ball back into the Germans' court."

Common Market officials in Brussels were stunned by the French decision, but welcomed it because the EEC's farm price system would not be affected.

Financial circles in Madrid believed that France would now have to adopt a series of heavy austerity measures.

A spokesman for the Dutch Minister of Finance said that the decision would not mean the withdrawal of credits promised to France by the Group of Ten.

The Managing Director of the Norwegian Bankers' Association described the decision as "a sensation" and said: "France cannot pretend everything is all right for long." He predicted that the French Government would be forced to take drastic economy measures to maintain the parity of the franc.

A West German Government spokesman said that there would "quite certainly" be no re-valuation of the German mark despite President de Gaulle's decision not to lower the parity of the franc.

President L. B. Johnson welcomed the French decision and promised to co-operate with the French policies.

The US Treasury Secretary, Mr. Henry Fowler, said that he "heartily" approved of President de Gaulle's decision not to devalue the franc. He insisted that the dollar would not be affected by the current monetary crisis.

A Japanese Finance Ministry official said that France's decision could cause a "delicate situation" between her and the nations that had agreed on a massive loan to help the franc.

He said that "a touchy situation would arise unless France comes up with effective alternatives to devaluation."

[Japan is to contribute $50 million towards a $2,000 million loan arranged for France at the Group of Ten meeting in Bonn.]

British financial experts generally agreed that President de Gaulle's decision had aggravated the international monetary crisis.

French Austerity Measures:

Among the austerity measures to save the franc announced by the Prime Minister, Mr. Maurice Couve de Murville, in the French National Assembly on November 26, 1968 were that France's proposed nuclear test in the South Pacific in 1969 would be cancelled and credits would be reduced for the supersonic transport plane "Concorde."

He added that civilian and military projects would suffer in a cutback of the 1969 Budget deficit from 11.7 billion francs ($2.34 billion) to 6.354 billion francs ($1.27 billion).

A 4.25 per cent payroll tax would be cancelled and adjustments made in the added value tax to compensate for the loss in revenue. This is intended as an aid to exporters. The added value tax does not apply to exports. The elimination of the payroll tax will apply to all employers.

The Railways would increase freight rates by about 6.2 per cent from December 10, 1968, and gas and high-tension electricity tariffs would go up by 4.8 per cent.

Approval By Deputies:

The Chamber of Deputies approved by 391 votes to 91 on November 28, 1968 President de Gaulle's programme to take devaluationary pressure off the franc. Four members were absent.

The approval was a foregone conclusion. Gaullists and allies hold about 358 seats in the 486-seat Upper House of the Legislature. The Lower House will vote on it too but its power can be overridden by the Chamber of Deputies.

Government officials believed the new measure will bring a 1.5 to 2 per cent rise in the price of living, but estimates from businessmen and union leaders ranged from 2 to 3 per cent.

The Bill cut the Government's original 1969 Budget by between 1.33 and 5.38 billion francs, according to a statement of the Ministry of Economy and Finance.

The Budget cut included economies of between 3.17 and 3.22 billion francs ($634 to $644 million) and supplemental revenue of 2.16 billion francs ($432 million).

Franc Zone Policies To Continue:

It was announced in Paris on November 24, 1968 that the monetary policies of the member-States of the Franc Zone would continue to be closely aligned.

France, Madagascar and 12 African countries were represented at a conference which took the decision following France's decision not to devalue the franc. Two member-countries did not send delegates—Niger, and Mali (where a military coup d'etat occurred a week earlier).

British Law To Curb Imports:

On November 23, 1968, the British Government announced a new law to curb imports in an effort to combat the backwash of the crisis that laid low the French franc.

But the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Roy Jenkins made it clear that there was no question of devaluing the £ sterling to cope with the crisis.

New taxes were levied on liquor, cigarettes, petrol and a vast range of shop goods.

Mr. Jenkins disclosed Britain's latest moves to the House of Commons soon after arriving back from the crucial meeting in Bonn of Finance Ministers from ten nations.

The new taxes were armed at trimming back the spending power of the British public before the Christmas rush gets under way. Consumer spending had stayed stubbornly high in Britain despite a series of moves to arrest it since the £sterling was devalued a year ago.

Mr. Jenkins explained the new law to curb imports. He called it an import deposit scheme. Under this, an importer will be required to make a deposit of 50 per cent of the value of the goods he buys before Customs will let them into the country. This deposit would be repaid to the importer 180 days later.

The new law would be in force for one year. It would broadly cover all goods except basic foods, raw materials and certain categories of goods imported mainly for developing countries. The aim of the scheme would be to cut back on imports and give Britain a healthier balance of payments. The new credit restrictions would severely reduce private lending and banks would even have to bring in some outstanding loans.

He forecast that the "undoubtedly hard" measures would reduce the level of consumer spending by half per cent in 1969.

India's Reaction To British Law:

India's Commerce Secretary, Mr. K. B. Lall, said on November 23, 1968 that India would ask Britain to ensure that the "import deposit scheme" announced by her would not disrupt this country's exports to UK.

He said that Britain would definitely be asked to exempt cotton textiles, coir, carpets etc. from the provisions of the scheme.

He felt, however, that engineering goods would most probably be included in the scheme and their export from India to UK would be affected.

Britain would also be reminded of her commitment under GATT that she should protect the export trade of developing countries.

Signs Of Currencies' Recovery:

But, despite the shock, both the franc and the £ sterling showed definite signs of recovery on November 25, 1968 as pressures eased after the major monetary storm.

But dealers in most of the world's money capitals remained cautious and hesitant in early currency trading as they studied the still problematical effects of the crisis.

In Paris, centre of the storm, the franc was traded above its dollar floor in early bank-to-bank dealings for the first time in three weeks when the market opened on November 25, 1968.

Activity in the unofficial market was described by dealers as quietly cautious. Traders were apparently still digesting President de Gaulle's measures to halt the recent massive outflow of francs, including his stringent currency controls announced on November 25, 1968.

In London, foreign exchange dealers said they detected a definite improvement in the £sterling's chances of a come-back, but traders were cautious.

Trading in the £ sterling settled down at around $2.3850, a marked improvement over the position when trading was suspended on November 19, 1968. Then, the rate was $2.3825.

In Zurich, there was an across-the-board improvement in all major currencies and the franc lifted from its floor level of 4.9740 per $ for the first time in several weeks. Trading was quiet but the £ sterling improved against the dollar in the wake of Britain's latest measures.

Frankfurt saw both the franc and the £ sterling showing signs of improvement.

The franc moved up to 80.50/80.30 marks for 100 francs, following its deight-of-storm decline to 68. The £ moved up to 9.4800 from 8.3000.

West German Tax Measures:

Earlier, West Germany formally approved new tax measures on November 21, 1968 aimed at cutting her giant export surplus and helping to restore stability in international finance.

West Germany also took steps to stem the flow of speculative funds into her money market from abroad in a further attempt to restore stability to the world's monetary system.

The Federal Bank Council in Frankfurt ordered commercial banks to deposit the equivalent of foreign short-term funds they received with the Central Bank. The Central Bank would pay no interest.

Earlier, Treasury and Central Bank heads of the "Group of Ten" had met for a show-down over the future of the French franc and the German mark, with the franc dropping sharply on the German market.

The Deutsche Bank, one of the most important German banks, was offering only 73 marks for 100 francs. On November 2, 1968, it was paying 77.

French Loss In Monetary Reserves:

The Bank of France announced on November 21, 1968 that France had lost about $178 million in monetary reserves since November 14, 1968.

The fall, which came before the latest wave of speculation against the franc reached fever pitch on November 15, 1968 brought total known losses of gold and convertible currency by the Bank to about $2,852 million since the May-June, 1968 strikes. It also reduced the stockpile of France's liquid reserves to about $4,697 million.

But informed financial sources in Paris expected the explosive flight into the German mark that brought the monetary system to the brink of crisis during the past week may have cost France at least a further $500 million in reserves.

Previous Devaluations Of The Franc:

The French franc had been devalued 12 times in the last 40 years.

There were six between 1928 and the liberation of France from German occupation in 1945. Those since the liberation were:

December 26, 1945—US dollar, which had been worth 50 old francs, was pegged at 119.1.

January 26, 1948—US dollar climbed to 214,39 francs, a devaluation of about 44.45 per cent.

April 27, 1949—US dollar was pegged at 330 francs on the open market.

September 30, 1949—A devaluation of the British £ sterling forced movement of the franc to 350 per dollar.

August 10, 1957—A devaluation of 20 per cent brought the old franc to 420 for one US dollar.

December 26, 1958—A devaluation of 17.5 per cent. The franc was put at 493.7 per US dollar. By moving two decimal places, the French Government later simplified the monetary unit, creating the new francs in use today.

B. ADB Plans To Borrow In European Markets: The President of the Asian Development Bank (ADB), Mr. T. Watanabe, said in Hamburg on November 26, 1968 that the Bank was planning to borrow in the European markets, particularly in West Germany, for its international financing operations.

In an address to a group of German bankers, businessmen and industrialists, he said the Bank hoped to make arrangements to have a bond issue in Germany in 1969. "The German capital market over the past several years has become a most important source of funds for international financing."

He pointed out that West Germany's capital subscription of $34 million had made it the largest European shareholder in the Bank.

He said the Bank's current funds available for lending in convertible currencies amounted to $240 million, providing a solid foundation. The Bank's loan commitments this year were expected to amount to about $50 million. He expected this volume to approximately double in 1969 and to double again in 1970. "It will not be long before the ADB is engaged in some capacity at virtually all points along the broad spectrum of investment financing."

C. First Living Creatures To Fly Round The Moon: Soviet scientists revealed on November 15, 1968 that the first living creatures to fly round the Moon and back to Earth were a pair of turtles and an unspecified number of wine flies and meal worms.

Wine flies are found about wine vats and their larvae live in wine; the meal worm is the larva of a beetle abounding in granaries and flour stores.

They were all aboard the Soviet Moon-shot Zond-5 which splashed down in the Indian Ocean on September 21, 1968 after a week's flight. They arrived back in a Soviet laboratory in good condition.

As they returned to Earth, the turtles moved around their container a lot and had good appetite.

A. Anti-Mao Movement In Tibet Suppressed—Tass Claim: According to the Soviet news agency Tass on December 1, 1968, a new anti-Mao movement had been suppressed in Tibet.

More than 100 persons had been arrested including Mr. Chou Jen shan and Mr. Wan Chi-mei, former secretaries of the Communist Party Central Committee of the Tibetan autonomous district.

Tass said that leaflets posted in Peking by the Tibetan military command on "the pacification of unrest in Tibet" reported that "a new movement directed against the headquarters headed by Chairman Mao and his deputy Lin Piao" had been suppressed in Tibet.

Foreign Press reports had earlier reported bloody clashes in Tibet and an attack by armed detachments on the Tibet "Revolutionary Committee" in Lhasa, formed three months earlier. The local Tibetan population had supported the anti-Mao rebels.

Tass added: "The Maoist propaganda is now trying to prove that from the very outset, Liu Shao-chi and his followers were agents of imperialism and Chiang Kai-shek. But it is quite a task to make communists and the Chinese people believe this, because for many years the same Press had invariably named Liu Shao-chi as the closest associate of Mao.

"Now Mao's old speech is being used to falsify the history of the Chinese Communist Party, portraying it as the history of struggle between two lines—that of Mao Tsetung and Liu Shao-chi."

INDIA

SUMMARY: ACCI Annual Session; Mr. Morarji Desai Rules Out Devaluation; ABU Conference; US Tanks To Pakistan; Loan Drawings From IDA; Foreign Debt.

A. Associated Chambers' Annual Meeting—Mr. Morarji Desai On Rural Incomes & Economic Prospects: Addressing the annual meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry (ACCI) in Calcutta on December 14, 1968, the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai indicated the possibility of State Governments taxing the higher rural incomes. This, he said, could be done through agricultural income-tax or as surcharge on land revenue.

He said that the States might find it desirable to resort to such taxes to invest in different spheres. It was for each State to decide, in consultation with the Planning Commission, how far it could go in the "direction" of taxing the higher rural incomes. As far as the Government of India was concerned, it had told the States how much Central assistance could be provided for the Fourth Five-Year Plan. In each State, a balance had to be struck between the size of the Plan and the extent of mobilization of additional resources.

He mentioned, among other points, the process of "recovery and revival on the economic front, the need to dispense with concessional imports of grain as soon as possible, the policy of giving special consideration to industrial units playing an important part in the export drive, the "large and significant" role of foreign investment and the importance of the International Development Association (IDA) as a source of finance.

He also referred to the need to ensure adequate supplies of credit to farmers, problems arising from the gap between procurement prices and the prices of foodgrains realized from consumers, the necessity of increasing the yield per acre of jute, cotton and oilseeds, the problems of monopoly and concentration of economic power and the need to improve tax administration and measures to tackle evasion.

Mr. Desai began his speech by referring to the "decisive turn towards higher productivity", reasonable stability of prices and the relief, at least for the time being, from the anxiety in regard to foreign exchange. An expected increase in industrial production of five to six per cent this year, he said, was among the signs of gradual improvement in industrial activity.

He mentioned that procurement prices had been maintained at last year's "high levels" to assure the farmer an adequate return from inputs in land. The Government had, however, been incurring a substantial loss because of keeping procurement prices high and supplying grain to consumers at comparatively low rates. While the losses had so far been met by making profits on the import and sale of foreign wheat, this source of finance would disappear as dependence on imports decreased. The choices were to pay the farmers less, to charge consumers more or to subsidize the transactions. A balance had to be struck.

On the importance of holding the price line, he said that economic policies had to be so designed as to ensure that growth was accompanied by stability. The recent increase in the dearness allowance of Government servants reflected the effects of past inflation. If prices were to be stable, higher incomes must be matched by improvement in efficiency.

He envisaged that foreign investment would continue in view of the expected industrial expansion. "Our welcome to foreign investment has necessarily to be selective." The Government had listed industries in which foreign investment was specially desired.

Mr. N. M. Wagle's Speech:

In his Presidential address, the President of the Chambers, Mr. N. M. Wagle emphasized the possible contribution to industrial revival of agriculture, which had already generated substantial purchasing power in the rural sector.

He mentioned the "welcome features" of the Planning Commission's paper on the approach to the Fourth Plan, the necessity of a "new look at the level of direct taxes," the "much better" labour relations during the year and the need for "satisfactory cleaning out of the mass of regulations that clogs export performance."

He was convinced of the need for some reduction in direct taxes from their "present very high level."

While welcoming Mr. S. Boothalingam's recommendations on the tax structure (see page 7756) he expressed doubts about the efficiency of the proposed capital tax and general excise. At a time of recession when several industries were not running at a profit, a new burden such as the proposed capital levy would have a very depressing effect. The proposal for a general excise would have its full support if it were to replace other parallel levies, such as the sales tax and octroi. "But if these other levies cannot be eliminated, to superimpose a general excise would inflate costs for industries which already are finding it difficult to market their products."

The time had come, he said, for an inspired lead towards the more constructive policy of mutual trust and co-operation between the Government and industry, and nowhere was this needed more than in the field of exports.

Explaining how agricultural development generated purchasing power in villages and thus helped industrial progress, he disclosed that the Chambers had sponsored a survey to find out more about the buying habits of the rural population to study the physical problems of distribution at the village level and to ascertain the most effective marketing techniques. The survey would cover one taluka each in West Bengal and Maharashtra.

He suggested that the Fourth Plan be resource-based rather than need-based.

Referring to the import of "know-how", he said that "know-how" in industrial production was not simply a question of disclosing a formula or handing over blueprints. A technical collaborator sold his experience as well as his technique and a good collaborator helped achieve the most efficient and economical production in the shortest time possible. By all means, India should eliminate the purchase of repetitive "know-how" which was unnecessary or wasteful, but it would be false economy to shut out "know how" which might help make industry competent at home and competitive abroad.

Resolutions:

On December 16, 1968, the ACCI adopted a number of resolutions relating, among other things, to industry, taxation, transport planning and the resources for the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

In its resolution on industry, the Chambers appreciated the liberal attitudes that had characterized the Government's industrial policy during the last few years, but emphasized the need for more liberalization and adoption of more positive measures of assistance if industry was geared up to make its maximum contribution to the country's economic growth.

A special effort, it said, was needed to restore the fortunes of the large traditional industries—including cotton and jute textiles, tea, coal mining, vanaspati and sugar—which for many years had suffered from neglect while resources had been concentrated on the development of the newer technologies. The traditional industries were the biggest employers of labour in the country. This accounted for more than 75 per cent of India's export earnings, yet the only time when they received assistance from the Government was when they were on the verge of collapse.

The resolution on taxation stated that for several years the Associated Chambers had been advocating a rationalized and stable tax structure which would provide industry with the incentives and the capital market with the stimulus necessary to revive the country's economy. With the recent upsurge in agricultural production, the time would now seem ripe for new fiscal initiatives designed to achieve this objective. The Chambers accordingly urged the acceptance, in principle, of the Boothalingam recommendations in the confident belief that any temporary reduction in revenue receipts would be amply compensated by a rise in national savings, higher productivity and the resultant buoyancy in the revenues.

In the implementation of the Boothalingam proposals it was important, the resolution said, that taxes which hampered industrial development, such as the taxation of inter-corporate dividends, should be abolished.

The resolution on transport planning suggested that a major effort should be mounted to renovate and improve all forms of transport. Facilities at the country's major ports were inadequate and detrimental to the interests of importers and exporters. In Railways, serious wagon shortages still occurred with disappointing frequency. This was evidence of a need for the doubling of track facilities in selected areas and for considerably improved planning and operational control.

Regarding roads, it said that a determined campaign for the expansion of trunk and secondary roads must be implemented to meet the needs of rural markets and artificial obstacles to inter-State road transport removed.

The resolution on rural marketing said that the shift in national income from the urban to the rural sector and the net increase in income arising from greater agricultural production called for a major marketing effort designed to bring consumer goods within reach of the rural population.

The resolution on power supplies and tariffs stated that generating and distributing capacity should keep ahead of the demand for power and that regional imbalances should be eliminated as far as possibly by integrating the measures of rationalization or automation which were designed to improve efficiency and increase prosperity, thus ultimately expanding employment potential.

B. Devaluation Ruled Out: The Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai on November 25, 196 firmly ruled out any possibility of devaluation of the rupee, stating that "there is no question of any change in the external value of the Indian rupee".

In a statement to Parliament on the monetary crisis in Western Europe, he welcomed the measures taken by the Western Powers to strengthen the international system and these, he thought, would be to India's advantage both as regards foreign aid and foreign trade.

He did not think that the recent speculative measures would have any significant impact on the Indian economy. "As far as our exporters are concerned, the forward cover facilities hitherto provided against genuine transactions will continue to be available".

But he urged the countries concerned to make sure that any measures they took did not operate in a manner that would affect exports from India. He noted that Britain had exempted some products of interest to this country from import deposit requirements, but cotton textiles would be subject to the scheme and he feared exports of these items would be affected.

C. Asian Broadcasting Union-General Assembly Session: Inaugurating the plenary session of the fifth general assembly of the Asian Broadcasting Union in New Delhi on November 20, 1968, the Vice-President, Mr. V. V. Giri, exhorted representatives of national and international broadcasting organizations to utilize broadcasting for eradicating hunger, over-population and illiteracy from the Asian region.

He said that radio and TV were potent instruments for the solution of urgent and basic problems which could not be solved by traditional methods. "Broadcasting which is indeed an effective instrument in promoting unity of mankind, should be fully utilized not only to further the cause of internationalism, but equally to solve some of the immediate problems which beset us".

Session Ends:

The general assembly was attended by 71 delegates from 36 member-organizations and by 10 observers representing the UN, UNESCO, FAO, ECAFE, WHO and universities in New Delhi and Ontario.

Formation of an Asian radio and TV news agency for giving wider coverage of events in the Asian region was not found feasible by the general assembly, which ended its meeting in New Delhi on November 23, 1968.

Talking to newsmen after the conference, Sir Charles Moses, ABU Secretary-General, said that a separate radio and TV news agency would be a very expensive project and was beyond the capacity of ABU. He, however, said that ABU had decided to initiate discussions with Eurovision and Intervision with a view to arranging programme exchanges with the countries of Western and Eastern Europe respectively through Intelsat system.

ABU would also try to strengthen training programmes for broadcasters and telecasters. It would work with UNESCO and ITU to expedite the establishment of a broadcasting training institute for Asia at Kuala Lumpur.

Space communication also attracted attention of the members. A resolution was passed asking members to ensure that TV transmissions via satellites were fully protected against unauthorized recording, re-broadcasting and public use. It also sought to promote international arrangements to safeguard "broadcast" satellites from unauthorized use or interference. ABU would collaborate with EBU and other broadcasting unions in these matters.

The conference decided that the next General Assembly should be held in Wellington, New Zealand, in October, 1969.

Prizes For 1968:

All-India Radio won two Asian Broadcasting Union (ABU) prizes for 1968—one for rural programmes and the other for TV documentaries produced on a low budget.

The third prize for the year for TV documentaries went to West Germany. The prizes were:

All-India Radio—ABU radio prize for rural programme: $1,000 (Rs. 7,500) and a trophy.

All-India Radio—Special television prize for TV documentaries produced on a low budget: $500 (Rs. 3,750) and a trophy.

West Germany—ABU television prize for TV documentaries: $1,000 and a trophy.

D. US Supply Of Tanks To Pakistan Through Turkey—Indian Concern: India's concern at the reported decision to supply Pakistan with 100 M-47 tanks through Turkey was made known to the US and Turkish Embassies in New Delhi on November 19, 1968.

Turkey's armour would be replaced by an equal number of the latest M-48 tanks.

The American and Turkish Ambassadors were told by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. T. N. Kaul, that the reported supply of the tanks would upset the military balance in the sub-continent.

Pakistan had actually sought 200 tanks. The arrangement to give 100 tanks to Pakistan circumvented the self-imposed American restriction on the supply of lethal weapons to the Indo-Pakistan area which had been effective since September, 1965. The US freeze left a loophole through third countries. Turkey was the third country through whose agency Pakistan's armour was being refurbished.

An authoritative source in New Delhi pointed out that Pakistan's armed forces were nearly half the size of India's though Pakistan was about a fifth of the size of India both in population and area. Moreover, Pakistan's armour was already comparable to that of India and, with the additional M-47 tanks, was expected to be superior to India's armoured strength.

Turkish Denial:

On November 18, 1968, a Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman denied a foreign Press report that Turkey had agreed to sell 200 American-supplied M-47 Patton tanks to Pakistan.

The spokesman said the Turkish Government had not yet taken any action in the matter.

Earlier, the Washington Post reported that Pakistan would get the tanks from Turkey, which would receive American help in offsetting part of the costs of buying new M-48 Patton tanks from USA.

Statement In Rajya Sabha:

The Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, told the Rajya Sabha on November 21, 1968 that the Government of India had made it quite plain to countries supplying military equipment to Pakistan that any addition to Pakistan's armed strength would add to tensions in the area and make Islamabad more bellicose and intransigent in its relations with India.

He disclosed that "an agreement had been reached in principle that Turkey would give 100 Patton tanks to Pakistan in exchange for more modern tanks from the United States." "It has been pointed out to the countries concerned that such a deal has grave implications both in regard to our own defence responsibilities and to the objective of maintenance of peace in the sub-continent. It has also been pointed out to them that these military supplies would make Pakistan more intransigent in its attitude towards normalization of relations with India."

A member asked whether Sardar Swaran Singh had taken up with the Soviet Government during his recent visit to Moscow the problem of Soviet arms supplies to Pakistan. He also asked whether it was a fact that arms from NATO countries were not permitted to be supplied to non-NATO nations without the permission of Washington.

Sardar Swaran Singh said that it was a fact that NATO arms could not be supplied to non-NATO countries without authorisation by USA. This was not being denied by Washington. Secondly, after the Indo-Pakistan conflict of September, 1965, the United States had enunciated "a new policy that no new weapons would be supplied to India or Pakistan, but that the question would be considered on a case-to-case basis." The "deal" with Pakistan came within this category.

Gilgit-Skardu Road Constructed By Pakistan:

Sardar Swaran Singh stated in the Rajya Sabha that Pakistan had constructed a 155-mile road linking Gilgit and Skardu in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir. The road was opened to traffic in September, 1968.

He added: "The construction of this road in our territory illegally occupied by Pakistan further affects our security. The Government has already taken due note of these aspects, lodged protests with Pakistan and has taken appropriate measures."

E. Pakistan Sabotage Ring Smashed In Kashmir: The Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir, Mr. G. M. Sadiq disclosed in Srinagar on November 16, 1968 that the police had smashed a "Pakistani sabotage ring" which had wide ramifications in the State. About two dozen people, including some students and the editor of an Urdu weekly, had been taken into custody.

He said that country-made bombs and documents had also been seized from the arrested people. The seized documents threw considerable light on the activities of this ring and its designs to commit sabotage, disorder and disturbances similar to those attempted in 1966.

The arrest of some people following a raid on Islamia College last June had led on the information about the existence of the ring. No Chinese hand had been detected in the ring.

F. Scientific Co-operation With Poland: India and Poland signed in New Delhi on November 27, 1968 an Agreement under which both countries will embark on a programme of scientific co-operation for the next two years.

The Agreement was part of a protocol for scientific co-operation agreed to by both countries in 1966.

The Polish Government agreed to make available to India experimental results in the fields of corrosion protection for metallic products, coatings for protecting machines and installations, technology of protective electrolytics, paint, polymer and sprayed metal coatings. Poland will train up to four specialists for five to eight months for these projects.

India will make available to Poland research results in the fields of protective and decorative coatings, certain electrochemical processes, application of vegetable oil for the production of paint resins, and raw material substitutes for producing rust-proof paints. For these projects, India will train two Polish specialists for nine months.

The two countries will exchange knowledge of investigation on catalysts for a number of organic synthetic processes. They will also exchange experts in formed coke, coal carbonization and coal preparation.

G. Self-sufficiency In Defence Production: The Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, made a statement in the Rajya Sabha on November 21, 1968 on the present position regarding self-sufficiency in the production of various types of defence equipment.

The following are the main points he made:

Arms and Ammunition: "We are now self-sufficient as far as small arms and their ammunition are concerned. We are also self-sufficient in light artillery weapons and ammunition. For medium artillery weapons and ammunition (which are replacing our traditional weapons and ammunition in this range), capacity is being established."

Vehicles and Engineer Stores: "Production of tanks at the heavy vehicles factory has reached a satisfactory level. The capacity for production of the 3-tonne and 1-tonne motor vehicles will be increased when the new factory being established at Jabalpur will go into production. There is sufficient capacity in the country for production of trailers, generating sets, compressors and their prime-movers."

Electronic Equipment: "Communications equipment of various types is being produced under licence as well as by indigenous development, in Bharat Electronics, Hindustan Aeronautics, Indian Telephone Industries and Hindustan Teleprinters and also in the private sector."

Aircraft: "Currently, the Gnat, Krishak, HJT-16 trainer, MIG-21, and HF-24 aircraft as also Alouette helicopters are being manufactured, though in some cases the level of production is not quite satisfactory. In addition HS-748 aircraft is under production at Kanpur."

Ship-building and Ship Repairs: "Sufficient repair capacity is available in the country. Capacity for making new ships is being enhanced by the expansion of facilities at Mazagon Docks and Garden Reach Workshops. The first Leander class frigate has recently been launched and is at present fitted out. Manufacture of smaller vessels, such as minesweeps seaward defence boats and other vessels like dredgers, tugs etc is already in hand."

H. Loan Drawings From IDA: The Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, disclosed in the Rajya Sabha on November 19, 1968 that India had drawn till March 31, 1968 a total of Rs. 418.02 crores out of the loans aggregating to Rs. 458.25 crores given by the International Development Association (IDA) in the five years ending 1967-68.

There was no IDA loan in 1967-68, but there was utilization of loans of earlier years.

The first repayment in respect of IDA loans, which have a grace period of ten years and are repayable over the following 40 years, will become due in 1972-73.

IDA had given Rs. 154.50 crores as project loans and Rs. 303.75 crores as non-project loans. The amounts drawn against these were Rs. 131.49 crores and Rs. 286.53 crores respectively. The balance to be drawn from IDA loans as on April 1, 1968 was Rs. 40.23 crores (Rs. 23.01 crores of project and Rs. 17.22 crores of non-project loans).

At the end of 1967-68, out of foreign project loans signed of a total value of Rs. 1,739.63 crores, orders had been placed to cover 66 per cent (Rs. 1,156 crores) and actual utilization with completion of imports was Rs. 845.53 crores.

In the case of non-project loan agreements for Rs. 2,271.44 crores, orders placed worked out to 91 per cent (Rs. 2,060 crores) and drawal was 82 per cent (Rs. 1,869 crores).

I. Foreign Investment Board: The Foreign Investment Board, established on December 1, 1968, will deal with all cases where the total investment in equity capital of an Indian company does not exceed Rs. 2 crores and the foreign investment is up to 40 per cent of the issued equity capital.

Cases of total investment in equity capital in an Indian company including foreign investment exceeding Rs. 2 crores and cases involving more than 40 per cent foreign equity investment in new or existing Indian companies will require clearance of the Central Cabinet Committee on foreign collaboration.

A Press Note issued by the Ministry of Industrial Development outlined functions of the Foreign Investment Board and said a revised procedure had been worked out to keep to the schedule of three months for disposing of applications for foreign investment.

J. Foreign Debt: The Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, stated in the Lok Sabha on November 25, 1968 that India's total outstanding foreign debt at the end of the first half of this year amounted to Rs. 5,666.51 crores.

This consisted of Rs. 3,661.40 crores repayable in foreign currency, Rs. 470.77 crores repayable through exports of goods and Rs. 1,534.34 crores in rupee loans—all repayable on Government account.

The principal repaid so far in foreign currency amounted to Rs. 606.97 crores, and interest Rs. 446.62 crores. Repayment of loans (principal) through export of goods amounted to Rs. 163.77 crores and interest Rs. 47.05 crores. The repayment of rupee loans (principal) amounted to Rs. 127.64 crores and interest Rs. 169.23 crores.

Mr. Desai said that these figures were in terms of the present par value of the rupee, irrespective of the exchange rate on the date of actual drawal or repayment except in the case of interest where the figures represented the amounts actually paid from time to time.

While the repayments of principal were made in accordance with the repayment schedules applicable to each loan agreement, the amount of interest payable on loans was calculated from year to year on the basis of the interest rate applicable to the loan and in relation to the drawals of the loans and the repayments falling due. The annual expenditure incurred by the Government for servicing the foreign debts would, therefore, differ from year to year.

Expenditure to be incurred by the Government on this account during 1968-69 and 1969-70 had been estimated as:

	1968-69	1969-70
Principal	186.40	210.85
Interest	148.93	161.88

Repayment schedules were worked out for all loans on the basis of the period of repayment and the rate of interest agreed to in each loan. The period of repayment varied from less than 10 years to 50 years and included grace periods extending from two to 10 years. The last of the repayments on debt outstanding on June 30, 1968 would be due in 2018. For the years 1966-67, 1967-68 and 1968-69, India got debt relief from Consortium countries amounting to $34.39 million, $63.19 million and $100.64 million, respectively.

The largest demand of loans repayable in foreign currency was Rs. 1,524.20 crores to USA. The debt creditors in order were IDA with Rs. 636.90 crores; the UK with Rs. 465.59 crores; West Germany with Rs. 397.22 crores; the World Bank Rs. 255.83 crores; and Japan Rs. 217.95 crores. The debts due to other creditors varied from Rs. 1.46 crores to Italy and Rs. 47.92 crores to Canada.

The biggest creditor to whom loans were repayable through export of goods was USSR (Rs. 386.77 crores). Next came Czechoslovakia with Rs. 44.08 crores, Yugoslavia with Rs. 22.63 crores and Poland with Rs. 17.29 crores.

Rupee loans repayable consisted of Rs. 1,226.52 crores (PL 480 loans) and Rs. 306.94 crores (excluding PL 480 loans) due to USA. An amount of Rs. 88,00,000 was due to Denmark.

K. Mr. B. R. Bhagat On Chinese Embassy Letters To Kerala Marxist Leaders: The Minister of State for External Affairs, Mr. B. R. Bhagat told the Lok Sabha on December 9, 1968 that the Government would take all necessary steps to isolate and eliminate subversive Communist extremist elements in Kerala and other parts of the country.

He said that the Chinese Charge d'Affaires was summoned to the External Affairs Ministry to explain his position regarding the alleged letters found in possession of Mao-Communists in Kerala (see page 8685)). "Curiously he neither confirmed nor denied it." "It is an accepted principle of diplomatic relations that diplomatic representatives do not interfere in the internal affairs of the country to which they are accredited."

Mr. Morarji Desai On Kerala Stir:

Addressing a public meeting in Calcutta on December 15, 1968, the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai expressed concern at the activities of Mao-Communists in Kerala and said that if the State Government did not take effective steps to control them, the Central Government would have to intervene.

He said that the Government of India was closely watching Kerala developments and would seriously consider the situation if it deteriorated before taking action.

He criticized the "extra-territorial loyalty" of the Communists and said that parties which had no loyalty to the country could not do any good to it. "The CPI owes its allegiance to Russia while the Marxist Communist Party looks towards China. China first made friends with India and then stabbed her in the back by committing aggression and grabbing a portion of Indian territory. When the people rose as one man, they beat a retreat. How can the people accept a party having friendship with China"?

He asked the people to discard the Marxists who, he said, had joined hands with an enemy country and acted at its beck and call. If the Marxists did not like India, they were free to migrate to China.

L. Cease-fire In Nagaland Extended: The cease-fire in Nagaland, which ended at midnight on November 30, 1968, was extended by another month.

The Governor, Mr. B. K. Nehru, did not commit himself to Dr. Aram, convener of the truce observation team, on the point of extending the cessation of operations when the latter had met him earlier. Official circles feel that the term "cease-fire" had lost its meaning in the present context and the plea for its extension made by Mr. Chumbemo Murry, on behalf of the Phizo faction of the underground, was intended only to bolster up the vanity of that faction.

M. Working Of IOC During 1967-68: The Indian Oil Corporation Ltd. (IOC) has reported a highly successful year of working in 1967-68 in the fields of refining, pipeline operation and marketing.

The profitability recorded a further improvement, enabling the payment of an enhanced dividend of 7 per cent. It also made a significant entry in the export market.

The through-put in the refineries improved to 4.36 million tonnes against 3.27 million tonnes in 1966-67 and that in the pipelines rose to 1.37 million tonnes (75,000 tonnes), while sales shot up to 6.46 million kilolitres (4.89 million kilolitres). In terms of rupees, turnover in 1967-68 totalled Rs. 430.68 crores against Rs. 338.35 crores in the previous year. The profit before depreciation and interest improved to Rs. 22.33 crores (Rs. 16.21 crores) and the profit after depreciation and interest was Rs. 10.83 crores (Rs. 6.28 crores). A sum of Rs. 3 crores has been set aside to development rebate reserve, against nothing previously. The total duties paid was Rs. 156.57 crores (Rs. 149.83 crores). The latest dividend is 7 per cent against 6 per cent paid for 1966-67.

The Gauhati refinery processed 811.718 tonnes of crude oil as against the target of 750,000 tonnes. This was the highest through-put achieved in any year at this refinery. The production of finished products amounted to 739,739 tonnes and despatches were 740,799 tonnes.

The Barauni refinery processed 1,629,625 tonnes of crude oil as compared to the target of 1,600,000 tonnes during the year.

The Gujarat refinery processed 1,918,293 tonnes of crude oil and also utilized 5,130 tonnes of furnace oil received from Bombay for LDO blending as against the target of 1,800,000 tonnes of crude oil. Finished products totalling 1,730,113 tonnes were produced and 1,742,631 tonnes were despatched from the refinery.

The Corporation's export earnings amounted to over Rs. 5 crores.

N. Utilization Of Krishna River Waters By Maharashtra—Andhra Pradesh's Protest To Centre: The Governor of Andhra Pradesh, Mr. Khandubhai Desai, said in an address to a joint session of the State Legislature in Hyderabad on November 23, 1968 that the State Government had "strongly protested" to the Central Government against the clearance of certain schemes of the Maharashtra Government involving the utilization of Krishna River waters in excess of its share.

He said the State Government had urged the Centre not to allow schemes involving utilization of waters in excess of the allocation under the 1951 Agreement. "As Hon'ble members may be aware, our Government have moved the Government of India to constitute a tribunal under the Inter-State Waters Disputes Act for declaring the validity and binding nature of the 1951 Agreement and restraining the States of Maharashtra and Mysore from utilizing Krishna waters in excess of their share or otherwise contravening the provisions of the Agreement."

He added: "It is unfortunate that even after we have so moved the Government of India they should have cleared certain schemes of the Maharashtra Government involving utilization of Krishna waters in excess of their share. The State Government has strongly protested to the Government of India that no scheme involving utilization of waters in excess of the allocations under the 1951 Agreement should be allowed."

O. Koyna Dam To Become Earthquake-Proof — Committee's Recommendation: An expert committee appointed in December, 1967 to study the effects of earthquakes on the Koyna Dam has recommended the permanent strengthening of the Koyna Dam to withstand intense earthquakes of the type experienced in 1967.

The committee expressed the view that the reservoir was not responsible for the two major shocks of September and December, 1967. It also disagreed with the earlier assumption that the western margin of the peninsula was seismically stable.

The report said that tentative repair work on the Dam should be carried out as early as possible, taking into account the possibility of seismic intensity as large as the December earthquake. "The design of any permanent repair work of the Dam should take into consideration future earthquakes, the intensity of which may be as large as the December 11 earthquake."

"Till the strengthening work is completed, water level of the reservoir should be kept as low as possible and practicable."

About reconstruction work, the report said: "It is desirable that earthquake-resistant construction be adopted as far as possible." It suggested "long-term co-ordinate research" to understand further the crustal behaviour in western India.

Q. Corruption Charges Against Dr. M. Chenna Reddy—Supreme Court Verdict: The Supreme Court dismissed on November 26, 1968 an appeal filed by Dr. M. Chenna Reddy, former Central Minister for Steel, against the judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court setting aside his election to the Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly in the last General Election on the ground of certain corrupt practices.

The Chief Justice, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, pronounced the formal orders dismissing the appeal and said reasons for the verdict would be given later. Mr. Justice Mitter was the other judge on the Bench.

The consequence of this judgment is that Dr. Chenna Reddy who was elected to the Rajya Sabha in March, 1968 (prior to the High Court judgment) has incurred disqualification from continuing as a member of the Rajya Sabha. Also, according to the relevant constitutional provisions and the Representation of People Act, if the election of a returned candidate is set aside on the ground of corrupt practices, he is debarred from being a member or seeking membership of any legislature for a period of six years.

Dr. Reddy, on his request, had been permitted by the Supreme Court by virtue of interim orders passed by the Court in May, 1968 to attend the Rajya Sabha but without taking part in its proceedings or drawing any salary and allowances, till the disposal of his appeal.

[Dr. Reddy was a member of the Andhra Pradesh Cabinet and later taken into the Central Cabinet. His election to the State Assembly was challenged by Mr. V. Ramachandra Rao through an election petition filed in the State High Court on the ground of commission of about 30 corrupt practices in relation to the election. The High Court held that allegations of certain (about 14) corrupt practices had been proved and, set aside his election. Hence Dr. Reddy filed the present appeal in the Supeme Court.]

R. Kerala Revocation Of Disciplinary Action Against State Employees: On December 7, 1968, the Kerala Government either revoked or relaxed all disciplinary actions taken against the State Government employees since January 1, 1957 for political activities.

This decision was taken because the State Government found that all the actions taken in the past were discriminatory and only against persons alleged to have worked for "certain political parties."

Some of the charges on which action was taken against the State employees were subversive activities, anti-national remarks and doubtful political leanings.

The employees who were either dismissed or removed or compulsorily retired from service for political activities, according to the order, woud be deemed to have been in service, but they would not be eligible for full pay and allowances for the period of service lost by disciplinary action. They would, however, be paid 80 per cent of their pay and full allowances excluding subsistance or other allowances already paid to them for the period.

The re-instated employees would be given exemption for two years for qualifying themselves for promotion and increment in pay.

Dismissed employees who had passed the retirement age would not be taken back, but they would be eligible for all other concessions offered to the dismissed employees.

The names of more than 40 persons had been announced who would benefit from the decision.

The differences were over whether the situation in Czechoslovakia warranted military intervention. An overwhelming majority agreed that such a situation existed."

The Ordinance, which came into force with immediate effect, amended the Punjab State Legislature (Prevention of Disqualification) Act of 1952.

It declared that "any office held by a Minister, Minister of State or Deputy Minister for the State of Haryana, whether ex-officio or by name, insofar as it is an office of profit under the Government of India, the State of Haryana or any other State, shall not disqualify the holder thereof for being chosen as, or for being, a member of the Haryana State Legislature."

Mr. Mathur, formerly the State Education Minister, had resigned a few months earlier following certain charges levelled against him by the Opposition in the Legislature in connexion with a land deal made by him.

V. Congress Dissidents Form New Party In UP: As a protest against the Central Election Committee's approval of most of the Congress candidates recommended by the UP election committee, a group of dissidents decided to form a new party in New Delhi on December 4, 1968.

At a convention attended by about 150 dissidents, it was decided to name the new party as the "Socialist Congress of Uttar Pradesh." It will set up candidates to oppose the official Congress nominees in the mid-term election to the State Assembly. In fact, 12 candidates were selected on the spot.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, who was elected President of the parallel Congress, had twice postponed the decision to revolt against the Congress in the hope that the Central Election Committee would drastically change the UP list submitted by Mr. C. B. Gupta and Mr. Kamlapati Tripathi in the light of the objections raised.

Y. Central Loan To Gujarat Newspapers: The Central Minister for Information and Broadcasting, Mr. K. K. Shah, announced in the Rajya Sabha on November 11, 1968 that the Centre had decided to give a loan of Rs.

25,00,000 to Janasatta and Loksatta group of newspapers of Gujarat to prevent their acquisition by a certain groups of newspapers (Indian Express).

The loan was being given at an interest of 6 per cent subject to reasonable safeguards which would be worked out. The loan would be repayable in 15 annual instalments, the first instalment falling after two years.

He said the papers had agreed to convert themselves into a public trust.

Indian Express Denial Of Take-over:

Mr. Ramnath Goenka, Chairman of the Express group of newspapers, in a statement denied that he was taking over the Janasatta and Loksatta group of newspapers in Gujarat to expand his own chain of newspapers or for the profitability involved therein.

He said these newspapers were financially in a bad way and the continuance of their publication would be most difficult if prompt assistance was not forthcoming. It was at that stage he had been approached by Mr. Ramanlal Sheth, publisher of these papers.

"Aware of the character of this institution and the service it has rendered to the national cause, I thought it would be a sad day for these papers to fold up. I readily agreed to help provided that Shri Ramanlal Sheth agreed to shoulder the editorial and administrative responsibilities and the status quo was maintained. I had also stipulated that the Government's concurrence should be secured before I took over these newspapers.

"I had absolutely no interest in acquiring these papers for enlarging my own chain of newspapers, nor was there any profit motive, nor was it calculated to increase the concentration of monopolist power as was alleged in certain quarters. If, however, the Government can find some method of keeping these papers alive, I shall be more than happy."

Z. Madras State Re-named Tamil Nadu—Bill Passed: In a rare display of unanimity, the Lok Sabha passed on November 22, 1968 a Government Bill seeking to change the name of Madras State to Tamil Nadu.

The Bill, based on a similar resolution adopted unanimously by the Madras State Assembly, earned for the Government lavish praise from Mr. V. K. Krishnamoorthy (DMK) who admitted he seldom found himself in agreement with the Government. But, by moving the Bill, the Government had shown a spirit that could promote a smooth Centre-State relationship.

In a brief speech, the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan said it was a matter of national pride to restore the name of Tamil Nadu, and pleaded: "Let not language be used as an instrument of restoring a glorious past alone but also to construct an equally glorious future for the country."

The Rajya Sabha passed the Bill on December 5, 1968.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Czech Party Central Committee's Decisions: The plenary meeting of the Czech Communist Party Central Committee ended in Prague on November 17, 1968 with a call for development of the "positive results" of the liberalization movement and "liberal respect" for the Agreement under which Soviet troops remain stationed in Czechoslovakia.

The meeting, which began on November 14, thus ended on a note of compromise.

According to the text of a resolution, the 590 Committee members stressed that the "extreme tendencies and the mistakes brought on by the liberalization movement that began in January, 1968 with the election of Mr. Alexander Dubcek as First Secretary must disappear."

All resolutions adopted by the Committee were by acclamation. About 57 of the 140 members who had asked to speak took the floor.

The Committee agreed that before a 14th Party Congress could be held, there must be "a complete normalization of the situation and a consolidation of relations with the other Socialist countries."

Mr. Dubcek had urged the Committee earlier not to call a party Congress in the near future.

A resolution passed at the final session said that a "more detailed analysis of the situation" was necessary before a Congress could set party policy "for a longer period of time."

New Policy Line:

The Czechoslovak Communist Party laid down its official new policy line on November 18 as that the January, 1968 reform programme was necessary because of "weak points and mistakes" of the Stalinist era, but the reformers had allowed criticism that turned against communism itself.

The new official line was made public by the Ceteka news agency following the three-day Central Committee meeting which also set up a 21-man Executive Committee in a move that greatly eroded the power of the party leader, Mr. Alexander Dubcek, who had sponsored the reform movement.

The statement on "the main tasks" of the party admitted that anti-socialist "pressure gradually began to strengthen" after Mr. Dubcek started his reform programme. But, at the same time, there was "serious resistance (to the reforms) by the dogmatic and conservative forces."

Students' "Sit-in":

Philosophy students at Charles University in Prague started a sit-in strike on November 17, 1968 following a vote by thousands of Czech students to demonstrate for three days in support of Mr. Alexander Dubcek.

The demonstration was also in protest against conservative speeches at the Central Committee meeting.

Students in Moravia and Bohemia started their demonstration inside their faculty on November 18. A 10-point resolution outlined students' feelings towards the Central Committee session.

Peace Awards:

The Czechoslovak President, Mr. Ludvik Svoboda, the First Secretary of the Czech Communist Party, Mr. Alexander Dubcek, and the Czech and Slovak radio and television services were among personalities and organizations presented with Peace Prizes by the Czechoslovak Peace Committee on November 4.

The awards, announced at the National Conference of the Czechoslovak Peace Movement, it was said, were made for "the courage and spirit of sacrifice displayed by the recipients during the country's difficult days."

In all, 44 people and six organizations received the awards.

Anti-Soviet Demonstrations Condemned:

On November 12, 1968, the Czechoslovak Government condemned the the anti-Soviet demonstrations on the 51st anniversary of the October Revolution on November 7 and said it would make full use of the law to preserve order.

A statement issued after a joint session of the Government and the Central Council of Trade Unions warned that such actions were "undermining the efforts of the Government and the majority of the people towards the normalization of political and economic life."

The Prime Minister, Mr. O. Cernik, appeared on television on November 11 and appealed to students not to create a situation "which might lead to tragedy".

Making his first television address in weeks, he condemned the anti-Soviet demonstrations on November 7 as "scandalous incidents." "People were wounded. This could lead us into a blind alley. Crowd psychosis takes over."

On November 14, the Communist Party First Secretary, Mr. Alexander Dubcek, condemned the anti-Soviet demonstrations on November 7 and declared that those who "accuse the leaders of capitulation create an anti-Soviet psychosis" and were chiefly responsible for delaying "normalization."

Addressing a plenary session of the party's 190-member Central Committee—the first since the August 21 Soviet invasion—Mr. Dubcek stressed the need to adopt "a clear position against any adventurist efforts," and to isolate "anti-socialist" forces which "take advantage of people's lack of political experience, and particularly that of the young people."

He said: "Class solidarity with the Soviet Union is the fundamental principle that our party has never abandoned and from which it will not depart today."

B. "Zond-6" Launched By USSR: The Soviet Union confirmed on November 14 that its Zond-6 unmanned space-craft was launched on November 19, 1968.

The feat, reported by Britain's Jordell Bank observatory, strengthened speculation that Zond-6 was intended to return to Earth, duplicating the flight of Zond-5 in September, 1968.

The observatory said Zond-6 was believed to be heading back to Earth. The spaceship made its closest approach to the Moon at a distance of 1,000 to 2,000 miles (1,600 to 3,200 km).

Russia announced on November 18 the recovery of its Zond-6 space-craft after a week-long journey round the Moon. Tass said that the unmanned vehicle, which may have been carrying some form of animal life, landed in a pre-set district in the Soviet Union. This contradicted a report from a West German tracking station, which said on November 17 that Zond-6 had probably splashed down in the Indian Ocean.

The Tass announcement said that Zond-6 had twice entered the Earth's atmosphere in its descent. The first dip into the atmosphere reduced the space-craft's speed "through aero-dynamical braking." The descent apparatus was then oriented so that the craft left the atmosphere and returned to space where it continued on a ballistic course until its second dip into the atmosphere. It was understood to have returned to Earth at a speed of 40,000 km an hour.

Russia claimed on November 19 that it had solved "fundamental problems" for sending man to the Moon. The basic problem of re-entry of a space-craft at second cosmic speed (lunar recovery speed) was successfully accomplished by Zond-6. The spacecraft, which "soft-landed" on Soviet territory after an eight-day near lunar flight, also tested the "more complex and promising method of return of interplanetary ships".

The flights of Zond-6 and its sister ship Zond-5, which made the first circumlunar journey and splashed down in the Indian Ocean on September 21, were regarded as an essential preliminary for a similar manned flight.

C. World's Biggest Unmanned Spaceship Launched By USSR: The Soviet Union on November 16, 1968 launched Proton-4, described in an official announcement as the world's biggest unmanned spaceship.

The announcement said a booster rocket put a payload of 17 tons into an Earth orbit. Of this, 12.5 tons constituted unspecified scientific equipment. Proton-4 will study cosmic rays "and their interaction with nuclei of atoms."

The space station was in an orbit ranging from 495 km to 255 km above the Earth. It was circling the Earth every 91.75 minutes.

The launching of previous Protons indicated that the Soviet Union then had the world's most powerful rocket. Proton-1, launched in July, 1965, had a payload of 12.2 tons. The same weight was put into orbit when Proton-2 was launched later that year. Proton-3, launched on July 6, 1966, had a 13-ton payload.

The Soviet Proton series of space-craft uses a powerful carrier rocket, which Western scientists said could be used for the Soviet Union's announced programme of assembling manned space-craft in an Earth orbit for trips to the Moon and planets.

D. Soviet Intervention In Eastern Europe And Mediterranean—NATO Warning: A NATO Council communique issued in Brussels on November 16, 1968 said that the Council meeting, traditionally held in December, had been advanced by six weeks because of the "serious situation" arising from "the armed intervention in Czechoslovakia by the Soviet Union and four of its Warsaw Pact allies".

The Soviet action in Central Europe, the communique said, also caused uncertainty about Soviet intentions in the Mediterranean.

France added a foot-note to it on the continuation of the NATO alliance. It said that as far as France was concerned, the alliance should continue "as long as seems necessary" unless there was a radical change in relations between the East and West.

[A spokesman recalled that the French position was the same in 1966. The French Foreign Minister, Mr. Michel Debre, had, in his speech, put the emphasis on continuing efforts to reduce tensions between the West and the Soviet Union.]

The 15-nation Atlantic Alliance warned the Soviet Union that any intervention, direct or indirect, in Europe or in the Mediterranean would "create an international crisis of grave consequences".

The warning to Moscow was endorsed by all members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, including France. This was taken as an indication that France had closed ranks with its allies after the Soviet occupation of Czechoslovakia.

[About 50 NATO warships and 150 planes ended a large-scale exercise in the Mediterranean on November 15 where the Soviet Union was reportedly building up its forces. The 11-day exercise, code-named "Eden Apple", tested anti-submarine and other naval warfare tactics. Britain, USA, France, Italy and Greece took part.]

E. China's Admission To UN: The debate on China's admission to UN began in the General Assembly on November 12, 1968.

The US delegate, Mr. James Russell Wiggins said that USA stood firm in its opposition to give a UN place to Peking but promised to continue the search for reconciliation with China.

He said this could not be done by yielding to unrealistic demands but "by patiently and imaginatively exploring concrete possibilities for constructive contacts". USA did not accept as final the rebuffs received so far from China, and did not see any hopes for early progress. "But we remain convinced that China must ultimately, and the sooner the better, return to the family of nations".

He rejected as unacceptable a 16-Power resolution calling for the seating of China and the expulsion of Formosa from UN. Peking had shown nothing but hostility and contempt for UN and its presence in the world Organization would only lead to discord.

Mr. Wiggins was followed by Mr. Halim Budo (Albania) which has taken the lead in promoting Peking's case in recent years and is generally regarded as the mouthpiece of the Peking Government in UN.

Mr. Budo attacked USA for its refusal to allow China to take its lawful place in UN. The Chinese people, through their great cultural proletarian revolution were leading the struggle of peoples throughout the world for peace.

On November 13, the Soviet Union and France urged the General Assembly to recognize Peking's right to a seat in United Nations and to expel the representatives of Taiwan.

Both the Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Jacob A. Malik and the French Ambassador, Mr. Armand Berard, supported the 16-Power resolution to this effect and declared their opposition to a proposal calling for a study of the whole China problem.

They added that the question was not one of admitting a new State as China was a founding member of the UN. The issue was not, therefore, important in terms of Article 18 of the Charter and only a simple majority of the 126-nation Assembly was needed to change the representation of China.

Mr. Berard said France would vote for a resolution that would restore the legitimate rights of China. France was prepared to do this "despite reservations on certain of its terms."

Mr. Malik told the Assembly that his country regarded the China representation issue as a matter of principle. "To us," he said, "the question is not a matter to be approached according to some transitory nature of our relations with China."

Since the deterioration of relations between Moscow and Peking, the Soviet Union had taken a back seat in the China debate, and Mr. Malik's entire speech took only 11 minutes. Albania, the voice of Peking, has been the loudest advocate of admitting Peking and expelling Taiwan.

Britain supported admission of China and the expulsion of Taiwan. But Britain went along with the United States in contending that such a decision was a substantive one requiring a two-thirds majority vote.

The General Assembly has kept the door closed to China regularly since 1950.

G. Law-making Privilege Of House Of Lords Abolished: Britain's House of Lords on November 21, 1968 approved a planned abolition of its 600-year aristocratic privilege in law-making.

Peers of the realm in Parliament's Upper Chamber voted by 251 to 56 for sweeping reforms that would virtually make them extinct as a political force.

The 195-Government majority meant endorsement for a drastic change in the constitutional set-up of the once-powerful House of Lords, created in the 14th century. The House will retain its ancient rights to function as a "brake" on legislation sent it from the House of Commons.

But, in future it will not be composed largely of aristocrats whose seats are guaranteed by hereditary birth right.

The Government plans to abolish privilege as the entrance ticket to the House of Lords in detailed legislation promised within the next 12 months.

H. Australian Military Aid To Malaysia: The Australian Prime Minister, Mr. John Gorton, announced in Canberra on November 19, 1968 that his Government had decided in principle to keep in Malaysia and Singapore area until the end of 1971 two squadrons of Mirage fighter aircraft, two destroyers or destroyer escorts and what he called an ANZUC battalion.

Australia at present has its own battalion at Terendak, in Malaya, and the reference to an ANZAC battalion was taken to mean not that the Australians would reduce the number of their soldiers but that Mr. Gorton was able to indicate a similar decision by New Zealand. The Australians would also continue to help operate the jungle warfare school at Kota Tinggi.

Mr. Gorton emphasized that even the limited decision up to the end of 1971 had been taken only in principle because "we need to know what assistance and support would be forthcoming from countries in the area—what arrangements will be made to man radar and control anti-aircraft defences, what infrastructure will be provided in support of ground troops and where and in what barrack complex they can economically be housed".

I. GATT Annual Report On World Trade: According to the annual report of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), published in Geneva on November 11, 1968, world trade was expected to increase by 8 per cent this year compared with only 5 per cent in 1967.

It said it would be reasonable to expect the acceleration in trade in general to benefit the developing nations. The annual growth of exports from developing countries would be somewhere between 6 and 8 per cent as compared with 2.5 per cent in 1967. "The import growth will be more moderate, probably 4 to 6 per cent. Thus the trade deficit which had increased supstantially in 1967 should decline again".

The report estimated that exports of industrialized countries should develop by about 9 per cent by 1968 and imports by about the same margin.

The export growth rate would be above the regional average in Japan, the Benelux, West Germany and Italy, and it would be below that average in USA, France and the United Kingdom.

J. Dr. R. Prebisch Resigns As UNCTAD Secretary-General: On November 24, 1968, Dr. Raul Prebisch, the Argentine-born economist, submitted his formal resignation as Secretary-General of the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

Earlier, following the apparent failure and disappointments of the second session of the UNCTAD in New Delhi, he had asked the Secretary-General, U Thant to relieve him of his post. In April, U Thant had appealed to Dr. Prebisch to continue his work, at least until plans for the second Development Decade were completed. But Dr. Prebisch finally decided to present his formal resignation.

Dr. Prebisch (67) cited "health reasons" for quitting his $43,000-a-year post.

In New Delhi, the Indian Commerce Secretary, Mr. K. B. Lall expressed "great shock" at the reported resignation of Dr. Prebisch.

He said Dr. Prebisch's resignation would dislocate the working of UNCTAD at a time when the Second Committee of United Nations was grappling with important issues affecting the trade of the developing countries and "good results are expected."

He also pointed out how the continuing machinery of the Second UNCTAD was charged with very important tasks like solving the problems relating to trade and development and chalking out the strategy for the next Development Decade beginning in the seventies. The present was not the situation when UNCTAD should waste time finding a leader or forego the present leadership. "It would be the unanimous wish of the developing countries that Dr. Prebisch should continue till the third UNCTAD. Till then, his services are indispensable."

Dr. M. P. Guerrero Appointed:

On November 27, 1968, Venezuela's UN Ambassador, Dr. Manuel Perez Guerrero, was named Secretary-General of UNCTAD.

U Thant took note of the wishes of the Latin American Governments in naming another Latin American economist to succeed Dr. Prebisch.

K. Regional Seminar On State Trading: A seminar on State trading organized jointly by the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) and the UN Office of Technical Co-operation in conjunction with the USSR Government, was held in Moscow from September 25 to October 21, 1968.

Participants in the seminar included 22 experts from nine Asian countries, namely, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Iran, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines and Singapore.

The seminar arrived at the following conclusions:

(1) The ECAFE secretariat should issue annually a study on developments in the State trading enterprises in the regional member-countries;

(2) The developing countries should exert a conscious effort to expand their trade with the socialist countries;

(3) Consideration should be given by the Soviet Union and other socialist countries to increase progressively their imports of manufactures and semi-manufactures and primary products from the developing countries;

(4) The prosperity generated by the economic reform in the Soviet Union has led to trade expansion with the developing countries;

(5) The trading organizations in the Soviet Union and other socialist countries should encourage, to the extent feasible and compatible with normal business practices, trading with the developing countries; and

(6) The developing and socialist countries should seek a balancing of their bilateral trade over a longer period rather than annually.

L. International Sugar Agreement: The United Nations Sugar Conference concluded on October 24, 1968 with the adoption of an International Sugar Agreement, which was remitted to Governments for their consideration.

It was open for signature at UN Headquarters until December 24, 1968.

The target date for the entry into force of the Agreement is January 1, 1969, the target set at the second session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), held in New Delhi earlier this year. The Agreement would be effective for a period of five years, with the economic provisions coming under review in the third year.

The Agreement is designed to bring world production and consumption of sugar into closer balance at prices above the present low levels. It aims, inter alia, to maintain a stable price for sugar which would be reasonably remunerative to production in developed countries.

An important feature of the new Agreement is the provision of a special hardship fund of 150,000 tons for developing countries. The Agreement indicates the principal factors to be taken into account in allocating such a fund.

Particular attention would be given to the needs of small developing countries whose export earnings were heavily dependent upon the export of sugar, of countries whose economy was becoming increasingly dependent upon sugar and of certain countries burdened with excessive stocks.

In accordance with the principles of UNCTAD, the new Agreement would give special recognition to the needs of the developing exporting countries. For example, at a certain stage, a special preference would be given in the allocation of shortfalls.

Another feature of the new Agreement was that, for the first time, importing countries would make commitments regarding access to their markets.

Land-locked countries would be specifically exempt from certain supply commitments and from certain penalties that might arise from failure to supply their quota.

The Agreement dealt with supplies to the free market and special arrangements would not be affected.

M. World Catch Of Fish: According to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) Yearbook of fisheries statistics, released in Rome on November 19, 1968, the world's total haul of fish exceeded 60 million tonnes in 1967 and Peru became the first nation to take more than 10 million tonnes.

Japan had the second largest haul, while China presumably was third and the Soviet Union fourth. For the second successive year, Norway was placed fifth, ahead of USA. India had a catch of 1.4 million tonnes.

The total catch for 1967 was 60.5 million tonnes—5.5 per cent more than the 1966 haul of 57.3 million tonnes.

N. UNESCO Science Prize For 1968: Prof. Robert Simpson Silver, British inventor for the multi-stage flash distillation process used in desalinating sea water, has won the UNESCO Science Prize for 1968.

It was presented to Prof Silver on November 5 at a ceremony held in Paris during the UNESCO General Conference.

The $3,000 Prize, which has been awarded for the first time, was set up by UNESCO for "an outstanding contribution to the technological development of a developing member-State or region."

O. World Tourism: International tourism officials wound up their annual meeting in San Francisco on November 11, 1968 by outlining a plan to help the developing countries.

Their President, Mr. Augustin Salvat of Mexico, told a news conference that 139 million tourists travelled outside their home countries in 1967. But most of them moved within developed countries, especially in Europe.

A Spanish delegate, Mr. Juan Arespacochaga, said tourism in 1967 represented 6 per cent of the total trade. "If we truly wish to help developing countries there is no more honest and sure way than to foster tourism in developing countries."

The delegates, belonging to the executive committee of the International Union of Official Travel Organizations decided to transform the group into an inter-governmental organization with close ties with United Nations.

The change of status will enable the group, which represents 103 countries, to qualify for international funds and would give developing countries better access to technical advice on how to improve their fledgling tourist industries.

P. Miss World For 1968: Miss Penelope Plummer (18), blonde Australian librarian, won the Miss World 1968 title in London on November 15.

Britain and Israel got second and third places.

Miss Plummer walked off the stage of London's Lyceum ballroom with a first prize of £ 2,500 and the chance of earning £ 25,000 through a contract with the contest organizers, Mecca.

Miss World from Sydney was third favourite for the title in pre-contest betting odds quoted by leading London bookmakers.

Earlier, Miss Amparo Rodrigo Lorenzo, Spain's fiery candidate at the Miss World contest who walked out after a dispute over the presence of Miss Gibraltar, officially withdrew from the competition.

Q. World Suicide Rate: The World Health Organization (WHO) in a booklet issued in New York on November 18, 1968 stated that the number of people committing suicide all over the world averages at least 1,000 a day—more than half-a-million a year.

Eight times that many try it and so "there are likely to be several million people attempting suicide in the world in any one year".

The booklet is titled "Prevention of Suicide". It says that one way to prevent suicide is to take people seriously when they threaten it and help them change their minds.

In general, suicide is more common among men than among women, and it is most common among mental patients, alcoholics, divorcees, unemployed, foreign-born, persons living alone, children of broken homes, university students and old people.

In a table of death rates from suicide in 21 advanced countries for 1961-63, it shows the average yearly rate for both sexes to be highest for Hungary with 33.9 suicides for every 100,000 people and lowest for Italy with 7.1 per 100,000.

The figures for other countries are: Finland 29, Austria 28.3, Czechoslovakia 28.2, Japan 24.7, Denmark 24.2, West Germany 24.1, Switzerland 23.3, Sweden 21.7, France 20.7, Australia 10.6, USA 15.6, England and Wales 15.1, New Zealand 13, Poland 12, Scotland 11.4, Canada 11.1, Israel (Jews only) 10, Norway 10, and the Netherlands 9.1.

R. "Intelsat-3" Launched: Intelsat-3, the most powerful communications payload ever built, soared into space on December 18, 1968 from Cape Kennedy (USA) on the tenth anniversary of the launching of the world's first communications satellite.

Ten years ago an Atlas rocket soared into orbit from the then Cape Canaveral with the first space communications relay equipment and beamed to Earth a tape-recorded Christmas peace message from President Eisenhower.

Intelsat-3 is capable of handling 1,200 simultaneous two-way telephone conversations or four television programmes. The 42-lb satellite was designed to carry five times more traffic than any of the four smaller satellites currently operated by the three-nation International Tele-communications Consortium—two over the Atlantic and two over the Pacific.

In 1969, Intelsat plans to complete its world-wide Intelsat network by placing a second satellite over the Atlantic and one each over the Pacific and Indian Oceans. The Consortium is also developing a large Intelsat-4 series, the first of which is to be launched in 1972.

NEPAL

A. Foreign Policy Reviewed: Addressing the Nepal Council of World Affairs in Khatmandu recently, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Gehendra Bahadur Rajbhandari, said that Nepal's foreign policy as pursued under the able guidance of King Mahendra was based on the principles of equality of nations, peaceful co-existence and non-alignment. Nepal would pursue the same policy in her efforts towards strengthening her relations with her neighbours as well as with all other nations of the world.

He said that Nepal's foreign policy was intended to develop friendship and goodwill among nations without one nation pressurizing the other. This policy, as Nepal believed, was congenial to world peace. The same policy had proved of particular help to Nepal in her pursuance of economic and social goals as an independent, sovereign nation.

He also mentioned Nepal's interest in United Nations whose Charter she had always supported. The country had all through remained associated with UN activities. Nepal was making ceaseless efforts to make UN increasingly representative of the nations of the world, including all those like China, which had so far had to remain outside of United Nations.

He also explained the purpose that impelled the Government to seek a seat on the Security Council. Nepal believed that by entering the Security Council she would be able to keep herself quite active, that small nations like herself cherished increasing faith in United Nations, and that an Asian nation like herself could contribute towards the creation of world peace in accordance with her declared policy. "Under His Majesty's leadership, Nepal has successfully implemented a foreign policy which has by now taken concrete shape."

Nepal gave special attention to her neighbouring countries while conducting her foreign policy. He also dwelt upon Nepal's policy towards India with which she had been increasing her efforts to develop social, economic, trade and cultural relations and hoped that despite all apprehended difficulties Nepal would be able to resolve her problems with India.

He also dealt with Nepal's relations with China which, he said, were based on the five principles of peaceful co-existence. Both the countries pursued this policy, adding to the strength of their relations with each other. "These relations existing between Nepal and People's China agreed with the requirements of world peace. The same relations also accorded with the spirit of the times. That is what Nepal believed in. Also praiseworthy are the events of exchanges of visits to each other by leaders of both the countries as well as the assistance that People's China has rendered to Nepal in the latter's development efforts".

B. Trade Agreement With India: At the Indo-Nepalese trade talks, which concluded in Khatmandu on November 19, 1968, India made major concessions on two main issues: entry of Nepalese synthetic textiles and stainless steel into India and "overflow" of foreign consumer goods into Indian markets from Nepal.

As per the provisions of the Indo-Nepalese Trade and Transit Treaty, the Indian team agreed in principle to allow import into India of both stainless steel utensils and synthetic textiles manufactured in Nepal from raw materials imported from third countries, despite the fact that in India import of both these items is subject to strict controls.

The only concession Nepal made on this issue was its willingness to freeze production of both these goods to the 1967-68 level, which means that Nepal will not issue any fresh licence for setting up such industry in the Kingdom.

Certain Indian manufacturers had moved writ petitions to prevent the entry of Nepal-made synthetic textiles and stainless steel utensils as it had proved detrimental to India's industrial economy. Nepal was not, however, prepared to give in its right to manufacture these goods and wanted their export to India. She insisted that the Trade Treaty conferred reciprocal rights on both signatories for free flow of their manufactures into each other's territory.

Nepal did not uphold the "allegation" regarding the overflows of foreign consumer goods into India, but promised to co-operate with India to stop smuggling.

Talks Criticized:

It was disclosed in Khatmandu on December 4, 1968 that the Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry had voiced disapproval of some aspects of the agreement reached at the Indo-Nepalese trade talks.

The Federation pointed out: "Nepal has not gained anything, except minor points at the expense of major concessions."

About the steps proposed to help Nepal's industrialization, the Federation said that the net result might be "harmful developments that will discourage rather than help the country's industrialization."

According to the Federation, the 20 per cent excise duty exemption that New Delhi had conceded to Nepalese industrialists "will hardly help, since the cost of production in Nepal is much higher than in India. Industry in Nepal is not in a position to export its goods to India by payment of 80 per cent excise duty to the Nepalese Government."

The Federation was also critical of the Government's handling of the issues relating to stainless steel, synthetic fabrics and gift parcels during the trade talks.

C. Controversy Over Panchayat System: The former Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, who returning to Khatmandu recently after attending the UN General Assembly, has initiated an open controversy on the partyless panchayat system by issuing a statement jointly with Mr. Rajeshwar Devkota, who had recently resigned as Minister of Land Reforms. They described the Prime Minister, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa's policies as "confusing and aimed at reviving the party system."

In a speech at Bharatpur, Mr. Thapa said in reply that in Nepal membership of panchayats was automatic and not a matter of choice as in the case of a political party and that anybody "accepting basic tenets of the system is welcome to join it."

He also stressed that the panchayat system was liberal and there could be no two opinions about it, although there were differences among some people in the higher tier of panchayats in the matter of operating the system.

This high-level controversy had been brewing for some time in the context of moves for a detente between the Establishment and the outlawed Nepal Congress and it was one reason which brought about the recent change in the administration including resignation of Mr. Devkota and the Cabinet re-shuffle when the former Deputy Premier, Mr. Bisht, was dropped from it while he was away in New York.

On this occasion, the King gave more responsible character to the new Cabinet by constituting it under the Prime Minister's chairmanship.

Mr. Bisht and Mr. Devkota in their joint statement, however, welcomed the recent release of political prisoners which they described as an administrative process and alleged that it had been delayed because of ambiguous policies of Mr. Thapa. They also argued that the panchayat system had been "weakened" because of attempts to project these releases as a sign of liberalism and to secure co-operation of the panchayat in this matter by "intimation and lures" rather than on the basis of principles.

They "politically" welcomed the King's steps in "giving greater responsibility to the Prime Minister," but added that Mr. Thapa had been unsuccessful in consolidating the panchayats. They characterized Mr. Thapa's alleged efforts to revive the party system by creating differences of opinion within the partyless system as an irresponsible act contrary to the panchayat system, the fundamentals of which, they said, Mr. Thapa did not understand.

PAKISTAN

SUMMARY: Agitation Against Government Continues; Fourth Plan Objectives; Tarbela Dam Project; Soviet Help In Nuclear Technology.

A. Agitation Against President Ayub Khan's Regime: The agitation against President Ayub Khan's regime in the country continued and there were several demonstrations and arrests throughout the country. The disturbances also spread in East Pakistan.

President Ayub Khan arrived in Dacca on December 7, 1968 on a week's visit for the session of the National Assembly. On his arrival, there were demonstrations against him.

In Dacca on December 7, 1968, two persons were killed and 20 injured when police fired on rioters during a day-long wave of anti-Government demonstrations in Dacca.

Police sources said that about 150 persons were arrested during the troubles marking the third day of a visit to the East Pakistan capital by President Ayub Khan.

Later, the Opposition leader in the National Assembly, Mr. Nurul Amin, led a group of Opposition members to the Dacca Medical College Hospital to see people said to have been injured in the firing. Mr. Amin is a former East Pakistan Finance Minister.

In the National Assembly, holding its winter session in Dacca, Opposition members walked out on December 7, 1968 after an unsuccessful bid to raise (through an adjournment motion) the issue of police firing and the recent disturbances in West Pakistan.

Next dav (December 8, 1968), the police wielding batons charged to disperse crowds lining the streets in Dacca in defiance of a ban on public gatherings. Dacca was tense as Opposition leaders called for a general strike in protest against the police action on December 7, 1968 when they fired on rioting mobs.

The 80-year-old Maulana Abdul Hamid Khan Bhashani, veteran leader of the pro-Peking faction of the National Awami Party, said on December 7, 1968 that the general strike was being called because he wanted "to demonstrate to the world that we are against this oppressive regime."

On December 9, 1968, at least two persons were injured when police opened fire in two areas of Dacca.

President Ayub accused Opposition leaders on December 7, 1968 of committing a "heinous crime" by "inciting people to violence and disorder."

Meanwhile, Opposition members walked out of the East Pakistan National Assembly on December 9 1968 in protest against arrests and police action. The leader of the Opposition said before the walkout that 500 people had been arrested and that police had used batons and tear-gas indiscriminately.

On December 13, 1968, the police rounded up a large number of "suspects" in major cities in East Pakistan where the strike call appeared to have been observed by a majority of workers. One of the men arrested in Dacca was Col. Mukhtar Husain, Private Secretary to Air Marshal Asghar Khan. Colonel Husain was arrested outside a mosque as he and Air Marshal Asghar Khan were talking to newsmen.

The police fired on crowds demonstrating against President Ayub Khan's Government on December 13, 1968 as violence erupted again in East Pakistan. Government sources said that nine persons were wounded by the police firing in Chittagong, but unofficial reports put the figure at "over a dozen".

The demonstrators were trying to enforce a strike which had been called by seven political parties opposed to President Ayub Khan. The strike call was given by the East Pakistan Awami League, the East Pakistan National Awami Party and the National Democratic Front.

An official Press Note issued in Dacca and quoted by Radio Pakistan said that the police also had to use tear-gas to disperse rowdy elements in the commercial area of Chittagong. Earlier, the police made a lathi charge to disperse a crowd which had indulged in attacking transport vehicles and placing barricades on the road.

The strike also affected Dacca where President Ayub Khan was staying on a week's visit and troops patrolled the streets to prevent violence.

On December 13, 1968, the police arrested at least 1,000 people in cities throughout East Pakistan during a general strike called by the major Opposition parties.

Incidents were reported from several parts of the country and people were injured when the police opened fire in Chittagong. Fifteen others, including ten policemen were injured in clashes between demonstrators and police.

More than 700 people were arrested in Dacca and Chittagong alone though Dacca itself was relatively calm. A further 335 persons were arrested in Dacca.

In Peshawar, there was general support for a strike on December 13, 1968.

Next day (December 14, 1968), the police and students in Lahore clashed in two running battles during demonstrations to demand the release of arrested students. The police used batons in an attempt to contain the students within the university campus and prevent them from staging a scheduled march through the centre of the city. The students retaliated with stones. They carried placards with slogans demanding the release of detained students and the dismissal of the Vice-Chancellor of Dacca University and protesting against police repression.

The police denied allegations that they had made students walk naked through the streets during the demonstration on November 27, 1968.

In Rawalpindi, anti-Government posters sprouted on street walls early on December 15, 1968 a few hours after President Ayub Khan returned from Dacca. The posters demanded a change of Government and charged that a favoured few were amassing wealth in foreign banks. Other posters, denouncing the police, were plastered on a local police station.

The Government banned all meetings and demonstrations in Karachi on December 14, 1968 except those organized under official auspices.

In Rawalpindi, the Students' Action Committee accused the Government of provoking students by making false accusations.

Fresh incidents were reported from various parts of East Pakistan also on December 15, 1968.

Journalists' Demonstration:

More than 250 journalists and other newspaper workers demonstrated in Karachi on December 17, 1968 in support of demands for Press freedom, many wearing badges showing a pen in chains. They marched to the tomb of Mr. Mohammed Ali Jinnah.

Their demands were codified in a resolution passed by the Executive Council of Pakistan's Federal Union of Journalists. Among these was a call for freeing radio and TV from official control and for the winding up of the Government-controlled Nation Press Trust, which owns several major papers, including the English language Morning News and Pakistan Times.

The Council also demanded the repeal of President Ayub Khan's Press and Publications Ordinance and the end of all restrictions on the "right to publish newspapers."

Further Concessions To Students:

In a bid to appease the agitating students, the West Pakistan Governor, Gen. Mohammed Musa, said on December 10, 1968 that besides the "concessions given by the Government in pursuance of President Ayub Khan's six-point plan, several more facilities for students have also been sanctioned".

In a broadcast over Radio Pakistan, he said the Government would accept without hesitation new ideas to introduce educational reforms in the country.

Students had been demanding the repeal of the University Ordinance which "curbed their political activities."

Air Marshal Asghar Khan's Views:

In an article in the Pakistan Times recently, Air Marshal Asghar Khan said that the failure of the Government to create a social order that millions had hoped to achieve had caused "widespread" disappointment, particularly in East Pakistan, which had received "step-motherly" treatment.

He added that people must "exert their influence and power" to remedy this serious situation.

He observed that if equality of opportunity, social justice and human dignity typify Islam, "our society today is farther from being Islamic than it was 20 years ago". The most important step needed to create a climate in which such conditions could flourish "is to shift the focus of power to the people".

He emphasized that it was only then that the people of East Pakistan could exercise influence "on our national affairs that is their right". National integration in Pakistan could only be achieved if the Government experienced the power and influence if its people. The "dual image of social inequality and West Pakistani domination is now so deeply imprinted on the minds of the vast majority of our East Pakistan brethren that no half-hearted measures are likely to succeed. No steps, however well-intentioned that did not touch the root of the matter are likely to solve the problem".

On December 13, 1968, according to the newspaper Dawn, Air Marshal Asghar Khan demanded the resignation of the Governors of both East and West Pakistan.

Addressing Opposition parties' workers in Karachi on December 15, 1968, he said that any possible use of the armed forces to crush agitation against the Government would "create serious consequences" and urged the armed forces not to take more interest in politics than necessary.

He also asked civil servants to be loyal to President Ayub Khan "within the frame-work of the Constitution".

Air Marshal Asghar Khan Charged:

On December 17, 1968,, Air Marshal Asghar Khan was charged in Dacca of unlawfully inciting a crowd to assemble, which is punishable with up to six months' imprisonment.

[Public gatherings of more than five persons are prohibited in Pakistan]

The charge, filed in a lower court, claimed that a large crowd followed Air Marshal Asghar Khan on December 13, 1968 when he left noon prayers at Dacca mosque. The crowd that followed Air Marshal Asghar Khan could have rioted and endangered human lives.

He would be summoned to appear in court later.

Gen. Azam Khan Joins Opposition:

President Ayub Khan faced a fresh challenge on December 6, 1968 when his former right-hand man, Gen. Azam Khan, stepped back into active politics.

Gen. Azam Khan, President Ayub Khan's chief lieutenant when he ruled through Martial Law after taking power in a bloodless coup in 1958, issued a statement in Lahore announcing his move.

He then joined Air Marshal Asghar Khan—President Ayub Khan's former Air Force commander—in a line-up of potentially challenging opponents from outside the ranks of established Pakistani politicans.

Gen. Azam Khan is a West Pakistani who commanded wide popularity in East Pakistan when he was Governor there.

He said at a news conference at Lahore that he would shortly embark on a tour of East and West Pakistan to gather mass support to change the Government. The present Government was not truly representative of the people and he would not rest till a representative Government was established and the present "political suffocation" was completely removed.

He disclosed that when the Government did not heed his advice for promulgating a Constitution reflecting the true wishes of the people, he had resigned as Governor of East Pakistan. He also criticized the economic policies of the Government.

Accusing the Government of trying to create disunity and suspicion, he said all Pakistanis resented the "myth of secession." He demanded an end to the State of Emergency, repeal of university charter, removal of Press curbs and extraordinary laws, freedom of speech and assembly, and release of all political prisoners and students, including Mr. Z. A. Bhutto and Mr. Wali Khan.

More Leaders Join Opposition:

The former Trade Commissioner in Australia, Mr. A. D. Azhar, announced on December 12, 1968 that he was entering politics and joining the Pakistan People's Party of Mr. Z. A. Bhutto.

Mr. Abdul Qayyum, Khan, a former Chief Minister of the erstwhile North-West Frontier Province, also resigned from the ruling Convention Muslim League and placed his services at the disposal of the People's Party.

President Ayub Khan Puts Off Visits To Saudi Arabia & London:

It was stated in Rawalpindi on December 16, 1968 that President Ayub Khan had put off his visit to Saudi Arabia, due to begin on January 1, 1969.

It also said that President Ayub Khan would not attend the Commonwealth Premiers' Conference in London later.

B. President Ayub Khan Lists Fourth Plan Objectives: In his monthly broadcast on November 1, 1968, President Ayub Khan outlined the objectives of the Fourth Plan, which were later approved by the National Economic Council.

The objectives were:

"To direct the forces of economic and social change towards the establishment of a just society;

"To maintain the tempo of development through a determined effort to secure the maximum and most efficient utilization of our material assets and human resources;

"To make the economy increasingly self-reliant in most essential fields; and

"To move towards a viable synthesis between the claims of economic growth and social justice through the pursuit of pragmatic policies."

He said it was for the first time that the Plan objectives were being placed for public discussion before being given a final shape. It was the duty of the intelligentsia to keep this discussion at the proper academic level so that its purpose was not defeated.

He hoped that all those who were acquainted with and understood the affairs of the country and its economic problems would participate in this discussion.

He also identified some of the issues involved in the debate. "At what pace shall we have to speed up our development and what resources will we have to mobilize for the purpose?" At the same time, he added, "we have to consider how to establish a society on the foundations of brotherhood and justice in accordance with our moral and spiritual values."

Document On Fourth Plan:

The Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. M. M. Ahmed, released on November 2, 1968 the first document on the Fourth Plan to mark the launching of the national debate on the Plan's socio-economic objectives.

He set the following tasks before four major sectors of the economy:

Agriculture: Focus on spreading new technology to small farmers and introducing selective mechanization.

Industry: Top priority to basic industries like steel, machinery, chemicals, fertilizers, natural gas, mining, agricultural processing and export industries.

Man-Power Development: Removing serious deficiencies in the country's system of education and technical training and making it more functional.

Family Planning: Measures to avert population explosion through a vigorous family planning programme.

Mr. Ahmed said that the recommended social frame-work sought to resolve conflict between economic dynamism and social justice through the following objects: "Greater equality of opportunity; a fair return to the farmers and industrial workers for their labour; phased introduction of social security and medicare for a growing segment of the population; and greater use of fiscal machinery to promote better distribution of income and wealth."

Elaborating the objective of achieving self-sufficiency in key sectors, he particularly mentioned the target of reducing import of capital goods by half during the next Plan period. At present, 75 per cent of these requirements were imported. The Plan document visualized that almost 80 per cent of the development effort by the end of the Fourth Plan would be made by the country itself.

Regarding the problem of inter-Wing disparity, he said that while success had been achieved in allocating larger public sector expenditure for East Pakistan, there had been "significant failure" in that Wing. The document, therefore, suggested that "the focus of our efforts must shift increasingly to devising a comprehensive policy package to stimulate private investment in East Pakistan and accelerate production in the crucial sector of agriculture."

Major Problems:

Mr. Ahmed said that despite "impressive gains" of the Second and Third Five-Year Plans, certain "serious problems" still remained to be tackled during the Fourth Plan period.

He identified the problems as:

(a) The present per capita income was still among the lowest in the world with 75 per cent of the total number of households receiving an income of less than Rs. 200 per month.

(b) The daily calorie intake was around 2,100 per person compared to the minimum international standard of about 2,600 calories.

(c) In the total population of 125 million, there were hardly 20 million who could read or write.

(d) There was still one doctor to look after every 7,000 persons.

(e) There were still 1.2 million families in urban areas who had no decent shelter over their heads.

Highlights:

The following are the highlights of the Fourth Plan:

(1) A rapid and sustained development was needed to raise the present per capita income of Rs. 40 per month.

(2) Gross National Product rose by 55 per cent in eight years ending 1967-68, while agricultural production was up by 40 per cent, and industrial production by 160 per cent.

(3) Total increase in GNP during the 1960's was Rs. 2,400 crores.

(4) Foodgrains production was expected to increase by eight million tons during the 1960's opening up export possibilities.

(5) Annual development expenditure would rise from Rs. 2 crores in 1959-60, to Rs. 1,10 crores in 1969-70.

C. Tarbela Dam Project: President Ayub Khan on November 1968 performed the ground-brea ing ceremony of the Tarbela Dam in West Pakistan.

He said: "The Mangla Dam symbolized our determination to meet our urgent needs in agriculture. Tarbela caps the chain of the projects which cater for our expansion in the net-work of the irrigation system in West Pakistan and also in augmenting the electric power which is so vital in the future development of both industry and agriculture."

He thanked the World Bank and the Consortium countries for their generous support for the project.

Speaking of the mutual benefits acquiring from co-operative endeavour of the World Bank and the aid-giving countries and the country concerned, he said: "Rich countries appear to be somewhat chary now of extending assistance to the less fortunate ones. I would invite them to analyse the Indus Basin project to see what their assistance has done in meeting the vital need of a developing country and also in conferring benefits of diverse nature on the donor countries themselves."

Details:

The Tarbela Dam, which will be the biggest earth-rock-filled dam of the world, will be constructed over the Indus River about 32 miles above Attock.

The Dam will be ready in 1975.

Of all the replacement plan works envisaged under the Indus Waters Treaty, Tarbela is not only the largest project in size and cost, but also promises maximum development in the agricultural and industrial sectors in West Pakistan. It will involve the construction of a 485-feet-high earth-rock-fill dam which will be 9,000 feet long at its crest.

The Dam will contain 186 million cubic yards of fill materials. It will dwarf the Fort Peck Dam (USA) which till 1967 was the largest earthfill dam, containing 125 million cubic yards of fill materials.

Its four tunnels, each of 45 feet internal diameter, rank amongst the largest in the world. The capacity of its spillways will be 15,00,000 cubic feet per second, which is 50 per cent more than that of the Mangla spillway.

The storage capacity of the proposed reservoir of the Dam is small relative to the volume of annual river flow which will pass through it. The Indus River is known to carry large quantities of sediments and the reservoir will act as a desilting basin. The total sediment load carried by Indus is about 360 million tons every year. It is estimated that the capacity of the Tarbela reservoir will get reduced to one million acre-feet after about 55 to 60 years.

D. Occupation Of Kashmir "A Handicap To India"—Air Marshal Asghar Khan's View: In a series of articles on Pakistan's defence, Air Marshal Asghar Khan, former Air Chief, has said that in purely military terms the "Indian military occupation of Kashmir" was "more of a handicap to India than to Pakistan."

He said that "the larger the forces India finds necessary to station in Kashmir, the weaker her overall military position must necessarily become. The larger Indian force in Kashmir can make little or no contribution to the main battle in the plains, and because of its rather long and tenuous communication link with India, this force will always be in danger of being isolated. Should this happen, even for a relatively short period, the military and political consequences for India could be disastrous and her defence capacity in other theatres would be seriously weakened."

"So long as she finds it politically necessary to hold Kashmir, India will have to station substantial forces in this area. The larger this commitment, the weaker her overall defence capability in the theatres of decisive operations".

He pointed out that "the only area in the west where large Indian forces can be deployed against West Pakistan lies between Sialkot and Ferozepur. It is well served with communications and permits the deployment of large military formations. But from Forozepur almost up to the sea, Pakistan's border is protected by a large desert ill-served by communications. A large military thrust from this direction is therefore unlikely. Conditions in that area afford us natural protection and to some extent ease the problem of defence. The likely battle area from Sialkot to Ferozepur is intersected by canals and rivers all flowing roughly from north to south and therefore across the axis of advance of an invading army".

Air Marshal Asghar Khan pointed out that "these obstacles can, therefore, be used with advantage to improve our defence capability".

"Indian re-inforcements from one theatre of operations to another on East Pakistan's periphery would have to cover a wide circuitous route, and the re-deployment of her forces would therefore be relatively a more difficult task. Concentration and re-deployment of forces in the eastern theatre is, therefore, an easier task for us than for the Indians.

"In military terms, therefore, Pakistan's division into two halves lends strength to her defence and enhances her security".

E. Soviet Help In Nuclear Technology: According to a bilateral Agreement finalized in the third week of November, 1968, the Soviet Union has agreed to help Pakistan develop its nuclear technology.

According to reports reaching Washington, Moscow's decision to train Pakistani scientists and engineers in Soviet nuclear establishments and offer it technical data on uses of atomic energy has caused Pakistan much satisfaction.

Pakistani leaders had for long complained of the advance that India had made in this field and had been anxious to secure help to narrow the gap quickly. They now hope that with Soviet assistance their country will not only catch up with India, but perhaps outstrip it in the next few years.

On the other hand, Moscow's willingness to share its knowledge and experience in the important and potentially dangerous field of nuclear technology is apparently part of its endeavour to win Pakistan's affections.

F. Industrial Production During 1967-68: Taking 1959-60 as base year, the industrial production in 1967-68 touched the 261 mark, showing a progress of over 250 per cent during the post-Revolution period and an annual average growth rate of 15 per cent.

This was disclosed by Mr. Saeed Jafri, Secretary, Ministry of Industries and Natural Resources, in a news conference in Rawalpindi recently. He also disclosed that the investment during the First Five-Year Plan amounted to $388,655,000. During the Second Plan period, the industrial sector claimed an investment of $1,449,580,000. The Third Five-Year Plan projected an investment of $2,680,672,000 against which sanctions amounting to $1,260,504,000 were issued during the first three years of the Plan.

He expressed satisfaction at the rate of progress in industry. "We have achieved self-sufficiency in most of the consumer goods like drugs and medicines, vegetable oil, cement, paper and newsprint, pesticides and insecticides. We are producing a good deal of our requirements of agricultural machinery, trucks, cars and scooters."

He added that the progress of industrial sector could be gauged from the fact that Pakistan was now earning sufficient foreign exchange through the export of manufactures, which constituted 45 per cent of total exports as against 10 per cent in 1957-58.

G. Mineral Production: The Director-General of the Geological Survey, Dr. Mohsinul Haq, said in Quetta recently that Pakistan was rich in mineral resources and besides meeting its own requirements, was exporting large quantities of barite, chromite and gypsum to a number of countries.

He said that Pakistan was fairly self-sufficient in iron-ore "on which our steel would be based." "We have about 500,000,000 tons of iron-ore deposits, the largest being in Chichali, Kalabagh area, and a large quantity of coal, dolomite, flourite and limestone, the allied minerals which are to be used in steel manufacture."

The country had 1,050,000,000 tons of coal reserves. The largest deposit of about 700,000,000 tons of coal had been found in Rajshahi-Bogra area of East Pakistan. In West Pakistan, these deposits amounted to 363,000,000 tons. The largest deposit amounting to about 170,000,000 tons had been located in Lakhra area in former Sind.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Budget For 1968-69: King Feisal issued on September 23, 1968 a Royal Decree endorsing the State Budget for the fiscal year 1968-69, the largest national Budget in the country's history.

Both revenue and expenditure during the new fiscal year were estimated at 5,535,500 million Riyals.

The Minister of Finance and National Economy was authorized to secure from local loans and public savings the sum of 630 million Riyals representing Saudi Arabia's financial commitment towards certain Arab countries which suffered from the Israeli aggression in June, 1967.

The balance of the Economic Development Fund brought forward from previous years was added to the allocations for this year's projects.

The Decree also dealt with the procedure for the collection of revenues, spending of public funds, transfer of appropriations from one chapter to another, appointment and promotion of Government officials, the reserve funds system and other routine instructions.

King Feisal issued a number of other decrees endorsing budgets of public institutions and semi-official agencies.

B. Accord With Iran—Shah's Visit: Under the banner of Muslim solidarity, Islam's two most powerful monarchs set aside their differences on November 11, 1968 and declared that the time had arrived when all the "faithful should stand together against the common enemy."

The call came at a dinner given by King Feisal for his guest, the Shah of Iran, in the massive, marble dining hall of Almazar Palace. White-robed princes and shaikhs and Iranians, from the Shah's 80-strong retinue, in tails and glittering sashes acclaimed their rulers' accord.

As the Shah of Iran agreed in reply to his host—the protector of Islam's two holiest shrines who nevertheless prefers to be known as the servant of his people—the time had come for co-operation among Muslims.

It seemed that at last a gentlemen's agreement between the two—certainly not a signed pact but a rapport—had all but arrived.

One of their more pressing problems—that of off-shore boundaries which brought an Iranian gun-boat out against an Aramco rig in February, 1968—has at last been solved.

In fact an Agreement between the two countries on the median line in the Gulf and the share-out of oil discovered in the disputed area (a field found by the Saudis in the north of the Gulf, ten per cent of which is in the Iranian seabed) was being ratified by the Iranian Council of Ministers.

The Agreement also settled a dispute over two islands in the south of the Gulf, one of which is in Iranian waters, the other in Saudi Arabia's.

The Shah's arrival earlier in the day had been to a 21-gun salute as his jet touched down precisely at 11 a.m., the appointed time, and he stepped on to the dust-swept tarmac of Riyadh airport. The welcoming party consisted of white-robed court Ministers, the Diplomatic Corps and a number of officers from the Saudi armed forces.

The National Anthems played as the two monarchs stood side by side and a flight of Saudi Air Force Sabres flew in victory formation across the sky.

In between his discussions with King Feisal, the Shah visited Mecca and Medina, Islam's two holiest cities, and spending the last four days of his six-day visit in the coastal city of Jeddah.

SINGAPORE

A. Hanging Of Two Indonesian Prisoners: Two Indonesians, Osman bin Haji Mohammed Ali and Harun bin Said, aged 23 and 25, were hanged in a Singapore prison on October 17, 1968 after the Government had rejected a clemency plea by President Suharto.

The Government, in a statement, explained why it had not found it possible to accede to appeals for clemency from the Indonesian President and the Malaysian Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, in the cases of the two condemned men. It claimed that the two men were responsible for three deaths and injury to 30 people by causing an explosion during the days of "confrontation."

It said that Singapore had always shown understanding and sympathy towards the Indonesian Government's position in dealing with problems arising from the previous regime's policy of confrontation. The desire for the closest relations with the Indonesian Government had prompted a compassionate view of Indonesians involved in offences where no loss of life had occurred. As a result, 43 detainees had been released on December 24, 1966.

Two other men sentenced to death for planting a time-bomb, which exploded but caused no loss of life, had been released in 1967 and returned to Indonesia. Singapore rejected the contention that the two executed men were members of the Indonesian armed forces, entitled to treatment as prisoners of war. This point had been extensively argued in the courts and rejected by them. The final instance was in the judicial committee of the Privy Council.

According to Singapore reports, the Government decided to risk the consequences of the executions for the following reason: the sort of threat it expected was not invasion, but infiltration and sabotage of the kind these two men were said to have perpetrated. It was maintained that killers should be left in no doubt that they faced the full rigour of the law.

Indonesian Reaction:

The executions provoked violent reactions in Indonesia. Demonstrators rampaged through the Singapore Embassy in Djakarta. The Ambassador, Mr. P. A. Raman, had to be escorted to safety.

The demonstrators forced their way into the home of the Singapore Embassy Counsellor, wrecked all the furniture, and broke the glass. Troops later stood guard around the piles of burning rubble at the house.

At the home of the Embassy's Commercial Secretary, the students smashed wall carvings and emptied cushions of their stuffing. The entire Embassy staff had earlier left their homes.

The violence broke out after 10,000 Indonesians packed the airport as the bodies were flown in from Singapore on board an Indonesian Air Force aircraft.

Admiral Muljadi, chief of the Indonesian Navy, received the bodies at Djakarta airport in a quadrangle formed by students, soldiers and Marines. The coffins were then taken in ambulances decked with wreaths, and bearing the dead men's photographs, to lie in state at the Defence Ministry, A big motor cycle escort accompanied the ambulances. Later, the bodies were buried with military honours.

B. Clean-Up Drive: The Government is making a determined effort to see that the city State is the "cleanest and greenest in South Asia." Ministers have been out in their constituencies, basket or spike in hand, leading mass assaults on litter and refuse.

The Government radio and television exudes jingles, there are stickers on cars and envelopes, banners across streets, and posters everywhere in all four official languages with the message: "Keep Singapore Clean."

Such a campaign implies a confidence both in public organization and in an ability to inspire social discipline that staggers many visitors. In nine years of running their own affairs they have not only maintained but have adapted and expanded good standards of public utilities administration. From the outset, the ruling People's Action Party has specialized in inculcating community spirit in a mass of voluntary and semi-voluntary bodies.

SOUTH YEMEN

A. Co-ordination Of Defence Policies With Yemeni Republic: A joint communique, issued in Aden and Sana'a on August 3, 1968, said that South Yemen and the Yemeni Republic would co-ordinate the defence policies of the two countries "to counter imperialist and reactionary plots and challenges against them."

The communique came at the end of a week-long visit to Yemen of a South Yemeni delegation headed by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Seif el Dhalei.

The two sides pointed out the importance of financial, economic, commercial and information cooperation between them. They agreed on co-ordinating their industrial policies and combating smuggling.

On his return to Aden on August 3, Mr. Seif el Dhalei said that the Yemeni Government had expressed readiness to strike at the concentrations on the southern borders of Yemen. There would be co-ordination between defence officials in both countries.

The Yemeni Government told him that it had ordered Sultan Ahmed Abdulla el Fadhli and Emir Gaber Ben Hussein el Awazaly out of Yemeni territory. The Government of Yemen had also pledged to prevent any South yemeni from carring out subversion and political activity against South Yemen including making statements to the Press. It had also pledged to arrest and expel all the South Yemenis who took part in the recent plot.

B. Soviet Military Aid: Radio Aden reported on August 29, 1968 that the Soviet Union would provide military and technical assistence to South Yemen under a new Agreement.

The Radio said the Agreement was signed earlier in the day by the South Yemen Defence Minister, Mr. Mohamed Saleh Al Aulaqi, and the Soviet Ambassador to South Yemen, Mr. Vladimir Startsev.

Mr. Aulaqi said the Agreement was considered part of the military and technical assistance the Soviet Union was providing South Yemen "in support against imperialist and reactionary pressures on the country." These pressures had begun with the suspension of British aid and had developed into the recent rebellion.

A Soviet military delegation had visited Aden in March, 1968 after a South Yemen military delegation had been to Moscow to obtain Soviet arms for the armed forces.

SYRIA

A. Cabinet Re-shuffle & Its Implications: The Cabinet was reshuffled on October 29, 1968.

The two men involved were Gen. Salah Jedid, Commander-in-Chief and 'strong man' of the Ba'ath Party, and Gen. Hafez Assad, Defence Minister and Commander of the Air Force. The two prominent casualties were the Premier, Dr. Youssef Zeayen, and the Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister, Dr. Ibrahim Makhous.

Dr. Zeayen made his debut as a protege of Gen. Amin Hafez, who became President of Syria after the Ba'athist coup of March, 1963. He rose to be Premier in September, 1965, but stayed on for barely four months because he was soon out of favour with Gen. Hafez. He joined hands with Gen. Jedid and Gen. Assad to overthrow the Hafez regime in February 1, 1966. In a country where coups are frequent (nine successful ones since 1949), the significance of that event was that it rent the Ba'ath Party into two.

Dr. Zeayen became Premier again and brought in his friend of the university days, Dr. Makhous, as Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister. Gen. Jedid became boss of the armed forces and the party and Gen. Assad was given the Defence portfolio and command of the Air Force. The two officers quarrelled when things were quiet and worked together when the regime faced a crisis, as at the time of the two coup attempts in September, 1966. The only exception appeared to be when the "old" Ba'ath came to power in Iraq in July, 1968.

Some two months earlier, there were reports that differences had arisen between Gen Jedid and Dr.

Zeayen and the way for the Premier's ouster would be paved at the Ba'ath Party Congress. When the party meeting, often postponed because of other confusing differences between various personalities, was finally held, Gen. Assad launched a broadside against Dr. Zeayen for taking the country into awkward isolationism and into a too-close relationship with Russia. Dr. Zeayen was known as Moscow's man in Damascus.

Gen. Jedid suddenly decided to back Dr. Zeayen and almost as illogically Gen. Assad adopted Dr. Makhous as his protege, although he was equally responsible for Syria's Arab and foreign policy. Gen. Assad forced the pace of political developments by taking the issue from the "regional" command, where he was weak, to the nominally-existing National Command.

It was the supervention of the National Command of the undivided Ba'ath in January, 1966 which weakened Gen. Jedid's hand and cost Dr. Zeayen his Premiership. Gen. Jedid had to stage a coup a month later to retrieve their positions.

Cabinet Change:

The National Command decided that there should be a Cabinet change. In a patch-work compromise, the Jedid and Assad factions drew up a new list, from which both Dr. Zeayen and Dr. Makhous were dropped. Although Dr. Nuruddin Attassi, nominal Secretary-General of the party and figure-head President, also belonged to the Zeayen-Makhous line of thinking, the National Command stopped short of removing him too because it did not want the whole thing to appear as a "change of regime" instead of a Cabinet re-shuffle. In the eyes of the "old" Ba'athists, the regime had already lost its "legitimacy" through the overthrow of Gen. Hafev's Presidency.

The 25-man Cabinet retained the fiction of a "national front" Government by including in it two "socialist trade unionists," four "independent progressives" and one communist. The communist member was Mr. Wasel Feisal. He holds the Communications portfolio, which has traditionally been given to a communist because most communication projects in Syria are Soviet-financed. He is the brother of Mr. Youssef Feisal, who replaced the veteran communist, Mr. Khalid Bakdash, as Secretary of the Party a few months earlier.

Among the notable changes was the appointment of the tough former Interior Minister, Mr. Mohammed Eid Ashawi, as Foreign Minister. Mr. Ashawi was succeeded by Col. Rabah al Taweel, Chief of the Popular Army.

[The Workers' and Peasants' Militia was an innovation after military intelligence, once under Col. Abdul Kerim Jundi, was discredited for getting "soft." Eventually, all the Jundis, once a powerful family, were discredited. Mr. Khalid Jundi, General Secretary of the Labour Federation, was arrested and Mr. Samir Jundi, Ambassador to France, was dismissed and arrested for allegedly writing a pro-Israeli book in contravention of Foreign Service regulations.]

A new feature of the Cabinet was the creation of three posts of Deputy Defence Minister under Gen. Assad. They are the Army Chief of Staff, Maj-Gen. Mustafa Tlas, Air Vice-Marshal Louis Al-Dakr, and Maj.-Gen. Awad Ali Al Rashid. Whether Gen. Jedid or Gen. Assad will have the upper hand in the long run will depend on where the personal loyalties of Col. Taweel and Gen. Tlas lie.

Pilots' Escape:

Only three months earlier, two pilots of the Syrian Air Force "strayed" with their MIG-17s into Israel. This was an unsought prize for the Israelis who were humiliated by the hijacking of an El Al airliner by Palestine commandos.

A fortnight later, more than a dozen Syrian pilots escaped with their planes into Iraq after a coup attempt had failed. The attempt was made by Gen. Sweidany, who was replaced as Army Chief of Staff by Gen. Tlas. He too fled, with 185 officers and men, to Iraq, where "old" Ba'athist leaders like Gen. Hafez and Mr. Michael Aflaq are planning the overthrow of the "new" Ba'athist regime in Syria.

A few weeks later, Gen. Assad made a hush-hush journey to Baghdad to ask for the return of the planes and also to try for a rapprochement between the two wings of the Ba'ath. On both counts, the mission was a flop. The "old" Ba'athists insisted that as a price for reconciliation, Syria must take back Gen. Hafez as President to restore the "legitimacy" destroyed in the 1966 coup. Gen. Assad was completely opposed to the re-instatement of either Gen. Hafez or Mr. Aflaq.

The Cabinet re-shuffle has one other major significance. It completed the destruction of the civilian facade of the Ba'ath, which was born as a great intellectual movement. Both the "old" Ba'ath in Iraq under Gen. Hassan Al Bakr and the "new" Ba'ath in Syria under Gen. Assad and Gen. Jedid now wear khaki. The blame lies with the veteran civilian leaders.

Mr. Aflaq, one of the founders and chief theoretician of the Ba'ath, once said: "I am the only Ba'athist and I am going off to Brazil." He is back now, only to find the Ba'ath in the same mess as he left it in. At the time of the first Ba'athist coup in Syria in 1963, the Party had barely 200 members. The leaders made two basic and complementary mistakes: (a) to resort to Army help as an easy way to power instead of facing the difficult task of popular organization; and (b) to drag the Army into their own quarrels.

It was not long before they realized that the Army was using them instead of their using the Army as an indoctrinated pillar of their ideology. So, it is Gen. Jedid and/or Gen. Assad in Syria and Gen. Bakr and/or Gen. Ammash in Iraq, with their civilian hangers-on.

B. Arab Lawyers' Conference: The 10th Arab Lawyers' Conference, which ended in Damascus on September 9, 1968, resolved that it was necessary to place Arab petroleum at the service of the Arab battle of destiny.

The Conference called for liquidating all foreign military bases in the Arab homeland. It denounced the "crime of secession" which had occurred between Syria and Egypt and said it was an outrageous crime that "had prepared the way for the June 5, 1967 aggression by Israel."

It greeted the peoples and Governments of the friendly socialist countries with the Soviet Government at the top for their support to the movement of the Arab Revolution. It asserted the Arab people's rights to all captured territories of the Arab homeland. Further, it greeted the struggle of the Arab people in North and Southern Yemen, in the Arab Peninsula and in Oman against the "schemings of imperialism and reaction." It denounced the imperialistic machinations designed to obliterate the Arabism of the Gulf, especially Bahrain and Oman.

The Conference deplored the "defeatist attitude" taken by the Government of Tunisia and condemned Tunisia's rulers for resisting the goals of the Arab Revolution and for seeking peace with the enemy.

It called for setting up an Arab Army with a united command. It resolved that the armies of UAR, Syria and Iraq, alongside the masses of the Arab nation, were fully responsible for protecting the Jordanian front.

C. Arab Pharmacists' Congress: The Minister of Health, Dr. Zakaria Khayyata, opened in Damascus on September 23, 1968 the first Congress of Arab Pharmacists.

The opening ceremony was attended by leaders of the Arab Ba'ath Socialist Party, Ministers, senior officials and members of the diplomatic corps.

In a speech opening the Congress, Dr. Khayyata called for "increased Arab co-operation and action to face Zionist and imperialist plans," and said he hoped the Congress would achieve its aims of strengthening the links of Arab pharmacists.

About 350 pharmacists from Algeria, the United Arab Republic, Sudan, Lebanon, Jordan, Iraq, Kuwait and Syria took part in the six-day session.

Seventy-two papers were read at the Congress and meetings held to discuss the creation of an Arab pharmaceutical common market. The Congress also discussed means to guard against bacteriological weapons and chemical warfare equipment and their use in war.

TURKEY

A. NATO Ties Defended: Addressing a news conference in Ankara on September 20, 1968, the Prime Minister, Mr. Suleyman Demirel, said that Turkey had joined the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) "not by sacrificing her independence but, on the contrary, to defend her independence more effectively."

He said the "NATO pact is a collective security and defence pact set up by nations against the threat of aggression."

He brushed aside the growing criticism against NATO in his country which came into focus during the visit of the American Sixth Fleet ships to Istanbul and Izmir and said: "Certainly a country has to have sufficient power and resources to safeguard its sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence."

Regarding the visit of the Sixth Fleet, he said America was a friendly country and an ally of Turkey and the visit was an "entirely normal and usual occurrence." Ships from any friendly country could visit Turkey and Turkish ships could go to that country.

Turkey, he said, was as independent as any of the 15 NATO member-countries "which share the belief in free and independent living." He added that Turkey was an honourable member of NATO of her own will and desire. "The Turkish nation has enough commonsense and historic experience not to fall into the trap of being isolated from the free world and its common might which supports independence."

Under NATO, his country had committed herself to some requirements of joint defence like other members of the pact and he said that "to interpret them as jeopardizing her independence can only mean being a tool of the ideas of those who want to throw Turkey into danger."

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Aid Agreement With Soviet Union: Tass reported on November 27, 1968 the signing of an Agreement in Moscow providing for Soviet civil and military aid to North Viet-Nam in 1969.

The news agency said the agreement was concluded at the end of talks between Soviet officials and a Viet-Namese delegation led by the Vice-Premier, Mr. Le Than Ngi.

An official communique said the Agreement covered both free aid and long-term credits "as well as documents on some other questions of Soviet-Viet-Namese co-operation."

It added that the Agreement "envisaged delivery by the Soviet Union during 1969 of food, oil products, transport facilities, complete industrial plant, ferrous and non-ferrous metals, chemical fertilizers, ammunition and other equipment necessary for the strengthening of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam's defence potential and the development of its economy."

Under the Agreement signed in 1967, the Soviet Union had promised to supply North Viet-Nam with warplanes, anti-aircraft guns, missiles, artillery and other weapons. Tass did not disclose the amount of aid covered by the 1969 Agreement but, according to American estimates, Soviet aid to Hanoi totalled about $1 billion in 1967 and was greater in 1968.

He claimed that the royalists had lost 200 men. He said his regular and tribal forces had driven off supporters of the deposed Imam from their mountain strong-hold. The royalists were fleeing into Saudi Arabia, and the Imam was reported to be with them.

A. Car Marathon Results: A Scottish rally driver, Mr. Andrew Cowan, won the £10,000 London-to-Sydney car marathon in Sydney on December 17, 1968 after a dramatic crash had robbed the Belgian Le Mans ace, Mr. Lucien Bianchi, of almost certain victory.

First across the finishing line in Sydney was an Irish driver, Mr. Paddy Hopkirk, whose BMC-1800 was placed second behind Mr. Cowan's Hillman Hunter.

In their drive across three continents, Mr. Hopkirk's Leyland-BMC entry had 56 penalty points, six more than the Hillman official entry of Britain's Rootes group. Thirty of the 60 surviving cars had arrived at the Sydney check-point in the six hours since the leaders checked in.

A team of Australian Ford Falcons won the three-car teams event. Rally officials said that provisional placings put the Ford Falcons well clear of the second-placed BMC-1,800s.

The three Falcons, driven by Mr. Harry Firth, Mr. Ian Vaughan and Mr. Brian Hodgson, lost 246 points on the 10,600-mile rally. British drivers, Mr. Paddy Hopkirk, Mr. Rauno Altonen and Mr. Tony Fall had 554 penalty points in the BMC-1,800 team. These were the only three-car teams to have checked in at the control point nearly five hours after the official arrival time.

The unluckiest man of the race was Milan-born Mr. Lucien Bianchi, whose leading British-entered Citroen DS-21 crashed only about 100 miles from the check line. Bianchi was sleeping when his co-driver, Mr. Jean Ogier, collided head-on with a small private car.

Britain's Mr. Roger Clark dashed his chances of winning the rally early on December 17, 1968 when he broke down between Omeo and Bruthen in the Victoria State alpine country. Mr. Clark's Lotus Cortina developed differential (axle) trouble and he limped into Bruthen. At the time he was among the first three in the rally.

Placings:

The following are the placing in the car marathon, sponsored by the London's Daily Express and Sydney's Telegraph:

(1) Hillman Hunter, A. Cowan (Britain) 50 points lost.

(2) BMC-1,800, P. Hopkirk (Britain) 56.

(3) Ford Falcon GT., I. Vaughan (Australia) 62.

(4) Porsche 911-S, S. Zasada (Poland) 63.

(5) BMC-1800, R. Altonen (Britain) 68.

(6) Ford Falcon GT, B. Hodgson (Australia) 70.

(7) Ford 20 MRS, H. Kleint (West Germany) 91.

(8) Ford Falcon GT, H. Firth (Australia) 114.

(9) Citroen DS 21, R. Neyret (France) 125.

(10) Ford Lotus Cortina, R. Clark (Britain) 144.

(11) Volvo 144 S, K. Tubman (Australia) 148.

(12) Holden GTS, B. Ferguson (Australia) 169.

On December 14, 1968, the British ace driver, Mr. Roger Clerk had led the field out of Perth for the final gruelling leg across Australia. Mr. Clark had lost only 11 points on the stretch from London to Bombay.

Earlier, only 75 out of the 98 cars participating in the marathon arrived in Bombay on December 4, 1968. Of these, only 70 qualified for the onward trip to Fremantle by ship to drive across Australia and complete the rally.

Event To Be Held Every Four Years:

It was announced in Sydney on December 17, 1968 that the London-to-Sydney 10,000-mile car marathon would be held every Olympic year.

The decision to hold it every four years was made over a handshake by the Chairman of the Board of Beaverbook Press, Sir Max Aitken, and Sir Frank Packer, Chairman of Consolidated Press, Sydney, co-sponsors of the 1968 rally.

C. USA Wins Inter-Zone Davis Cup Final: The United States beat India 4-1 in the Inter-Zone Davis Cup final in San Juan (Puerto Rico) on November 11, 1968 to qualify to meet Australia in the Challenge Round.

The Americans won both reverse singles. First Arthur Ashe beat India's Ramanathan Krishnan 6-1, 6-2, 6-3, to give USA a winning lead. Then Clark Graebner defeated Premjit Lall 9-11, 9-7, 7-5, 6-4 in the final match, which was only of academic interest.

Ashe was clearly superior to Krishnan in all phases of the game. His blistering services and powerful net play gave the Indian no chance to even the tie for his country. Krishnan whose service seldom worked at its best, said later he had been troubled by an old wrist injury which had flared up again. His racket wrist was heavily taped.

Lall could seldom match Graebner's all-round power and court craft in the final singles, though he made the American fight hard to the end.

On November 9, Krishnan had defeated Graebner in the opening singles to win 7-5, 4-6. 6-2, 6-1, whereas Premjit Lall lost to Ashe 6-2, 5-7, 6-2, 6-4.

The following day, Bob Lutz and Stan Smith gave USA a vital 2-1 lead by defeating Krishnan and Jaideep Mukherjea 6-2, 6-3, 6-2. On the final day, USA clinched its victory by winning both reverse singles.

SUMMARY: Visits By Mr. Michael Stewart And Mr. D. Senanayake; Talks With Pakistan On Farakka Project; Mr. Dinesh Singh On Economic Co-operation In Asia; FICCI On Fourth Plan; Fundamental Rights Amendment Bill; Essential Services Maintenance Bill Passed; Haryana Congress Survives Crisis; Review Of Indian Cinema.

A. Mr. Michael Stewart's Visit: The British Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Mr. Michael Stewart, arrived in New Delhi on December 2, 1968 on an eight-day visit to India with a view, as he said, to put "Indo-British relations on a mature basis suitable to the positions of our two countries."

The Minister of State for External Affairs, Mr. B. R. Bhagat, welcomed him at Palam airport and said that Mr. Stewart would "find a favourable echo on our side."

In their opening speeches at the talks held with top officials on both sides. both Mr. Stewart and Mr. Bhagat spoke of the need for a fresh basis for Indo-British relations and said that they should be based on the realities of the present situation and on matters concerning the two countries only. Mr. Bhagat welcomed Mr. Stewart's re-affirmation that Britain did not consider it her right or duty to meddle with Indo-Pakistan problems since he had been told that the prospect of a third-party intervention made Pakistan more intransigent.

Mr. Stewart explained what he felt would form the basis of Britain's new role in world affairs. He pointed out that her economic problems and specially her balance of payment's difficulties made her unable to play as big a role as she had done in the past. It meant that she would have to concentrate her efforts on Europe, and this explained her decision to withdraw militarily from east of Suez. Her economic position also made it necessary for her to enter the European Economic Community; this would not harm India and other developing countries; on the other hand, they would gain the benefits of an expanded market.

On the Rhodesian issue, Mr. Stewart explained the Fearless proposals, ahd said Britain felt that the policy of sanctions against Rhodesia should be pursued, as this would bring results. Other subjects discussed included West Asia—where both sides felt an early re-opening of the Suez Canal to be desirable—and Viet-Nam. Mr. Stewart also explained Britain's position in the new setup in the Persian Gulf and Gibraltar. He also dealt with the problems created by immigration.

On December 3, 1968, the Indian delegation re-emphasized that problems between India and Pakistan must be resolved on bilateral basis. Mr. Stewart re-affirmed his earlier statement that Britain had no intention to interfere in Indo-Pakistan affairs unless both sides wanted it and if Britain felt she could do something helpful.

The Indian side was understood to have stated that the racist white minority regime in Rhodesia could not be liquidated without the use of force. This view, was, however, not shared by the British delegation, which felt that economic sanctions would have the desired results, thought it might take time.

The advisers and officials of Indian and British Ministries picked up the thread of discussions on December 4. There was general agreement on many of the issues discussed, the notable exception being the Rhodesian issue. Both were, however, unanimous in their denunciation of the proposed execution of 32 African nationalists by the Smith regime.

[Mr. Alfred Nzo, chief representative of the African National Congress, had appealed to the Government of India to raise the question of the safety of the condemned African fighters with Mr. Stewart. The Lok Sabha's protest at the rejection of the mercy petition of 36 African freedom fighters sentenced to death by the Smith regime was conveyed to the British delegation at the talks].

The two delegations discussed the possible consequences of Britain entering the European Economic Community. The British delegation explained that Britain's entry in the EEC did not mean turning her back on the Commonwealth and that it would be Britain's endeavour to secure, on an enlarged basis for the Commonweath countries, trade preferences that were available to them at present.

The implementation of immigration laws was also discussed and India was informed that Britain proposed to enact further legislation covering the problem of immigrants so that areas in Britain that were socially, educationally and economically backward—in relative terms —could receive special attention.

Mr. Stewart also visited Madras, but cancelled his proposed visit to Bombay due to "pressing Parliamentary business in connexion with the foreign affairs debate which has now been fixed for the next week".

B. Mr. Dudley Senanayake's Visit: The Premier of Ceylon, Mr. Dudley Senanayake arrived in India on a goodwill visit on November 27, 1968.

Mr. Senanayake announced on November 28, 1968 that persons of Indian origin to be repatriated under the 1964 Indo-Ceylon Agreement would not be required to purchase the foreign entitlement certificates in Ceylon to remit their earnings and savings to India. The provision thus freed Indian repatriates of the financial loss due to the devaluation of the Ceylonese rupee, and the payment of 45 per cent as premium on monies to be remitted. The 525,000 State-less persons of Indian origin due for repatriation would be able to remit their assets to this country to the extent of Rs. 75,000 (Ceylonese) each and at the pre-devaluation rate of exchange.

In the course of the talks between Mrs. Indira Gandhi and Mr. Senanayake, which began on November 28, 1968, India agreed to send two agricultural experts to help Ceylon grow more pulses, while Ceylon offered facilities for the study of its crop insurance scheme and the method of growing high-yielding varieties of coconuts. Ceylon would be sending to India a delegation of Govirajas (the equivalent of Krishi Pandits in India.)

The two Prime Ministers agreed that there should be close co-operation between the two countries in the economic and agricultural spheres and in the marketing of tea. The Governments of the two countries had already agreed "on a common approach to the marketing of tea abroad, with the object of obtaining for themselves a better share of the price paid for tea."

There was also discussion on Kachchativu to evolve a flexible formula for settling the whole range of territorial, navigational and fishing rights in the Palk Bay and the Gulf of Mannar. If Ceylon decided to extend the limit of its territorial waters from the present six miles to 12 miles, as India had already done, it would be necessary to draw a new medial line to determine the maritime jurisdiction of the two countries as their territorial seas. It would then be easier to resolve the Kachchativu issue by determining its location either on the Indian or the Ceylonese side of the medial line. This would also avoid an examination of the historical rights and claims of the two sides to the island.

Apart from these bilateral issues, they discussed a number of international issues, specially Rhodesia, the Commonwealth Conference of Prime Ministers and the proposed non-aligned summit meeting. There was unanimity of views on these issues. They expressed the need to liquidate speedily the racist white-minority regime of Mr. Ian Smith in Rhodesia. Both were of the view that there should be "adequate preparation" before holding a non-aligned Conference.

The talks were continued on November 29, 1968. Mr. Senanayake expressed doubts about the regional economic co-operation idea which India was propagating. He thought that the idea was a "desirable object", but due to bitter differences among some countries of the region, the idea did not appear to be feasible. He was, however, keen that the region should remain "an area of peace".

Mr. Senanayake was the guest of honour at a dinner on November 28, 1968 given by Mrs. Gandhi.

The Ceylon High Commissioner held a reception in his honour on November 29, 1968. He called on the President of India on November 29, 1968 and had dinner with him.

Earlier, on November 28, 1968, Mr. Senanayake visited the Mahabodhi Society of India and addressed the gathering at the Buddha Vihara. Referring to the message of Buddhism which Ceylon had received from India, he said that Buddhism was dying a slow death in the land of its birth. "It is only befitting that having received the valuable gift, Ceylon should endeavour to gift it back to India."

The Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued at the end of the talks expressed the "common resolve" on the part of the two countries to approach the problem of Kachchativu island in a spirit of friendly co-operation and in the broader perspective of territorial waters jurisdiction.

The communique reviewed the Indo-Ceylon Agreement of 1964 relating to the repatriation of settlers of Indian origin and referred to the financial arrangements for repatriates, announced earlier. It also dealt with the proposals of closer co-operation between the tea industries of the two countries.

It recorded the agreed views of the two Prime Ministers that "other measures, not excluding the use of force, might become necessary if economic sanctions failed to end the illegal racist regime in Rhodesia."

Before leaving for home from Bombay on December 4, 1968, Mr. Senanayake held a news conference at which he expressed confidence that "in the very near future, the two countries will be satisfactorily solving not only the Kachchativu issue but certain other problems also in the Palk Straits."

He said that his visit to India was extremely useful and important for his country. He specially referred to his visit to the multi-purpose Bhakra-Nangal Project in Punjab and said that he was much struck by the valuable work in agricultural research done at the Pusa Institute. He appreciated the tremendous efforts India was making to step up its agricultural production.

C. USSR's Assurance On Bokaro Steel Project: In a Protocol signed in New Delhi on December 10, 1968 with the Government of India, the Soviet Union assured the timely supply of essential equipment to complete as near to schedule as possible the first stage of the Bokaro Steel Project with a production of 1.7 million tonnes by 1971-72.

The Protocol also provides for expert Russian assistance to help heavy engineering units maintai production targets.

On two major issues, the Government of India failed to obtain de nite commitments from the Sovi Union. It was known that India ha been keen on securing a firm Sovi commitment that it would underta to import some of the products o the heavy engineering unit. Instea of a definite undertaking in this regard, the Soviet Union apparently expressed only its willingness t consider the matter further.

F. Talks With Pakistan On Far akka Project: The five-day Ind Pakistan Secretary-level talks o Farakka and other projects ende in New Delhi on December 1 1968 and yielded no results th could warrant expectation of a early settlement of the dispute.

The only tangible outcome of th talks was an indication by the Pa istani side of its willingness to pr vide certain essential data whi it had withheld so far.

The two sides failed to reconc

the differences in regard to the hydrological data so far exchanged. Although some progress was reportedly made in technical changes, this work could not be completed.

Informed sources claimed that "partial agreement" had been reached on certain issues.

It was announced that the Secretaries of the two Governments would meet again at Islamabad on March 18, 1969 to continue the talks.

The intervening period would be utilized for examination of data exchanged at the current talks and clarifications that may be furnished during this period.

A joint communique issued at the conclusion of the talks said: "Both sides attach great importance to expediting the successful conclusion of these talks and are anxious to find mutually satisfactory solution of the problem."

H. Economic Co-operation In Asia–Mr Dinesh Singh's Statement: The Central Commerce Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, told newsmen in New Delhi on December 17, 1968 that a "modest action programme" for increased economic co-operation in the Asian region would emerge within a year.

The programme, he said, would initially concentrate on increasing production, trade and payments arrangements in the region and expressed the hope that the programme would be launched by the middle of 1970. An Asian Council of Ministers, which was set up at ECAFE's Ministerial Conference at Bangkok in the second week of December, 1968 would ensure the necessary political will to implement the programme. It was proposed to set up a national unit in India as a focal point for Asian economic co-operation. Such units would be set up in other countries also.

Earlier, in a statement in Parliament, Mr. Dinesh Singh said that the Government of India intended to play its due role in the Asian Council of Ministers and to make every endeavour to help the Secretariat of the Council to initiate and implement concrete programmes of action "so that intra-regional trade expands and other schemes of regional co-operation, particularly those relating to infra-structure of industrialization, make reasonably rapid progress."

A highlight of the Conference was the approval of a strategy for integrated development of the region.

J. IAF To Get Better Fighter Planes: The Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, disclosed in the Lok Sabha on December 18, 1968 that the Government was looking for planes which would have better performance than MIGs being manufactured in the country and was confident that it would succeed in acquiring them.

He said that MIGs would continue to be used in India for a considerable time. It was true, however, that there were successor-planes to MIGs.

He assured the House that any threat to India's security from China or Pakistan or from both would be met effectively. He had already spelt out the measures being taken by the Government to deal with any eventuality.

K. Entry Restrictions In Some Areas: Some of the restrictions which operate against nationals from other parts of India in Nagaland, which the Government of India proposes to relax, have been there for the past 95 years.

These restrictions under the Bengal Eastern Frontier Regulation of 1873 on Indian nationals visiting or purchasing land in the restricted areas have remained in operation not only in Nagaland but also in N-EFA and the Mizo Hills district. They were imposed "for reasons of security in the area and to safeguard the interests of the tribal people."

There are no restrictions on visits of Indian nationals to Jammu and Kashmir except in Ladakh which is a "prohibited area." Permits for visits to this area are issued by the Defence Ministry. As regards purchase of land, under the existing provisions of law only permanent residents of the State are entitled to acquire immovable property in Jammu and Kashmir.

In certain other States, and Union Territories too, there are restrictions on purchase of land by outsiders in order to protect the tribal population.

Under the Andhra Pradesh Scheduled Areas Land Transfer Regulation of 1959, restrictions have been imposed in the districts of East Godavari, West Godavari, Visakhapatnam and Srikakulam from that year. In the districts of Adilabad, Warangal, Khammam and Mahboobnagar, there are restrictions since 1963 on the alienation of land by persons belonging to Scheduled Tribes to non-tribals.

In Assam, restrictions were imposed between 1953 and 1967 on the purchase of land by non-tribals in the districts of United Khasi-Jaintia Hills, Garo Hills, Mikir Hills, Mizo Hills and in Jowai sub-division.

In Uttar Pradesh, visits of Indian nationals are being regulated by permits to certain areas in Pithoragarh, Chamoli and Uttarkashi districts since 1962 in the interests of the safety and security of India and in public interest.

Under the Andaman and Nicobar Islands (Protection of Aboriginal Tribes) Regulation of 1956, certain areas are out of bounds for visitors, nor can outsiders purchase land in those areas. These restrictions are meant to safeguard the interest of the aboriginal tribes there.

Certain areas in Kinnaur district of Himachal Pradesh are notified areas under the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1961. Entry into those areas are regulated by permits in the interests of security.

Non-islanders who are not Government servants cannot visit the Laccadive, Minicoy and Amindive islands without a permit. Transfer of land belonging to members of Scheduled Tribes in that Union Territory to non-tribals is also prohibited.

Entry of Indian nationals into the hill sub-divisions of Manipur is regulated by permits. Under the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act of 1960, a member of a Scheduled Tribe cannot transfer land to a non-tribal without the prior permission of the Deputy Commissioner.

There are no such restrictions in Gujarat, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh, Mysore, Punjab, Rajasthan, West Bengal, and the Union Territories of Chandigarh, Delhi, Dadra and Nagar Haveli, Goa, Daman and Diu, Pondicherry and Tripura.

L. FICCI On Fourth Plan: In a pamphlet issued on December 22, 1968, the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) suggested an outlay of Rs. 18,000 crores in the Fourth Plan period for achieving "a feasible growth rate of nearly five per cent" and set out what, in its view, should form the guidelines for the Fourth Plan and cautioned the Government against going in for a "too ambitious" Plan.

It pointed out that the economy had a certain growth potential and planning should be such as to harness that potential in full measure. "If we plan for a growth rate which the economy cannot sustain, planning would fall on the side of being too ambitious." It, however, recognized that the development potential cannot be accurately judged and it is only through trial and error that a near correct size plan can be implemented. It has, therefore, suggested that the Fourth Five-Year Plan should be split into five annual plans which should be subject to continuous revision and alternations in the light of changing conditions.

It proposed that the Plan should be divided into two parts, one consisting of the "core" programmes which are crucial for the development of economy, and the other of supplementary schemes. All necessary facilities should be provided for implementing the "core" projects in the public and private sectors.

The basic objective of the Fourth Plan, it said, should be to consolidate the economy and make it more development-oriented, rather than to stipulate a fixed rate of growth. Self-sufficiency in the production of foodgrains should be achieved by adopting a new strategy based primarily on larger use of inputs. For this purpose, full facilities should be provided to industries manufacturing agricultural inputs.

It emphasized that public sector undertakings should be better managed so that they produce more and yield better returns. Projects already under construction should be completed with utmost speed.

Full utilization of capacity in the private sector should be brought about by adopting anti-recessionary measures. The capital market, which has been in a depressed condition, has to be revived by suitable changes in the tax structure. The rate of taxation, which had reached a point of diminishing returns, should be reduced.

Other economic policies like price control, industrial licensing and import controls should be revised in a manner that would leave larger initiative with the people. A scheme of incentives should be devised for the implementation of programmes in the priority sectors.

M. Hindustan Steel Ltd. Losses: Hindustan Steel Limited (HSL) has incurred a cumulative loss of Rs. 122.4 crores since its inception till March 31, 1968. The net loss in 1967-69 was Rs. 40.1 crores.

According to a review of the working of HSL for 1967-68, production of saleable steel at HSL plants fell by 5.5 per cent from 2.56 million tonnes. Capacity utilization in respect of saleable steel declined from 91 per cent in 1965-66 to 69 per cent in 1967-68. This was mainly caused by the general economic recession and frequent labour troubles at HSL plants.

One heartening feature, however, was HSL's good performance in exports. Exports earnings rose from Rs. 9.3 crores in 1966-67 to Rs. 30.9 crores in 1967-68. HSL now exports to 30 countries, including USA, UK, Australia, Japan and USSR.

The total investment on HSL plants on capital account based on Government funds at the end of March 31, 1968 was Rs. 1,072.5 crores (equity Rs. 552 crores and loans Rs. 520.5 crores). The last month the Government subscribed a further amount of Rs. 5 crores towards HSL's share capital, thus raising its share capital to Rs. 557 crores. It also received a loan of Rs. 6.8 crores from the Government in 1967.

N. Fundamental Rights Amendment Bill Moved In Lok Sabha: Parliament's right to amend the Chapter on Fundamental Rights in the Constitution was contested when debate began on Mr. Nath Pai's (P-SP) Constitution Amendment Bill in the Lok Sabha on November 29, 1968.

The Bill seeks to restore to Parliament this right which the Supreme Court, in its famous six-to-five majority judgement in the Golaknath case in February, 1967 had made inoperative.

The argument in favour of the Bill broadly was that the Constitution was flexible enough to allow Parliament to legislate on Fundamental Rights. Those who opposed contended mainly that the Constitution was nowhere more rigid than on the question of Fundamental Rights.

Speakers on both sides quoted Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, one of the framers of the Constitution, and Mr. M. C. Setalvad, the eminent jurist, in support of their argument. While Communist members supported the Bill, the Swatantra and Jana Sangh members were against it. Congress members were divided in their support.

Before the debate started, the House rejected by 128 votes to [illegible] an amendment, moved by Mr. J. M. Lobo Prabhu (Swatantra), for summoning the Attorney-General of India to give his opinion on the constitutionality of the measure.

Moving the Bill, Mr. Nath Pai conceded there were separate spheres of jurisdiction of Parliament and the Supreme Court. But, he thought the judgment was based on an erroneous view and had cast doubts on the wisdom of the people. As far as he was concerned, the people were the ultimate authority.

Mr. Nath Pai also found little weight in the criticism that enactment of the Bill would make the Government totalitarian. A country was democratic, he asserted, because of the commitment of a majority of its people to democracy, and not because of a court judgment or the charity of a Government.

Mr. Frank Anthony (Ind) said that by supporting the Bill, the Go vernment would give hostage to lawlessness. The measure was against the spirit of the Constitution which was the symbol of law.

Mr. Anthony accused the Government of seeking to create deliberately a quarrel with the Supreme Court. He suspected there might be a political attempt to brow-beat the judges. If the judges were to backslide, democracy would be in danger.

Mr. N. C. Chatterjee (Ind) contended that Parliament had the right to amend Fundamental Rights.

The debate did not conclude and was carried over to the next session.

Mr. Justice Hidayatullah On Fundamental Rights:

The Chief Justice of India, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, said in New Delhi on December 10, 1968 that it seemed "somewhat strange," particularly in this "Year of Human Rights", that there should be cleavage of opinion in the country on the issue of basic Fundamental Rights.

[The Chief Justice had obviously in mind Mr. Nath Pai's Bill moved in the Lok Sabha to empower Parliament to amend any part of the Constitution, including Fundamental Rights].

He said that difficulties arose in the country because of inclusion of "property rights" in the Fundamental Rights Chapter in the Constitution. "By all means one can go for that, but one must go for it in a constitutional way."

He said that any attempt aimed at jeopardizing the position of Fundamental Rights in the Constitution might well mean "an attempt to reverse the gear" and also "reversal of policies of nations" (in regard to basic human rights).

O. September Strike Cases—Kerala Decision To Withdraw: The Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, announced at a news conference in Trivandrum on December 18, 1968 that the Kerala Government had decided to withdraw, with permission from the court, all cases arising out of the Central Government employees' strike on September 19, 1968 except those involving serious attacks on people and property.

The Central Government sources in New Delhi, however, expressed surprise at the Kerala Government's decision to withdraw cases against 130 Central employees charge-sheeted for illegal participation in the September 19 token strike.

The State Government action was considered odd, particularly since the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan had conveyed to the Kerala Chief Minister the Centre's opposition to the withdrawal of the cases.

Central Government's View:

On December 19, 1968, the Central Government's legal experts held that decision to withdraw the cases was illegal and unconstitutional.

In a letter to Mr. Namboodiripad early in December, 1968 Mr. Chavan had explained the Central Government's views and had asked the State Government not to go ahead with its contemplated move. No reply was received.

Instructions were sent to the heads of the Central Government departments in Kerala, whose employees were involved in the incidents — the Accountant-General, Postmaster General and others—to oppose the withdrawal applications in courts. No other step was contemplated so far, although the Kerala action was regarded as a clear defiance of the Central Government.

According to the legal experts, decisions about withdrawals could be taken only by one agency—the Public Prosecutor (or the Advocate-General) acting in his personal capacity, and not under instructions from others. The blanket order of the Kerala Government violated this principle, and was, therefore, illegal. Any decision by a Public Prosecutor —under Section 494, Cr. PC—was the result of his discretion, exercised when he felt that to press the case would be to abuse his right.

The Supreme Court had already pronounced that courts had to be satisfied about good judicial reasons for withdrawal of cases before they gave their consent. According to one view, the complainants—which in these cases would be the heads of the Central Government departments—could approach the High Court even if the lower courts granted permission for withdrawal.

The withdrawal order was considered unconstitutional on the ground that it amounted to defiance of the Essential Services Maintenance Ordinance, which was at par with the law of Parliament. Under Article 256 of the Constitution, it was stated, there was no discretion with State Governments in regard to the implementation of Central laws. The Article says: "The executive power of every State shall be so exercised as to ensure compliance with the laws made by Parliament."

Withdrawal Of Cases In Kerala Refused By Court:

The Sub-Magistrate of Trivandrum, Mr. P. K. Chandrasekhara Panicker, rejected the Kerala Government's prayer on December 23, 1968 for the withdrawal of cases against 284 Central Government employees in connexion with the September strike.

Of the 284 employees chargesheeted for various offences under the Indian Penal Code, 250 belonged to the Accountant-General's office. They were standing trial for gheraoing Mr. T. N. Kuriakose, Accountant-General, on August 21, 1968.

The State Government's petition followed its decision to withdraw all such cases against Central Government employees.

P. Essential Services Maintenance Bill Passed: The Essential Services Maintenance Bill, an offshoot of the one-day token strike of Central Government employees on September 19, 1968, was adopted by the Lok Sabha on December 18, 1968 after a week-long debate.

Those Opposition groups which had been resisting the Bill right from the time of its introduction maintained their attitude of hostility to the end. They walked out of the House at the time of the final division.

The Jana Sangh group voted against the Bill but did not join in the walk-out. The Swatantra group neither walked out nor participated in the voting. As a result, the number of votes against the Bill was only 14, while 135 voted in its favour.

The Rajya Sabha passed the Bill on December 27, 1968.

The Bill validated the provisions of the Essential Services Ordinance promulgated by the President on September 17, 1968 to meet the situation threatened by the one-day strike by Government employees on September 19, 1968 (see page 8560).

Q. LIC De-recognizes Employees' Association: The Life Insurance Corporation of India (LIC) announced in Bombay on November 22, 1968 that it had "de-recognized" the All-India Insurance Employees' Association and all the 36 divisional unions affiliated to it.

It said that the Central implementation and evaluation committee had approved its proposal to de-recognize the said Association and its affiliated unions for various breaches of the code of discipline in industry established against them.

R. Haryana Congress Ministry Survives Crisis: The Congress Ministry in Haryana lost its majority in the State Assembly on December 9, 1968, with 15 Congress dissidents defecting to the Opposition.

The dissidents, who had decided to quit the Congress, formed a united front with the main Opposition groups, the new body to be known as the Samyukta Vidhayak Dal (SVD) with Mr. Bhagwat Dayal Sharma as leader.

Soon after, the Opposition members belonging to the Dal, numbering 41, presented themselves before the State Governor, Mr. B. N. Chakravarty and delivered a memorandum demanding that he should ask for Mr. Bansi Lal's resignation and if he failed to quit, dismiss him as he was in a minority now.

They also requested him to call upon the SVD leader, Mr. B. D. Sharma to form an alternative government, in view of the "majority support" enjoyed by him in the House.

Swiftly reacting to the developments, the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, suspended Mr. Bhagwat Dayal Sharma from the Congress party the same day (December 9) and advised Mr. Bansi Lal not to resign till it was proved beyond doubt that he had lost the majority in the Assembly.

But, soon, some of the Congress dissidents who had earlier joined SVD returned to the Congress fold. These included the former Agriculture Minister, Mr. Ran Singh, and Mr. Om Prakash Garg. The Congress Ministry then regained majority support and the newly-born Opposition Samyukta Vidhayak Dal was reduced to a minority in the Assembly.

After 36 hours of the dissidents' revolt, the number of Congress supporters rose to 43 and the Samyukta Vidhayak Dal's strength was reduced to 37 in a House of 81, with one seat vacant.

The Ministry's supporters comprised 37 members of the Congress Party, including four returning defectors, five Independents and Mr. Narayan Singh (Swatantra).

Mr. Ran Singh and Mr. Om Prakash Garg, who till now were among the closest associates of Mr. Bhagwat Dayal Sharma, explained at a news conference on December 11, 1968: "We had some feelings because of the impending PCC elections. But now these have been removed automatically. Mr. B. D. Sharma has resigned from the Congress."

Talking to correspondents on December 13, 1968, the State Chief Minister, Mr. Bansi Lal said: "My Government is stable and there is no longer any crisis. In fact, there never was any crisis."

S. Mr. G. S. Rarewala Resigns From Congress Party: Mr. Gian Singh Rarewala, leader of the Punjab Congress Legislature Party in the dissolved State Legislative Assembly, announced his resignation from the Party on December 21, 1968 in protest against what he described as the "unfair" selection of candidates for the mid-term poll.

He was followed by his supporters, Mr. Baldev Singh, former Deputy Speaker. He left the Congress as he was denied the party ticket on the ground that he had defected from the Akali Dal after the last General Elections.

Mr. Rarewala's main grievance against the Congress leaders was that they had firmly turned down his request to grant the party ticket to Mr. Baldev Singh who had joined the party at a time when its morale and strength were low. They refused to make any departure from the principle of not giving the party ticket to defectors.

This was the second time that Mr. Rarewala left the party in the past five years. He left the Congress along with 16 other legislators in 1963 to form the now defunct Prajatantra Party. He, however, returned to the party fold a year later after the late Mr. Pratap Singh Kairon resigned from Chief Ministership following the findings of the Das Commission.

In a statement to the Press, Mr. Rarewala blamed Congress leaders for allotting the party ticket "on communal considerations" with a view to creating a split between Hindus and Sikhs.

T. Kiltan Island's Police Station Attacked: According to a report reaching Trivandrum on December 21, 1968, a crowd of about 300 persons attacked the police outpost at Kiltan Island in the Laccadives group on December 19, 1968. The police inside opened fire to disperse the crowd. Four persons were injured in the firing.

Sparsely-populated, Kiltan is said to be farthest island in the Laccadives group.

Information regarding the attack on the police outpost reached Kavarathy island, the headquarters of the Laccadives, on December 20, 1968 through the neighbouring island of Chetlat. The wireless station in Kiltan island was said to be not working.

Immediately on receipt of information, a strong police party left Kavarathy for Kiltan Island in three motor boats.

The report did not indicate who the attackers were and the reason for the attack.

A magisterial inquiry was ordered into the incident.

According to another report about 300 persons armed with harpoons, stones and sticks marched to the police station at Kiltan island and demanded the release of two persons detained for interrogation in connexion with an offence.

U. New Mysore Minister: Mr Veerendra Patil, Chief Minister of Mysore, announced in Bangalore on December 10, 1968 the inclusion of Mr. B. M. Patil in his Ministry.

Mr. Patil will be Minister of State for Municipal Administration.

The strength of the Mysore Ministry is now 29.

Mr. Patil represents Mr. B. D. Jatti's group which had worked against Mr. Veerendra Patil's election as leader of the Congress Party in the Legislature. Mr. B. M. Patil was sworn-in on December 11, 1968.

V. President's Rule In Bihar Extended: On December 18, 1968, the Lok Sabha agreed to extend President's Rule in Bihar by six months, a formality necessitated by the fact that the earlier proclamation lapsed on January 25, 1969, with only days to go for the mid-term poll.

The Rajya Sabha also agreed to it later.

W. Birla House Not To Be Acquired: The Government decided on December 17, 1968 that there was no need for taking over the entire Birla House in New Delhi (where Mahatma Gandhi was assassinated on January 30, 1948) as demanded by a section of Congressmen and Left Opposition parties.

It was recalled that the decision not to acquire Birla House was taken in November, 1967 while drawing up the Gandhi Centenary programme. The unanimous view was that there was no justification for making a departure from the stand taken at that time.

The Government also took note of the fast undertaken by Mr. Shashi Bhushan, Congress MP, but decided not to do anything in the matter as the Executive Committee of the Congress Parliamentary Party had already requested the member to give up the fast.

X. Meteorological Rocket Tested: An India-made Menaka meteorological rocket was successfully flight-tested with chaff payload from the Thumba equatorial rocket launching station at Trivandrum on December 23, 1968.

The rocket was developed by TERLS engineers using cordite propellant supplied by the Cordite factory at Aravankad (near Ooty). The payload system containing copper chaff and pyrotechnics was also designed and developed in TERLS.

A spokesman of TERLS said that the chaff payload was tracked by radar from 30 km altitude.

Y. Indian Cinema—A Review: According to an official review, despite the comparatively small size of the clientele, which restricts the area of commercial exploitation, regional cinema in the country has shown a trend of sustained and phenomenal growth in recent years.

The review, "Fifty-five years of Indian cinema," said that during 1967, a "new high" was reached in national film production with 333 films, compared to 316 in 1966 and 325 in 1965.

Of these, 248 were in regional languages—against a new high and 39 more than in the previous year.

Production of Hindi films, however, fell from 107 in 1966 to 85 in 1967. The number of Telugu films was 61—20 more than in the previous year. Tamil and Kannada production rose by three and three respectively, the figures being 65 and 24 respectively.

The most spectacular growth was registered by the Malayalam cinema. "Thematically rich and artistically strong, Malayalam film industry is the most forward-looking film fraternity in the country" today. During 1967, Malayalam production rose to 39 from 31 in 1966.

Production in Marathi also rose from 12 in 1966 to 20 in 1967, while the number of Punjabi (5), Gujarati (3), Assamese and Oriya (two each) and Konkani and Sindhi (one each) remained unchanged.

Bengali film production suffered a set-back with 25 films in 1967, as against 30 in the previous year. However, artistically, the industry maintained its leading position as is evident from the President's Gold Medal and the awards for best acting and direction going to Bengali films.

On the expansion of the regional film industry, the review noted that Indian cinema, right from its inception, remained centred in three principal regions—west, south and east.

The traditional film centres in these regions are: Bombay, Poona and Kolhapur in the west; Madras, Mysore, Salem, Coimbatore, Trivandrum, Alleppey, Alwaye and Hyderabad in the south, and Calcutta in the east.

Attempts were being made to create full-fledged units in Gauhati in Assam, Bhuvaneswar in Orissa, Ghaziabad in UP, and in Haryana, Punjab and Gujarat.

The Indian cinema today is a leading medium-sized industry with an estimated capital investment of Rs. 90 crores in studios, laboratories, production, distribution and exhibition.

Over 1,25,000 persons are directly employed in the industry which has an estimated annual box-office collection of Rs. 90 crores and export earnings of the order of Rs. 2 crores.

In artistic merit, Indian films created a big impact abroad as early as 1926 and since then a number of films have won international awards.

The most striking feature in 1967 was the involvement of the Indian cinema with world cinema. Apart from a number of Indian artistes playing in foreign films, for the first time an Indian artiste, Shashi Kapoor, was assigned to play the male lead in a foreign film, which has subsequently been released. Satyajit Ray became the first Indian to sign a Hollywood contract to direct a film featuring Indian and foreign talents.

Z. Life Expectancy: According to figures given by the Deputy Health Minister, Mr. B. S. Murthy in the Rajya Sabha on November 26, 1968, expectation of life for a man in Punjab is the highest in India, while a Kerala woman enjoys greater longevity than a woman of any other State.

The life expectancy for men is generally higher than for women in the country. The all-India figure for men is 53.2 and for women 51.9.

The life expectancy of a man in Andhra Pradesh is 50.3 and a woman 48.5; in Assam 49.1 and 49.5; Bihar 49.9 and 50.3; Gujarat 52.1 and 50.5; Kerala 59.5 and 57.1; Madhya Pradesh 52.5 and 51.3; Madras 52 and 50.1; Maharashtra 56.1 and 54.3; Mysore 52.5 and 50.5; Orissa 52.0 and 52.4; Punjab 59.9 and 55.0; Rajasthan 59.2 and 54.3; West Bengal 54.1 and 54.5; and Uttar Pradesh 50.7 and 49.6.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Issue—More Fighting: Israeli and Egyptian jet fighters battled over the northern neck of the Red Sea on December 10, 1968 and the Israeli Army claimed that one Egyptian MIG-17 was shot down.

An Israeli spokesman said that the second of the Egyptian MIGs was "seen to be hit" and headed back to base.

In Amman, an Iraqi spokesman said that an Israeli plane, one of three that "violated" Jordanian airspace on a reconnaissance mission was downed by anti-aircraft gunners. The Israeli spokesman denied the claim.

A Jordanian spokesman reported that a squadron of Israeli planes was turned back by Jordanian gunners when it flew over Mafraq in southern Jordan on December 10, 1968.

On December 11, 1968, a Jordanian spokesman said that a clash across the Jordan River was sparked by Israeli fire from tanks, artillery and machine-guns at troops three kilometres south of Al-Kattaf.

Jordanian troops returned the fire and suffered no losses.

A Jordanian military spokesman said in Amman on December 12, 1968 that Israeli jets swept into Jordan and bombed gun emplacements in the Sheikh Hussein bridge area. Four planes were stated to have attacked the area but there were no casualties. One building was damaged and the Israeli vehicle destroyed.

An Israeli Army spokesman said in Tel Aviv that an Israeli patrol came under rocket and mortar fire near Kibbutz Maoz Hayyim in the Beisan Valley near the Jordan cease-fire line on December 12, 1968.

Israeli war planes swooped into Jordan to attack an Arab guerrilla unit that had allegedly unleashed rockets over the cease-fire line on December 17, 1968.

According to an Israeli Army spokesman, on December 19, 1968 Israeli and Jordanian forces exchanged fire for 1½ hours across their common border about three miles south of the Damiya bridge. There were no Israeli casualties in the duel, which he accused the Jordanians of starting.

Inside Israel itself, the railway line from Gaza town was slightly damaged by an explosion about half-a-mile north of Gaza station. Security forces were later searching the area.

On December 20, 1968, it was stated by an Amman military spokesman, four Israeli aircraft attacked the village of Hadassiye, in the north of the Jordan Valley. Two houses were destroyed, but there was no loss of life.

On December 21, 1968, an Israeli Army officer—a former Military Governor of Nablus—was killed in a drawn-out fight with a group of Arab infiltrators said to be on their way to attack civilian targets around Jerusalem. The guerrilla force was crushed in a deep canyon west of Jericho before it could reach its objective. Two Arabs were killed and the remaining six were taken prisoner. The sole Israeli casualty was the Governor of Nablus.

Israeli warplanes pummelled El Fatah guerrillas inside Jordan on December 24, 1968, while in a Judean hilltop town 128 km to the south Yuletide preparations approached their Christmas climax.

The planes smashed at the saboteurs which the Israelis said were based in the abandoned village of Anshiya facing the Beisan Valley just south of the Sea of Galilee.

Israeli Spy Ring In UAR Reported:

The Middle East News Agency said in Cairo on December 8, 1968 that four Israeli spy rings had been uncovered in UAR.

The discoveries, it was said, involved two Egyptian journalists, a Spaniard, a Reserve Army Officer and a former senior Foreign Ministry official.

In the first case, two Egyptians had been arrested by the General Intelligence Department. The key defendent, Press photographer Monir Mohammed Abdel Ghani Issa, was alleged to have been recruited by Israeli Intelligence to obtain economic and military information about the country.

Maj-Gen. M. Dayan On His US Visit:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, who returned to Tel Aviv on December 17, 1968 after a week-end visit to New York, said that he found no sign of any "impending change in the policy of the US Administration regarding West Asia".

Maj-Gen. Dayan was in New York to address a United Jewish Appeal (UJA) dinner and met the US President-elect, Mr. Richard Nixon. It was Gen. Dayan's first trip outside Israel since the June, 1967 war.

He told an airport news conference that he discussed no concrete problems of West Asia with Mr. Nixon. He described the talks as "interesting, pleasant and positive."

Regarding a statement by Mr. Nixon's fact-finding envoy, Mr. William Scranton, that US policies towards West Asia must be "more even-handed," he said: "There were repercussions to these statements and I don't mean what he said on the need to improve US-Arab relations. This is the right approach in my eyes as well. I refer to his statement on the need for a more balanced US policy in West Asia. This has been interpreted by Jews.....as possibly meaning an improvement in relations with Egypt at Israel's expense."

King Hussein Denies Settlement Report:

Jordan denied on December 15, 1968 that King Hussein was prepared to renounce sovereignty over the west bank of Jordan River if this would help a West Asia settlement.

A Jordanian spokesman said that King Hussein had told the correspondent of Sunday Observer of London that he had plans for introducing more decentralization after the liberation of the west bank from Israeli occupation.

The Sunday Observer correspondent had alleged that King Hussein had told him that he was ready to surrender the richest part of his kingdom for a peace settlement with Israel was also alleged to have said that he was willing to renounce sovereignty over the west bank of Jordan—the western half of his country occupied by Israeli troops since the 1967 June war—if this would lead to a peace agreement with Israel.

The correspondent, Mr. Gavin Young had asked King Hussein if this meant that the surrendered territory would then become a new State called Palestine, and the King was quoted as replying: "Yes, that is what the people want."

King Hussein did not specify, however, whether he could consider a direct agreement between Jordan and Israel or whether he would hold out firmly—as he had done in the past—for a joint agreement between all Arab countries involved in the war and Israel.

He made no statement on the status of Jerusalem, whose eastern half King Hussein and all other Arab leaders have stiffly demanded be returned to Arab rule.

Mr. Young said that the significance of the statement had to be seen in the context of various tentative peace proposals circulating in West Asia during recent weeks. The essence of these proposals seemed to be as follows:

(1) The Jordan west bank would be evacuated by the Israelis.

(2) East Jerusalem would be the headquarters of an autonomous Palestinian State in a special relationship with Jordan.

(3) This new State would have access to the Mediterranean at Haifa and Gaza.

(4) The whole area would be demilitarized.

Up to now, Mr. Young wrote, there had been two principal snags to such a plan. "One was the assumption that King Hussein would refuse to give up sovereignty of the Jordan west bank—now proved wrong by his remarks to me." The second was "the firmly re-iterated Israeli intention to hang on to Jerusalem. The Arabs will accept nothing that does not restore Jerusalem to them." But a hopeful sign was a statement made by an Israeli Foreign Office official that the status of Jerusalem was still negotiable.

Mr. Y. Allon Indicates Cession Of Some Territory:

The Israeli Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Yigal Allon, indicated at a Labour Party meeting in Tel Aviv on December 19, 1968 that Israel would be willing to give back to Egypt part of the Sinai desert captured in the 1967 West Asian war, in return for peace.

He said: "There is no reason why the cease-fire lines in Sinai should be identical with the borders which would prevail under conditions of peace."

In an appraisal of what Israeli must concede in face-to-face talks with the Arabs, he added: "The question is not one of historic rights, although it agrees with these motives. The question is—how will the final borders affect our security. Naturally we will have to make concessions. From a security point of view there is no eastern border for Israel other than the Jordan River, regardless of what solution is reached over the west bank of the Jordan."

[Mr. Allon is the proponent of a peace proposal whereby the Jordan River west bank would be returned to Jordan, while Israel held a strip of Jewish-populated land along the Jordan River "for defence purposes."]

Mr. L. Eshkol "Sits Tight":

But, on December 24, 1968 the Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, told a students' rally that Israel would "sit tight" on its present cease-fire lines with Arab States until peace was signed, and even then would make only small changes in the present borders.

In a toughly worded speech, he said: "If it takes 20 years to achieve peace, we'll sit tight for 20 years." Some changes could be made if there were negotiations, but there would be no going back to the position as on June 4, 1967—the eve of the six-day West Asian war.

B. Mr. A. Gromyko's Visit To Cairo: It was officially stated that the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko arrived in Cairo on December 21, 1968. He met President Nasser next day and delivered an "important message from Soviet leaders."

The talks took place at President Nasser's house following lengthy conversations between Mr. Gromyko and the UAR Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Riad, the previous night. The Nasser-Gromyko meeting lasted five hours.

The surprise and urgent nature of Mr. Gromyko's four-day visit was clearly noticeable in Cairo.

Mr. Gromyko left for Moscow on December 24, 1968.

He told newsmen before his departure that he had discussed with Egyptian officials "matters that highly concern the Soviet Union, Egypt and other countries that firmly stand beside peace and people's rights."

Among other subjects discussed, he said, was "the erasing of the consequences of the 1967 Israeli aggression."

He said that both UAR and USSR had reaffirmed their desire to "continue on the way of strengthening and consolidating their brotherly relations."

The Communique:

A communique released in Cairo on December 24, 1968 following the departure of Mr. Gromyko announced Egypt's intention of once more seeking peace in West Asia through the special UN Peace Envoy, Mr. Gunnar Jarring.

The communique expressed "full co-operation and support for the Jarring Mission" (after several weeks of statements from Cairo describing Mr. Jarring's intervention as a failure.)

[Only hours before the communique, the semi-official Cairo newspaper Al Ahram announced that Mr. Jarring, who recently returned to his Swedish Ambassadorship in Moscow, would resume his peace-keeping assignment in the second week of January, 1969]

The communique also carried the Soviet Union's endorsement of the Jarring Mission, declaring in part: "The Government of the Soviet Union appreciates the position taken by UAR with regard to the latter nation's acceptance of the Security Council resolution of 1967, its disposition toward applying it in practice and its (Egypt's) full co-operation and support for Ambassador Jarring."

It then went on to charge Israel with refusing to apply the 1967 Security Council resolution, declaring that this was a "threat to the security and sovereignty of the Arab nations as well as a serious violation of the UN Charter."

Both nations demanded the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied Arab territories as contained in the UN resolution.

PAKISTAN

A. Air Marshal Asghar Khan On Political Situation: In a tape-recorded interview with two British correspondents who saw him in Lahore on December 21, 1968, Air Marshal Asghar Khan was unsparing in his criticism of many aspects of the Ayub regime, but had few differences with it on issues of foreign policy.

He also refused to talk about Kashmir, except to say that Pakistan needed "to present a better face" to the Kashmiris, to the Indians and to the world. When it did so, "it would help to solve the problem".

Asked whether any basic change in the Pakistani political system could be brought about without the Army's concurrence, he gave a qualified answer indicative of his wishes rather than his assessment. "I hope to God the Army would not do anything which would repeat what happened in 1959." It would be a "tragedy" if it did.

He added that the Army would not like to interfere: it had sensible people. But no army wanted chaos. If political parties could organize themselves "properly", he did not think the Army "would or should come in." 'But if the situation gets out of hand, anything could happen". That would be a very bad thing. Once military men started to intervene, there would be no end to it, as in South America or West Asia.

He voiced his "grave" fear that Pakistan's political structure would break down if anything happened to President Ayub Khan. There was no clear idea in any one's mind regarding the modalities of succession. The Constitution provided for the Speaker of the National Assembly to serve as Acting President, but this legal provision was ignored during the three months when Mr. Ayub Khan lay incapacitated by his illness early in 1968. If the Constitutional provision did not work in the case of the President's temporary incapacity, it was highly doubtful whether it would work when the matter of succession was at issue. "I do not think anybody in the Government is a natural successor."

He went on to add that the regime itself had no clue on what would happen in the event the Presidency fell vacant.

He did not see Capt. Gohar Ayub, the President's son, as a possible successor. Although people talked about the young man as being the heir apparent, he refused to consider this as "a serious possibility." (Mr. Gohar Ayub had lately given up his business connexions, presumably to devote all his time to politics).

He admitted that Pakistan's electoral system was "highly controlled," offering little possibility of a fair poll. "There is so much nonsense that goes on in our system." The last election was not a fair one and the next election—due to begin in Autumn, 1969—was not likely to be "anywhere near satisfactory."

Asked about his stand vis-a-vis Pakistan's Islamic orientation, he said he accepted it as every one else in the country did. Religion was basic to the concept of Pakistan, but there was "a lot of nonsense" being talked about Islam. To him, Islam meant certain values like human freedom and social dignity common to all civilizations.

Asked where he belonged in the political spectrum, he said: "I do not take a position Right, Left or Centre". He still had to think out where he stood.

On the subject of corruption—an issue highlighted in the recent agitations—he could afford, however, to be wholly unequivocal. The degree of corruption in Pakistani society, he said, was "terrible". It was a corruption "in very high quarters" which was, in his judgment, a big factor in the present discontent. The whole political structure of Pakistan "stinks." "Such a system can only create weakness, it gets worse every year."

He felt that the present Government would not last very long in view of the people's awakening and determination.

He suggested a constitutional amendment to allow Supreme Court judges to run the country in the transition period between the end of the present Government and the establishment of democratic rule.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan Advocates Autonomy For East Pakistan:

Speaking at a public meeting in Dacca in the third week of December, 1968, Air Marshal Asghar Khan advocated fullest possible autonomy for East Pakistan.

Giving his reasons, he said that the Centre was 1900 km away from the East Wing and this made it difficult for the Centre to administer it. Moreover, an equal share in political power for the East Pakistanis was the only answer to their sense of frustration. This alone could bring about a democratic process in the country.

Speaking on inter-Wing disparity, he said that armed forces and civil service of the country were predominantly West Pakistani and there was parity between the two Wings only in respect of the Government's repression.

Lt.-Gen. M. Azam Khan's Criticism:

Lt-Gen. Mohammad Azam Khan, a former Governor of East Pakistan, said in Lahore in December 24, 1968 that the people of Pakistan must keep up their present struggle to attain their basic rights of political freedom.

He strongly criticized President Ayub Khan's Government and said it had not lived up to the ideals for which Pakistan was created.

He said: "Pakistan was created so that we could live as free and honourable citizens in an atmosphere of social and economic justice which will be clear of all suspicion, hatred and repression. Unfortunately, it has not been so owing to a long period of undemocratic rule which brought in its wake all the familiar evils—a repressive policy, a gagged Press, a pressurized judiciary and a regimented intelligentsia—all of which are eating into the very body politic of the country."

Capt. Gohar Ayub Divested Of Party Post:

On December 21, 1968, President Ayub Khan removed his son, Capt. Gohar Ayub, from a key post in the ruling Muslim League and named a successor.

His post as chairman of the Muslim League Co-ordination Council in Karachi, it was announced, would be taken by the West Pakistan Health Minister, Begum Khaliquzzaman.

Observers said that the move might be intended to counter recent anti-Government unrest, as Capt. Ayub's rise to political authority six months ago aroused mixed feelings.

Capt. Gohar Ayub, in his mid-thirties, is a member of the National Assembly.

Demonstrations Continue:

It was stated in Lahore on December 20, 1968 that more than 100 persons had been arrested in West Pakistan for allegedly violating a law prohibiting the assembly of five persons or more.

In Dera, 55 leaders and workers of the Pakistan Democratic Movement—an alliance of Opposition parties—were arrested and in Sialkot 50 lawyers were taken into custody.

In Lahore, 11 lawyers were charged with violating a ban on processions and public meetings as they observed nation-wide "anti-repression day" on December 19, 1968. The police hosed demonstrating black-clad lawyers with coloured water.

On December 22, 1968, robed and bearded mullahs (Muslim divines) and students clashed with the police in a three-hour demonstration in Rawalpindi as the Pakistani capital celebrated the Muslim feast of Id-ul-Fitr.

Ban On Demonstrations Lifted:

On December 23, 1968, the Government lifted a week-long ban on all political demonstrations in the streets of Rawalpindi and Karachi.

The ban, ordered after five weeks of anti-Government protest marches, was abandoned because it had been virtually ignored.

A Government communique said that an earlier law banning demonstrations involving more than five persons also would be dropped. For all future processions, it said, police permission would have to be secured 24 hours in advance.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. UN General Assembly Session Concludes: The 23rd session of the UN General Assembly ended on December 21, 1968.

The Assembly President, the Guatemalan Foreign Minister, Mr. Emilio Arenales, declared it adjourned.

The Assembly's final act was the adoption of a record UN Budget of $154,915,250 for 1969 — $13,127,500 more than was spent in 1968.

In what seemed an attack on the newer UN members, Mr. Arenales complained that a large number of delegates had an "unrealistic and emotional approach." Often they forgot that "the evils of this world are not cured simply by negotiated resolutions but the actions of Governments," and "often emotion is placed before reason, regardless of the consequences for the Organization or for the world".

These remarks of Dr. Arenales—which several delegates described as "intemperate" and angered the Afro-Asians, Arabs and even some Latin Americans—threatened at one stage to disrupt the normally staid ceremonial closing of the Assembly, compelling him to revise his speech.

For instance, in line with the US view of the General Assembly, which the US representative, Mr. Wiggins had expressed in a speech at a Press forum in Washington earlier in the same week, Dr. Arenales (in his prepared text) had castigated members for what he called "demagogic approach of a majority of delegates" —presumably a reference to the Afro-Asian move to suspend South Africa from the UNCTAD by Assembly vote.

The passage in the text had read: "I believe that the most striking feature, which I have repeatedly observed during this Assembly, and which is a defect of UN, is the unrealistic, emotional, and I might even say, demagogic approach of a majority of delegates."

In his revised speech, Dr. Arenales criticized the membership for being "unrealistic" and "emotional," but deleted the reference to "demagogic approach of a majority of delegates."

In another passage of the original text, Dr. Arenales had frowned upon the Assembly debate of the West Asia issue with this remark: "The question of West Asia, a perennial UN item since 1948, has been practically exhausted in the floods of oratory to no practical purpose."

This paragraph was also modified in the revised speech.

Usually, at the end of an Assembly session, members representing regional groups offer praise to the President. But when the delegates read the prepared text which had been circulated to the Press in advance several of them, who had been scheduled to congratulate Dr. Arenales, took their names off the speakers' list.

A "Resume" Of Session:

The General Assembly session, it was stated, touched a new low in the world Organization's history for boredom, unproductivity and frustration.

At the end of the 11-week session, diplomats could not find any notable event which would mark this Assembly.

Three factors contributed to this situation:

(1) The Soviet Union was on the defensive and took no new initiatives but played it in a low key because of its own embroilment in Czechoslovakia.

(2) The United States was marking time because of the Presidential election and change-over in the Administration.

(3) The small Powers began to realize more and more the utter futility of the Assembly's resolutions that made not the slightest impact on any of the major world problems and issues.

Early in the session, one communist diplomat remarked that the Assembly could be called a "chewing gum session," and added that the only danger was that it could become a "bubble gum session"—a reference to the type of chewing gum that American children are fond of and which, after considerable chewing, they can blow into bubbles that explode harmlessly.

On every subject the Assembly adopted the usual run of resolutions. But, neither in the sponsoring of such resolutions nor in the negotiations that usually take place in the corridors, nor in their adoption, did the diplomats show much zest.

The Soviet Union, which almost every year used to come forward with some new move, had none this session. And even though the Soviet Union and USA presented a picture of being at each other's throat because of Czechoslovakia, there was enough other evidence of collusion between the two super-Powers to make cynical diplomats and members of the Press Corps more disillusioned than before.

When the session began, there were predictions that USA and the West would raise the Czechoslovak issue in the world forum. The West played in a low key and raised the issue only in the Assembly's Legal Committee, but even this had little impact, because, at the same time that the US delegate, Mr. Sherman Cooper, was denouncing the Soviet Union for its invasion of Czechoslovakia, President L. B. Johnson and the Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, were wooing the Soviet Union to agree to a "summit" with President Johnson.

On disarmament, sea-bed and other items of interest to the majority of small Powers, USA and the Soviet Union continued to follow parallel, if not identical, courses.

The two super-Powers, aware that their positions could only block Assembly action unfavourable to them but not persuade the Assembly to take a positive course of action, contented themselves with negative positions.

Even on the nuclear non-proliferation question, the two super-Powers bowed to the views of the major near-nuclear Powers and did not attempt to get Assembly endorsement or get a call by the Assembly for early action to bring the Treaty into force. But, they also blocked, at least temporarily, a move by non-nuclear Powers to convene a Disarmament Commission meeting where the question of security guarantees to the non-nuclear Powers could have been reopened.

Following the decision by the UNCTAD in New Delhi, the Afro-Asians made an attempt to expel South Africa from UNCTAD, but this was blocked by active Western efforts and Soviet coolness and abstention despite Soviet support to it at the New Delhi meeting. The resolution, though it obtained a simple majority, failed to get the necessary two-thirds majority.

Even on economic and social matters, where it is now fashionable to say that UN is playing a more constructive and important role, efforts of the developing countries to get meaningful structural changes, such as political level meetings of UNCTAD's bodies, were frustrated by the opposition of Western and Eastern developed countries.

Though the Assembly adopted a resolution favouring such a course of action, this was diluted to the point that both the West and the East made clear that such a meeting could only be convened with their consent.

B. UN Human Rights Prizes: Chief Albert Luthuli, South African Nobel Peace Prize winner and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt of USA were honoured posthumously by UN on December 2, 1968 for outstanding achievements in human rights.

Chief Albert Luthuli, who died in a train accident in 1967, was a spokesman for his people for 40 years against the policy and practice of apartheid in South Africa. He was President of the African National Congress until the party was banned in 1960. In 1961 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his support of non-violent change.

Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt was Chairman of the UN Human Rights Commission from its first session in January, 1947 until after the Declaration on Human Rights was proclaimed on December 10, 1948.

Other winners of the first UN human rights prizes were Mr. Manuel Bianchi of Chile, Mr. Rene Cassin of France, Mrs. Mehranguiz Manoutcherian of Iran and Mr. Peter Emelyanovich Nedbailo of the Ukraine.

The prizes, awarded to mark the 20th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, were presented to the winners or their representatives at a ceremony in New York on December 9, 1968.

C. Admissions To UNIDO: The UN General Assembly on November 19, 1968 approved the admission of Mauritius, South Yemen, Equatorial Guinea and Swaziland as members of the UN Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO.) The Assembly, without objection, also endorsed an appeal for increased financial support for the UN Institute for Training and Research.

To fill 15 seats of the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) which became vacant on January 1, the Assembly elected Brazil, Chile, Cuba, France, India, Iraq, Japan, Kuwait, Netherlands, Poland, Sudan, Thailand, United States and Upper Volta.

Acting on recommendations of its Second Committee, the Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to include, in his future report on natural resources, a comprehensive account of the implementation of recommendations set forth in the resolution which stated that United Nations should undertake a maximum concerted effort to enable all countries to exercise the right of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources. The resolution was approved by 94 votes in favour to none against, with nine abstentions.

By a vote of 94 to none, with 15 abstentions, the Assembly requested that member-States be asked to submit, in studies of the economic consequences of disarmament, considerations of the expected consequences of important partial disarmament measures.

D. US Warships' Cruise In Black Sea: The American warships Dyess and Turner left the Black Sea on December 12, 1968 after a four-day show-the-flag mission that stirred anger in Moscow and a controversy in Turkey.

The US 3,500-ton destroyers had entered the Black Sea amid Soviet protests on December 9, 1968. They were en route to re-join the US Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean. The destroyers had been shadowed by Soviet ships and overflown by Soviet planes during their cruise—the second by American ships in the Black Sea in 1968.

US naval officials in Washington pointed out that this was the eighth time in four years that ships of the US Sixth Fleet had cruised in the Black Sea, which is ringed by the Soviet Union, Rumania, Bulgaria and the NATO-member, Turkey.

The Russians said it was still a provocation, even though it was not the first time it had happened.

The United States and Turkey had rejected Soviet complaints that the entry of US destroyers into the Black Sea violated the Montreux Convention regulating the passage of foreign ships through the Bosphorus Straits between Europe and Turkey.

Soviet Navy Withdrawal From The Mediterranean:

In a surprise move, the Soviet Union withdrew nearly half her fleet from the Mediterranean and transferred it to Russian waters.

Of the 50 odd ships which Russia had sent into the Mediterranean since the 1967 six-day Arab-Israeli war, only some 35 remain. Half of these were understood to be supply vessels.

The Russians also withdrew from the Mediterranean their latest show-piece, the helicopter-carrying missile-cruiser, Moskva, and some destroyers.

The reasons for the quiet withdrawal of Soviet naval vessels from the Mediterranean were not known.

E. Economic Development Of Siberia: According to Mr. M. Bandman, a leading official of the Akademgorodko Economic Institute in Novosibirsk on December 4, 1968, about 20 or 30 years from now, Siberia will be the Soviet Union's key area for production of oil gas, non-ferrous metals, timber and electric power.

He said Siberia was currently producing every hour 632 tons of steel, 781 tons of iron-ore, 535 tons of non-ferrous metal, 14,900 tons of coal and 8,900,000 kilowatt-hours of electric power.

The Bratsk hydro-electric power station, which was the biggest in the world, alone produced 21,700 million kilowatt-hours per year. An even bigger plant was nearing completion at Krasnoiarsk and another at Sayano-Shushenskoi had been started on the River Yennissei.

This Institute had for a decade been studying the economic development of Siberia, whose riches have been exploited at a faster pace from the time of the German invasion of USSR 25 years ago.

F. Warsaw Pact Countries' Conference: A conference of Warsaw Pact countries ended in Bucharest on November 29, 1968, but the communique on it failed to make any mention of manoeuvres in Rumania.

It merely said that "the conference discussed present-day problems in connexion with the combat training of the troops and the steady strengthening of the fighting capacity of the Warsaw Treaty member-States."

The meeting had begun three days earlier amid rumours of new Kremlin pressure on Rumania to allow allied troops on her territory for joint manoeuvres. Observers said they thought the Rumanians would not be able to stall such manoeuvres indefinitely, but they might be able to get safeguards that Soviet and other troops would leave the country immediately after the exercise. There was speculation that the manoeuvres would be held next Spring.

G. Czech Friendship Treaties With Three Warsaw Pact Countries: The Czechoslovak National Assembly approved in Prague on December 22, 1968 friendship treaties with three Warsaw Pact nations, two of which marched their troops on to her soil on August 21, 1968.

In three separate votes, it passed treaties of friendship, co-operation and mutual assistance with Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary.

All three documents were signed before August 21, 1968—the one with Rumania only three days before Soviet, Hungary, Polish and East German troops marched into Czechoslovakia.

Vol. XV No. 5

CAMBODIA

A. Economic Progress: A despatch in The Times (London) from its correspondent, who recently visited Cambodia, says that the country under the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, has achieved remarkable progress in the scale and diversity of industrialization.

Thirteen years ago there were no State enterprises and no "mixed" firms with private and Government capital. Now there were 28 and 29 of each, respectively. The number of medium and small enterprises in the private sector had gone up during the period from 650 to 3,700.

The despatch quoted the Prince as stating that most of all these had been financed by Cambodia's own resources. There had been foreign assistance, but limited in industrial terms. Only six of the State enterprises were outright gifts—from China. Technical aid had come from, among others, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and especially France, but Cambodia was paying for construction of factories herself.

At Sihanoukville, where a port and industrial centre was being carved out of what was virgin coast in 1954, the gift from France was the initial four-berth facility. The rest, in the Prince's words, would four years hence have cost 2,000 million riels (nearly £24 million) or one-third of the national Budget.

Sihanoukville is the country's only seaport and eventually its proposed 20 cargo berths will be adjacent to the "free zone", which would be expanded over some 700 acres of reclaimed land. It was intended as the investor's dream.

There would be no Government intervention in the free use and disposal of foreign currency. No customs duties would be applied (except for goods imported from the zone into Cambodia proper.) There would be no turnover taxes nor application of domestic legislation on prices. Indeed, the prospectus foresaw only a contribution to the continuing modernization and maintenance of the zone's facilities.

Guarantees against nationalization which, inside Cambodia, had been put at between 10 and 20 years, were recently informally extended by the Prince to 30 years in cases of industries especially helpful to the Cambodian economy.

B. Protest Against American "Aggression": Fresh allegations of aggression by American forces on the Cambodia-Viet-Nam border were made in Pnom Penh in the last week of November, 1968.

In a telegram to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, alleged that American forces had killed 12 and wounded six Cambodians, all women and children.

He said: "I make a solemn plea for steps and international action to be taken immediately to constrain the American Government and put an end at once to the Cambodian frontier killing."

He said the people had reached the limit of their patience after several years of these violations of territory and added: "If USA perseveres in its crimes as a means of intimidating Cambodians, Cambodia would be led speedily to fight against US war enterprises". American aggression in Cambodia could even threaten world peace.

C. Film Festival: An international film festival was held in Pnom Penh in the last week of November, 1968.

The jury at the festival awarded its top prize, a statuette representing a celestial dancer, to the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, for direction of Le Petit Prince.

The second prize in the category for full length feature films went to Japan for the film The Three Faces of Love which also won the award for the best actress.

Other prizes included best actor (Poland), best direction (Romania) and best photography (Czechoslovakia). The Soviet Union won a prize for background music.

The award for the best short film went to Canada's Pas de Deux, with the second prize going to the South Viet-Nam National Liberation Front production Riz Region Ceinture (rice belt).

The international Press jury gave its first prize to the Cambodian film Royal Cortege and the second to North Viet-Nam for An Exploit.

CHINA

A. Educational Reforms: A national "do-it-yourself" campaign has been launched for a complete reform of the educational system under the direction of peasants and workers.

The movement has been gathering impetus since last Spring but received national approval on November 13, 1968 when the Peking People's Daily officially suggested that all State-run primary schools in the countryside be put under the peasant production brigades and run by them. This was followed by similar directives for factories to take over the management of primary schools in the towns.

The primary aim of the campaign is ideological and the main emphasis is on the study of the thoughts of Mr. Mao Tse-tung. The People's Daily also emphasized the need to cut down Government expenditure on school subsidies, the maintenance of school buildings and teachers' wages.

A principal recommendation was that teachers should no longer be paid by the Government but by the production brigades on the basis of work-points. Under this scheme, a primary school teacher would get roughly the same work points as a labourer. Allocations of State funds for schools would be abolished or severely limited.

The authority of the headmaster over the school and of the teacher over his class was abolished. Entrance examinations, marks, traditional rewards and punishments and school-leaving certificates were swept into limbo. There was no question of student power, however. In fact, the workers and peasants now in charge of education were strongly prejudiced against student intellectuals.

Observers in Hong Kong regarded the present educational reform in China as a strongly conservative movement with overtones of decentralization, since Peking appeared to be content to leave the whole business of primary education to local authorities. The mood of the reforms was authoritarian and the present trend seemed to be a reaction against the undisciplined excesses of the Red Guards at the height of the Cultural Revolution in 1967.

[Prev. ref. 8123:CHI:F, 8549:CHI:A]

B. Promotion Of Traditional Medicine: An emphasis on traditional Chinese medicine is evident in an effort to build a "new unified medical science" which would strongly rely on Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thought for guidance.

The authorities have reportedly established Chinese-medicine hospitals in Peking and a dozen other big cities, plus 20 universities of traditional medicine, chairs of History of Traditional Medicine and an Experimental Institute of Acupuncture and Moxibustion.

Radio Hupeh had urged earlier in 1968 that leadership groups be formed at all levels: (1) "to organize Western medical practitioners to learn from practitioners of Chinese medicine," (2) "to integrate Western and Chinese medicine" and (3) "to establish a new unified medical science and pharmacology of China with Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thought as the guiding principle."

Traditional Chinese medicine, which treats diseases by centuries-old empirical methods, lost much of its popularity among China's city-dwellers with the advent of Western medicine at the turn of the 20th century. However, it has retained an important role in the rural areas.

After the communist take-over in China in 1949, traditional medicine had regained some of its former esteem. In the early 1950s, friction and antagonism reportedly existed between doctors of Western training (hsi-i) and traditional Chinese doctors (chung-i), each looking upon the other with scorn. But in 1954, the two groups joined forces to form an organization called the Chinese Medical Association.

It is estimated that China has some 500,000 traditional-style doctors and about 115,000 Western-style doctors with at least five years of training after high school. The two types of physicians often work together in hospitals.

Public Health Policies:

The Cultural Revolution has, meanwhile, brought deep changes in Chinese policies and practices regarding public health and medical treatment services.

The aim of this "revolutionary transformation" has apparently been to provide more medical treatment for the rural people at the expense of the city-dwellers. Towards this end, large numbers of medical and public health workers have been transferred to the countryside, and new concepts of medical education have been introduced to train more workers in this field.

This campaign which began in 1965 was wider in scope than earlier endeavours and was apparently aimed at changing the very structure of medical and public health training, doctrine, organization and practice.

But, not long after this campaign began, the Cultural Revolution intervened. Red Guards voiced support for the reform programme in medicine and public-health. Medical schools became hotbeds of Red Guard activity.

However, practical progress stopped because of political struggles and factionalism which affected most parts of China. Apparently, the reform programme was practically paralyzed.

With a degree of order re-established in the Summer and Fall of 1968, the programme of overhauling the entire medical system supposedly has begun anew.

C. Potala Palace Still Sealed: Mr. Lobsang Donyu, a Tibetan refugee who recently fled Tibet to seek safety in India, told The Tibetan Review, a monthly journal published from Darjeeling, that the famous Potala palace in Tibet which used to be the Dalai Lama's winter palace was still totally sealed to the Tibetans and even the Chinese themselves were unaware of what was going on inside it.

After the 1959 national uprising, the Chinese took away truck-loads of valuables to China from this palace.

Mr. Lobsang said that a detachment of Chinese troops was posted within Potala to guard it. Spaces on the facade of the building are covered with quotations from Mr. Mao Tse-tung.

In another story quoting another Tibetan refugee who recently escaped Tibet to Bhutan, The Tibetan Review said that despite restrictions on their movement, Tibetans always sought chances to get out of Tibet. Many of the fleeing Tibetans are caught, questioned and killed for opposing the "party and people."

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mrs. Indira Gandhi On Foreign Affairs; Two US Loans; International Geographical Congress; Joint Ventures; Foreign Industrial Collaboration Policy Liberalized; Sardar Swaran Singh On Defence Preparedness.

A. Assessment Of External Relations—Mrs. Indira Gandhi's News Conference: At a news conference in New Delhi on January 1, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi visualized the possibility of finding some way of resolving the dispute with China.

In a brief assessment of the country's external relations, she saw no reason for any change in the mutual attitudes of India and USA over Mr. Nixon's election as President.

Similarly, the Soviet supply of military hardware to Pakistan should not make any difference in the overall relations between India and USSR. As for Mr. Michael Stewart's recent "get-to-know-each other" visit to this country, she commented on the "very useful" talks the Government of India had with the British Foreign Secretary. India was able to put forward its point of view on various issues effectively.

Asked whether a dialogue with China was possible, she replied that however difficult the situation might seem, it was always possible in the changing world situation to find a way out. Whatever steps were taken would obviously have to be in keeping with national interest and honour.

A correspondent asked whether it was possible to overlook the fact that China had occupied Indian territory in starting a dialogue with it. Mrs. Gandhi replied: "I do not think you can ever forget the past." It was also true that Peking maintained its anti-Indian propaganda campaign and also helped hostile Naga and Mizo elements, but all these were aspects of the present situation. But how did one solve a problem by sticking to a particular stand?

She refused to comment on the internal affairs of Pakistan. But when she was asked for her reaction to President Ayub Khan's offer of a no-war pact, she replied that India had always been anxious for such a pact. But obviously, a no-war pact would have no meaning if one side insisted that other things must be settled first. What could be tackled first would be the question of evolving a bilateral machinery at whatever level to go into various issues.

When the perennial question of India's continued membership of the Commonwealth was raised, she pointed out that it provided a forum in which each country could express its views on different problems and also for joint action to the extent possible, even if that was not always successful. Its present composition was such that "it is certainly not a British Commonwealth."

An Egyptian journalist asked about the prospects of a settlement of the West Asia problem. Mrs. Gandhi observed that the recent provocative and deplorable bombing incident (on Beirut international airport) seemed to have dashed hopes of arriving at a settlement between Israel and the Arab States. The situation today was very much worse than it was even a short while ago. In the prevailing atmosphere, she did not think India could do anything in the matter.

Internal Situation:

Dealing with questions on Congress affairs, Mrs. Gandhi maintained that the party had proved much stronger now than it had been credited with in certain quarters. In the choice of candidates for the mid-term poll, there was no question of getting rid of old Congressmen. Certain circumstances had been kept in view while selecting candidates.

She was non-committal on the implementation of the three-language formula.

Explaining the Government's attitude towards Mr. Nath Pai's Bill to amend the Constitution, she said there were constitutional pundits on both sides. The Government did support the Bill, but some changes were made by a joint committee. It was neither the Government's intention nor of Mr. Nath Pai that fundamental rights should be restricted except when it came to a conflict of rights between two citizens.

In reply to further questions, she said that there were "tangible signs" of recovery in the economy and the prospects for the New Year were bright. If the year went on as it promised, then there would be no problem finding financial resources for the Plan.

She expressed general satisfaction with the improvement in the overall economic situation and hoped that a rise in production would have a favourable impact on prices. She noted with happiness that agricultural production was very good and exports were on the increase.

When a correspondent suggested that there was indecision in the Government on many matters, she refused it firmly. She conceded that there might be delay in taking a decision on one or two projects, but that was because the Government wanted to take the decision at the right time.

In some cases, she revealed, decisions might have been taken but might not be announced. She did not, however, elaborate on this point; nor did she mention the cases she had in mind.

When a correspondent pointed out that because of delay and indecision, an American firm—Allied Chemicals—had withdrawn its offer of collaboration in the Tata Chemicals proposal for a fertilizer project in Mithapur, Mrs. Gandhi retorted: "What is wrong with that?" After all, the Tata project was still there, she quipped.

In conclusion, she said that the resolution for the New Year should be to take a "decisive step" towards making freedom real to the people.

"We are still trying to implement the original New Year resolution taken in 1936 (to attain freedom)," she said. "It means making our freedom real to our people. We know it cannot be done in a year, but I think we can take a decisive step, if we can have unity and stability and function together."

B. Two US Loans: Two Agreements providing for US loans totalling $231 million (Rs. 173.25 crores) to India were concluded in New Delhi on December 26, 1968.

The larger loan of $194 million (Rs. 145.50 crores) will finance non-project imports covering a wide range of requirements of industry and agriculture.

The other loan of $37 million (Rs. 27.75 crores) will finance imports of machinery required for a four-fold expansion of the Trombay fertilizer plant.

The two loans have been extended by USAID. They are repayable in dollars over 40 years, including a 10-year grace period. The interest will be two per cent per annum during the grace period. For the remaining 30 years it will be 2.5 per cent per annum for the Trombay loan and three per cent for the non-project loan.

C. Agricultural Commodities Agreement With USA: An Agreement to give effect to the US Government's decision, already announced, to sell 2.3 million tonnes of wheat and other agricultural commodities to India under PL 480 was signed in New Delhi on December 23, 1968.

The value of the commodities included in this Agreement is Rs. 125.33 crores. Apart from wheat, USA will supply 90,000 tonnes of tallow, 4,000 tonnes of non-fat dry milk and 200 tonnes of tobacco.

India will pay in rupees for three-fifths of the value of the commodities. Sixty-six per cent of these rupees will be loaned by USA to the Government of India to finance development projects.

E. Japanese Food Aid: Japan has decided to give India a food aid grant of $1.62 million (about Rs. 1.2 crores) during the current fiscal year under the International Wheat Agreement.

The amount will come out of $15 million worth of food aid which

Japan agreed to give yearly under the Wheat Agreement reached at the Kennedy Round talks in Geneva in 1967. Out of the total amount for the year between June, 1967 and May, 1969, Japan is to give $7.5 million during the current fiscal year, while the remaining $7.5 million is expected to be allocated next fiscal year beginning in April, 1969. Out of $7.5 million to be disbursed this year, Indonesia gets a lion's share of $5 million, Laos $500,000 and the Palestine refugee relief organization $30,000.

This was the first time that Japan was giving an aid grant to India. During the period of India's food crisis two years ago, Japan had given food aid in the form of credits for purchase of fertilizers and other aids to boost food production.

F. Canadian Wheat: The Canadian Federal International Development Agency announced in Ottawa on December 17, 1968 that Canada had agreed to provide India 15,000,000 bushels of wheat valued at about $30,000,000.

The wheat, intended to carry India through a period when reserve stocks were low, was expected to start moving through Canadian ports shortly.

The wheat was a foreign aid gift by Canada to India. The only stipulation was that India create a fund for internal development projects with finance equal to what it would have paid in rupees for the Canadian wheat.

The Canadian shipment would help India build up grain stocks to a level "necessary to maintain full food price stability" and effective food distribution.

G. West German Credit For Merchant Fleet: According to an announcement in Bonn by the Bureau of German Industry, a Rs. 60-crore credit by the West German Government and leading shipyards there would assist India's merchant fleet in its immediate target to double its total gross tonnage by 1971 and transport half of India's exports on her own vessels.

The West German Government was expected to give Rs. 18 crores credit for the fiscal year 1968-69 out of the DM300 million envisaged for the next three years.

The credits would finance construction of new vessels for Indian shipping companies at West German shipyards under a "mixed financing scheme"—one-third in capital aid (with 25 years' repayment period, seven-year grace and 3 per cent interest) and two-thirds in "hermes" credits (10 years and 6 per cent interest).

North Korea was represented at the talks by its Director-General of Foreign Trade, Mr. Kim Sok Jin, and India by Mr. N. P. Jain, Director, Ministry of Commerce.

Letters were exchanged between the two delegations in regard to trade and payment arrangements for the coming two years. The total trade turnover (both ways) between the two countries is expected to be of the order of Rs. 7 crores in 1969.

India will export to North Korea rolled steel products, engineering goods including aluminium ingots, automobile and railway accessories, tyres and tubes, coke and chemical products, apart from jute goods, tanned hides and skins and mineral ores.

North Korea will export to India special steel including high-speed, stainless and carbon tool, steel, non-ferrous metals, anthracite coal and graphite.

N. International Geographical Congress: Inaugurating the 21st International Geographical Congress in New Delhi on December 1, 1968, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, warned scientists against working in isolation from their environment and neglecting the non-scientific needs of the world.

She said that she viewed geographers as specialists working with other specialists in an inter-disciplinary endeavour to provide the knowledge to change the world.

Over 1,300 delegates from 75 countries attended the Congress, the first to be held in Asia since it was instituted almost a century ago.

Recounting how India was trying to refashion its "present-day" geography to the people's advantage, she said that to make agriculture a lesser "gamble in the Monsoon", big dams had been constructed to store flood waters. Rivers had been diverted into new channels through mountain tunnels to make irrigation more even. It was the geographer's task "to know and tell us about our environment, but it is everybody's task today to know how to control the environment and use it for the welfare of the mankind."

Listing the problems that geographical knowledge should help tackle, she noted that the nation was confronted with the challenge posed by soil erosion, stopping the onward march of the north-western desert, controlling the flood of the Brahmaputra and many other rivers, preventing the erosion of the Malabar coast and saving "some of our distinctive" wild life from extinction.

Presidential Address:

Mr. S. P. Chatterjee, in his Presidential address, said it was in the field of thematic mapping that geographers had been able to provide a useful tool for planning the economy of a country on a regional basis. Geographers had made substantial contribution to planning for resources development in India by starting a National Atlas Organization in 1956.

This Organization had brought out a complete national atlas for the first time in 1957 and a number of thematic maps subsequently, dealing with various aspects of physical and socio-economic phenomena.

He said the geographical knowledge was being increasingly used in solving many national problems all over the world, particularly relating to floods and drought.

Welcoming the delegates, Mr. T. R. Seshadri, President of the National Institute of Sciences, stressed the importance of international relations among scientists in different regions through participation in scientific programmes and collaboration in special fields.

Office-bearers Of International Geographical Union:

On December 1, 1968, Prof. S. Leszozycki of Poland was elected President of the International Geographical Union for the period 1968-72.

Prof. C. Harris of USA was elected Secretary-General and Treasurer of the Union.

The seven Vice-Presidents were: Mr. S. P. Chatterjee of India and the outgoing President of the Union (ex-officio); Mr. Dresh of France, Mr. Gribaldi of Italy, Mr. Hagersrand of Sweden, Mr. Kalesnik of USSR, Mr. M. J. Wise of UK, and Mr. Zamorano of Argentina.

Mr. Hans Boesch of Switzerland was the outgoing Secretary-General and Treasurer.

The General Assembly admitted the following countries as new members: Guatemala, Jamaica, Malawi, Panama, Philippines, Thailand, Zambia and Hong Kong.

Sierra Leone, Singapore, the Vatican State and Kenya were taken in as associate members.

Geographical Disclosures:

According to a Russian geographer, Mr. A. V. Shnitnikov, the Himalayan glaciation was receding. He said his assumption held true for both the northern and southerns slopes of the Himalayas, with more pronounced recession on the northern slope.

Mr. Fritz Muller (Canada) reported "unexpectedly great aridity" in the Everest region.

Among other interesting revelations at the Congress was one made by the only saffron-robed Indian delegate among the 1,500 participants, Swami Pranavananda, throwing new light on the possible sources of the four great rivers—the Brahmaputra, Sutlej, Indus and Karnali.

The Swami, who has carried out extensive explorations in the Mount Kailas and Mansarovar region of Tibet, said the source of the Sutlej was in the Kunlung glacier near Dunchu Gompa, some 50 km east of Mansarovar and that of the Indus in the springs of Sengge Khambab, north-east of Kailas, some 100 km from Mansarovar.

Mr. D. P. Saxena (India) referred to the Vedic period and said that agriculture was first practised in the north Indian plains watered by the now extinct rivers of Saraswati and the Drisadwati. The main crops cultivated during the Vedic times appeared to be barley and rice.

Commission Meetings:

Scholars at the various commission meetings at the Congress on December 4, 1968 were preoccupied with problems of developing countries, particularly the role geographers could play in providing the basis for meaningful planning.

For instance, the commission meeting under the chairmanship of India's Prof. M. Shafi discussed "Applied Geography in Developing Countries". He made useful suggestions like preparation of land maps and conducting country-wsie land surveys. Optimum utilization of land, mapping of cultivable land, relating of land-use maps to the country's population were some of the other suggestions.

Mr. L. R. Singh of Allahabad University stated in his paper that India with its uneven resource distribution and regional variation in economic development, needed a comprehensive Plan for economic development: that is, the future lay in regional planning and geographers should play a major part in the delimitation of the economic planning regions.

Bengal's Prof. J. M. Bhattacharya presented a detailed thesis on "Land Use and Food Problem in West Bengal". He said West Bengal had a chronic food shortage and also very little land to be used as permanent pasture land and for the cultivation of fodder crop.

Prof. I. P. Gerassimov, Prof. S. V. Zona and Prof. V. M. Fridland, from USSR, outlined techniques for preparing a new soil map of India at a scale of 1,40,00,000. Such a map, they felt, could be based on all available detailed maps, field data and general geographical and other data.

Commonwealth Geographical Bureau:

On December 6, 1968, geographers from Commonwealth countries formed a Commonwealth Geographical Bureau with a view to stimulating the study of geography among people in its member-nations.

Prof. K. Kularatnam of Ceylon was elected director of the Bureau. The following were elected members of the provisional committee of its managements: Dr. George Benneh (Ghana), Dr. Samson Odingo (Kenya), Prof. J. Parry (Canada), Prof. R. L. Singh (India), Prof. K. W. Robinson (Australia) and Dr. B. W. Hodder (UK).

The General Assembly of the International Geographers' Union appointed 25 commissions to carry out research in applied geography, medical geography, cartography, to conduct surveys of land use in various countries and to examine regional atlases. One of the commissions would be headed by Dr. R. L. Singh of Banaras Hindu University.

Congress Concludes:

At the closing session of the Congress on December 8, 1968, it chose Montreal (Canada) for its centenary congress to be held in 1972.

The Soviet Union, which earlier missed the opportunity to host a scheduled Congress because of the World War, made a strong bid for the next Congress but lost in the secret ballot by 20 votes to 16, despite Hungary withdrawing its invitation in Moscow's favour.

The Congress adopted a resolution moved from the chair by Prof. S. P. Chatterjee of India deciding that all future congresses and general assemblies of the International Geographical Union "shall be accessible to scientists from all countries without any political discrimination."

Prof. Chatterjee said the Union was eager to get this resolution adopted because there was nothing in its statutes against political discrimination so much so that East Germans had difficulty attending the London Congress four years ago and in South Africans getting to the Delhi Congress.

He added that the Congress had proved to be of great significance to India because some of the papers presented by the Soviet Union and Mexico could serve as guides to better exploit the country's forest wealth. Some 60 per cent of India's forest products were unmarketable because of a lack of 'know-how'.

As for the complaint of some of the Western delegates that the Congress was "mismanaged," he said the location of all sessions in one building in Delhi had provided for better contacts among delegates than the London Congress, where different sections met in different buildings.

O. Tibetans' Demonstration At Chinese Embassy: Nearly 100 Tibetan refugees entered the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi on December 31, 1968 and there was a scuffle between them and the Chinese Embassy staff. Jeering and gesticulating Chinese were said to have provoked the Tibetans, who had come in a procession, to forcibly enter the premises.

The Tibetans had gone to the Embassy to demonstrate against the insulting behaviour meted out to an Indian editor, Mr. Frank Moraes, in Khatmandu by some Chinese technicians and Chinese workers.

The trouble started when the Tibetans and Indians, standing a little distance from the Embassy gate singing their national songs, were jeered at by the Chinese staff. Two of them were busy taking pictures and waving at the Tibetans which seemed to have provoked the Tibetans. Despite the police cordon, the Tibetans entered the Embassy gate and tried to catch some of the Chinese Embassy members who were fleeing towards the main building.

The Chinese Charge d'Affaires in New Delhi later called on the Director of the East Asia Division in the Ministry of External Affairs, and lodged a protest regarding the incidents. The Charge d' Affaires was told that the authorities were investigating the matter and that some persons had already been arrested.

On January 3, China protested against the demonstration by Tibetan refugees near its Embassy in New Delhi and demanded that the Government of India pay compensation and punish the "Indian ruffians and Tibetan traitor bandits."

The Government of India expressed regret for the incident and the matter was closed.

P. Investments In Indian Enterprises—State Policy Liberalized: The Government announced on December 10, 1968 liberalization of the policy governing investments in Indian enterprises by non-residents of Indian origin living abroad.

Under the liberalized policy, non-residents will be allowed to make investments in proprietorship and partnership concerns in addition to floating companies of their own.

The scheme allowing non-residents of Indian origin to engage themselves in any industrial activity by floating joint stock companies was announced in September, 1968, but the response to this had been rather discouraging.

It was found that the scheme prevented non-residents with insufficient savings from floating companies of their own in this country or from making any investments in Indian industries. It was noticed that such persons of moderate means invested their savings in European equities.

Even though the policy had been liberalized, it still prohibits a non-resident investor from repatriating the capital invested or profits earned thereon. The other conditions continue to be in force.

For instance, where a non-resident investor floats a joint stock company he should associate progressively resident Indian participation in the company at least to the extent of 49 per cent of the equity capital within a reasonable period, say five years, if not initially. So long as the non-resident does not take Indian citizenship, all amounts due to him should be credited to his non-resident blocked account in India.

The liberalized policy will be in force on an experimental basis for three years. Under the policy, non-residents can engage themselves in trading and business activities under any form of management.

Q. Joint Collaboration Ventures In 25 Countries: According to details available in New Delhi on January 1, the Government had so far given approval for the setting up of 64 joint collaboration ventures in 25 foreign countries by Indian industrialists.

The figure did not include three collaboration arrangements which had been abandoned by industrialists. Some of them were yet to start operation.

Maximum number of joint ventures were in Kenya (9), followed by Ethiopia (7), Malaysia and Nigeria (6 each) and Ceylon and Iran (5 each).

Region-wise, maximum collaborations were in Africa (32 in eight countries) followed by South Asia (15 in five countries). Other regions were West Asia, East Asia, Western Europe, which included Ireland and the United Kingdom, North America including Canada, South America and the West Indies.

Among the large number of products covered by the joint ventures were cotton and woollen textiles, agricultural tractors, pharmaceuticals, light engineering, paper, pulp, re-rolling mill, sugar, jute, sewing machines, trucks, automotive components, transformers, air-conditioning, vanaspati and asbestos cement products.

R. Foreign Collaboration To Be Permitted—Industrial Policy Relaxed: It was announced in New Delhi on January 3 that the Central Government had decided to allow foreign collaboration even in low priority or non-essential fields of industry and in trading activities, provided they were essentially export-oriented.

This was stated by the Minister for Industrial Development, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, while inaugurating a two-day meeting of the Central Advisory Council of Industries.

He, however, made it clear that the policy relaxation would cover only such joint ventures in which the foreign collaborator agreed "to underwrite a major share of the production for exports."

Regarding the trading activities, he said, the existing policy of not allowing foreign collaboration in them might be relaxed if such collaboration aimed at augmenting the country's export sales.

In pursuance of these decisions, he also spelt out what he called the new "guidelines" in respect of foreign collaboration agreements which would henceforth be "stringently scrutinized" to eliminate export restrictions. He insisted that foreign collaboration agreements should allow free export of the products of joint ventures to all countries except, perhaps, to the country of the foreign collaborator or the countries where the foreign collaborator was having joint ventures in the same field of production.

S. Foreign Collaboration In Industry—Reserve Bank Survey: A survey on "Foreign Collaboration in Indian Industry" undertaken by the Reserve Bank of India, and released in Bombay on December 29, 1968, pointed out that total dividend remittances by subsidiaries and the minority group increased from over Rs. 11 crores in 1960-61 to an estimated Rs. 22 crores in 1966-67.

A little over four-fifths of the total dividend remittance was due to subsidiaries. Royalty remittances increased from Rs. 1.5 crores in 1960-61 to an estimated Rs. 8 crores in 1966-67. Remittances of technical fees did not show any clear trend and ranged between Rs. 3 crores and Rs. 5.6 crores. Of the total remittances of Rs. 27 crores of technical fees during 1960-61 to 1966-67, about 44 per cent was by the subsidiaries and 34 per cent by the minority group.

Between January, 1948 and March, 1964, the Government granted approvals for about 2,200 foreign collaboration agreements, of which four-fifths were by companies. Of these 1,051 agreements, which related to companies, were "effective."

The survey covered 827 private sector companies, of which 224 were subsidiaries, 367 minority foreign capital participation companies and 236 pure technical collaboration companies. In addition, the survey covered 69 companies with 78 agreements which were approved prior to March 31, 1964 but came into force after March 31, 1964, thus bringing the total number of "effective" agreements to 1,051.

The survey pointed out that about two-fifths of these 1,051 collaboration agreements were with the UK. The USA and West Germany accounted respectively for about 19 per cent and 14 per cent. Well over 95 per cent of the agreements related to the manufacturing sector. Among the assets, transferred under these technical collaboration agreements, 'know-how' alone or in combination with patents and trade marks featured prominently in the majority of cases. More than 70 per cent of the agreements gave exclusive rights to the Indian collaborators for the assets transferred under these agreements. Agreements with exclusive rights were proportionately more for the minority participation group than for the other two groups of companies.

The survey also covered 24 Government companies with 97 agreements. The royalty remittances of these companies rose from Rs. 15,00,000 in 1960-61 to an estimated Rs. 64,00,000 in 1966-67. Most of the technical collaboration remittances of these companies were by way of technical fees which averaged around Rs. 3.8 crores per annum during the seven-year period. The foreign exchange outlay on foreign technicians was about Rs. 2.7 crores in 1963-64.

T. Sardar Swaran Singh On Defence Preparedness: The Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, reassured Parliament on December 12, 1968 about the country's state of defence preparedness both in the matter of logistics and equipment.

Intervening in a 3½-hour debate raised by Mr. Prakash Vir Shastri (Ind) in the Lok Sabha on the situation arising out of the increasing tension on the Indian borders due to Pakistani and Chinese activities, he observed that while the country had always to remain vigilant and prepared, the hostile postures of the two neighbouring countries had to be tackled on a long-range basis. There was no short-cut nor an easy solution to these problems. "While hoping that there would be peace on the borders, we must always be prepared for war if it comes."

He said it was true that an estimated 1,30,000 to 1,50,000 Chinese soldiers continued to march along the border both in the eastern and western sectors. They had also developed better lines of communications by constructing parallel and radial roads. But, "we have also over these years opened up the mighty Himalayas and have now established and improved very much our communications. Our soldiers also on this border are in position."

The Chinese had installed loudspeakers at their posts and carried on incessant propaganda broadcasts. "We also sometimes do this. An interesting thing is that sometimes the Chinese soldiers, getting bored by listening to their own propaganda, listened to music from our side and seemed to appreciate it."

China was pursuing a single-minded policy of pressurizing India. Its sole object was to disrupt India's democratic way of life. The exchange of delegations between China and Pakistan, the statements in both countries maligning India in every possible manner and the support which Peking was giving to Pakistan in the shape of military equipment and in the form of propaganda were all abundant proof of the collusion between the two countries.

Dealing with criticism about the quality of India's defence equipment, Sardar Swaran Singh warned the House that it was dangerous to give the impression, even impliedly, that the equipment with the armed forces was not up to the mark. Nothing could be more demoralizing to the fighting forces than creating a doubt in their minds about the effectiveness of the equipment they were handling.

The main points of criticism were that the problems facing the country were largely due to the failure of the Government on the diplomatic front, that it had not learnt lessons from the 1962 confrontation with China and that there was no "contingency planning."

Slight Shift In China Policy:

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi indicated on December 12, 1968 in the Rajya Sabha a slight shift in the Government policy towards China. Hinting that the Government may not insist on Peking's prior acceptance of the Colombo Proposals for talks, she said India was not taking a rigid attitude and had an 'open mind' on the question of improving relations with China.

She said there was as yet no indication of a rethinking on the part of China. She also took note of the fact that China behaved in an unpredictable way and it was not known "what sort of reception" an Indian Ambassador would get in Peking.

U. First MIG-21 Aircraft Engine Delivered: On December 29, 1968, India crossed a major military and technological land-mark with the delivery of the first MIG-21 engine from the factory at Koraput. This, the first Mach-2 engine, moves the country's aircraft industry into the supersonic field which no other developing country has so far entered.

The delivery of the engine also signifies that all three MIG factories are now operational. The airframe plant in Nasik started in 1966, four years after the MIG deal was concluded with the Soviet Union. The avionics factory in Hyderabad came into production the following year.

Koraput is behind schedule. But this is largely because engines call for the most sophisticated workmanship and testing. An engine has over 10,000 individual parts and components. Koraput accounts for an outlay of Rs. 35 crores out of the total of Rs. 80 crores for the three MIG plants. In terms of capacity, it is larger than the country's other aero engine plant in Bangalore which produces power plants for the Gnat and the HF-24 fighters, the Alouette helicopter and a jet trainer.

V. Vampire Jets To Be Withdrawn From IAF: It was disclosed in New Delhi on December 29, 1968 that Vampire jets in use with the Indian Air Force since 1948 would be withdrawn from active use after two decades of combat-cum-training service. These would be replaced by the new India-made HJT-16 aircraft fitted with the HJE-2500 engines.

Vampires were being used for the past few years for jet training of Air Force cadets.

The HJE-2500 jet engines had been developed at the Hindustan Aeronautics Limited factory and were now undergoing tests. Before these were formally cleared for use on the HJT-16 aircraft, the latter would be using imported Viper jet engines.

The Indian developed aircraft have very nearly the same performance as Vampire jets and can be used for armament training as well. Its cockpit is fully airconditioned and pressurized and equipped with two zero-altitude, 167 km-per-hour automatic ejection seats. The HJT-16 has a maximum level speed at sea level of 780 km per hour which develops to 927 km at maximum dive at sea level.

The aircraft has a maximum range and maximum endurance of altitude of 9,144 metres with external fuelling, two drop tanks of about 1,410 kilometres (about 3 hours 36 minutes).

W. Expansion Of Navy: The Chief of the Naval Staff, Admiral A. K. Chatterji, in a broadcast on December 14, 1968 on the occasion of Navy Day said that with the expansion and modernization of India's operational fleet and of dock-yards, and with it improved training facilities which had made "us entirely self-sufficient in the matter of training, the Navy is now better equipped to carry out its allotted tasks."

At the same time, he stressed that the Navy had been quietly, continuously and efficiently fulfilling an important aspect of its peace-time role, by 'showing the flag' in its many goodwill cruises to foreign countries.

Regarding the Vikrant, he said: "We are the only Navy in the entire Indian Ocean area to possess an aircraft carrier. The Vikrant is the fountain-head from which our naval power flows. The defensive and offensive capabilities of the carrier are tremendous and had considerable psychological impact on any enemy. The addition of the Vikrant has increased the strength and fighting potential of the fleet."

Commenting on the aging destroyers in the Navy's fleet, he said an adequate replacement programme had been drawn up to look after the maritime requirements of the country for the next few years. "The most important aspect of this replacement programme is the Leander frigate project." The frigate, Nilgiri, would be followed by two more at yearly intervals. They would also be named after mountain peaks.

In conventional conflict at sea, the best answer to a submarine was another submarine and with the commissioning of the submarine arm, the Navy would be able to meet any undersea challenge both confidently and effectively. "Besides, the submarine arm has added substantially to the defensive and offensive potential of the Navy."

X. New Naval Cadre Formed: Naval Headquarters announced on December 15, 1968 the formation of a new cadre of master chief petty officer for senior sailors of the Navy.

Hitherto the highest rank a sailor not promoted to commissioned rank could attain was that of chief petty officer. Twenty-five per cent of all chief petty officers can now aspire to become master chief petty officer Class II and up to 15 of them Class I.

The added responsibilities of the master chief petty officers will carry with them increased privileges and higher rates of pay.

The Naval Headquarters also announced increased monetary benefits for those naval personnel serving in the Andaman and Nicobar islands. The Andaman allowance contains a triple element—rigours and hardships of life in the islands, the remoteness of the areas and a compensatory allowance factor.

Soviet Recommendations On Bhilai Steel Plant: A plan of action to streamline the working of the Bhilai Steel Plant and raise its productivity and profitability was recommended by the visiting Soviet delegation, headed by Mr. S. Skachkov, Soviet Minister for Foreign Economic Relations in New Delhi on December 13, 1968.

A list of the recommendations was presented by Mr. Skachkov to the Minister of State for Steel, Mines and Metals, Mr. P. C. Sethi.

Mr. Skachkov, who visited Bhilai to study the working of the steel plant, urged early implementation of his recommendations to ensure smooth and uninterrupted production of 2.5 million tonnes of ingots a year. Now, the plant is working below the rated capacity because of slackening demand for rails—its main product—and the general recessionary conditions in industry as a whole.

He stressed that production must be closely linked to the changing pattern of demand. For instance, if there was a fall in demand for tails, then the output of structurals might be stepped up. In any case, no situation should be accepted as inevitable.

He also made a number of recommendations for improving the quality of Bhilai products. First of all, the raw materials must be of better quality. This could be ensured by reducing the number of coking coal sources, which are now about 25. There should also be tighter supervision and better finishing to bring down the percentage of "offgrade" production.

On the organizational side, there should be an agency for carrying out timely repairs to blast furnaces and other units to avert breakdowns.

Z. Suppression Of Silver-Gold Smuggling – Central Ordinance: With the promulgation of an Ordinance on January 3, the Central Government decided to crack down on the silver-gold smuggling racket which had been costing the country crores of rupees in foreign exchange. Rules about the sale of imported consumer and luxury items were simultaneously tightened to combat trade in contraband goods.

The Ordinance imposed restrictions on the storage and sale of silver and some 28 luxury items together with the amendment to the rules.

The restrictions on silver followed the large-scale smuggling out of the metal in various forms to be sold abroad at a higher price, the proceeds being used to buy gold for smuggling into the country. The racket had assumed large proportions in recent months, silver being smuggled out in various shapes, including curios which suddenly had become very heavy.

The open sale of imported consumer items too had posed a difficult problems for the Centre which, in the absence of effective legal powers to seize or regulate their sale, had been feeling helpless.

Both these lacunae were rectified by the Ordinance and the attendant regulations. Under these measures, the Central Government notified a 'specified area' extending 50 km inland from the western coast of India within which the regulatory provisions would apply in regard to silver, bullion and coins.

Broadly, the provisions laid down that every person possessing silver bullion and coins exceeding Rs. 15,000 in price would have to intimate to the Customs officer concerned within seven days particulars of the place where such silver was stored. He would also have to maintain accounts in the prescribed manner. After that period, silver exceeding this value would not be kept in any place which had not already been intimated.

On January 7, the Ordinance was extended to the coastal areas of Madras and Pondicherry.

INDONESIA

A. Foreign Investments: Foreign investments approved by the Government during the first nine months of 1968 totalled $342 million, shared by 84 foreign companies.

American investments account for $115 million, shared by 12 US firms, followed by Japan with $76 million invested by three firms.

A single South Korean firm investing $48.5 million made the Republic of Korea the third largest investor nation in Indonesia.

The Netherlands followed in fourth place, with $19.5 million invested by 12 firms.

On November 27, 1968, Sir Con Oneil, Head of the London Chamber of Commerce fact-finding mission to Indonesia, said that the mission was "impressed with the success of plans to stabilize Indonesian economy." The mission had studied the draft five-year plan which would operate from April, 1969. This laid emphasis on agriculture. British and other foreign investors would have to take this into account in their efforts to enter the Indonesian market. Opportunities also existed in the supply of equipment to process primary products, including rubber.

IRAN

A. Steps To Protect Individual's Rights: The Shah has established a "watchdog" group above Government and party politics to protect the rights of the individual.

As the Shah's watchdog, the Imperial Inspectorate Organization will handle complaints made by individuals.

Headed by one of the Shah's military aides, Gen. Morteza Yazdanpanah, the Inspectorate Organization will be independent of Government and party politics.

Shah Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlevi has also ordered the creation of an administrative reform council under his own chairmanship to cut Government red tape. The council is composed of a number of Government Ministers, technical experts and ordinary citizens. The reforms followed a recent congress of administrators in Tehran, headed by the Premier, Mr. Amir Abbas Hoveida.

The Congress which was divided into seven working groups heard hundreds of statements from people in contact with Government offices and compiled thousands of pages of evidence on the shortcomings of the Government agencies.

Some of the chronic complaints which figured prominently in the hearings were bureaucracy, tendency of Government officials to shove responsibility to the next man, cumbersome legal processes, lax attendance by many Government employees, futile correspondence and other administrative "evils."

(The Pakistan Times, Lahore)

B. Cabinet Re-shuffle: The Prime Minister, Mr. Amir Abbas Hoveida, carried out on November 24, 1968 a major Cabinet re-shuffle.

It was the fourth time he had reshuffled the Government in four years.

The new Ministers included Mr. Shafi Asfia, who was appointed Vice-Premier with special responsibility for economic and development problems.

The Labour and Social Services Minister, Mr. Ata'ullah Khosrovani, who was also Secretary-General of the ruling new Iran party, was made Interior Minister.

Mr. Manoutcher Parto, Tehran's former public prosecutor, became Justice Minister.

Mr. Manoutcher Goudarvi, Secretary-General of Iran's Administrative Affairs Organization, was named Minister of Agricultural and Consumer Production.

The portfolio of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs was given to Mr. Abdol Madzid Madzaidi.

Mr. Mehdi Sami, Governor-General of Iran's Central Bank, took over from Mr. Safi Asfia at the head of the Economic Planning Organization.

Mr. Hussain Kazem Zadech became Minister of State in charge of State Administration and Employment.

ISRAEL

A. Commando Raid On Beirut Airport: Israeli commandos made a daring lightning raid on Beirut airport on December 28, 1968 which left at least 13 Arab airliners charred wrecks.

The strike at the airport, the busiest and most modern in West Asia, was in direct retaliation for an Arab commando machine-gun and grenade attack on an Israeli Boeing jetliner at Athens airport three days earlier (December 26, 1968).

Beirut reports said that most of the airliners blown up belonged to the Middle East Airlines, the biggest and richest in the Arab world. Other planes destroyed were those of Lebanese International and Trans-Mediterranean Airlines. The Middle East Airlines lost eight planes worth about $35 million.

Flames from the burning airliners lit up the night sky over Beirut for hours. Some hangars and fuel storage tanks were also set ablaze and runways damaged.

Eyewitnesses said that two Israeli helicopters approached the airport from the sea with their lights off. They were mistaken by the ground control staff for Lebanese Air Force planes. The helicopters fired warning shots and then landed, groups of commandos springing out on to the tarmac. The attackers blew on Arab airliners, most of them on runways and also blasted a petroleum storage tank.

In Tel Aviv, an authoritative military source gave details of the strike as recounted by commandos who took part in the action. He said that the commandos had strict orders not to inflict casualties nor to attack any airliner which was not Arab.

He said that the commando force returned intact to Israel after the raid but would not reveal how they were transported in and out of Lebanon.

Immediately after the Israeli reprisal raid, an Israeli Government statement hoped that the attack would put an end to sabotage against Israeli aircraft and passengers.

The reprisal was directed at the Lebanese capital because an Arab commando group in Beirut claimed responsibility for the Athens attack and also the hijacking of an Israeli El Al Airliner to Algiers in July, 1968.

The raid drew a strong protest from USA. The US State Department said that the US Ambassador to Israel had been told to seek the earliest possible meeting with the Israeli Premier, Mr. Levi Eshkol, or the Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban.

In London, a Foreign Office spokesman said that Britain deprecated the attack, which was also condemned by the International Air Transport Association (IATA) in Montreal.

The attack on the airport was the latest in a series of Israeli reprisals into Arab territory for raids by Arab forces and guerrillas. But it was the first time Lebanon, which was not involved in the six-day West Asia war in June, 1967, had been attacked.

In a similar raid a month earlier, Israeli commandos penetrated some 125 miles into Egypt from the Red Sea and blew up power installations and two bridges across the Nile.

The Israeli Transport Minister, Mr. Moshe Carmel, said in Tel Aviv that Arab objectives and alliances were just as vulnerable.

Mr. Carmel alleged that members of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, which claimed responsibility for the Athens attack, openly trained in Lebanon for acts of sabotage with Government encouragement.

But official Lebanese sources quickly rejected the accusation.

Asked about the magnitude of the blow, Israeli officials said: "We want to make clear to the other side that, even if we assume that the fight between us and these Fedayeen organizations across the border is 'fair play', the carrying of the fight outside this area and against civilian targets is not, and we are not going to take it lying down. Therefore, in this case, the quantity was not out of proportion because it carried a certain message which should now be crystal clear."

Beirut airport was re-opened to traffic on December 29, 1968 after being closed for nearly 10 hours following the Israeli attack.

The first plane to land was an Air India Boeing on a flight from Bombay to Rome.

Damage from the raid was estimated at millions of dollars, but no figure was available. There was no report of any casualties.

Lebanese Air Force Placed On Alert:

The Lebanese Air Force was placed on a state of alert on December 31, 1968.

An official said: "From this moment, the Lebanese Air Force is providing air cover for the whole country. Lebanon will use force to repel any Israeli aggression."

The Lebanese House of Deputies agreed to meet in permanent session in view of the sudden rise in tension.

Lebanon Sets Up Air Raid Shelters:

On January 6, Lebanon began building air raid shelters and setting up military training centres in villages bordering Israel.

A Defence Ministry source said that Army engineers had been put in charge of building the shelters to protect villagers against air raids and shelling.

The Army also began setting up centres in the border villages to train men between the ages of 18 and 50 to use firearms. Villagers will be given weapons on completing their military training.

Arab Commandos' Attack On Israeli Plane At Athens:

Two terrorists, armed with machine-guns and hand-grenades, attacked an Israeli jet airliner as it was preparing to take off from Athens airport on December 26, 1968, killing one passenger and injuring another.

Officials of the El Al airline said that the two attackers were Arabs and were apprehended by police as they tried to flee.

The officials said that the two terrorists ran out on the runway as the four-engine Boeing-707 jet was warming up for the take-off on a flight to Paris and New York. The plane had arrived earlier in the morning (December 26, 1968) from Tel Aviv. It was leaving for Paris with 37 passengers and ten crew members.

Machine-gun fire ripped into plane windows and hand-grenades blew up under the fuselage. A fire broke out aboard the plane, but was quickly put out.

In Beirut, a Palestinian Arab guerrilla organization claimed responsibility for the armed attack on the Israeli airliner.

PLO's Statement On Athens Raid:

On December 29, 1968, the Arab commando organization which had claimed responsibility for the December 26, 1968 attack on an Israeli airliner at Athens airport denied that any Arab Government had been involved in that raid.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine Organization (PLO) re-iterated in a statement that it was fully responsible "for the planning, training and the execution" of the attack and no Arab Government was associated with it.

It added: "The two commandos had set out from one of the Front's bases in occupied territory. They passed through Beirut, spending only two days in the city. The Lebanese authorities had no knowledge of any of their movements".

[Official Lebanese sources have rejected an Israeli accusation that Palestinian commandos train openly in sabotage in Lebanon with Government encouragement]

Reactions:

An UAR official spokesman, Dr. Mohammed Hassan El Zayyat, told newsmen: "This is a minor Pearl Harbour and is certainly not a herald of peace. It is certainly not the way to stifle the Palestine resistance movement. On the contrary, it is adding fuel to it."

He described the Israeli raid in an official statement as a "barbaric act" which created strong doubts about the possibility of a peaceful settlement of the West Asian crisis.

He said that Israel was able to pursue a policy of violence only because of arms put into its hands by others. "What use will Israel make of the Phantom fighters the US Government is going to hand it soon? The barbaric act of Israeli armed forces against Beirut airport is a clear demonstration of Israel's long-conceived ambition to impose its will on the whole of West Asia".

The French Foreign Minister, Mr. Michel Debre, said that the snowballing violence in West Asia could be halted only if the three Big Western Powers and Russia took joint action to impose peace.

The Italian Foreign Minister, Mr. Pietro Nenni, summoned the Israeli and Lebanese Ambassadors to Rome in separate meetings and told them that Italy hoped the cease-fire in West Asia would be respected in a strict way.

Kuwait's Defence and Interior Minister, Sheikh Saad Al-Abdullah Al-Salem Al-Sabah, denounced the raid as "brutal aggression against civilian targets", and called for strong UN measures against Israel.

President Ayub Khan of Pakistan described the Israeli commando attack as "terrible".

Jordan's King Hussein took the lead in promising support for Lebanon and told the Lebanese President, Dr. Charles Helou, on the telephone that he would ask Arab nations to co-operate to compensate Lebanon for its losses in the raid.

USA protested to Israel on December 28, 1968 over the Israeli raid on Beirut airport.

Moscow's first comment on the Israeli commando raid on Beirut airport came in the form of a Tass report from Beirut and was relatively mild, denoting Soviet anxiety to keep down the political temperature in West Asia.

Tass said that the "Israeli military staged another brazen provocation," aggravating tension in West Asia.

Ghana Demands Compensation:

Ghana asked Israel on January 5 to compensate her for the loss of a VC-10 plane destroyed during the Israeli raid on Beirut airport.

The VC-10 airliner was leased to the Middle East Airlines.

The spokesman of the Israeli Foreign Ministry stressed that "the plane in question carried Lebanese colours and emblems."

War Risk Rate Doubled:

On January 1, London insurance underwriters doubled the war risk rate on goods carried in Israeli or Arab ships.

The increase will apply to all ships sailing under the flags of Israel, UAR, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Sudan or Syria. It also applies to ships whose ownership or management is based in those countries.

At the same time, the Institute of London Underwriters increased, from one shilling and sixpence per £100 to seven shillings and six pence, the war risk rate for cargo on ships calling at Israeli or Arab ports.

Air freight war risk insurance on aircraft flying to and from Israel and the Arab countries was also increased.

Direct Israeli-Lebanese Contact:

An Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman said on January 6 that direct talks between Israel and Lebanon had taken place in the last few days.

He added that representatives of the two countries had met "to clarify problems relating to the cease-fire between the two countries." The meeting was on the frontier between the two countries.

The Lebanese Government confirmed the meeting the same day.

The statement followed denials by Lebanon that it had received an official warning from Israel. But Lebanon did say that military officials from the two countries attended a UN Armistice Commission meeting about frontier violation allegations covering the past few days. Lebanese officials stressed that there was "no sort of negotiation" and that the meeting was purely "technical".

Press reports had quoted the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, as saying that Israel had contacted Lebanon through diplomatic channels to draw its attention to the seriousness of the situation in the border area.

UN Security Council's Resolution:

On December 31, 1968, the UN Security Council unanimously condemned Israel for its commando raid on Beirut airport and issued a "solemn warning" that if such acts were repeated, the Council would have to consider further steps to give effect to its decisions.

The resolution said that Lebanon was "entitled to appropriate redress for the destruction it had suffered, the responsibility for which has been acknowledged by Israel."

This was the Security Council's strongest rebuke to Israel, but Israel showed no sign of accepting or heeding it as evidenced by reports from the area that Israeli fighter aircraft flew over Lebanon on January 1, while a helicopter-borne Israeli force attacked a Jordanian patrol on the east bank.

Previously, the Security Council had condemned specific actions of Israel, but this was the first time that Israel as a State had been condemned.

The resolution, moved from the chair and adopted unanimously, was evolved mainly in negotiations between Lebanon and USA.

The compensation question was handled somewhat vaguely and did not go as far as Lebanon had demanded. Lebanon was reported to have acquiesced to the wording of the resolution because of the fact that most of the actual financial loss was non-Lebanese and had been covered by British insurance and American help to the airlines concerned.

The following is the text of the resolution as approved:

"The Security Council,

"Having considered the agenda, having noted the contents of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Lebanon (S/8945),

"Having noted the supplementary information provided by the Chief of Staff of C.N.T.S.O. contained in documents S/79'0 and 107 and 108, "Having heard the statements of the representative of Lebanon and the representative of Israel concerning the grave attack committed against the civil international airport of Beirut,

"Observing that the military action by the armed forces of Israel against the civil international airport of Beirut was premeditated and of a large scale and carefully planned nature,

"Gravely concerned about the deteriorating situation resulting from this violation of the Security Council's resolutions.

"And deeply concerned about the need to assure free uninterrupted international civil air traffic,

"(1) Condemns Israel for its premeditated military action in violation of its obligations under the Charter and the cease-fire resolutions;

"(2) Considers that such premeditated acts of violence endanger the maintenance of peace;

"(3) Issues a solemn warning to Israel that if such acts were to be repeated, the Council would have to consider further steps to give effect to its decisions;

"(4) Considers that Lebanon is entitled to appropriate redress for the destruction it suffered, responsibility for which has been acknowledged by Israel."

Israel Rejects Resolution:

But, Israel denounced the Security Council resolution as a reflection of the "moral, political and juridical bankruptcy" of the world body.

The Israeli delegate's Mr. Yosef Tekoah, response to the Council's unanimous resolution was interpreted as total rejection of its terms.

It was also seen as an indication that Israel would defy the recommendation that reparations be paid to Lebanon for the damage done to planes and installations at Beirut airport.

This has been assessed at more than $50 million (nearly £ 21 million).

Lashing back at the Council, Mr. Yosef Tekoah said: "The resolution ignores the fundamental UN principal of equality of all member-States.

"Let no one make the mistake that the people of Israel might be swayed by inequitable pronouncements.

"Let no one make the mistake that the fate of the people of Israel might be decided by others.

"Not Security Council resolutions but the attitude and actions of the Governments in the area would determine the destiny of West Asia."

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli Knesset (Parliament) endorsed the action of the Government and the Army HQ in attacking Beirut's international airport terming it a "self-defence action." Only one communist member voted against the resolution.

B. Return Of Refugees To West Bank—World Church Council's Appeal: The World Council of Churches on December 6, 1968 called on Israel to "respond to urgent appeals made in United Nations" and permit the immediate return to their homes on the west bank of refugees and displaced persons living in circumstances of hardship and inadequate shelter on the east bank of the River Jordan.

The Council's call issued in Geneva by Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, the General Secretary, was transmitted also to U Thant, the UN Secretary-General. Dr. Blake acted on the basis of resolutions passed by the divisional committee of the Council's inter-church aid, refugee and world service.

The committee urged Israel to display "humanity and magnanimity" in permitting the return of the refugees to their homes before the onslaught of the worst of the winter weather. It also asked churches to press their Governments for larger contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA).

According to Council officials, there were 350,000 "new" refugees on the east bank, in addition to the 75,000 who were in east bank UNRWA camps before the June war of 1967. They pointed out that Israel could make a start by allowing 50,000 refugees to return to camps in the Jericho area, where they could not be regarded as constituting a major security problem.

C. American Credit: The US Export-Import Bank in Washington on November 26, 1968 stated that it would lend Israel $12 million to help it buy American power generating equipment.

The credit, at six per cent interest, would be used to buy a 214-megawatt generating unit from General Electric and a boiler from Babcock and Wilcox. Installation of the equipment would be at the Reading power station at Tel Aviv, where the Bank had previously financed construction.

The Export-Import Bank, a US Government agency for financing foreign purchases of American goods, had authorised over $300 million for this purpose.

The credit was in favour of the Israeli Government which would re-lend it to the Israel Electric Corporation. The loan completed the financing for the Tel Aviv power station.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Oldest Pyramid In Western Hemisphere: Archaeologists of the University of California announced in Berkeley on December 4, 1968 the discovery of the oldest known pyramid in the Western world—a giant cone built more than 2,700 years ago by Mexico's Olmec farmers.

About 100 feet high and 240 feet in diameter, the pyramid is unlike any other in the Western Hemisphere. It was unearthed on Mexico's La Venta island near the coastal plains of the Tonala river between the States of Vera Cruz and Tabasco, where digging had been in progress for 13 years.

CAMBODIA

A. Release Of American Prisoners: Pnom Penh Radio announced on December 20, 1968 the release of one Viet-Namese and 11 American prisoners who were arrested in July for border violations.

The broadcast said the prisoners had already been delivered to the Australian Embassy to be shipped home to rejoin their families on Christmas Day.

Earlier Washington reports had said the 12 men formed the crew of a patrol boat that had strayed into Cambodian territory on July 16.

The announcement on their release did not mention whether the captured vessel would also be returned to USA.

The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, agreed to release the prisoners purely on humanitarian grounds. Before he could release the prisoners, he had wanted an assurance from President Johnson that the United States would not try to violate Cambodian territory.

Border Guarantees Sought:

On December 29, 1968, Prince Norodom Sihanouk said that Cambodia would seek international guarantees to safe-guard its neutrality and present borders when the Viet-Nam war ended.

Speaking at the opening of the National Congress of his party, he said Cambodia would eventually have to take part in any peace talks after USA had reached an agreement with Hanoi and the National Liberation Front, political wing of the Viet-Cong.

It would then demand war damages from USA for refugees entering Cambodia from South Viet-Nam. He pointed out that his country could not keep the refugees and said they would have to be taken care of by the United States. He suggested that USA might consider settling them in Hawaii or Alaska and giving them American nationality.

CEYLON

A. Barter Deal With China: A Trade Protocol was signed in Colombo on January 7 for the supply of 200,000 tonnes of Chinese rice in exchange for 62,000 tonnes of Ceylonese rubber.

The acting Commerce Minister, Mr. S. A. Pereis, signed the Protocol for Ceylon and the leader of the visiting Chinese delegation, Mr. Lin Hai-yun, for his country.

The Protocol provided that the two countries would endeavour to have a total trade of the value of Rs. 174 million in 1969 as they had in 1968. The value of Chinese rice and Ceylonese rubber to be bartered was Rs. 146 million.

The additional trade was expected to be made up from Ceylon's other traditional exports—copra, cocoanut oil and a number of new products of light industries. China would supply Ceylon pulses, textiles, cement and other goods.

Talking to newsmen after the signing of the Protocol, the Food Minister, Mr. M. D. Banda, said that the agreement was "satisfactory and mutually advantageous."

Though Ceylon had originally intended to buy only 150,000 tonnes of Chinese rice, it subsequently decided to import an additional 50,000 tonnes as it would mean the export of more rubber at a price higher than that prevailing in world markets. China would continue to pay 10 cents more than Singapore's average weekly price for one lb of rubber.

Mr. Banda indicated that Ceylon would import only 250,000 tonnes of rice from all sources this year—50,000 tonnes less than last year—because of the prospects of increased indigenous production.

CHINA

A. Eighth Nuclear Test: The US Atomic Energy Commission announced on December 27, 1968 that China had conducted the same day an atmospheric nuclear test in the Lop Nor area of Sinkiang province.

The explosion, according to the American AEC, had an yield of about three megatons or three million tons of TNT.

It was the eighth Chinese test to have been detected by the United States. The first Chinese bomb was exploded on October 16, 1964. The first three explosions were of low yield, and the fourth test weapon on October 28, 1966, was carried by a guided missile. The sixth was the first three-megaton explosion, but the seventh was of low yield.

The potential of the Chinese nuclear capability as a military threat was judged by the US Government as sufficiently significant to order the establishment of a "thin" anti-ballistic missile system to guard against it. The decision to undertake the relatively expensive construction of such a system was made by Mr. Robert McNamara before he resigned as Defence Secretary.

This system, calculated to cost at least $5,000 million, would place a defence umbrella over the United States, with long-range missile interceptives at about 15 sites around the country.

A Chinese Press communique on December 28 described the explosion as a "new leap forward" in developing nuclear weapons and a "gift to the forthcoming ninth national congress of the Party."

Soldiers and civilians in Peking paraded, sang and danced through the streets, in spite of driving snow, to celebrate the bomb test.

The official Hsinhua news agency said that the Tien-an-men (Heavenly Peace) Square and the main boulevard across Peking were bedecked with red flags carried by paraders, while contingent after contingent of people arrived at the reception centre of the Communist Party Central Committee to extend their greetings.

Peasants living in the suburbs of Peking marched long distances to the city to take part in the celebrations.

Japanese Protest:

Japan made a strong protest against the Chinese hydrogen bomb test, saying that it threatened international efforts to lower tensions and stop the spread of nuclear weapons.

Japanese Air Self-Defence Force F-86 jets were sent up to carry out investigations for radio-active dust and fall-out. They carried containers and gummed paper to take atmospheric samples from which pollution will be measured.

Japan in the past had often been exposed to mild radio-active fall-out after Chinese nuclear tests.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman in Tokyo said on December 28, 1968 that people were being exposed to danger by radio-active fall-out. He called on China to refrain from any further tests.

The three leading Opposition parties—Socialists, Democratic Socialists, and Komeito—all criticized the Chinese test. The Socialists, however, also mentioned the American policy of "containment" of China, implying that the affair was not one-sided.

Mr. Setsuo Yamada, Mayor of Hiroshima, issued a protest against the series of Chinese tests on behalf of the citizens of Hiroshima. The protest was sent to Mr. Chou En-lai.

Prof. Seitaro Koyama, of Niigata University, northern Japan, said that he had detected fall-out from the Chinese test in rain which fell in the area for four hours. He added, however, that no giant particles had yet been detected.

FORMOSA

A. ADB Loan To Petro-chemical Project: An Agreement providing for a loan, equivalent to $10.2 million, to the Chinese Petroleum Corporation, a wholly-owned Government corporation, was signed at the headquarters of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) in Manila on December 27, 1968.

The loan will be used to finance the foreign exchange cost of construction and commissioning of a petro-chemical plant in Kaohsiung.

The loan, which is for a term of 12 years, including a grace period of three years, will carry an interest rate of 6-7/8 per cent per annum.

The project envisages establishment of a plant for the manufacture of 26,400 metric tons per year of dimethyl terephthalate (DMT), an intermediate used in the production of polyester fibre. The total cost of the project is estimated at $23.08 million.

The DMT project, economically viable in itself, is expected to aid in the promotion of certain avenues of regional co-operation decided upon by Formosa and South Korea at the fourth Sino-Korean Ministerial Level Economic Co-operation Conference held in July, 1968. Under the proposed co-operative effort, both Formosa and South Korea will seek to develop economic and mutually complementary production capacity in respect of petro-chemicals-based intermediates for synthetic fibres and develop joint markets for these products between the two countries, Formosa producing DMT and South Korea producing caprolactom.

B. Relations With African Nations: Of the 42 African countries, 21 now have diplomatic relations with Taiwan (Formosa), while 14 have such relations with China.

A major factor in Taiwan's effort to win friends in Africa is its agricultural aid programme, which was launched in 1961. The KMT Administration has 450 farming experts serving in 18 African countries. The programme is being expanded and agreements with Ghana, the Central African Republic and Lesotho have been signed, providing for the despatch of teams to those countries.

Technical aid in the fields of public health, fishery, food processing, civil aero-nautics, education, highway development and water conservancy are also extended to a few countries, including Ethiopia which does not get agricultural aid. The total number of KMT aid personnel is 600.

Taiwan diplomacy in Africa is directed by the Vice Foreign Minister, Mr. Yang Hsi-kun, known as "Mr. Africa". He recently returned from a visit to Africa, during which he toured 24 countries, bringing back diplomatic recognition from Gambia and newly independent Swaziland.

Taiwan has made a grant of $3 million to Chad and one of $2 million to Sierra Leone to finance agricultural and industrial projects, part of a total grant of $20 million to be extended to 10 African countries. Taiwan has spent about $50 million on aid to Africa.

The increase in African support for the KMT Administration was reflected in the vote on the China representation issue in November, 1968 in United Nations, in which 15 African countries—one less than in 1967—voted for the admission of China and 20—one more than last year—voted against Peking. Of the three new African members, two—Mauritius and Equatorial Guinea—abstained, while the third, Swaziland, voted against admission. The gain was particularly significant when compared with the voting in 1960, when nine African countries supported China and only two were opposed.

While Taiwan's diplomacy in Africa is directed primarily against China, Peking's motives there are more complex. In addition to attempting to isolate Taiwan, it seeks to turn newly independent countries not only against the West but also against the Soviet Union, claiming for itself the role of leader of the world's revolutionaries.

China has greater resources than Taiwan and is willing to use them on large, prestigious projects. Peking is reported to have about 3,000 people working on aid projects in Africa. It is estimated that the Chinese have spent $175 million on aid to African nations.

A. Construction Of Nuclear-Powered Ship: Construction of Japan's first nuclear-powered ship began on November 27, 1968.

The 8,300-gross-ton vessel was being built at the Tokyo shipyard of the Ishiakawajimi-Harma Heavy Industries and will be equipped with an atomic reactor manufactured by the Mitsubishi Atomic Power Industry Company.

It is scheduled to be completed around February, 1972 to become the 22,000-ton US merchant vessel for non-military purposes after the 16,000-ton Soviet icebreaker Lenin, the 22,000-ton US merchant vessel Savannah and the 26,000-ton West German vessel Otto Hahn presently under construction.

The Japanese ship, an experimental freighter, will be powered by a light water type reactor with a thermal output of 3,600 kw, developing about 10,000 H.P. which would give it a cruising speed of 16.5 knots. It will measure 130 metres long, 19 metres wide, and 13.2 metres deep, and carry a crew of 79. It will cost the equivalent of some $22 million.

Hull work is expected to be completed in June, 1969 and then the ship will be towed to its base port in Mutsu, at the northern tip of Japan's mainland, for loading the nuclear reactor.

The ship will be used for experimental purposes as reference for building other nuclear-powered vessels in the future.

B. White Paper On Aid To Developing Nations: The annual report for 1968, compiled by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry and released in the form of a White Paper in November, said Japan's economic aid to developing nations had nearly tripled in the past five years.

The upward trend in assistance, the report said, was particularly marked in private export credits and direct loans.

It also noted that the assistance was now more diversified than before. It pointed out, however, that Japan's effort to assist developing countries was still short of fulfilling the international commitment assumed by Japan to increase its development assistance up to one per cent of her GNP.

The report said there remained strong dissatisfaction with the terms of Japanese assistance—the rate of interest and repayment period in particular. It explained that it was difficult to ease the interest rate on Japanese development loans in view of a high money cost in her own domestic money market.

Japanese aid totalled $855 million in 1967, a 27.8 per cent increase over 1967. The 1967 figure equalled 0.74 per cent of the GNP (0.69 per cent in 1966), which was roughly on par with an average 0.75 per cent recorded by the member-countries of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD).

The total of $855 million was broken down into $390 million in assistance on the Governmental basis and $465 million in private aid. The private economic aid increased by 21.1 per cent over the preceding year while the Governmental aid rose by 36.9 per cent.

Grants accounted for only about one-third of the total aid amount provided by the Government, as compared with 54.7 per cent of DAC member-countries.

Periods of grace for credits averaged 4.7 years and interest rates 4.8 per cent a year, compared with DAC's 5.3 years and 3.8 per cent, respectively. Repayment periods for Japanese credits averaged 16.6 years, while the average for DAC countries was 23.4 years.

The White Paper made the following points on trends in development assistance in the world in 1967:

(1) The world's developing nations, who constitute 75 per cent of of the total number of UN member-countries and 49 per cent of their population, share only 19 per cent of the world's exports and a meagre 14 per cent of its combined GNP. The rate of their annual GNP increase during the 1960-67 period averaged 5 per cent as against 4.9 per cent for that of advanced nations. The growth, however, was off-set by the population explosion that averages 2.5 per cent a year, thus widening the economic gap between developing nations and advanced countries.

(2) Developing nations were confronted with both external and internal factors detrimental to their economic development. The principal external cause was deterioration in their foreign exchange position due to the stagnation in their exports of primary products.

An absolute shortage in capital as well as 'know-how' together with inept utilization of these economic tools, were considered major internal causes.

It was important, therefore, to modernize their agricultural sector at first and then industrialize their economy, giving due considerations to their respective economic conditions.

A. Accord With USA On Transport Feasibility Studies: Eight Asian countries signed in Kuala Lumpur on November 5, 1968 Agreements with USA on regional transport and communications feasibility studies involving over $1 million.

The Agreements were signed by representatives attending a meeting of the Co-ordinating Committee of South-East Asian officials on transport and communications. They also agreed to prepare more regional projects to take advantage of a US offer of another $ 2-3 million next year for more feasibility studies.

A delegate of the Asian Development Bank told the representatives of the Bank's plans for a $3 million regional transportation and communications survey to assess the present and future transport needs of the area.

The Agreements signed covered surveys on:

NEPAL

A. Anti-Indian Demonstrations: About six policemen were injured at Bhaktapur on December 7, 1968 when a small police party tried to prevent an anti-Indian demonstration over the arrest of four Nepalese at Susta near the Indo-Nepal border.

The Bhaktapur demonstration was organized by peasants and students who shouted anti-Indian slogans, particularly against Mrs. Indira Gandhi, and beat up the policemen present. The demonstrators, however, dispersed before police re-inforcements arrived. Pictures of Mrs. Gandhi were burnt by the demonstrators. The clash with the police occurred when the policemen objected to this.

This was the third such demonstration on this issue in the Valley since the beginning of the month; the other two were in Khatmandu and Lalitpur.

B. Excise Duty On Exports To India: It was announced in Khatmandu on December 6, 1968 that 80 per cent excise duty will be charged by the Government on products based on foreign raw materials, especially on synthetic fabrics and stainless steel goods exported to India.

The excise duty will be charged on Indian demand but collections will go to Nepal.

During the recent Indo-Nepal Agreement, Nepal had agreed to regulate its import quantum of such raw materials to the level of export figures of 1967-68.

PAKISTAN

A. RCD "Summit" Conference: A two-day Summit Conference of Regional Co-operation and Development (RCD) nations began in Karachi on December 25, 1968. The Shah of Iran, the Premier of Turkey, Mr. S. Demirel, and President Ayub Khan of Pakistan took part.

In his inaugural address to the Conference, President Ayub Khan said: "All three nation members of RCD have certain outside pressures and the geo-political situation requires that we should get together and work together."

Among the topics discussed during the summit were foreign relations and economic development of the region. The three RCD countries are also members of the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO).

On December 26, 1968, at a banquet held in honour of the Shah and Mr. Demirel, President Ayub Khan raised the "Kashmir issue" and said: "It is poisoning the atmosphere in the region."

"The Kashmir dispute should be resolved to the satisfaction of all the parties concerned. Pakistan will continue to pursue the line with India that the issue be resolved peacefully and honourably."

Conference Ends:

The RCD Summit Conference ended on December 26, 1968.

Leaders of the three RCD countries—the Shah of Iran, President Ayub Khan and the Turkish Prime Minister, Mr. Suleyman Demirel—announced "complete identity of views of the problems of the Persian Gulf, West Asia, Cyprus, Kashmir and the Paris talks on the Viet-Nam question."

A joint spokesman for the three delegations told newsmen that the summit had decided Turkey would supply the region's entire requirement of railway engines, railway rolling stock and workshop equipment. From Iran, the RCD nations would import petro-chemical products. They would buy textiles and jute manufactures from Pakistan.

The summit also decided to establish a Regional Bank of Development which would finance joint ventures to promote mutual trade.

It was also decided that experts of the three Governments would study the possibilities of an RCD heavy electrical complex. All three leaders stressed that "production in the three countries should be harmonized and investigations should be made on the disposal of agricultural surpluses in the RCD nations themselves."

A joint communique issued at the end of the conference emphasized that responsibility for the preservation of peace and stability in the Persian Gulf area rested only with littoral States.

It regretted the adverse effects of recent international developments on the process of East-West detente.

It emphasized the need and importance of achieving general and comprehensive disarmament under effective international control.

It also touched on Viet-Nam, the Middle East, Indo-Pakistan relations, Cyprus and plans for enlarging regional co-operation. The three Heads of State and Government expressed the hope that the Paris talks would move on to matters of substance and soon lead to an early termination of the conflict.

The three leaders expressed concern over the continuation of the explosive situation in the Middle East, re-iterated their opposition to the use of force to secure territorial gains and called for an early solution on the basis of the Security Council resolution.

The three leaders reviewed growing co-operation for development. They approved recommendations submitted by the Working Committee to widen and strengthen collaboration in joint purpose enterprises, trade transport communication and culture.

China awarded Pakistan 20 years to pay back the credit, after a ten-year period of grace. Repayment will be made in goods.

The visiting Acting Chinese Minister for Foreign Trade, Mr. Lin Hai-Yun signed the Agreement for the loan, two-thirds of which will be allocated for industrial projects and the remainder for commodities.

D. People's Party Lays Claim To Assam: In a specially prepared document on Assam, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's party, the People's Party, has urged that Pakistan should "have special relations with the people of Assam".

The document was being widely circulated in Pakistan, chiefly in the Eastern Wing.

It said that "it is established that according to the Partition principles India had no historical claim to Assam. In point of population the Hindus were evenly balanced with the Muslims. The interests of the indigenous tribes and the considerations of geography should have linked Assam with Pakistan. For these reasons Pakistan needs to have special relations with the people of Assam."

It added that "in view of the fast developing events in the region, with the Muslims of Assam being driven into Pakistan, with the neighbouring Himalayan States of Bhutan and Sikkim asserting their national rights, it is incumbent on Pakistan to be vigilant.

"Subsequent events—the Naga and the Mizo rebellions, the trouble in Naxalbari and the discontentment elsewhere in Assam—have clearly proved that it was wrong to decide the fate of Assam on the formula of lumping all non-Muslims together.

"One may ask why the British should have been anxious to bestow Assam on Bharat, in spite of its geographical situation and the composition of its population, the majority of which was not Hindu". One of the reasons for this British behaviour, according to it, "was the considerable interest of the tea industry which was mainly in British hands. The British-owned extensive tea gardens in Assam naturally represented large capital investments and were the source of huge profits.

"The great tea gardens of Darjeeling were also British-owned. If Assam went to Pakistan, Darjeeling would most likely have to be allocated to Pakistan too; if, however, Darjeeling remained in India, the vast British tea industry in the sub-continent would be divided between the two countries. The British preferred to keep the tea industry united and within the country where they had larger capital investment, which was, of course, Bharat".

E. Armed Strength Increased: According to a report entitled "The Military Balance (1968-69)" brought out by the Institute for Strategic Studies in London on December 8, 1968, Pakistan had increased the strength of its tanks and combat aircraft.

The report revealed that Pakistan had already acquired some Chinese T-59 tanks. Pakistan had four armoured brigades with Chinese T-59 tanks, M-47 and M-48 Patton tanks and M-4 Shermans.

It also had 12 infantry divisions based on 32 brigades. Some of the infantry divisions had reconnaissance regiments with M-24 and M-41 Bulldog light tanks.

As regards Pakistani air strength, it had 40 F-86 jet fighters, 40 MIG-19 jet interceptors, 20 B-57 light jet bombers, 14 Mirage jet interceptor and fighter bombers and 12 F-104A jet interceptors, besides other transport and reconnaissance aircraft.

F. Rise In Exports: The Commerce Minister, Nawabzada Abdul Gafoor Khan said in Islamabad that Pakistan's exports amounted to $653,508,000 in 1967-68 as against $604,810,000 in 1966-67, showing an increase of about 8.4 per cent.

This increase was registered in in spite of several adverse factors which impeded the growth of exports to the desired level, such as the decline in export prices of jute and jute manufactures, the closure of the Suez Canal, the devaluation of the £ sterling and the panic created by the gold crisis in March, 1968.

A. Apollo-8 Launched With Three Men—Successful Trip Round Moon: America's Apollo-8 spaceship with three astronauts aboard was launched on the Moon's trajectory from Cape Kennedy on December 21, 1968.

Thus, the three astronauts—Air Force Colonel Frank Borman, Navy Captain James Lovell and Air Force Major William Anders—became the first men to escape the influence of the Earth's gravity to start them on a planned 66-hour journey to the Moon.

The third stage of the Saturn-5 super-rocket remained attached to Apollo-8 while the astronauts circled the Earth nearly 7½ times to make certain that all systems aboard were working well.

They received the "go" signal for their voyage to the Moon 2½ hours after the world's most powerful rocked engine—Saturn-5—sent them into Earth orbit. They then re-ignited the third stage rocket and set sail across the unchartered ocean of space at a speed faster than man has ever flown, aiming for a Christmas eve orbit of the Moon.

As they broke away from the Earth's hold, Apollo-8 set a new altitude record for manned space flight, shattering the 1,370-kilometre mark set in 1966 by the Gemini-II pilots.

USA has sent 19 astronauts into space, 22 once, six twice, and Walter Schirra three times. The Soviet Union has sent 13 men into space. Komarov was the only Soviet cosmonaut to go twice and he was killed on the second mission. USA has clocked 2,774 hours eight minutes in space flight time against the Soviet Union's 628 hours 52 minutes.

In Orbit Round Moon:

On December 24, 1968, Apollo-8 astronauts became the first men to orbit the Moon when a burst from their rocket engine sent the space-craft skimming above the lunar surface.

A tense period of waiting, as the space-craft swung behind the rugged dark side of the Moon, was broken at 3-55 p.m. (IST) when a jubilant NASA official announced: "We've got it. Apollo-8 is in lunar orbit."

While still behind the Moon, the space-ship fired its main rocket to de-celerate, slowing down to give lunar gravity a chance to pull it into orbit.

The operation worked. When Apollo-8 began emerging from behind the Moon, it was on an elliptical lunar orbit, as planned.

The astronauts reported that they had gone into an orbit of 60.5 nautical miles by 169 nautical miles. This was almost exactly the planned orbit of 60 by 170 nautical miles.

In a dramatic Christmas eve signal, astronauts Frank Borman, James Lovell and William Anders confirmed to ground controllers that all was well aboard. One of the space-craft windows was iced over and became unuseable.

"Over to my right the mountains are coming up," Major Anders said, "I am a bit disappointed at the scene from this altitude." He also described the lines and terraces of the rugged landscape.

Major Anders then reported sighting the first landmark related to a possible Moon landing site.

Flight Commander Col. Frank Borman offered a Christmas-time prayer of peace, which ran thus: "Give us, O God, the vision which can see thy love in the world in spite of human failure. Give us the faith to trust the goodness in spite of our ignorance and weakness. Give us the knowledge that we may continue to pray with understanding hearts, and show us what each one of us can do to set forward the coming of the day of universal peace, amen."

Borman addressed the prayer to "people at St. Christopher's—actually to people everywhere." He is a lay reader at St. Christopher Episcopal Church at League City, Texas, near his home in Houston area.

What Astronauts Saw On Moon:

When Apllo-8 went into lunar orbit, the control centre asked: "What does the old Moon look like?"

Capt. Lovell replied: "The Moon is essentially grey. No colour...the Sea of Fertility doesn't stand out as well here as it does on Earth... we're getting quite a bit of contrast as we approach the terminatory".

[The terminator is the line between darkness and light on the Moon].

He added that the view was very good and that it was easy to pick out landmarks.

As Apollo-8 passed the lunar craters Colombo and Guttenberg, Major Anders reported: "Very good detail...they're very visible."

Gazing down on a landscape of crater-pocked plains, boulder-strewn plateaus and rugged mountains, Major Lovell reported on the great number of craters: "The craters are all rounded off. There's quite a few of them. Many of them look alike, especially the round ones, like they've been hit by meteorites or projectiles of some sort. The walls of the craters are terraced, about six or seven terraces on the way down.

"Langrenus is quite a crater, has a crown to it. Walls are terraced. The .craters are all rounded off. There's quite a few of them. Some of them are newer.

"Quite a huge crater with a central cone to it. The walls of the crater are terraced, about six or seven terraces on the way down".

As the spacecraft came up over the Sea of Fertility, Capt. Lovell said he could see "the rays coming out of a crater."

Shortly afterwards he reported that the ship was coming up from the site that was being considered prime for the first lunar landing.

"Be advised," Capt. Lovell told ground control, "the round window, the hatch window, is completely iced over. We can't use it. Major Anders and I are sharing the rendezvous window."

Major Anders, who took over at this point, said: "Earth shine is about what we expected. (The reference was to the light that is reflected on to the Moon from Earth). You can see large craters quite distinctly...you get a good three-dimensional view of rims of larger craters. There is very good detail visible. We can see the long, parallel faults or grobbins. (A grobbin is a rent in the Earth).

"We're directly over our first initial point now for B1 B- (a landmark that relates to a projected landing site). It's almost impossible to miss. Very easy to pick out. We can look right over into the second initial point. I can see very clearly the five-cratered star formation which we have on our lunar chart".

Captain Lovell named "Mount Marilyn" as one of the possible lunar landing sites." He told the Houston space centre that he had chosen the spot—one of the five selected by the three astronauts as possible lunar landing sites —because "it appears that visibility at this particular spot is excellent."

Capt. Lovell's wife's name is Marilyn.

Col. Frank Borman said: "The Moon is a different thing to each one of us. I know my own impression is that it is a vast, lonely, forbidding expanse of nothing. It looks like clouds of pumice stone. It certainly would not appear to be a very inviting place to live or work".

Captain James A. Lovell said: "The vast loneliness of the Moon is very awe-inspiring. The Earth is a grand oasis in the vastness of space.'

Major William A. Anders: "The lunar sun-sets and sun-rises bring out the stark nature of the terrain".

In Apollo-8's fourth telecast from space, Col. Borman said: "What you are seeing are the craters Casper and Gilbert. What you can't see are the small, bright impact craters that dominate the lunar surface. The horizon here is very, very stark. The sky is pitch black, and the Sun is white. Coming into view are some interesting old craters. Further, on the horizon, you see the mountains coming up now. They are heavily impacted with numerous craters".

Capt. Lovell, picking up the narration, said: "Actually, I think the best way to describe this area is vastness of black and white—absolutely no colour. You can see by the numerous craters that this planet has been bombarded through the aeons....."

Major Anders said: "Eventually these (the crater rims) get eroded down by the constant bombardment of small meteorites. There's a very dark crater in the filling material of this valley in front of us now. Very unusual, because it's clearly defined, but dark inside, where most new-looking craters have bright interiors...You are now seeing the Sea of Crisis coming over the horizon...The sea is remarkably smooth..."

Apollo control: "This is phenomenal".

Major Anders: "Directly in front of the space-craft now running along the edge of a small mountain to a sinuous shape with right angle turns. Just to the west of the Sea of Crisis is the Marsh of Sleep and west of that is the Sea of Tranquillity. Can you see the fracture pictures on the bar in front of us? I hope all of you back on Earth can see what we mean when we say, a rather forbidding horizon—a rather dark and unappetizing place. We are now going over one of our future landing sites in the Sea of Tranquillity. Smooth to make it easy for future landing attempts, to avoid having to dodge mountains. Now I can see lunar sunrise."

Capt. James A Lovell said about two minutes before sunrise that the horizon "began to brighten up. It's sort of a fine, white haze...it takes a fan shape unlike a sunrise on earth where the atmosphere affects it".

Before the sun peeped above the horizon, Capt. Lovell said: "Definite rays could be seen coming from the other side. And it came as a uniform haze emanating from the centre spot where the sun was going to rise."

Journey Back To Earth:

On December 25, 1968, the three Apollo-8 astronauts, exhausted but happy, headed for home, resting and sleeping on their first "day off" since being blasted into space on December 21, 1968. They were reported extremely tired after their historic voyage ten times around the Moon on December 24, 1968.

During their 20 hours in lunar orbit, they spent as much time as possible taking pictures and carrying out observation and navigation exercises, to gather data for a manned Moon landing some time in 1969. Although rest periods were scheduled while in Moon orbit, none of the astronauts rested very well.

Firing of the space-craft's engine, to pull Apollo-8 out of lunar orbit and set it on a course for Earth, brought a peak of tension for both the astronauts and flight controllers.

The astronauts triggered the 20,500-lb thrust rocket at 11-40 a.m. (IST) on December 25, 1968. The firing occurred behind the Moon and it was 15 suspenseful minutes later before the Mission Control Centre made radio contact with the space-craft and confirmed that the astronauts were on their way home. Officials said preliminary estimates were that the burn lasted 3 min. 23 sec., about six seconds longer than had been planned.

Communications improved considerably as the space-craft started back towards Earth. Observers at first thought that they heard one of the astronauts saying the burn had lasted only 2 min. 23 sec, but space officials said later that it actually had lasted 3 min. 23 secs.

A burn that was too short might have put the space-craft into what was officially described as "an unstable orbit" and might have left them stranded in space.

Earlier on December 25, 1968, as they prepared to return home, the astronauts sent a Christmas message to Earth in which they quoted from the Book of Genesis and added: "And from the crew of the Apollo-8, we pause with good night, good luck, and Merry Christmas and God bless all of you—all of you on the good Earth".

Splashdown In The Pacific:

The Apollo-8 Moon explorers came home from the heavens on December 27, 1968, blazing back through the Earth's atmosphere to a parachute landing in a darkened Pacific Ocean.

Thus, America's newest space heroes ended man's greatest space adventure and one of history's most momentous explorations when their six-tonne spaceship dropped into a gently rolling sea about 1,700 kilometres (1,100 miles) south-east of Hawaii.

The landing was almost pin-point —an estimated 4,800 metres from the main recovery carrier, the Yorktown.

Mission Control said that the Yorktown had confirmed the 4,800-metre distance and that the ship reported receiving radio messages from the astronauts as they bobbed in the water.

The astronauts hit the water at 9.21 P.M. IST. They were the first US astronauts to land in darkness. It was 4-50 a.m. local time, about an hour before dawn and 45 minutes before first light.

The astronauts had been away from the Earth for six days and three hours. They travelled 69 hours outward and then raced home in 58 hours. They logged about 867,000 km.

To reach their landing target in the Pacific, the astronauts survived man's hottest and fastest re-entry through the atmosphere. Apollo-8, which slammed into the outer limit of the atmosphere at 39,590 km an hour, was punished by forces nearly seven times the pull of gravity and was blistered by heat of more 3,000 degrees C.

The astronauts had been on a perfect course since they fired themselves out of the Moon orbit early on December 25, 1968 and started their 58-hour, 374,000-kilometre home-ward journey. So accurate was the path that three planned mid-course corrections were cancelled.

As Apollo-8 slammed into the outer boundary of the Earth's atmosphere 121,800 metres above the Pacific, friction built up and the craft heat shield was blistered. But the temperature in the cabin remained a comfortable 21 degrees C.

Before hitting the atmosphere, the astronauts jettisoned a service module attached to the cabin.

To reduce the effect of gravity build-up, Apollo-8 skipped like a stone off the atmosphere at 60,000 metres, bouncing back to 70,000 metres, before making the final plunge.

The first word that Apollo-8 had survived the blazing dash came from Capt. Lovell, who radioed: "We are in real good shape." The crew reported they had passed through a "real fireball" during the critical re-entry. Ships quickly picked up the descending space-ship on radar.

The atmosphere braked the speed of the fleeting craft, making it possible for small parachutes to pop out to stabilize it. At 3,047 metres, the three main parachutes opened and the astronauts floated gently downward into the Pacific, travelling at a speed of 35 km per hour.

First word that the astronauts were down came from a helicopter that reported seeing flashing lights, and added: "We have voice contact." Within minutes after the landing, a heicopter was over the spaceship, illuminating the area with a giant flood-light. The astronauts climbed into a helicopter 80 minutes after landing and were ferried quickly to the carrier Yorktown.

The astronauts were dressed in white flight suits, into which they had changed while waiting for recovery. They smiled and waved to acknowledge the cheers of the sailors.

Col. Borman stepped to a microphone and thanked the crew for the great recovery operation. He said: "We're very happy to be here with you. We appreciate your effort. We know you had to stay out here over Christmas. It seems that Capt. Lovell and I always seem to fly in December. But on Gemini-7, we got home before Christmas.

"We are very proud to be part of this great achievement. We're proud of it and we appreciate the part you played in getting us back."

Zero Gravity Area:

When Apollo-8 headed for re-entry on December 27, 1968, the three astronauts on board the epoch-making capsule skidded by one of the most "motionless areas of space" where the gravitational fields of the Earth, Sun and Moon cancel each other out.

Apollo-8 was accelerating back towards the Earth when it passed by the focus of one of the strangest theories in astronomy—without the cosmonauts managing to make the observations that would verify it.

According to 18th century astronomer La Grande, the universe's "rubbish" should hang suspended precisely where the major gravitational fields in the cosmos cancel out.

Of the five areas where modern astronomers are prepared to speculate that this might happen, one lay close to the point of "zero gravity" which the Apollo-8 mission passed through on its journey from the Earth to the Moon and back.

The astronauts should, therefore, have been able to observe "cosmic rubbish"—bit and pieces of stars or planets—hanging in suspension as a form of cosmic dust.

Modern research attempted to test La Grande's theory with the Gemini-11 and Gemini-12 Missions, but their cameras did not work and the attempt produced nothing decisive.

Felicitations:

President L. B. Johnson, sending his congratulations to mankind's first path-finders to the Moon, told the astronauts on December 27, 1968 that they had ushered the world into a new era.

He said: "We rejoice that you're well and we send you congratulations from all your fellow-countrymen and all peace-loving peoples in the world. Well done."

Mr. Johnson disclosed that the White House had used the "hot line" to Moscow to keep the Soviet Government informed of the progress of the historic flight to the Moon and back.

The President of India, Dr. Zakir Husain, congratulated President Johnson on the successful completion of Apollo-8's trip to the Moon.

In a message to the US President, Dr. Zakir Husain said: "We in India have followed with great admiration, and no little awe, the incredible flight of Apollo-8 in its historic orbit of the Moon and the safe and successful completion of the hazardous mission in the cause of science and human endeavour by the three intrepid astronauts, Col. Borman, Capt. Lovell and Maj. Anders, which is a matter for universal relief and the highest possible commendation."

The Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, congratulated the United States and its people following the successful return of the three American astronauts after orbiting the Moon.

Soviet cosmonauts also congratulated the three American astronauts on their orbit around the Moon and safe return to Earth.

In a message released by the Soviet Embassy in Washington, they described the trip as "another milestone in scientific and technical progress."

Ten Soviet cosmonauts in their telegram congratulated the "American scientists and all the American people on your successful flight." The telegram was signed by Gherman Titov, Andrian Nikolaev, Pavel Popovich, Valery Bykovsky-Mrs. Valentina Nikolaeva-Tereshkova, Boria Egorov, Constantin Feoktistov, Pavel Belayev, Alexis Leonov and Georgy Beregovoi.

It said: "We followed very closely each stage of your flight and note with satisfaction the precision of your joint work and your courage which contributed to the excellent completion of this important experiment. We are confident that the exploration of outer space will greatly benefit earthmen. We congratulate you on a successful step towards this noble goal."

Moscow Radio and Tass carried brief reports of the safe return of the astronauts about half-an-hour after the splash-down.

Records Of Astronauts:

Apollo-8 Commander Col. Frank Borman (40), a veteran of the space programme, graduated eighth in a class of 670 at the US Military Academy in 1950. During his aviation career, he was plagued by medical problems that repeatedly threatened to ground him for life. But he overcame them and was included in the September, 1962 group of astronauts.

Col. Borman, with Apollo mate, Capt. James A. Lovell Jr., manned the 14-day Gemini-7 flight. Prior to the Apollo mission, they had 755 combined hours in space, more than the combined total of the Soviet cosmonaut corps.

Capt. Lovell graduated from the Naval Academy in 1952 and was in his fourth year as naval test pilot when the astronaut selection began in 1959. He was passed over for the first group but applied again and was accepted.

Besides Gemini-7, Capt. Lovell commanded the final Gemini flight, the four-day Gemini-10. He is now the world's most travelled astronaut.

Major William A. Anders (35) attended the Naval Academy but chose the Air Force as a career. He also attended the Air Force Institute of Technology and graduated with a Master of Science degree in nuclear engineering.

Son of "an old Navy battleship man", Major Anders was born in Hong Kong while his father was Executive Officer on the gun-boat "Panay" cruising the rivers of China.

Soviet Reaction:

But Apollo-8's journey to the Moon won both praise and criticism in Pravda on December 23, 1968.

Academician Georgy Petrov, Director of the Academy of Sciences Institute for Cosmic Experiments, praised the American astronauts' courage in undertaking the journey and wished them a happy splash-down.

He said that if the mission was successful, it would make a new achievement in space research.

But, Mr. Petrov introduced two weighty reservations. He said the mission was being undertaken at a time of high solar activity and there were grounds for agreeing with those who thought the risks involved were considerable. The American practice of leaving full control of the space-craft to astronauts also did not appeal to the Academician. He thought the Soviet method of entirely duplicating the control systems so that a space-ship could be brought down automatically if the need arose was better.

Besides, he stressed the point that the present American effort had been made possible by previous Soviet successes, particularly the flights of the unmanned Zond-5 and Zond-6.

Other Reactions:

Britain saluted the world's first "lunar-nauts" as Apollo-8 entered orbit of the Moon on December 24, 1968.

Mr. Kenneth Gatland, Vice-President of the British Inter-Planetary Society, said: "We salute the brave Columbuses of space. Their exploit has shrunk mother Earth—the cradle. of humanity—to the proportions of a compact sphere against the stars.

"The inter-planetary age that now stretches before us must enormously affect human philosophy as well as science and technology.

"The human spirit this day has begun to soar to new dimensions of experience, exploration and discovery."

Sir Bernard Lovell, Director of Britain's Jodrell Bank Observatory, said that the orbiting of Apollo-8 manned space-craft around the Moon would be regarded as one "of the historic moments in the development of the human race."

He said: "This morning's (December 24, 1968) description transmitting live from space a human being viewing the Moon from only 70 miles (112 km) away must be regarded as one of the historic moments in the development of the human race. The American achievement in carrying out this hazardous programme with such precision will be recognized as one of the great engineering and technical feats."

In Holland, scientists of the Utrecht National Observatory said: "It's tremendous. A new era is opening up for us. We certainly have achieved a thousand-year leap in space."

Dr. Vikram Sarabhai, Chairman of the Indian Atomic Energy Commission said: "It is a fantastic feat."

Chronology Of Voyage:

The following is a brief chronology of the Moon flight of Apollo-8.

December 21, 1968:—The spacecraft was launched by a Saturn-5 rocket, with three astronauts aboard at 6-21 p.m. (IST), for the first human flight destined for orbit around the Moon.

December 22, 1968:—The craft was half-way to the Moon by 5-50 p.m. IST. The trajectory was so perfect that only a slight adjustment was necessary.

December 23, 1968:—The flight continued without hitches on the pre-determined trajectory.

December 24, 1968:—Apollo-8 passed behind the hidden face of the Moon and braked to place itself in lunar orbit. Apollo-8 began its revolutions around the Moon. At 8-10 p.m. (IST), the second elliptical revolution around the Moon was completed, and Apollo placed itself on a nearly perfect circular orbit at 70 miles above the Moon's surface.

December 25, 1968:—The rocket motor was fired to tear the spacecraft from the lunar orbit. By 11-44 a.m. IST, this operation had succeeded, and the return to Earth had begun.

December 26, 1968:—Apollo-8 kept to the pre-determined trajectory and no adjustment was necessary.

December 27, 1968:—With the trajectory remaining perfect, the last planned adjustment was cancelled. At 9-7 p.m. IST, Apollo crashed like a flaming meteor into the Earth's atmosphere. It splashed down at 9-21 p.m. IST, the pre-calculated time, only 5,000 yards from the US aircraft-carrier Yorktown which was awaiting it.

Space Records:

The Apollo-8 astronauts went into their sixth and final day of flight with a string of space "firsts" already behind them.

The Mission's records include:

—Highest speed achieved by humans, 24,171 miles per hour, at their break-away from Earth orbit.

—Greatest distance from Earth reached by humans, about 233,000 miles while in orbit around the Moon on December 25.

—First men to orbit the Moon.

—First men to leave Earth's gravitational sphere.

—First men to see the Moon's gravitational field.

—First men to lose total ocntact with Earth, while circling the Moon's far side.

—First men to see the Moon's far side.

Capt. J. Lovell Longest In Space:

Capt. James Lovell Jr. (40), who did not make the astronaut team his first time out, by the Apollo-8 flight, has strengthened his grip on the world's time in space championship.

The Apollo-8 flight gave him more than 572 hours of space travel. His closest competitor is Col. Frank Borman, the Apollo-8 Commander who has nearly 478 hours.

Col. Borman and Capt. Lovell registered most of their time during the Gemini-7 flight in December, 1965. That flight is still the longest in history, having run 206 revolutions around the Earth in 330 hours and 35 minutes.

Capt. Lovell added another 94 hours during the Gemini-13 flight in November, 1966.

The Apollo-8 flight was scheduled for 147 hours 8 minutes.

Capt. Lovell and Mr. Walter M. Schirra Jr. are the only two astronauts ever to make three space flights. Mr. Schirra, the only man to fly in the Mercury, Gemini and Apollo programmes, has logged 295 hours, 13 minutes and ten seconds in space, the third greatest amount.

Jules Verne's Vision 100 Years Ago:

More than a hundred years ago, Jules Verne wrote prophetically of a space capsule orbiting the Moon. His tale has much in common with the journey of Apollo-8.

In his book, "From the Earth to the Moon," published in 1865, the French science-fiction story-teller wrote of launching a projectile which, like the Apollo, had three men aboard.

The Frenchman chose a launching site about 160 km from Cape Kennedy. December 1 was the date of the fictitious flight, December 12 its splash-down in the Pacific Ocean, and December 29 the day the capsule was to float to the surface.

Apollo-8 was launched on December 22, with splash-down scheduled for December 27 in the Pacific.

Writing at a time when the airplane had not even been invented, Verne estimated his projectile would initially travel at 12,000 yards per second—or about 25,000 miles per hour during the 238,833-mile journey.

Apollo-8 began travelling at 24,200 miles per hour for the 225,000-mile flight.

Verne described his projectile as a cast-iron tube lined in aluminium, 12 feet high with a base of 54 square feet and weighting 12,230 lbs.

The Apollo-8 crew apartment capsule is a cone-shaped capsule which, minus the 36-storey Saturn-5 rocket, is 12 feet long. It has an aluminium alloy inner structure encased by a brazed stainless steel-heart shield coated with plastic. It weighs 12,392 lbs.

Verne's space capsule was described as having orbited the Moon. The book described in detail the lifeless satellite with its crusty surface and deep craters.

Apollo-8 also described the Moon's surface, and photographed one area which it named after Verne.

B. Russia Launches Unmanned Satellite To Venus: Russia sent a 1,130-kg unmanned satellite hurtling into space on January 5 on a four-month journey destined to end with a new soft-landing on the mystery planet Venus.

The new satellite carrying pennants with a bas-relief of Lenin and a Soviet coat of arms, is intended to continue the research started by Venus-4 which parachuted to the planet's surface in October, 1967, after sending 90 minutes of unprecedented information on Venus' atmosphere back to Earth.

The satellite, only slightly heavier than Venus-4, was launched into Earth orbit at 09.20 Moscow Time. About 80 minutes later, over Africa, the main part of the satellite was blasted from the carrier rocket on its 250 million km journey to Venus. It is due there in the middle of May.

The official Soviet news agency Tass said Venus-5 carried a wider range of scientific and measuring equipment than its predecessor. This would make it possible to obtain fuller and more accurate measurements of the planet already shown to be an arid hotbed where only the most primitive forms of life can exist.

Venus-3 which smashed into the the planet on March 1, 1966 made history. It was the first time that an earth-made object had actually landed on another planet. The others missed the planet by about 24,000 km.

The Soviet space shot came nine days after America's successful round-the-Moon space flight by astronauts Bill Anders, Frank Borman and Jim Lovell.

C. Czech Government Resigns—New Cabinet: The Czechoslovak Prime Minister, Mr. O. Cernik, called on the President, Mr. Ludvik Svoboda to submit his Government's resignation in Prague on December 29, 1968.

President Svoboda asked Mr. Cernik to stay in office until a new Government was formed.

The Government's decision to resign followed a new law that set up Czech and Slovak State Governments with a smaller Federal Government in Prague looking after the national interests.

The following day, President Svoboda appointed a new Cabinet headed by Mr. Cernik as follows:

Premier: Mr. Oldrich Cernik.

Deputy Premiers: Dr. Petr Colotka, Dr. Samuel Faltan, Mr. Frantisek Hamouz and Mr. Valacav Vales.

The other Ministers were:

Foreign Minister: Mr. Jan Marko;

Defence Minister: Lt.-Gen. Martin Dzur;

Interior Minister: Mr. Jan Pelnar;

Planning Minister: Mr. Frantisek Vlasak;

Finance Minister: Mr. Bohumil Sucharda;

Foreign Trade Minister: Mr. Jan Tabacek;

Minister of Labour and Social Welfare: Mr. Michael Stancel.

Apart from the seventh federal Ministries, the office of Premier and the four Deputy Premiers, nine other Ministers were named to head federal committees.

Federation Comes Into Force:

On January 1, Czechoslovakia became two Socialist Republics.

Amid traditional new year's celebrations, the statue of King Wenceslas in the heart of the city—a protest billboard since the August, 1968 Warsaw Pact occupation—was again decorated with candles, wreaths and flowers.

Under a complicated new law which came into effect at midnight, Czechoslovakia is divided into a federation of Czech and Slovak Republics, with a Federal Government and Parliament.

A new Czech Government for Bohemia and Moravia is to take office in Prague. A new Slovak Government is to take office in Bratislava. Both will remain under a small Federal Cabinet on such matters as foreign affairs and defence, but can go their own way on internal matters.

There are some 3.5 million Slovaks in a country of 14 million people.

President Ludvik Svoboda warned the Czechoslovaks that he could not promise an easy, smooth road in 1969. But the President, whose iron resolve in Moscow after the August invasion won him international admiration, went on to promise his fellow countrymen: "We shall even apply, practically, in the future the principle that our people are masters of their own country."

West Bengal Council Of CPI Endorses Soviet Intervention:

On January 1, the West Bengal State Council of the Communist Party of India (CPI) overwhelmingly endorsed the Soviet intervention in Czechoslovakia.

The State-wide discussion at different levels of the party on the Soviet action on the basis of two documents circulated by the National Council was rounded off at the three-day meeting of the State Council in Calcutta.

Out of 101 members of the State Council, 85 were present. Seven members were highly critical of the Soviet intervention, while the rest voted in endorsement of the action.

D. IMF Member-Nations Accept SDR Proposals: It was disclosed in Washington on January 3 that 27 member-nations had formally notified the International Monetary Fund that they accepted the proposed Special Drawing Rights (SDR), or "Paper Gold" methods of stabilizing the Western world's monetary system.

The 27 nations have just over 47 per cent of the total voting power in the Fund. Before "Paper Gold" can go into force, it must be accepted by 67 of the Fund's 111 member-countries, with 80 per cent of the vote.

"Paper Gold" amendments to the Fund's articles were completed in April, 1968 and approved on May 9 by a substantial majority of the Fund governors.

E. USSR Budget For 1969: The Supreme Soviet of USSR unanimously adopted on December 13, 1968 a 134,000 million rouble (roughly $148,000 million) Budget for 1969, of which 17,702 million roubles, or about 13 per cent of the total, will be earmarked for military spending.

Two modifications were voteed—to increase funds allocated to light industry by 108.4 million roubles and to cultural affairs by 122.7 million roubles.

The Soviet legislative body adopted a Budget that provides for receipts of 134,097,726,000 roubles and spending of 133,898,408,000 roubles.

[USA's 1967 Budget provided for $125,731,987,115 expenditure, including more than $68,000 million in military funds].

F. US Cabinet Appointments: The US President-elect, Mr. Richard Nixon, said in a statement in Washington on December 11, 1968 that the 12 men he had selected to fill his Cabinet "have a potential for great leadership."

Addressing the nation in a 30-minute televised speech from Washington's Shoreham Hotel, he broke with tradition to introduce, all together, the members of his team and their families.

He said that his Cabinet appointees would be "more available to the Press."

Mr. William Pierce Rogers, nominated to the crucial Secretary of State office, was described by Mr. Nixon as "a superb negotiator" who "keeps a cool head."

Mr. David Kennedy, Chairman of the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company, Chicago, will be Secretary of the Treasury.

His selection for the other jobs was as follows:

Attorney-General: Mr. John Mitchell of New York, his campaign manager and former law partner.

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare: Lieutenant Governor Robert Finch of California, who managed Mr. Nixon's first, losing campaign for the White House eight years ago.

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development: Governor George Romney of Michigan, the man Mr. Nixon pushed out of the 1968 Presidential race with a drubbing in the public opinion poll prior to the Hampshire primary.

Secretary of Labour: Mr. George Schultz, Dean of the Graduate School of Business at the University of Chicago.

Secretary of Transportation: Governor John Volpe of Massachusetts.

Secretary of Interior: Governor Walter Hickel of Alaska.

Secretary of Commerce: Mr. Maurice Stans, budget director to former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Mr. Nixon's campaign finance chairman.

Secretary of Agriculture: Mr. Clifford Hardin, Chancellor of the University of Nebraska.

Postmaster-General: Mr. Winton Blount of Montgomery, Alabama, President of the US Chamber of Commerce.

While Mr. Romney was a one-time political rival, the other two Governors Mr. Nixon named to his Cabinet were ardent and early supporters of his quest for the Republican Presidential nomination.

Eight of the Cabinet members were men drawn to Washington through elective politics or through assignments within the Federal Government. Mr. Rogers, Mr. Stans, Mr. Volpe, and briefly, Mr. Kennedy had served in Administration posts when Mr. Eisenhower was President.

Mr. Stans has long been a Nixon associate. He is 60 and a New York investment banker.

Mr. Romney (61) has been Governor of Michigan for six years. His smashing re-election in 1966 propelled him to the front rank of party Presidential contenders, but the lustre faded quickly and he withdrew in the face of a gigantic Nixon lead in public opinion polls. He campaigned vigorously for Mr. Nixon after the President-elect was nominated.

Mr. Hickel (49) went to Alaska 28 years ago, virtually broke. He became a millionaire in real estate and construction.

Mr. Volpe, too, is a construction man and has three times been elected Governor of Massachusetts. Federal Highway Commissioner during the Eisenhower years, Mr. Volpe had courted the Vice-Presidential nomination, and was said to have been in the running until Mr. Nixon settled on Mr. Agnew.

G. US Discount Rate Raised: The United States on December 17, 1968 raised the Federal discount (bank) rate to 5½ per cent to curb inflationary pressure which, it said, was impeding restoration of economic stability.

For the second time in 1968, the rate was at its highest level since after being cut from 5½ per cent to 5¼ per cent on August 16.

H. Elections To UN Security Council: The composition of the UN Security Council changed on December 31, 1968 when five new members joined the 15-member Council for two-year terms.

The new members replaced countries from their region whose terms had expired.

Colombia, Nepal, Finland, Spain and Zambia had been elected by the General Assembly—on the nomination of regional groups—to succeed Brazil, India, Denmark, Canada and Ethiopia respectively.

Five other non-permanent members—Paraguay, Pakistan, Algeria, Hungary and Senegal—have another year on the Council.

The presidency of the Council, which circulates alphabetically by countries each month, also changed when the Finnish Ambassador, Mr. Max Jacobson, replaced Mr. Makonnen of Ethiopia.

I. British Submission To Jurisdiction Of World Court: In a declaration issued at UN HQ on January 1, Britain withdrew most of its reservations to the statute of the International Court of Justice and submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the world tribunal.

Britain agreed to accept the Court's jurisdiction in all legal disputes concerning the interpretation of treaties, questions of international law, breaches of international obligations and the nature and extent of reparations for such breaches.

J. World Exports: According to International Financial Statistics, the monthly statistical bulletin of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the value of world exports exceeded $200 billion over a 12-month period for the first time in the year ended September 30, 1968.

Data for the third quarter expressed as an annual rate showed exports of $209 billion, compared with $206.8 billion in the second quarter, $199.4 billion in the first quarter, and $200.8 billion in the fourth quarter of 1967.

The latest total represented a doubling in value of world trade since 1959, but the distribution of the increase among various countries varied considerably. The percentage increase in dollar value of total world exports was 101 per cent from 1959 to the year ended September 30. The increase for industrial countries was 116 per cent, but the rate of growth of the United States and the United Kingdom export lagged at 91 and 45 per cent respectively. Exports of oil-producing countries rose by 75 per cent in the nine years. Exports of other less developed countries rose by 59 per cent.

For the third quarter of this year, there was a decline of 1.9 per cent in US exports from second quarter levels, compared to a decline of 8 per cent in the country's exports between the two comparable 1967 quarters. UK exports rose less than one per cent between the two 1968 quarters, but they had declined around 11 per cent in the comparative 1967 period. Exports of industrial Europe rose by 5.5 per cent in the third quarter of this year, compared to a decline of some 8 per cent. in exports between the 1967 second and third quarters.

For industrial countries as a whole—US, UK, industrial Europe, Japan and Canada—third-quarter exports were at an annual rate of $154,580 million, an increase of about 2.6 per cent. A year earlier, these exports had declined some seven per cent to a $130,660 million annual rate.

Use Of IMF Funds:

Use of IMF resources by member-countries in October, 1968 was moderate. New drawings totalled $42 million, comprising purchases of foreign currency by Morocco ($20 million), South Korea ($12.5 million) and smaller purchases by Burma, Ceylon and Tunisia. Repayments of previous drawings by other countries totalled $14.6 million.

Total 1968 drawing to the end of October—at $3,401 million—remained at record levels; of this total $2,771 million was drawn by industrial countries in the first half of the year.

Net drawings on the Fund at the end of October amounted to $5,465 million, compared with the peak figure of $5,654 million reached in June. The figure declined further to $5.2 billion at the end of November, partly due to repayments during the month of $125 million by the United States and $100 million by the United Kingdom.

K. Canada's Contribution To Asian Development Bank: It was announced in Ottawa that the Asian Development Bank had accepted a Canadian contribution of $24 million on December 23, 1968 to be used for soft loans for priority projects in developing Asian countries.

An Agreement covering five yearly payments of Rs. 3.7 crores each was signed at the Bank's headquarters in Manila.

The money will go to the Bank's multi-purpose Special Fund, for concessional lending to developing countries on terms which were more flexible and bear less heavily on the recipients' balance of payments." This means low interest rates, periods of grace and extended repayment schedules.

The contribution is the second to the Fund, following Japan's recent contribution of $20 million.

L. Effects Of Brain Drain: A UN report estimated on November 23, 1968 that India had lost approximately $5.5 million in 1967 in terms of education costs because of professionals lost to the United States and nurses lost to USA and other countries.

The report on the problem of brain drain, submitted in accordance with a study ordered by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in 1967, also estimated that USA in terms of costs to developing countries got reverse aid of over $ four billion since World War Two by brain drain, while the value in terms of US education costs would be "still higher."

The report, which noted the effects of such drain in the economy and development prospects of the developing countries, however, emphasized the difficulties in the way of solving the problem and said cessation of the drain was "neither feasible nor desirable and could be accomplished only in contravention of the UN Declarations and conventions on human rights and freedoms."

The report, however, showed that the problem was getting acute, particularly in some fields for some developing countries including India where the problem was becoming a "political issue" while the main beneficiaries appeared to be Western developed countries and particularly USA, Canada and Britain.

The report noted that there was very little drain to socialist countries who, by their visa and immigration policies, ensured return of educated and skilled persons back to developing countries.

In the case of India, the report specified many reasons leading to the emigration of trained personnel. Among these it listed meagre Indian salaries, inadequate manpower planning, overproduction of engineers leading to unemployment and what was called "official advice to Indian student engineers to find employment overseas."

The report showed that India lost in the five years ending June 30, 1967, 6,121 professionals to USA and 3,180 to Canada. Over 78 per cent of Indian immigrants to USA were professionals, while the figure for Canada was 60.7. The report also showed that 6.1 per cent of Indian engineers and 1.1 per cent of physicians emigrated from India.

Nearly ten per cent of India's medical doctors were working in foreign countries, mainly USA and Britain, while in India a large number of vacancies of physicians in Government clinics remained unfilled. If India was to reach its present targets for physicians while maintaining the present rate of emigration, it would be necessary for her to train more than 154 additional medical graduates each year.

SUMMARY: Visit Of Shah Of Iran; Aid To Bhutan; Supreme Court Verdict On Kutch Award Implementation; US Estimate Of IAF; Indian Science Congress; CPI (Marxist) Congress.

A. Visit Of Shah Of Iran: His Imperial Majesty the Shah-en-Shah of Iran and Empress Farah arrived in New Delhi on January 2 on a 12-day State visit to the country.

They were received at Palam airport by the President, Dr. Zakir Husain, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Cabinet Ministers, Members of Parliament and others.

In brief airport speeches of welcome, both the Shah of Iran and Dr. Husain emphasized the contribution through mutual co-operation that India and Iran could make towards regional stability and prosperity and referred to the traditional and historic ties between the two countries.

Welcoming the Shah, Dr. Husain said the ancient, traditional and fraternal ties between India and Iran had not only endured through the ages but had actually grown in strength through the continuing and wide-ranging co-operation between the two countries. "I hope that this mutual rediscovery of Iran and India would revitalize and further stimulate the co-operation between the two countries and contribute to peace, stability and progress in Asia and the world."

In his remarks, the Shah of Iran said he was bringing with him the heartiest felicitations from the people of his country and best wishes for the continuing prosperity, progress and happiness of the people of India.

[This was the Iranian Emperor's second State visit to India; he was in this country in February, 1956. Relations between India and Iran have been extremely cordial. The two Governments signed a Cultural Agreement in 1956. Indo-Iranian co-operation in the technical and engineering fields is expanding rapidly, concrete evidence of this being Indian participation in the off-shore oil exploration of Iran and Iranian collaboration in the construction of an oil refinery at Madras. The late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, visited Iran in 1959 and in 1963, the then President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, paid a State visit to Iran.]

State Banquet:

At a State banquet given in honour of the Shah of Iran and Empress Farah the same evening (January 2), the President, Dr. Zakir Husain, described the visit of the Shah as "a milestone" in Indo-Iranian relations and expressed the "confident hope" that it would renew not only the ancient ties between the two countries but "will also beckon towards a common exercise in the practice of modern ideals of government."

He said that in international affairs India sought no more than friendship with all countries, particularly its neighbours. "We believe firmly that our friendship with any country should not be at the expense of any other."

He added: "Our primary concern continues to be for peace and stability and for peaceful settlement of disputes by the parties concerned without external interference. There is much in common between your Imperial Majesty's independent national policy and our policy of non-alignment."

Responding to the toast, the Shah of Iran traced the historical and cultural ties between the two countries which, he said, "are one of the most ancient of its kind in the world."

Referring to the present relations between the two countries, he said the approach of Iran and India to almost all the problems was very similar. "We attach importance to the dignity of the human being and the freedom of man. It is but natural that, bound by ties of the past and the present, we are seeking closer friendship." There were tremendous possibilities of co-operation between "our two countries and we must seek and develop it to the maximum possible extent."

He stressed the importance of regional co-operation and said: "Those who need assistance must be helped".

Talks:

There were talks between the Shah and Mrs. Gandhi on January 3 and among other Ministers and officials and it was decided that India and Iran should set up a joint Ministerial committee to take decisions on collaboration between the two countries in the technical, industrial, commercial and other spheres.

During the official-level talks, which followed the meeting between Mrs. Gandhi and the Shah, a reference was made to the trade imbalance between the two countries and it was generally agreed that India's deficit should be bridged by larger exports from this country.

Mrs. Gandhi was understood to have discussed the Indo-Pakistani conflict of 1965, which had an adverse effect on the economy.

India, she said, had repeatedly made and was continuing to make efforts to normalize relations with Pakistan. But the response from the other side was negative. However, the two Governments had agreed in October, 1967 to restore telecommunications and, at present, technical-level talks on the eastern rivers were going on. India, she said, was willing to enter into bilateral talks with Pakistan for the settlement of other outstanding issues.

In a brief reference to the international situation, especially the Arab-Israeli theatre, she said that the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967, for which India had voted, provided the most practical basis for the easing of tensions and the eventual restoration of normalcy.

The Shah was also understood to have endorsed the November 22, 1967 resolution which declared that a solution of the West Asia problem required the application of the following principles:

(1) Withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied territories, and

(2) Termination of all claims or state of belligerency, and respect for an acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force.

The UN resolution had also affirmed the necessity for guaranteeing freedom of navigation through international waterways in the area.

Civic Reception:

The Shah of Iran and Empress Farah were given a civic reception by the citizens of Delhi at the historic Red Fort on January 3.

The Shah was presented with an ivory table lamp and Empress Farah received a zari stole and a matching purse. A Persian translation of the civic address was also given to the distinguished guests as a souvenir.

The Shah, who spoke in Persian, said that for over 600 years Delhi had remained a centre of the Persian language and culture. During this period many Indian classics had been translated into Persian. He hoped that the cordial relations between Iran and India would be further strengthened in the years to come.

News Conference:

The Shah of Iran held a news conference in New Delhi on January 4 at which he said that he had been telling his Indian and Pakistani friends that if they could resolve their differences "it will be the best guarantee for security in Asia." He would be the happiest man in the world, he added, if he could do something to bring India and Pakistan together, but he made it clear that he could take interest only if both sides desired it.

The Shah was confident that there was "unlimited possibility and wide scope for very great and significant collaboration and co-operation between India and Iran." Iran had petro-chemicals while India had engineering and other industries. The question was to study how the two could co-operate to mutual advantage.

Answering a question, he said that the Regional Co-operation for Development (RCD) was not an exclusive body and that India too could join it, if it so desired. At the moment, if India could not co-operate with the RCD countries, it could develop bilateral relations with them. Iran's membership of the CENTO or RCD did not prevent co-operation with other countries. He was confident that, in due course, India too would join the RCD and other countries of the region just as countries in Europe were coming closer together.

When he was asked about Pakistan's close association with China, he cautioned that one should make a very careful assessment of what the Chinese stood for. He said that China's attitude depended on many factors and that it would not be easy to understand it. China's policy was based on nationalism rather than on anything else. "The Chinese would like to exploit anything which is in their favour and, in this context, they may even pursue opposing policies simultaneously." At the same time, he believed that China should be admitted to United Nations as, without it, it would be impossible to reach the goal of disarmament.

The Shah was asked as to what had made his Government change its foreign policy in recent days. He replied that the change of policy was not because of this or that. "We started adopting an independent national policy when we came to the conclusion that every country should try to win new friends, not only those close to us but even those very far away. At the same time, no country should depend on outside help and every country must depend entirely on its own resources. This is the main theme of our policy."

Answering another question, he said that Iran's relations with the Soviet Union were now "excellent". The border problem and "the legacies of World War II" between the two countries had been solved. Very important economic exchanges had taken place between them. Iran was now laying a pipe-line at a cost of $500 million to deliver natural gas at the Soviet border. Friendship with the Soviet Union did not in any way hurt either the CENTO alliance or the Warsaw Pact.

On the West Asia situation, he said if Dr. Gunnar Jarring's mission did not succeed, then a solution must be found by the Big Four.

About Bahrain, he said that the island was separated from Iran by the British 150 years ago. And now, when the British were quitting the area, it would not be proper on their part to give the island to somebody else. "We cannot accept it." If the British were leaving the area by the front door, they should not sneak in by the back door. At the same time, Iran would not use force to occupy the island. If the people of Bahrain did not wish to join Iran, he would not force them. Ultimately, the future of Bahrain must be settled by some method acceptable to the world.

[The dispute over Bahrain which at one time threatened to lead to a breach between Iran and its Arab neighbours, specially Saudi Arabia, has been causing anxiety to every country interested in the future stability of the area. Once this dispute is out of the way, it should be entirely possible to evolve a regional arrangement to take effect after the British withdraw from the area in two years' time. Bahrain was under Iran's sovereign jurisdiction until it was leased to the British 150 years ago. Iran has hitherto been arguing that sovereign rights should revert to it, while Bahrain—its population is 75 per cent Arab—has been making a bid for independence within the frame-work of a new Federation of the seven other Sheikhdoms in the Persian Gulf. This bid has had the sympathy, if not support, of Saudi Arabia.]

Asked about the reported "understanding" reached recently among the RCD Powers—Pakistan, Iran and Turkey—on Kashmir, he replied: "We have said what has always been said. We voted for the resolutions of UN and nothing is new on the subject."

A correspondent said that one resolution of UN had called for the withdrawal of the Pakistani forces from occupied Kashmir. What was the attitude of Iran?

The Shah: "We subscribe to every resolution that has been passed in UN and all the resolutions we have voted."

Asked if he would favour a solution of the Kashmir problem by implementation of the UN resolutions or through the Tashkent Declaration, he said it was for the Governments of India and Pakistan to plan and decide. "After all, you are the people mainly concerned, and the people of Kashmir. My only wish is to see that the dispute is settled between the two countries, both of which are friends of my country."

The Shah complimented the Indian Press on its serious approach to problems, and said "serious journalism can do a great service to democracy."

In conclusion, he advised the Princes in India to surrender voluntarily their privy purses as he himself had done, provided they could earn in other ways.

He said: "I will tell them of my own experience that it is much better this way." He added as a final thought: "It is a big handicap to be a Prince these days".

[The Shahenshah had made over Crown lands to his tenants in 1951, ten years after he came to the throne. Later, the fabulous Crown jewels, including the Peacock Throne, were entrusted to the custody of Iran's Central Bank to serve as backing for currency. Finally, 90 per cent of the Crown property—valued at $120 million—was transferred to the Pahlavi Foundation in 1961 to finance charities and social welfare works.]

Tour Of Country:

The Shah and Empress Farah left New Delhi on a tour of the country on January 5.

In a brief statement at Palam airport before his departure for Udaipur, the Shah thanked the people and the Government of India for the opportunity they had given him and Empress Farah to visit "this great and beautiful country of yours."

His present visit—and every exchange of visits by leaders of the two countries that would take place in future—he said, would result in further strengthening the bonds of friendship between Iran and India. He personally believed that there were various possibilities for developing the ties that bound Iran and India. "We will see new steps being taken in this direction every day."

From Udaipur, the Shah and his party went to Jabalpur, Hyderabad and Madras before reaching Bombay on January 11.

Delivering the convocation address at Osmania University in Hyderabad (India) on January 9 after he was conferred an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, the Shah said that countries like India and Iran which had an ancient past should carry on a struggle on "a higher level" to defend spiritual and human values so that Man did not become a slave of technology.

On January 10, the Shah of Iran visited the Rs. 45-crore Madras Refineries, nearing completion with American and Iranian collaboration at Manali, near Madras.

Later, he visited the Rs. 11-crore Integral Coach Factory at Perambur and hoped that the railways from any country "would like to order the coaches from this very excellent factory".

Laying the foundation table of the library building in the S.I.E.T. Women's College in Madras on January 10, the Shah said that the progress of women's education in the country deserved special mention and lauded the role of S.I.E.T. College in advancing this objective.

He commended the "feverish activities in every field" in India, which "was on the move" and said that development was seen in the sophisticated heavy engineering, electrical, agricultural, and educational fields.

The Shah and his party arrived in Bombay on January 11 and visited the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre.

He was accorded a reception by Adm. A. K. Chatterji, Chief of the Naval Staff, on board the aircraft-carrier INS Vikrant on January 12. The Shah, attired in the uniform of an Admiral, and the Queen were heralded on board the carrier by eight trumpeters of the Indian Navy as they arrived on the flight deck.

Speaking at a reception given to him by an engineering firm in Bombay on January 12, the Shah visualized continuing collaboration in the field of economic development between his country and India. [The Indian firm had won a Rs. 15-crore contract for the supply of transmission towers and conductors required for the electrification programme of Iran.]

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued at the end of his visit to India on January 13 said that the Shah of Iran had noted with satisfaction India's efforts to resolve all differences with Pakistan in a peaceful manner.

The Shah and Mrs. Indira Gandhi also welcomed the concrete measures taken in the last few years towards industrial and technological collaboration between India and Iran through joint ventures and expansion of trade.

The communique said: "The two sides agreed that there are immense possibilities of closer collaboration between Iran and India, especially in the petro-chemical field. Wider and more intensive co-operation between the two countries in the fields of science, technology and industry would not only hasten the process of economic growth of the two countries, but also contribute to the economic development of the region. In this context, the two leaders decided that a Joint Commission on economic, trade and technical co-operation headed by Ministers of the two countries would be set up to plan and implement specific schemes for co-operation through an exchange of technology, joint industrial ventures and the expansion of mutual trade."

Both re-iterated the need for greater international effort towards alleviating the problems of economic growth in the developing countries and bridging the widening gap between the developed and developing countries. In this context they noted the aims and endeavours of the Second UNCTAD and expressed the hope that continued and determined efforts would be made to achieve the objective.

Mrs. Gandhi welcomed the proposal outlined by the Shah for the creation of a Corps of Volunteers for Development and the unanimous decision by UN to approve it for further study.

The Shah and Empress Farah, the communique said, acquainted themselves with the cultural heritage of India in various parts of the country. The spontaneous reception given to them everywhere was a manifestation of the affection and esteem of the people of India and a deep mutual desire to foster close understanding and friendship and active co-operation between the Governments and peoples of the two countries.

Dr. Zakir Husain accepted a formal invitation from the Shah to visit Iran.

The communique went on: "His Imperial Majesty the Shahenshah and the Prime Minister of India exchanged views on the international situation and matters of common interest and discussed the further development of bilateral relations between the two countries. The talks were held in an atmosphere of mutual understanding and confidence and in a spirit of friendship.

"The two parties recognized the advantage of technical and economic co-operation between the two countries and its impact on raising the standard of living of the people of Iran and India, and expressed their desire for, and interest in, development of mutual co-operation in this regard.

"In regard to the situation in West Asia, they expressed their anxiety and concern over the delay in the implementation of the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 and the resultant growth of dangerous tensions in the region. They condemned the use of force and retaliatory acts as a means of settling political issues.

"The two leaders affirmed that the preservation of peace and stability in the Persian Gulf is the exclusive responsibility of the littoral States and there should be no interference by outside Powers.

"In regard to Viet-Nam, they agreed that the Geneva Agreement provided a suitable basis for a peaceful political solution and expressed the hope that the current discussions between the parties concerned would lead to a satisfactory settlement.

"The Prime Minister explained to His Imperial Majesty the Shahanshah India's efforts to develop good neighbourly relations with Pakistan and India's determination to seek a solution of all problems between the two countries on the basis of the Tashkent Declaration. His Imperial Majesty the Shahenshah noted with satisfaction the Indian efforts to resolve all differences with Pakistan in a peaceful manner.

"Reviewing the international situation, the two leaders re-affirmed their faith in UN and the principles of the Charter and declared their continued support for the UN as the main instrument for maintenance of world peace and stability. They agreed that it was indispensable to strengthen this Organization to enable it to discharge its functions more effectively.

"His Imperial Majesty and the Prime Minister re-iterated their belief in nations pursuing independent policies within the frame-work of constructive international co-operation. They stressed the need for unqualified respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of nations, and recognition of the right of each country to develop its personality according to its own genius and tradition.

"They re-affirmed the principle of non-interference by one country in the internal affairs of another and emphasized that all bilateral issues should be settled by the countries concerned through mutual discussion and peaceful means. They re-iterated their opposition to the use of force to secure territorial gains.

"The two sides confirmed that conclusion of a Treaty on complete and general disarmament under effective international control and signed by all Powers would be the greatest step towards establishment of peace and stability in the world."

Joint Commission Set Up:

The Indian Commerce Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh is to head the Indian delegation on the Joint Indo-Iranian Commission announced on January 13 to implement specific schemes of collaboration between the two countries. The Steel Minister, Mr. P. C. Sethi and the Petroleum Minister, Mr. K. Raghuramiah will be associated with him,.

Iran's Minister for Economy, Mr. Alinaqui Alikhani, who holds the portfolios both of Commerce and Industry, will be the Shah's nominee on the Commission.

According to the Agreement arrived at during the talks between the two delegations, the Commission will set up several sub-groups of officials of the two countries to process specific projects and bring them up before the Commission for final approval.

The Commission is likely to accord high priority to trade between the two countries. Besides devising ways and means of increasing the volume of Indo-Iranian trade, it will ensure that an even balance is maintained in trade exchanges.

The other priority item on the agenda is collaboration in the field of petroleum and petro-chemical industries. Discussions have taken place at length and at various levels of several projects in these fields and the Commission is likely to finalize some of them.

Departure:

The Shah left for Tehran on January 13.

In a farewell message to the President, Dr. Zakir Husain, he said: "The traditional and historic ties of friendship and amity linking India and Iran" had been consolidated further by exchange of views between him and Indian leaders.

He expressed "sincere and heartfelt thanks" for the "very warm welcome and the cordial hospitality" extended to him and the Shahbanou by "the leaders and the noble people of India" during their visit.

B. Britain Rejects India's Plea For Exemption Of Cotton Textiles From Import Deposit Scheme: It was learnt in New Delhi on January 9 that Britain had rejected India's plea to exempt its cotton textiles exports from the purview of the Import Deposit Scheme which Britain enforced recently to reduce its imports.

The scheme, it was explained, was purely a short-term measure. There was no alternative scheme to alleviate such complaints as may come up if it showed any discrimination to countries which were under quota restrictions and were even willing to exercise voluntary restraints on exports to Britain.

Earlier, in 1968 on Britain's request India had agreed to regulate shipments of certain categories of textiles to that country. The request followed the British fear of disruption of its home market consequent on India's fulfilling 55 per cent of its quota to Britain in just under four months.

D. Indo-Nepalese Talks On Economic Co-operation: Indo-Nepalese talks on implementation of the economic co-operation programme in Nepal ended in New Delhi on January 4, with both sides expressing satisfaction over the progress of projects and agreeing to co-operate in new ones.

A joint communique issued at the end of the talks said India had assured Nepal of help in planning and executing some of the new schemes she had shown interest in. These included development of railway lines in Nepal; extension of transport and communication facilities and provision of irrigation and power projects.

The Indian delegation also appreciated Nepal's desire to progress economically on the basis of long-term planning; it was in the context of this that interest was shown in the new projects.

Progress of current schemes was also discussed and it was noted that this had been satisfactory. These included the East-West highway, technical assistance in the field of education, maintenance of major projects, special assistance programmes and completion of the Chhatra canals.

F. Naga Hostiles Clash With Central Police: Four men of the Central Reserve Police were killed and six others seriously injured in a clash with an armed Naga hostile gang near Khongkang on the Imphal-Moreh Road in Tengnoupal sub-division of Manipur on December 13, 1968.

The hostiles were equipped with light machine-guns and other automatic weapons.

Arms Seized:

In clashes with about 250 Naga hostiles in the North Cachar Hills on December 12 and 13, 1968, police seized a light machine-gun, a rifle and some ammunition with Chinese markings besides some documents.

A hostile was killed and four others, one of whom was wounded in the clashes, were captured.

According to an Imphal report, border security forces captured two rifles and a two-inch mortar from Naga hostiles at Machin in Tengnaupal, a sub-division bordering Upper Burma, on December 20, 1968.

Naga Messenger From China Arrested:

It was disclosed in Kohima on January 10 that an underground Naga, who carried a message from the China-trained rebels, had been arrested a few days earlier in Burma while returning after delivering the message to the rebel commander, Mr. Mowu Angami. He was one of the several men the Phizoites had employed to relay their messages.

The messenger confessed that the message had urged the "commander" to bring back his men immediately in view of the present crisis in the underground.

This was the second summons sent by the Phizoites. The first was sent in June, 1968 when the rebels were in China. In response to it, about 1,000 rebels led by Mowu had trekked back through northern Burma in August only to find their way blocked by security forces all along the Nagaland border.

Meanwhile, Mr. Issac Swu, who went to China early in 1968 on what was termed as a political mission had returned. Mr. Swu is a "foreign affairs expert" in the underground set-up and was included in all the delegations that held talks with the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi in New Delhi. China reportedly invited him after failing to reach a firm understanding with Mr. A. Z. Phizo on the question of assistance.

I. Implementation Of Kutch Award—Supreme Court Ruling: The Supreme Court held on January 9 that the implementation of the Kutch Award by the Government did not involve any cession of Indian territory to Pakistan but was only the settlement of a disputed boundary and hence no constitutional amendment was required to give it effect.

On this view, the Court dismissed the five writ petitions and three appeals by Mr. Madhu Limaye, MP and others against the Union of India challenging the competence of the Government to implement the Award by executive action alone.

The Chief Justice, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, giving the majority judgment, said that none of the petitioners had urged that the Award should not be implemented, but only insisted that the change should be made by way of constitutional amendment and not executive action. The fact remained that India undertook to be bound by the Award, pledging the national honour. Therefore, India must implement the Award. The only question was as to the steps to be taken.

He said that the Indian Independence Act of July, 1947 had created the two Dominions of India and Pakistan. By the same statute the paramountcy of the British Crown over the State of Kutch and certain other areas lapsed and they soon acceded to and merged with India. Sind was included in Pakistan while Bombay Presidency became a part of India and between these two territories lay the great Rann of Kutch. It appeared that from July, 1948 diplomatic Notes were exchanged between the two Governments with regard to the boundary between the areas lying between Gujarat and West Pakistan. The differences led to open hostilities in April, 1965, but in June the two Governments concluded an Agreement.

Under this Agreement if the parties failed to reach a settlement the dispute was to be referred to a tribunal for demarcation of the boundary. In consequence the Government of India nominated Mr. Alex Bebler, Judge of the Constitutional Court of Yugoslavia. Pakistan nominated Mr. Nasrollah Entesan of Iran, former President of the General Assembly of United Nations and Judge Gunnar Lagergren was nominated Chairman by the UN Secretary-General, U Thant.

The tribunal sat for nearly a year, took oral and documentary evidence and the two nominees of the Governments having disagreed, the chairman gave his opinion. He indicated the boundary between the two countries and marked it on a map. Therefore, the Government of India undertook to implement the Award and these petitions were filed.

Their Lordships were of the view that the settlement involved merely the demarcation of a boundary. An adjustment of a boundary between two nations could always be effected by the Executive unless there was a clear case of cession. No cession was established and hence in their opinion the Award could be implemented by the Government of India without Parliamentary action.

Mr. Justice Shah delivered a separate but concurring judgment.

The petitions and appeals were heard by the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Ramaswami, Mr. Justice Mitter, Mr. Justice Grover and Mr. Justice Shah.

J. Strength Of IAF—US Estimate: According to figures published in a US digest of the aerospace industry, the current strength of the Indian Air Force (IAF) is estimated at 30 combat squadrons, a good deal short of the 45-squadron target prescribed for it in the defence plan drawn up in the wake of skirmishes with China. Even so, the strength is double the pre-1962 level.

This estimate credits the IAF with 23 fighter squadrons. Eight of these are equipped with Gnats, which came into service in 1960 with the purchase of 25 complete aircraft and 15 in "knocked-down" condition for local assembly.

Since 1960, Hindustan Aircraft is said to have built another 200, partly to offset losses sustained in the conflict with Pakistan in 1965. Each squadron has a complement of 16 Gnat interceptors, plus four to eight aircraft in reserve.

Six MIG squadrons are now believed to be in service. India is credited with the purchase of 100 MIG-21s, and with having 300 more on order from local production facilities. The IAF has evidently plans to equip another 15 squadrons with these interceptors, two of which may replace the tactical reconnaissance squadrons now flying Vampires.

India, the digest says, started with 160 F-56 Hunters bought from the UK for ground-support duties. These constitute six squadrons, 36 more Hunters having been bought to make good losses.

India, as is public knowledge, plans to replace the Hunter with the HF-24, which were due to begin service originally in 1963 but began squadron duty only in 1967. Sixty of these are said to be on order with the Orpheus-703 engine giving Mach 1 capability and 20 more with a reheat device to make these fighters transonic.

It is suggested that India has bought 100 of the Sukhoi SU-7B strike fighters at a cost of over $100 million from USSR. The deliveries began in 1968, and are intended to equip four squadrons. India evidently has an option on another 100.

The IAF's bomber fleet consists of three Canberra squadrons, formed out of 66 aircraft purchased from the UK in 1958. Six replacements were bought later.

In non-combat strength, the IAF is credited with possessing two heavy transport squadrons equipped with the Soviet-built AN-12, three medium duty ones with C-119.

K. Indian Science Congress: The 56th session of the Indian Science Congress, which concluded in Bombay on January 9, spotlighted application of science for raising agricultural production, stabilizing population and curbing student indiscipline.

About 2,000 scientists from upcountry and 100 from Bombay, who attended the Congress, profferred several solutions to the problems facing the country.

Of the 1800 papers presented at 13 sectional meetings of the Congress, nearly 1000 were on agriculture and botany, emphasizing the over-riding importance of agricul- in the economy. Of the remaining, the majority were on population explosion and student unrest, two other subjects of current interest. A number of symposia and special lectures also dealt with these subjects.

The section on Agricultural Sciences was of the opinion that sustained efforts to improve biological and agricultural education and research and extension were essential for solving India's food problem. The section also recommended the setting up of a national seed laboratory and similar laboratories at State level for providing the farmers with better seeds.

Prof. A. C. Joshi, General President of the Congress, was of the opinion that India would be needing 150 million tons of foodgrains by 1975, and 200 million tonnes by 1985. It was possible to achieve both these targets by extending the cultivation of high-yielding varieties already available in the country or likely to be available in the near future.

He said that the task before the scientists now was to explore the means of meeting the food requirements after 1985 and at the end of the century, for even with the full application of the known agricultural techniques the population was likely to outstrip even expanded food production.

The Psychology and Educational Science section which dealt with the problem of student indiscipline suggested several remedies. Among them were tackling student problems during adolescence, preparing a student for a suitable job, inculcating in him a sense of social responsibility, self-confidence and correct judgment, a healthy attitude towards sex and integration of his personality to develop the man in him.

The population problem was discussed by Physiology and Statistics sections separately. Both the sections felt that to check the growth of ever-increasing population, the primary requisite was education, particularly in biology. Subjects like human physiology and anthropology should be immediately taught in schools and colleges and elementary instructions should be given in the physiology of reproduction to every boy or girl from an early age. Suggestions were also made that the age of marriage for girls should be fixed at 20. Checking of inherited and abnormal diseases in women would also help reduce the population, it was stated.

The Forum of Science and Economic Development of the Congress was of the opinion that India's five Five-Year Plans should be resource-based and not need-based.

L. CPI (Marxist) Congress Session: The eighth Congress of the Communist Party of India (Marxist) began a week-long session in Cochin on December 23, 1968. About 500 delegates and observers attended.

The Congress mainly considered a draft political resolution, the political organizational report and amendments to the party constitution prepared by the Central Committee.

Addressing the delegates after hoisting the party flag, Mr. Muzaffar Ahmad said that the world communist movement was no longer being led by the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The only symbol that kept the movement together today was the Red Flag.

The General Secretary, Mr. P. Sundarayya suggested a five-member Presidium consisting of Mr. B. T. Ranadive, Mr. Jyoti Basu, Mr. M. R. Venkataraman, Mrs. Godavari Parulekar and Mrs. Sushila Gopalan to conduct the proceedings of the Congress.

Two resolutions paying homage to those who had died in the cause of the communist movement, moved by Mr. B. T. Ranadive, were adopted by the Congress.

Mr. Mao Tse-tung's pictures were conspicuous by their absence at the Congress.

Resolutions:

In a resolution adopted on December 25, 1968, the party expressed its "deep concern" at the "attempts of the Government of India to disrupt the working class and democratic movement by fostering communalism, casteism and provincialism" and called upon the working people and democratic forces to "fight back and defeat these disruptive attempts" of the ruling classes and parties like the Jana Sangh. "The defence or protection of religious, linguistic or socially oppressed minorities is one of the basic tests of democracy and our struggle for real democracy will always remain incomplete unless these minorities are assured of full protection."

Another resolution demanded a change in the Government's Viet-Nam policies, including complete stoppage of all trade with South Viet-Nam and re-establishment of trade relations with North Viet-Nam.

The resolution contained a significant paragraph: "The Viet-Nam struggle affords some lessons for the entire working class and revolutionary movement of the world. In fact, the CPI (M) sees the Viet-Nam war as the vanguard of the national liberation movement, the battle in defence of freedom everywhere."

A resolution on Kerala adopted by the Congress said that the Government of India's efforts "at discrediting and attacking the United Front Government (of Kerala) in general and its CPI(M) constituent in particular, have reached a new dangerous stage", and accused the Centre of "misuse" of authority "and its creatures, like the Governor and All-India Services" of assumption of more powers—thus making further inroads into the powers of State Governments, trying to create disorder in Kerala "as evidenced by the notorious call given by the Central Law Minister for collective resistance" and of seeking the support of Hindu communal elements, like the Jana Sangh, in its efforts to topple the Kerala Ministry. It said the Congress leaders in Kerala as well as Central Ministers were "making clever use of the activities of the so-called extremists" who have been "indulging in wild talk of organizing an armed struggle in the name of the thought of Mao Tse-tung". The resolution particularly named Mr. Morarji Desai and Mr. Chavan for trying to put the responsibility for these "Naxalite" activities on the CPI(M).

In a resolution on the mid-term elections, the Congress voiced its opposition to what it called the "opportunistic alliances" and "unprincipled coalition with reactionary parties" coming up in the forthcoming mid-term poll in West Bengal, Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Punjab.

It said that the 20-month experience after the General Election had proved that such alliances gradually yielded ground to the Congress and led "to frustration of the democratic aspirations of the masses."

In another resolution on "repression and attack on the CPI(M)", it said that the "campaign" started by the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, and the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, was aimed at preparing the ground for the "suppression" of the CPI(M).

It added that parties, such as the Swatantra and the Jana Sangh, openly demanded ban on the Marxist Party, and that there was a systematic build-up "in the Press of the bourgeoisie" against the party of alleged secret plans to create an atmosphere for launching another attack.

The Congress vehemently condemned the "heinous crimes and murders" of freedom fighters by the racialist and illegal Ian Smith regime in Rhodesia.

Office-bearers Elected:

The Congress ended on December 29, 1968. Mr. P. Sundarayya was unanimously re-elected as General Secretary of the Communist Party of India (Marxist) for a second term.

The Central Committee, with some minor changes from the out-going Central Committee, was elected.

The Central Committee also approved the re-election of the existing nine-member Politburo for another term.

Politburo Members:

The members of the Politburo are: Mr. P. Sundarayya, Mr. P. Ramamurti, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, Mr. A. K. Gopalan, Mr. B. T. Ranadive, Mr. Jyoti Basu, Mr. Promod Das Gupta, Mr. M. Basavapunniah and Mr. Harkishen Singh Surjit.

The Congress dropped five members from the existing 31-member Central Committee and added two new names.

The new entrants were Mr. Rama Das, working Editor of the party organ, "People's Democracy", and Mr. Desraj Cheddah, who is in charge of the Central Committee office.

Those dropped were: Mr. Dinkar Mehta (Gujarat), Mr. N. L. Upadhyaya (Mysore), Mr. Vanamali Das (Orissa), Mr. Jagjit Singh Lyalpuri (Punjab) and Mr. Sankarayya (Tamil Nadu).

The following are the members of the Central Committee: Mr. Muzaffar Ahmed, Mr. P. Sundarayya, Mr. P. Ramamurthi, Mr. M.R. Venkataraman, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, Mr. A. K. Gopalan, Mr. B. T. Ranadive, Mr. C. H. Kanaran, Mr. E. K. Nayanar, Mr. A. Balasubramaniam, Mr. Hanumanta Rao, Mr. Prasad Rao, Mr. S. Y. Kolhatkar, Mrs. Godavari Parulekar, Mr. Mohan Poonamia, Mr. Harkishen Singh Surjit, Mr. Satwant Singh, Mr. Sankar Dayal Tiwari, Mr. S. S. Srivastava, Mr. Hare Krishna Konar, Mr. Ajinta Bhattacharya, Mr. Samar Mukerjee, Mr. Dasrath Deb, Mr. Ram Das and Mr. D. R. Cheddah.

M. Third Communist Party Formed By Naxalite Leaders: It was disclosed in Calcutta on January 5 that a Third Communist Party drawing inspiration from the thought of Mr. Mao Tse-tung and accepting unreservedly the leadership of the Communist Party of China had for all practical purposes started functioning in the country.

Its activities were being guided by the All-India Co-ordination Committee of Communist Revolutionaries set up about a year ago by some Naxalite leaders. Its main theoretician was Mr. Charu Mazumdar, who was the main theoretician of the Naxalbari movement also.

The formation of a third Communist Party had been delayed because of aversion to the bourgeois method of forming parties from the top. It wanted the party to grow up from the base through revolutionary struggles. The Committee now felt that in the last one year the Naxalite movement had spread sufficiently to warrant the formation of a party to guide and co-ordinate the activities of communist revolutionaries in different States.

Another consideration that was weighing with the Committee in this connexion was the imminence of the Chinese Communist Party Congress. It was presumed that after the Congress, China would take the initiative in reviving the Second International. The Maoist Communist Party had to be formed before that.

The Committee claims to have adherents now in almost all States. State co-ordination committees had been set up in, among others, Assam, Andhra, Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Punjab, Madras and West Bengal.

Among the areas where communist revolutionaries were said to be active now were Naxalbari and parts of Midnapore and 24-Parganas district in West Bengal, Srikakulam in Andhra Pradesh, Kushahari in Bihar, Lakhimpur in Uttar Pradesh and certain parts of Punjab. In all these areas Communist revolutionaries were organizing the peasants for an armed uprising.

Pro-Mao Posters In Jammu:

It was disclosed in Srinagar on January 8 that the recent appearance of pro-Mao posters in Jammu city had given the Kashmir Government cause for worry.

The Naxalites, whose leaders are working underground, had been making their presence felt for the last two years by organizing agitations by low-paid Government employees, refugees and students in Jammu.

Jammu Sandesh, an Urdu mouthpiece formerly of the Left Communists and now of the Naxalites in Jammu, is opposed to the parliamentary system of democracy and ridicules non-violent tactics and peaceful protests as a means of achieving political objectives. In this connexion, it criticised the Left Communists for supporting the "atrocities" of Naxalites in West Bengal and Kerala.

Praising China for being "the centre of world revolution," the journal said that Stalinism was a "shining example of the continuous fight against revisionism."

In India, it pointed out, "revolution will be brought neither by Mr. Sundarayya, who sent some letters from Moscow through Mr. Bhupesh Gupta, nor by Mr. Harkishen Singh Surjit who begged his release of the Punjab Chief Minister during the Indo-Pakistani war in 1965, nor by Mr. Ranadive and Mr. Basavapunniah, who stabbed Telengana in the back, nor by Mr. Jyoti Basu and Mr. Namboodiripad, who employed Government machinery to crush revolutionaries."

Defending the appearance of pro-Mao posters in Jammu, the journal reminded its readers that the "great cultural revolution" in China began with a poster by a young Chinese woman.

The activities of the Naxalites were confined to Jammu city and some border areas of the region. They had made little impact in the Valley so far.

The Naxalite movement was being led and directed by Mr. Ram Piara Saraf, a former member of the Kashmir Constituent Assembly and the State Legislative Assembly. Mr. Saraf went underground over two years ago.

N. Extremist Communists To Unite In Kerala: Mr. K. R. Gopalan, a communist extremist in Kerala, said in Kozhikode on January 1 that different groups of extremist communists functioning in Kerala had decided to unite themselves into a "united revolutionary communist party."

Mr. Gopalan said that at Cochin, the Marxists had banished even photographs of Mr. Mao Tse-tung and slogans relating to him from the Congress. "This shows they have given up communism."

When a correspondent asked whether a "National Communist Party" on the lines of the Yugoslav Communist Party could not be formed in India, Mr. Gopalan said there could be no communist movement without internationalism. "The very talk of a national communist party is un-communist." The programmes and policies of the Marxist Communist Party were formulated to suit the whims and fancies of the United Front Government in Kerala. But the State Government was not a real people's Government. It would soon be confronted with a series of "struggles" on social and economic issues.

Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad Criticises Naxalites:

The Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad on January 12 lashed out at the Naxalites who, he said, styled themselves as revolutionaries but were raising the slogan to boycott elections only to sabotage the real revolutionary and democratic movement in the country.

Addressing a United Front election meeting in Calcutta, he said: "We are fighting the mid-term elections in West Bengal to defeat the Congress, for we know the more the Congress is crippled the more the real revolutionary and democratic movement in the country will take shape.

"Who else but the Congress will be happy if we withdraw from the elections or even from the Kerala Government where we are still in existence despite stiff opposition from the Central Congress Government? This fact itself would expose the self-styled revolutionaries and the anti-revolutionary cause they are serving by their slogan of poll boycott".

Replying to the charge that the United Front with heterogeneous parties could not provide a stable Government, he pointed out that after the 1967 elections, when non-Congress Governments were formed in many States, the first to fall was the Congress Government in Haryana. The Congress had proved its instability as well as "corruption".

O. Naxalite Activities In Kerala, Bihar And Andhra Pradesh—Jana Sangh Proposes Inquiry Committee: The Jana Sangh Working Committee, which began a two-day session in New Delhi on December 15, 1968, called upon the Centre to set up a high-power committee to inquire into the recent Naxalite activities in Kerala, Bihar and Andhra Pradesh.

It was of the view that the Communist Party (Marxist) had a definite hand in the Kerala incidents.

After considering a report prepared by a five-member team of its Kerala unit on the Pulpalli and Tellicherry incidents, the Committee said that only a high-level probe would reveal the facts of the situation.

Dacoities In Andhra Pradesh:

About 1,000 Girijans, described as communist revolutionaries, armed with guns and other deadly weapons, committed three dacoities and exchanged fire with the police in Mondemkhal village in the disturbed region of Srikakulam district in Andhra Pradesh on December 27, 1968.

There were no casualties. The tribals later retreated to the hills.

The dacoits raided two shops and a house and carried away valuables worth over Rs. 20,000. Seeing the Girijans attack, three policemen attached to a small outpost there challenged the dacoits, resulting in an exchange of fire.

This was the fifth incident in the disturbed tribal area of Srikakulam during the last one month. Following a series of similar incidents in 1967, the Andhra Pradesh Government took a number of measures including the opening of new outposts, strengthening the existing ones and economic measures to improve the lot of the downtrodden Girijans inhabiting the hilly tracts of the region.

The Girijan uprising was attributed to Marxist Communists fomenting trouble by instigating agricultural labour to revolt against landlords, a majority of whom hailing from the plains had settled there.

P. Dissatisfaction Over Centre-State Relations—Three Chief Ministers' Views: In separate interviews on January 5, dissatisfaction over Centre-State relations was voiced by the Andhra Chief Minister, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy, the Orissa Chief Minister, Mr. R. N. Singhdeo, and Kerala's Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad.

The three leaders gave differing analyses of the political trends during the past year. All three, however, were critical of the Centre on one score or another.

Mr. Singhdeo said that the federal system had "worked fairly well, but there is need for some changes to ensure more harmonious relations between the Centre and States."

Mr. Reddy said that the present set-up was "more unitary than federal" and wanted modifications to ensure "real federalism."

Mr. Namboodiripad called for "a fresh approach to the federal system enshrined in the Constitution."

None of the Chief Ministers, however, elaborated the modifications desired by them.

Attitude To Fourth Plan:

The Chief Ministers' attitude to the Fourth Plan revealed sharp differences.

Mr. Singhdeo said that the Centre and States would not be able to raise the required additional resources without imposing fresh burdens on the common man. He indicated that Orissa might issue rural debentures, raise electricity rates and increase forest and excise revenue to find funds for the Plan.

Mr. Brahmananda Reddy claimed that resources could be found, but added a rider: there should be a "proper" plan. He made a cryptic reference to "ways of raising resources without resort to direct taxation."

Mr. Namboodiripad declined to go into this issue, re-affirming his view that there could be no solution to current difficulties "within the frame-work of present policies."

Q. Lawlessness In Kerala—Mr. S. Nijalingappa's View On Central Intervention: The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, said in Trivandrum on January 5 that if what he heard about illegal actions and lawlessness in Kerala was true, "we are very near Central intervention in Kerala."

He said he could not order the Centre as a dictator in this matter, but was only expressing his view. He was greatly concerned about the happenings in Kerala. There were only three solutions to the Kerala problem. Either the Government should be wise and take measures to put an end to lawless acts, as attacks against personal property were against the Constitution and established law. If the Government did not mend its ways, people should agitate for ending the Government. The third course was Central intervention.

He had been told that some other parties in the United Front who respected the Constitution and believed in fundamental rights were protesting against the present state of affairs. He had been told that the Right Communist Party and the SSP had protested against these things. The Right Communists were good people and they had their roots in democracy. If they really believed in democracy it was for these parties to cease to support the Government.

He said that he would request all parties believing in democracy to think how they could put an end to the menace of the Marxists in India.

He added that the Kerala Government must stay its hand regarding the formation of the Muslim majority Malappuram district for some time for more than one reason. Many Muslims had told him that the new district would not be in their interest and they were unhappy about it.

R. Dissolution Of State Assembly—Governor Bound To Accept Chief Minister's Recommendation: The Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan re-iterated in the Lok Sabha on December 16, 1968 his view that if a Chief Minister recommended the dissolution of the State Assembly, the Governor was bound to accept it.

That was the constitutional position and it was his view too. He was replying to agitated Opposition members who had questioned the propriety of Home Ministry officials contending that the Haryana Governor was obliged to dissolve the Assembly if the Chief Minister so advised.

Mr. Chavan saw nothing wrong if that was the inference drawn from his earlier statement on the floor of the House regarding the role of the Governor. Denying the charge that the Home Ministry spokesman—as alleged in the call-attention motion tabled by Mr. Atal Behari Vajpayee and others—had conveyed the "view" to newspapers and radio, Mr. Chavan said even if that was so it at best constituted interpretation of his known views on the constitutional position.

Mr. Chavan saw no role at all for the Central Government or the Cabinet vis-a-vis the political developments in Haryana. The Governor was in command of the situation and apparently he was not convinced that the Chief Minister had lost his majority. The Centre had no occasion to take a position in this regard and "what a Governor should do in such a situation is no business of the Government."

S. SVD Ministry In Madhya Pradesh Re-constituted: The Samyukta Vidhayak Dal Ministry in Madhya Pradesh was re-constituted on January 1 with the inclusion of 15 of the 20 defecting Ministers, who had resigned en masse two months earlier, and two new entrants.

The oaths of office and secrecy were administered by the Governor, Mr. K. C. Reddy, at a brief ceremony at Raj Bhavan. It was the 10th swearing-in ceremony since the SVD Ministry assumed office in July, 1967.

The strength of the Ministry now is 32 against 36 before the November, 1968 shake-up. Three former Ministers of State were elevated to Cabinet rank and three former Deputy Ministers were promoted as Ministers of State.

Significantly, at least three former Ministers, against whom the Jana Sangh and Rajmata groups had launched a tirade on grounds of corruption and anti-SVD activity, came back. One of them was promoted to Cabinet rank.

The following are the members of the Cabinet with their portfolios:

T. Feasibility Survey For Raxaul-Hetauda Railway — Indo-Nepal Talks: Among the decisions taken at the Indo-Nepalese official level talks in New Delhi on December 26, 1968 were that India agreed to undertake a feasibility survey for the construction of a 60-kilometre-long broad-gauge railway from Raxaul to Hetauda in Nepal.

The survey is expected to begin during the working season commencing some time next October and will last six to seven months.

The railway at Raxaul on the Indian side is at present of metre-gauge, while there is a narrow-gauge line from Raxaul to Amlekganj which is close to Hetauda. The proposed Raxaul-Hetauda line will traverse mountainous territory, requiring tunnelling and bridging.

The two sides discussed in some detail the contruction of the Chhatra canals in eastern Nepal which will irrigate about 200,000 acres of land in that country. The canals, which draw water from the Kosi, are expected to yield water from June next.

The east-west highway in Nepal, the major part of which—420 miles, out of a total of 630 miles—is being built with Indian co-operation, came in for review. According to the present time-table, about 170 miles out of the 420 miles will be ready by 1971. India will then take up the construction of the central sector, followed by the western sector during two five-year periods.

The two sides also discussed a long-term programme of soil conservation in the catchment area of the Kosi river to combat silting in the canals and the river.

Industrial collaboration, both in the private and public sectors, came up for consideration, and the question of establishing a Joint Economic Co-operation Committee—such as the one existing between India and Ceylon—was discussed.

The Indian side referred to the Bagmati embankments, the construction of which would check flooding, particularly in India. The embankments will be on Nepalese territory —about 10 miles long adjoining Bihar.

U. Mr. K. Kamaraj Wins By-election In Madras: The former Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj, on January 9 won the Nagercoil Parliamentary by-election by 128,201 votes over his nearest rival, Dr. M. Mathias of the Swatantra, backed by the DMK.

Mr. Kamaraj polled 249,437 votes, Dr. Mathias 121,236 and the Marxist candidate, Mr. M. M. Ali, 20,926. Mr. Ali forfeited his deposit. There were four more Independents in the field.

The results showed that Mr. Kamaraj was able to sway the majority of his Nadar community (constituting about 260,000 in a total electorate of 505,000) to his side. There was also a last-minute swing of Marxist votes to Mr. Kamaraj. In fact, the Marxists, well aware that they stood little chance of victory, appeared to have urged the people to vote for the Congress rather than for Dr. Mathias.

The decisive victory of the Congress leader came as a blow to the DMK, particularly the Public Works Minister, Mr. M. Karunanidhi who had spared no efforts to organize an effective campaign to defeat him. Another factor contributing to Mr. Kamaraj's victory was his sustained and systematic campaigning, including door-to-door canvassing. In fact, Mr. Kamaraj had camped in Nagercoil for the past four weeks and had toured the constituency more than once.

For the Swatantra candidate, Dr. Mathias, the results were a serious blow. He had secured 128,000 votes in 1967 against 180,000 by the victorious Congress candidate, the late Mr. A. Nesamoni. This time, despite a determined campaign, he had not been able to secure as many votes.

The following were the voting figures:

Total electorate	505,445
Votes polled:	401,600
Mr. Kamaraj (C)	249,437
Dr. M. Mathias (Ind)	121,236
Mr. M. M. Ali (CPI-M)	20,926
Mr. P. Vivekanada (Ind)	1,391
Mr. Duraiswamy Nadar (Ind)	3,850
Mr. S. Rajagopalachari (Ind)	533
Mr. Anganna Chettiar (Ind)	168

V. Governor's Address To Mysore Legislature: Addressing a joint session of the Mysore Legislature in Bangalore on January 13, the State Governor, Mr. G. S. Pathak, deplored that no decision had been taken so far by the Central Government on the recommendations of the Mahajan Commission on the Mysore-Maharashtra border issue.

He said that the State Government and the Legislature had been pressing the Central Government to accept the findings of the Commission.

Referring to agriculture, he said that the cumulative result of a number of short-term and long-term measures taken by the State Government was that a breakthrough in agricultural production was possible in spite of delayed rain in certain parts of the State. He was happy that the response of the farmer to high-yielding varieties of seeds was enthusiastic. A team of Central officials had toured the State to assess damage caused by drought and Central assistance of Rs. 5,13,00,000 had so far been received; further assistance had been asked for.

He said it was proposed to give high priority to the completion of schemes of irrigation and power projects and agricultural production. In other sectors, particularly social services, it was proposed to concentrate more on qualitative improvement rather than on mere expansion.

Before the Governor began his address, two Maharashtra Ekikaran Samithi members walked out of the House, protesting against the State not taking a definite stand on the Mysore-Maharashtra border issue.

W. Bonus Act Amended: The President issued an Ordinance on January 10 under Article 123 of the Constitution to amend the Payment of Bonus Act to increase the amount of available surplus for payment of bonus to employees.

Under the amendment, 60 per cent of the available surplus—67 per cent in the case of foreign companies—was allocable for payment of bonus.

The aim of the amendment was to clarify the amount of direct tax deductible from gross profits in computing the available surplus. The available surplus, according to the amended Section 5, would be so computed that the amount of tax rebate accruing to the employers on account of the bonus paid or payable under the Act became part of the available surplus of the succeeding year instead of going entirely to the employers.

The amendment was applicable to computation of the available surplus for the accounting year beginning on any data in 1968 and in respect of every subsequent accounting year.

Protest By Trade Bodies:

In identical telegrams, the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry and other trade bodies has requested the Prime Minister, Finance Minister and the Labour Minister not to proceed with the implementation of the Ordinance relating to the Bonus Act.

Similar opposition to the measure has been expressed by representatives of the Indian Chamber of Commerce when they met the Central Labour Minister, Mr. Jaisukhlal Hathi, in Calcutta on January 15.

Their main point was that by this Ordinance the Government had sought to deny the industry a rebate on tax for the purpose of rehabilitation, a principle which had been accepted even by the Bonus Commission and endorsed by a number of Labour Tribunals and other judicial pronouncements.

Y. Increase In D.A. For Madras State Employees: The Madras Government announced on January 11 increased rates of dearness allowance to its employees with effect from January 1, bringing them on par with the Central Government employees.

The additional benefit, accruing only to employees drawing salaries of up to Rs. 543, ranged from Rs. 6 to Rs. 11. There would be no change in the D.A. in higher pay ranges.

The increase would apply to employees of local bodies and teachers in aided institutions.

The extra cost on account of the enhancement was estimated at approximately Rs. 3.6 crores in a full year and Rs. 60,00,000 for the remaining three months of the current year.

Z. D.A. Increased For Rajasthan State Employees: The Rajasthan Government announced in Jaipur on December 6, 1968 an increase in the dearness allowance of its employees equivalent to the recent increase in the Central Government employees' D.A.

The increase will be effective from September 1, 1968.

The increase followed acceptance by the State Government of the recommendations of the Gajendragadkar Commission.

The increase is confined to those who draw a basic salary of up to Rs. 543. There will be no change in the existing rate of D.A. for employees getting more than that amount.

The total burden following the D.A. increase on the State exchequer is expected to be about Rs one crore annually. About 200,000 employees will benefit.

A. Majlis Passes Militia Bill: The Majlis (Parliament) on December 29, 1968 approved two important

Government Bills, including a War Ministry project, to establish a volunteer national militia.

The Militia Bill stipulated that individuals volunteering for a training course would have to be paid their salaries by their private or public employers.

Those who had completed their compulsory military training and who wished to become a member of the militia would be exempted from further training during the call-up of reserves. These volunteers would also remain members of the militia in times of general mobilization.

All Iranian men and women, at least 18 years old, would be eligible to volunteer for the national militia.

The second Bill approved by the Majlis dealt with punishment for those who employed children under 12 years old in carpet-weaving centres. Offenders would face a prison term of between six and 12 months and a fine of 5,000 rials or more for a first conviction under the proposed law.

A second conviction would entail a three-year sentence and a fine of 300,000 rials.

The Bill also stipulated that the Government would provide facilities within a year after Majlis approval to establish co-operatives for carpet weavers. The Government would also have to inform all weavers about their right under existing labour laws and social insurance schemes.

B. Hoveida-Johnson Talks: The Prime Minister, Mr. Abbas Hoveida, visited Washington in the first week of December, 1968 when he held wide-ranging talks with President L. B. Johnson.

A Joint Statement issued by the White House on December 5 said their countries should give all possible support to the search for peace in West Asia, particularly to the UN special envoy, Mr. Gunnar Jarring.

The two leaders discussed the emerging situation in the Persian Gulf. They agreed that the stable and prosperous future of that area could best be assured through the co-operation of the Powers bordering the Gulf.

On future co-operation between the United States and Iran, the Statement said, President Johnson and Mr. Hoveida reviewed the progress of their countries' co-operation in the civil uses of atomic energy for the study and exploitation of Iran's water resources and co-operation in scientific and technological exchanges.

They agreed also that private business could play an important role in strengthening the ties between the two nations.

Mr. Hoveida spoke of Iran's determination to sustain an adequate modern defence force to ensure national security. and Mr. Johnson expressed the desire of the United States to continue to co-operate with Iran to this end.

C. Oil Supply To Czechoslovakia: Official sources in Tehran confirmed on December 6, 1968 that Iran would export crude oil to Czechoslovakia in return for a $200 million credit extended by that country.

The Under-Secretary, Mr. Sadat Tehrani, initialled the Credit Agreement along with two other Trade Agreements in Prague a week earlier.

Under the terms of these Agreements, Iran will export $13 million worth of industrial goods to Czechoslovakia in the next five years.

The oil Agreement has to be ratified by the two Governments. The other two Agreements—a trade and technical co-operation and a payments Agreement—will automatically become effective as soon as the current Agreements expire.

PHILIPPINES

A. President F. Marcos On Relations With USA: In an interview on December 20, 1968 concerning the recent statements he had made about possible relations with Communist countries, President Ferdinand Marcos said the emphasis he had given to an independent foreign policy did not indicate any resentment or reaction against USA.

A month earlier, he had referred to the "perhaps inevitable withdrawal of American power" from Asia and the need for Asian nations to establish the foundations of a relationship with China.

He emphasized that his statement of a month before was not intended as a reflection against the United States or against former Philippine Presidents. He said: "I only state the fact that we are an independent country and should have an independent foreign policy."

He predicted continued friendship and co-operation between the Philippines and USA as the non-communist countries of Asia needed an American protective shield until UN could provide for their security. He could visualize no alternative in the next 10 years to the existing mutual defence alliance between the Philippines and USA, including the American use of bases in the islands, whether the two countries liked this or not.

The Philippines was considering developing trade outlets for coconut oil and other tropical products in European communist countries. Such exports were badly needed to help remedy an adverse balance of payments.

Citing a recent arrangement to export 500 tons of coconut oil to Bulgaria "experimentally", he said such deals were not made because the Philippines was inclined to the Left, but because of the need of diversify markets.

Later, on January 2, the new Foreign Secretary, Mr. Carlos P. Romulo, in taking over office from Mr. Narciso Ramos, said the Philippines would seek to avoid dependence on any one country, including USA and Japan, strengthening of ties with Asian and Polynesian countries and, in time, learn to relate itself with China and other socialist Asian countries.

ISRAEL

A. West Asian Fighting—Soviet Peace Plan—US Offer Of Phantoms —French Embargo On Arms: This batch of events in West Asia includes not only the fighting, sporadic as it continues to be, but also the Russian Peace Plan (which UAR and Jordan have accepted but Israel rejected), US offer of Phantom aircraft to Israel and French embargo on arms supplies to Israel.

Sporadic Fighting:

On December 27, 1968, Jordanian and Israeli forces exchanged fire for about an hour in the King Hussein (formerly Allenby) bridge area. There were no Jordanian casualties. A Jordanian official accused the Israelis of starting the clash, in which machine-guns and light arms were used. Jordanian troops returned the fire and the spokesman said the Israelis were seen removing two casualties.

The Israeli Army authorities announced that Israeli and Jordanian artillery battled over the cease-fire line on December 29, 1968.

Two Israeli jets swept low over Beirut's wreckage-covered international airport on December 29, 1968. There was no firing but the jets threw the airport into panic. A BOAC airliner had left minutes earlier and passengers were checking in for Pan-American and KLM flights.

According to Tel Aviv sources, Arab guerrilla bands struck during the night of December 30 at civilian targets in the two extremities of Israel—one in the north near the Lebanese border and the second in the south, just north of El Eilath, near the Jordanian lines. There were no casualties in either case.

On December 31, 1968, three Israelis were killed when Katyusha rockets, fired from Lebanese territory, hit the northern Galilee town. Two of them were killed directly by the rocket explosion, while the third died of fright.

A second salvo of Russian-made rockets supplied increasingly to Arab commandos—mounted on Russian trucks—also hit the plantation areas of the nearby Margaliot farming co-operative village. There were no casualties, though damage was caused.

The third village, Kfar Yuval, sustained damage from a bazooka attack mounted on December 30, 1968 by an El Fatah gang, which reportedly infiltrated from Lebanon.

On January 1, 1969, according to Amman sources, members of the public security force were killed and two others slightly wounded when Israeli aircraft machine-gunned a security vehicle in Wadi Arabia in Southern Jordan. Two Israeli helicopters again flew over the Wadi Akaba area at a high altitude, escorted by a Mystere jet fighter.

According to Cairo Radio, Egyptian and Israeli forces exchanged light machine-gun fire for 35 minutes in the Suez Canal area south of Ismailia, on January 2. There were no casualties.

Eight Israeli Mirage jet fighters flew two raids over Jordan on January 2 using rockets and napalm bombs, a Jordanian military spokesman said in Amman.

In the first raid, he said, four jets fired rockets and dropped napalm bombs near the village of Manchiyeh in the northern part of the Jordan Valley. The air raid was preceded by an artillery barrage directed against a farm to the west of the village.

In the second raid, four other jets mounted a rocket attack near an irrigation dam at Glad, also in the northern sector of the valley.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli Army communique said that the Israeli Air Force planes attacked El Fatah positions inside Jordan after these positions had fired on an Israeli patrol near the Bei Josef settlement in the Beisan Valley on the west bank of the Jordan.

Arab El Fatah volunteers, stationed on Lebanese territory, again attacked targets in Israel on January 2, using Russian-made 130-mm. Katyusha rockets. They hit the township of Kiryat Shmona and a nearby kibbutz village, Kfar Giladi. However, there were no casualties or serious damage.

On January 4, Israeli authorities blew up the Gaza homes of three members of the Palestine Liberation Organization accused of terrorism. Owners of the houses were arrested during December, 1968 along with 57 other suspects and were accused of laying mines, throwing hand grenades and blowing up small bridges in the Gaza Khan Yunis area. The houses blown up belonged to three leading members of the saboteur group.

On January 6, Jordanian and Israeli troops exchanged medium machine-gun fire across the Jordan River twice.

A Jordanian military spokesman said that the first exchange, which lasted 25 minutes took place in the Al-Baqoura area in the northern Jordan valley. The second outburst of firing occurred in the King Abdullah bridge area, north of the Dead Sea, for 20 minutes.

On January 11, Israeli war-planes flashed low across the Jordan River cease-fire line to pound Arab commando positions following an attack on an Israeli army vehicle.

Observers on the Israeli side of the border reported seeing flames and smoke from an abandoned Arab village, just across the border.

The action took place near Kibbutz Gesher, six miles from the Jordan River in the embattled Jordan valley.

It was the first time Israel had called in planes to hit Arab attackers since January 2.

On January 12, it was stated in Tel Aviv, Arab gunners on Lebanese territory fired mortar shells on an Israeli farm settlement on the Lebanese border in northern Galilee. The fire was returned. No casualty or damage was reported.

This was the first clash in the area since Katushya rockets were fired from Lebanon on the town of Kiryat Shmona on January 2.

Partial Mobilization In Israel Reported:

According to reports from Amman, Beirut and Damascus on January 15, Israel has ordered partial mobilization of her armed forces.

It was stated that there was large-scale movement of Israeli forces onto the western bank of the Jordan River stretching from Lake Tiberias to the Gulf of Aqaba. Israelis had also evacuated most civilians from the Suez Canal zone and have re-inforced El Qantara, overlooking Ismailia.

Both Jordan and Iraqi forces in Jordan were placed on alert as visible Israeli troop movements continued.

Mr. Y. Allon's Warning To Arab Countries:

The Israeli Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Yigal Allon, warned Arab countries, including Lebanon, at a mass rally at Kiryat Shmoneh on January 4 that if they did not honour the Cease-fire Agreement, "there will be no alternative but to resort to punitive measures which will make Arab aggression too costly".

He said: "We will not allow the Arab countries to flinch from their responsibility for acts of terrorism. They have made themselves responsible by allowing the saboteurs to use their territory for training purposes".

He added that Lebanon must expel Arab guerrillas from its soil if it wanted peace. "If Lebanon will keep the border quiet, we will not touch a hair on the head of one Lebanese. But if they will not, Israel will have no choice but to punish them".

He dubbed the UN Security Council "the Insecurity Council" because "it is always against Israel while the Arab countries were protected by the Soviet Union with its veto." "I refuse to receive the last Security Council decision because it is irresponsible in the minds of the whole world".

Soviet Proposals For Settlement Rejected:

The Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, told the Cabinet on January 5 that Israel had rejected the latest Soviet proposals to USA and Britain for a West Asian settlement.

He said that Israel had informed USA and Britain that the proposals could not serve "as a basis for a frame-work for discussion" for the following reasons:

"They demand total withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab land occupied in the 1967 West Asian war, without the establishment of peace.

"There is no reference to Israel's demand that Arab-Israel relations be put on a contractual basis.

"The proposals do not guarantee Israeli shipping through international waterways."

Earlier, on December 25, 1968 in the Knesset, Mr. Abba Eban confirmed reports that Soviet diplomats were in contact with Israeli representatives, seeking a solution of the West Asian dispute. The USSR, he said, had clarified its views on the situation in this region during the contacts.

Replying to another question, he said the Soviet Union had made no effort, however, to renew diplomatic relations with Israel, nor had there been any feelers indicating any such intention.

Mr. Eban stressed, however, that there was no possibility of peace nor change in the status quo except through an agreed peace accepted by all countries concerned, including Israel.

Soviet Proposals:

The Soviet proposal, mooted by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, to the "Big Four" leaders following his talks with President Nasser ten days earlier called for a phased-out settlement, within the ambit of the UN resolution of November 22, 1967.

The following are said to be the highlights of the Soviet proposals:

(1) As soon as Israelis withdraw to the June 5, 1967 line, according to an agreed plan, Arabs will sign and register with Israel a pact of non-belligerency;

(2) The United Nations forces would be inducted into Sinai and Sharm El Sheikh as before the June, 1967 war with specified demilitarized zones;

(3) Initially, Israelis will withdraw 40 kilometres from the Suez Canal bank under the first stage when the authorities will begin work to clear the Canal for operation;

(4) As soon as Israelis withdraw to the June, 1967 frontier, the Big Four Powers will, through the Security Council, guarantee those frontiers subject to border adjustments mutually agreed between Israel and its Arab neighbours through the good offices of the United Nations envoy, Dr. Gunnar Jarring. Once the withdrawal has taken place, Dr. Jarring would be called upon to discuss with the parties all requirements specified in the November 22, 1967 resolution.

Jordan Accepts Soviet Peace Plan:

King Hussein of Jordan announced on January 13 that he accepted the Soviet peace plan for West Asia.

King Hussein's acceptance followed that of President Nasser, but during the past few days, since the details of the Soviet proposal were made public the Palestinian commando organizations have gone on record as rejecting it unequivocally. They have done so over their official radio, broadcasting from Cairo as well as in several newspapers in Beirut which reflect their point of view. Other Beirut newspapers have also been critical, with one Right-wing journal making the valid point that the plan shows that Russia is not interested in the Palestine problem but only in the re-opening of the Suez Canal.

Thus, if ever the plan reaches the stage of implementation, then an armed clash, amounting to civil war, must take place between King Hussein's forces and those of the commandos in Jordan.

Israel has rejected the plan because, though it gives her a great deal over what she had in May, 1967, she does not think it leaves her with enough of what she conquered in June, 1967.

It is noteworthy that despite Israel's rejection, which was conveyed to Russia some weeks ago, the Russians have gone ahead with presenting the plan to the Arabs and the other Great Powers. This means that either Russia sees through the Israeli manoeuvre or that she believes that if Washington accepts the proposal, then USA can urge Israel to accept it too.

If America joins with Russia in trying to impose this plan, then there is the certainty that it will lead to violent splits within the Arab camp; it just might produce a split on the other side—between America and Israel. Whatever happens, Russia stands to gain, but not necessarily the cause of peace in West Asia.

US View On Soviet Plan:

In its diplomatic exchanges with the Soviet Union on the West Asian situation, USA is said to be taking the line that the Arab States should agree to the permanent demilitarization of the Sinai Peninsula, the Syrian Heights and the west bank of the Jordan following the Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories.

But the latest Soviet plan for a West Asian settlement provides for a token re-occupation of these territories by the armies of the respective Arab States and the return of the civil administration to re-affirm their territorial jurisdiction, before the two sides could enter into any substantive negotiations for the demilitarization of the evacuated areas as part of a general political settlement.

According to diplomatic reports from Washington, the two super-Powers have more or less agreed in principle that, recognizing the hard realities of the situation, the Arab States should end their state of belligerency and reconcile themselves to the existence of the Jewish State, before negotiating the terms of a Peace Treaty with Israel providing for not only an international guarantee of the frontiers of all States in the region, but also a fair and equitable settlement of the Palestine refugee problem.

US Phantom Aircraft Supplies:

The US State Department announced in Washington on December 27, 1968 the final agreement on a $200 million deal to provide 50 Phantom jet fighters to Israel. Delivery of the planes to Israel would begin before the end of 1969 and continue into 1970.

Completion of the negotiations, which President L. B. Johnson announced on October 9, 1968, was announced by Press Officer Robert McCloskey, who said: "Agreement to meet Israel's request for 50 F-4 aircraft has been reached. Delivery of the planes will begin before the end of 1969 and continue into 1970."

The basic policy covering completion of the agreement, he said, was to assist Israel in maintaining some degree of balance with the Arab States, particularly UAR, which had been re-armed by the Soviet Union since the Arab-Israeli war in June, 1967.

Satisfaction In Israel:

The Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, expressed "deep satisfaction" over the US State Department's green signal on the sales of 50 Phantom jet fighters to Israel. "This is a positive conclusion of an effort which began early in 1968 at the meeting between Mr. Levi Eshkol and President Johnson."

Mr. L. Eshkol Thanks Mr. L. B. Johnson:

The Israeli Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, said in a radio broadcast on December 28, 1968 that massive Soviet arms supplies to the Arab countries would give them a quantitative military superiority, even after Israel took delivery of 50 Phantom supersonic bombers from USA and declared: "We must still make new and major arms purchases".

He expressed his gratitude to President L. B. Johnson who, he said, "kept the promise he made to me last January (1968) during my visit to him in Texas".

Gen. I. Rabin's Views:

On December 26, 1968, General Itzhak Rabin, Israel's Ambassador in Washington, said in Tel Aviv (on his return from USA) that the American decision to give 50 Phantoms to Israel resulted from policy formulated at the start of the year, aimed at maintaining a military equilibrium in West Asia.

General Rabin, who was Israel's Chief of Staff during the six-day war said it was impossible to predict the West Asia policy of the new American Administration of Mr. R. Nixon. "In the circumstances, any thaw between USA and Egypt can only have negative consequences for Israel".

Russian Criticism:

Tass said on December 28, 1968 that the US decision to send 50 Phantom supersonic bombers to Israel proved that USA was still encouraging the belligerency and extremism of Israeli leaders despite its claims to the contrary.

Without American support, it said, the Israelis would not have shown so openly their desire to keep the gains won by their "aggressions".

"By encouraging the Israeli Government to refuse to comply with the November 22, 1967 Security Council resolution on West Asia, USA assumes the grave responsibility for aggravating the unstable situation in that area."

Arab Reaction:

Meanwhile, Arab capitals denounced the sale of Phantom jets to Israel as a "severe blow" to prospects of an honourable peace settlement.

UAR official circles hoped the new US Administration under Mr. Richard Nixon would desist from carrying out the commitment made by the Johnson Administration, regarded by the Arabs as biased in favour of Israel.

French Ban On Arms To Israel:

On January 7, the French Government announced that it had imposed an embargo on all military supplies to Israel (see page).

The step was strongly received in West Asian capitals—warmly by Arab nations and bitterly by Israel.

The action was said to be in response to the Israeli commando attack on Beirut airport.

The French ban immediately affected some 150 million francs (£12.5 million) worth of equipment. About half the amount was represented by spare parts for Israel's French-made Mirage jets. (France had suspended sales of Mirages to Israel after the six-day war in 1967.)

The embargo came as a major blow to French aircraft and missile manufacturers who regarded Israel as one of their best clients.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said in Paris on January 14 that France would not remain indifferent if the existence of Lebanon were threatened.

He was replying to newsmen who asked about foreign reports that France was prepared to go to the assistance of Lebanon in case of trouble. He replied: "I can confirm that if the existence of Lebanon is threatened, France will not remain indifferent in the name of friendship and in the name of equilibrium and peace."

The French Premier, Mr. Maurice Couve de Murville, said he was convinced that the recent French embargo on arms to Israel would not influence the likelihood of a four-Power understanding.

Questioned about the French embargo, Mr. Couve said that "from the moment that things start going really badly and it appears there is a strong danger of military operations resuming, it is perfectly legitimate to take precautions, if only against being associated with an extension of operations."

To journalists who replied that the French embargo was one-sided, Mr. Couve replied: "In fact, we are not delivering anything to the other countries."

Step Disapproved By French Senate Body:

On January 15, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the French Senate voted a motion calling for the French embargo on arms for Israel to be annulled.

Strong Reactions:

The Israeli Cabinet considered President de Gaulle's total ban on arms for their country and its implications on January 14 and decided against any fierce reaction in a bid to retain friendly relations with the French people.

The Commander of the Israeli Air Force, Gen. Mordecai, had briefed the Cabinet on how the embargo would affect his force of French-built Mirage and Mystere jets.

A Government spokesman said that the Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, summed up the present phase of Franco-Israeli relations as "a temporary impasse."

Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Kuwait, Algeria, Sudan and other Arab countries sent cables to President de Gaulle praising his decision to withhold shipment of arms to Israel.

The UAR Cabinet expressed its "deep appreciation" for President de Gaulle's embargo on arms supplies to Israel on January 12.

A spokesman said that the UAR Cabinet considered Gen. de Gaulle's decision "a stand restoring to world policy the spirit of the principles essential to a settlement of major world problems."

Representatives of 156 conservative Jewish organizations in the New York City area said on January 12 that they would use all their powers "to achieve effective reaction against French trade, commerce and travel" because of President de Gaulle's policy refusing arms to Israel.

The statement came from members of the United Synagogue of America, representing 250,000 people in the New York region.

Protesting against Gen. de Gaulle's embargo on shipment of military equipment to Israel, they said they planned to continue their reaction policy—presumably a boycott—until the embargo was lifted.

Mr. L. Eshkol's Criticism Of French Step:

The Israeli Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol described the arms embargo in Knesset (Parliament) on January 14 as "a particularly painful blow" and accused the French Government of following a double standard of morality.

He angrily rejected the official French assertion that Israel had adopted an aggressive attitude in the Spring of 1967.

From a purely commercial viewpoint the French total embargo "runs counter to all common usage. Agreements have been unilaterally and arbitrarily violated. Funds paid for goods which were not delivered have been frozen."

He compared the French statement, which explained its decision to impose the total embargo, to Soviet allegations against Israel in the days before the six-day war of June, 1967.

Soviet charges at that time about Israeli troop concentrations on Syria's border were described by Mr. Eshkol as "a figment of imagination which brought on large-scale Egyptian military concentrations and plunged the entire region into the abyss of war."

The French statement about "Israel's aggressive attitude" was a deliberate repetition of the Soviet "mendacious libel invented in May, 1967".

The French move, intended to weaken Israel's military ability, he said, could in fact undermine the prospects of peace in the region. Since the Arab countries were unwilling to make peace with Israel in the near future, Israel's "firmest guarantee for peace" was its capability to avert any military blow. If the armed forces were weakened, peace itself would suffer.

If the Arab nations believed they were able to hit Israel with impunity, the situation would swiftly escalate to an all-out Arab offensive.

Later, Mr. Eshkol wound up the debate with a warning to Lebanon against harbouring terrorists.

The Knesset passed with an overwhelming vote of 74 against one (an Arab communist delegate) the Government's policy.

Maj-Gen. M. Dayan's View:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, declared in Jerusalem on January 9 that Israel would overcome the French embargo on arms sales and said: "President de Gaulle's new policy won't make us accept things to which we are opposed."

The Director of Israel's Military Industries said that his factories were producing all equipment and weapons used by Israel's Air Force, which were imported from France until a few years ago. "We were not taken by surprise when France announced its total embargo."

Appeal To World Jewry:

Speaking at the closing session of a four-day conference of Jewish community leaders from 26 countries, the Israeli Premier, Mr. Levi Eshkol said: "Immigration and intensified Jewish education is the chief stay of world Jewry at this time."

The Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Yigal Allon, told the conference: "Israel is determined to take nothing less than peace."

Stressing that temporary arrangements in the past have led only to additional wars, he said: "Israel would respect the Cease-fire Agreement on a mutual basis until it is replaced by a peace agreement."

An appeal to world opinion on behalf of three Iraqi Jews sentenced to death by a Baghdad military court has been issued by the Governing Council of the World Jewish Congress.

The Council President, Mr. Joachim Prinz, said in a statement: "We fear that the Iraqi Government will execute the three before we have time to summon world opinion."

He stated that the three Jews had been tried for alleged espionage for "Zionism, imperialism and Israel" and another 16 Jews were being held on similar charges. "This comes against a background of oppression of the 4,000 Jews still living in Iraq. Almost all of them had been living under house arrest since the June war of 1967, in violation of their human and civil rights."

He called the charges absurd since the Jews had been denied freedom of movement and communication for the past 19 months.

Arkon Operation In 1955 To Tiran Strait:

Israel revealed on January 14 that it began planning a scheme to capture the Tiran Strait as soon as Egypt first closed them to Israeli shipping 15 years ago.

The revelation came when the Israeli Army disclosed a daring mission deep in the Sinai desert in 1955, performed by a handful of Israeli soldiers who were evacuated in an improvised airlift by tiny Piper Cub planes after three days in the trackless wastes.

The Army said the aim of the six-man squad was to find a route for a land attack on the Strait. The attack was to have had no connexion with the 1956 Sinai campaign, in which the Strait was eventually captured. "One or two battalions would have occupied Sharm el Sheikh (commanding the Strait) but certainly not the entire Sinai Peninsula", said Mr. Asher Levi who led the 1955 mission and was then a Colonel. His present rank is not disclosed.

Mr. Levi told the following story at a news conference exclusively for Israeli journalists but which was later passed on to foreign correspondents:

The squad, in Israeli army uniform, sailed down the Gulf of Aqaba in a fishing boat from Eilat. Israel's Red Sea port, to Dahab, north of Sharm el Sheikh, where they went ashore in rubber dinghies and began trekking inland under cover of night. They were searching for a traversible link between the only two land routes between the Tiran Strait and Israeli territory. The three-day mission, from June 9 to June 12, 1955 was successful. The link was found and used by Israel's Ninth Brigade to reach the Strait in the French-British-Israeli invasion of Sinai months later. The only hitch came when Bedouins detected them in the Sinai and reported to the Egyptians. This forced them to change their plans at the last moment. This fact later was confirmed by documents captured in the Sinai campaign.

Remarkable flying of the six Piper Cubs—the bulk of the Israeli Air Force—saved them. The planes, flying low to avoid detection, landed on stony, uneven terrain. Each picked up one soldier and flew safely back to Israel. While in the desert, their only contact was a lone Dakota plane which sneaked over to their area daily to receive a report and parachute water.

The mission was carried out when the Chief of Staff was Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, now Defence Minister. The Brigade Commander who took charge of the operation was Haim Bar Lev, now the Army Chief of Staff.

The six men were cited for bravery shortly after the operation—code-named Arkon—was completed. But it remained one of Israel's best kept secrets for almost 14 years.

Since then, Egypt again closed the Strait to Israeli shipping. The move, in May, 1967, led to the six-day Middle East war.

The only remaining mystery was: Why had Israel suddenly decided to reveal the story? The six men said they simply did not know. "All I know is, I was told to get the story out and make it public", said Mr. Levi. "I don't know why".

KOREA (North)

A. Release Of "Pueblo" Crew: All 82 crew members of the American intelligence ship Pueblo were freed by North Korea on December 23, 1968 after they had spent 11 months in captivity.

[North Korean patrol vessels had captured the Pueblo off the east coast of Korea on January 23, 1968. Pyongyang Radio said the Pueblo was an American spy ship and that it was operating close to the coast is North Korean territorial waters. Four of the 83 crew members were injured when the ship was seized and one died of injuries. Since the capture of the ship, Pyongyang Radio had on several occasions broadcast "confessions" by its captain, Commander Lloyd Mark Bucher, and others of the crew stating that they had been captured while spying on North Korea.]

The release came after several rounds of talks and an American representative had signed a document admitting to the North Korean charges. But before signing it, he declared that the charges were false but that he was signing the document only to secure the release of the crew.

The North Koreans had brought the men in four busloads just before noon on December 23 at Pan Mun Jom. At 11.30 a.m. local time, Commander Bucher, accompanied by North Korean observers, walked slowly across the bridge of no return. He was followed by an ambulance bearing the coffin of a Pueblo engine-room worker, Duane Daniel Hodgess (21), killed during the Pueblo capture. The rest of the crew walked across one by one in reverse order of seniority.

The official North Korean news agency reported that Commander Bucher and his crew had sent a letter to the North Korean Government expressing profound thanks for being allowed to return to their families. The letter read: "We the commanding officer, officers, crew and civilian oceanographers of the USS Pueblo, humbly offer this note of thanks to the Government and people of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to express our heartfelt thanks for generously forgiving our serious crimes against the Korean people to enable us to return to our families and for the humanitarian treatment afforded us during our detention here.

"We were criminals caught red-handed in the act of espionage, intruding deep into the territorial waters of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on many occasions".

Terrorism Alleged By Comm. L. Bucher:

Commander Lloyd Bucher said later at a news conference in Seoul that he and his crew were subjected to a concentrated week of terror shortly before their release. "They were totally brutal", he said.

Commander Bucher, who denied that his ship had been closer than 14 miles to North Korean territory at any time, said many of his crew were in a bad physical condition from a nutritional standpoint, though their bruises should heal fairly quickly.

He repudiated the many confessions he and the men had made of being guilty of violating North Korean waters in their intelligence-gathering vessel. He said he had made the confessions to save his crew from beatings. He hoped the American people had understood that the language of the confessions was so extravagant as to be a sign to the world they were not serious.

KOREA (South)

A. Increased US Military Aid Sought: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Choi Kyu-hah, said in Washington on December 5, 1968 that he had requested increased American military aid to fight alleged infiltration by North Koreans.

Mr. Choi, who was leading his country's observer delegation to UN, also expressed the hope that President-elect Richard Nixon would continue the "policy of support" for South Korea followed by the Democrat Administration.

US military aid to the Seoul regime in 1968 ran into a total of nearly $24 million, but the regime was still awaiting delivery of two squadrons of jet Phantom F-4 fighters.

NEPAL

A. King Mahendra Pardons 175 Nepali Congressmen: On January 10, King Mahendra granted pardon to 175 self-exiled Nepali Congressmen convicted in absentia since the royal take-over in December, 1960.

According to the Rashtriya Samachar Sangh, official news agency, they had committed crimes against the State. The royal pardon was granted in response to petitions submitted by the Nepali Congressmen requesting the authorities to permit them to return home. They had expressed their willingness to live peacefully in the country and abide by Nepal's Constitution.

The pardoned persons included Mr. Meghraj Upadhayaya, Mr. Balkrishna Shresta and Mr. Ramchandra Hamal.

Significantly, the list did not include prominent leaders like Mr. Bhadrakali Mishra and Mr. Bharat Shamsher. It also did not include persons belonging to other political parties. In all, 684 Nepali Congressmen were living in self-exile in India. Of these only 175 had been pardoned.

PAKISTAN

A. More Disturbances Against Government: Border militia and armed police patrolled the streets of Rawalpindi on December 26, 1968 following violent demonstrations by students who vowed they would not stop until they had overthrown the Government of F-M. Mohammed Ayub Khan.

In Peshawar, more than a dozen pistol shots were fired into a crowd of stone-throwing youths trying to break up a Muslim League meeting. At least 12 persons were injured.

A group of 35 women began a march of 100 miles from Sargodha to Lahore on December 26, demanding Press freedom and repeal of "repressive" family laws. The women's procession was organized by the pro-Mao Tse-tung branch of the local Communist Party in defiance of a ban on assemblies of more than five persons. All planned celebrations for the birthday of Mohammad Ali Jinnah, founder of Pakistan, which coincides with Christmas Day (December 25) were cancelled owing to student action.

Defying the ban on processions, anti-Government and pro-Government forces staged demonstrations in half-a-dozen cities of West Pakistan on December 28, 1968.

Members of the Left-wing National Awami Party marched through the main streets on Nowshera, 78 miles north-west of Rawalpindi, in protest at arrests of political and student leaders. The marchers shouted slogans and carried placards, some calling for freedom of the Press.

In nearby Mardan, students staged a protest march through the town's bazaar.

On December 28, 1968, religious leaders and Opposition party workers staged protest marches in three towns as anti-Government unrest increased.

Police arrested 26 people in Peshawar in connexion with disturbances at a public meeting held by the ruling Muslim League Party on December 25, 1968. The arrests were in addition to 30 already made after youths disrupted the meeting and shots were fired in the air.

On January 4, about 60 veiled women marched through the streets of Peshawar carrying placards demanding the restoration of democracy and the release of political leaders. The women, supporters of the Right-wing Opposition party—Council of the Muslim League—were met by a group of students shouting slogans in support of the People's Party Chairman, Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

In Lahore, also on January 4, doctors from two Government hospitals demonstrated to press their demand for increased salaries, upgrading of their status and the formation of an autonomous health service. Doctors in Karachi and Peshawar also staged demonstrations.

At least 24 people were injured in a clash on January 5 between rival groups in a procession led by Air Marshal Asghar Khan. The marchers threw stones and used bamboo sticks in the clash, which occurred at the mausoleum of Mr. M. A. Jinnah, founder of Pakistan.

Supporters of the Jamaat-e-Islami and Left-wing students joined by supporters of the People's Party of Mr. Bhutto, were involved in the clash, in which 11 people were arrested.

Five Rightist Opposition parties—grouped in the Pakistan Democratic Movement (PDM) — decided in Dacca on January 6 to boycott the Presidential elections and launch a direct action campaign for reform.

A resolution approved by the meeting also said that the PDM would demand an end to the State of Emergency imposed during the Indo-Pakistan war in 1965.

The Pakistan Democratic Movement staged a peaceful demonstration in Rawalpindi on January 6 to press their campaign for restoration of democracy in the country.

On January 9, eight Opposition parties, including the five PDM parties, jointly formed a Democratic Action Committee (DAC) in Dacca.

The acting President of the East Pakistan Awami League, Mr. Nazrul Islam said that the Committee had been formed with the objective of "achieving restoration of complete democracy and sovereignty of the people."

The people of Pakhtoonistan observed a "black day" on January 9 against the "repressive policies of the Pakistan Government."

Meanwhile, prominent writers, students and poets in Pakistan demanded freedom of speech and expression in the country. In a joint statement in Karachi they demanded the abolition of ordinances which, they said, "caused intellectual frustration all over Pakistan."

A students' meeting was abandoned in Rawalpindi on January 10 when two groups clashed over Mr. Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto's Left-wing People's Party. The meeting was called by the action committee of local students as part of their current agitation for the release of detained politicians and the restoration of democracy in Pakistan.

In Karachi, about 500 students and supporters of Mr. Bhutto marched with slogans reading: "Down with the Tashkent Declaration," and "Down with Soviet revisionism.'

In Lahore, where riots had followed the signing of the Tashkent Declaration, another march took place.

On January 13, students held a three-hour demonstration in Rawalpindi to denounce the Tashkent Declaration.

President Ayub Khan On World Problems:

Speaking at a banquet held in honour of the Shah of Iran and Turkey's Prime Minister, Mr. Suleyman Demirel who flew to Karachi on December 25, 1968 for two days of talks with the Pakistan President, F.-M. Ayub Khan said that the Kashmir issue was still poisoning Indo-Pakistan relations and added: "There has been little change in our relations with India."

Reviewing the international situation affecting Iran, Pakistan asd Turkey, grouped in the Regional Co-operation for Development, he made the following points:

Persian Gulf—As a result of the Shah's recent visit to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, the "prospects of mutual understanding and co-operation among littoral States of the Persian Gulf are brighter today than ever."

Cyprus—He hoped current negotiations would prove fruitful and that Turkey's statesmanship and forbearance would be matched by "the other side".

He went on: "In West Asia, there are no signs of a break in the deadlock and tension continues to mount.

"Turkey, Iran and Pakistan all share the view that the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 must be faithfully and urgently implemented and that no aggressor be allowed to retain the fruits of his aggression."

Turkey, Iran and Pakistan had "certain outside pressures and the geo-political situation requires that we should get together and work together."

[When one correspondent asked if the Shah of Iran had the same views as President Ayub, an fficial spokesman said: "The views of the Shah of Iran and President Ayub were identical on more or less all the issues before the RCD countries."]

Demand For a President From East Wing:

Maulana Maudoodi, leader of the Jamiat-e-Islami Party said in Lahore on December 29, 1968 that he was in favour of putting up a Presidential candidate from East Pakistan.

Talking to newsmen on his arrival after four months' medical treatment in London, he said, it would be premature to say anything about Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's candidature, and added: "Justice demands that this time an East Pakistani is elected as President."

Maulana Maudoodi's party belongs to the Pakistan Democratic Movement, a joint front os four Right-wing parties, all of which have refrained from commenting on Mr. Bhutto's candidature.

President Ayub Khan On External Threat:

Addressing the West Pakistan Muslim League workers in Lahore on December 29, 1968, President Ayub Khan sought to divert the attention of his people from the current crisis rocking Pakistan to "external threat" and said that "the enemy with its well-organized 30 divisions will lose no opportunity to invade Pakistan and can do so in a week's time."

He added: "We are prepared to face any eventuality and ward off the enemy. A Mujahid force to protect vital installations has also been organized in the country."

Angered by the Opposition demand that the "Ayub regime must go", he said he did not want to remain President for ever, but even so any change in the Government had to be through peaceful and constitutional means. "The Constitution provides election once in five years. These could offer the best touchstone for the people to choose the Government they wanted. In any case there is no alternative to Basic Democracy."

Autonomy For East Pakistan Demanded:

In a joint statement on January 14, six Pakistani student leaders have demanded full autonomy for East Pakistan, Baluchistan and Sind and urged the maintenance of non-alignment status and scrapping of the CENTO and S-EATO pacts. The country should have a federal system of Government and the Legislative Assembly should be supreme.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan's Criticism:

Speaking to the Karachi Press Club on January 14, Air Marshal Asghar Khan denied that he had advocated a people's war to liberate Kashmir. "I am a peace-loving person."

Newspapers had quoted the Air Marshal as calling for a people's war. But, he said, he had only called for the formation of a people's army.

He said that the settlement of Indo-Pakistan problems was being hampered by the "Ayub regime's vested interests".

He did not spell out his approach on Kashmir.

He also said that he did not want to be thought of as inclined towards any one of the Great Powers. USA and Russia had the capacity to deliver modern military equipment to Pakistan, and "inevitably there will be a pull in that direction". China was acquiring that capacity. "But this should not be construed as leaning towards any one of those three countries."

He accused the Government of "strangling the Press" and called for the abolition of the National Press Trust—a Government-sponsored group which owns several major newspapers including The Pakistan Times and The Morning News.

He also criticized Government control over radio and television and said: "Our own people have no faith in Radio Pakistan broadcasts, with the result that we tune in to foreign radio stations for the correct version of our own events."

B. ADB Loan To Industrial Development Bank: The Asian Development Bank (ADB) has approved a loan of $ 10 million to the Industrial Development Bank of Pakistan (IDBP), one of the two principal industrial development banks in the country.

The loan will be used to meet the medium and long-term credit requirements of small and medium industries in the private sector.

The loan is for a maximum period of 15 years, including a grace period not exceeding three years. It will carry interest at the lending rate of the ADB prevalent at the time of crediting the loan account.

The loan documents and other relevant papers were signed at the Bank's headquarters in Manila on December 16, 1968 by the ADB President, Mr. Takeshi Watanabe, and the Deputy Secretary of Economic Division of the Pakistan Presidential Secretariat, Mr. Syed-uz-Zaman, and the Managing Director of IDBP, Mr. Z. Huq.

IDBP, which was established in 1961, has an authorized capital of Rs. 60 million of which Rs. 30 million has been paid-in and an additional Rs. 10 million is to be paid in by the end of 1968. IDBP's lending resources in rupees are derived from capital and reserves, advances from the Government, credits from the State Bank of Pakistan and term deposits. Foreign currency resources at IDBP's disposal come largely in the form of allocations from external credits arranged by the Government. IDBP has also received suppliers' credits and loans directly from foreign sources; it had not so far secured assistance from international financial institutions.

C. Economic Forecast: A Karachi despatch on December 31, 1968 stated that Pakistan was expected to maintain its rate of overall growth in the gross national product during the coming year. It should rise to 7 per cent if nothing perturbs the economic situation.

But the economy stands on precarious foundations: export earnings still depend largely on jute and cotton, markets for exports have not yet been diversified and the rupee is closely linked with sterling.

Furthermore, agricultural growth represents only a very small percentage of overall growth and expansion and it does not have the same speed as industry. Agriculture has not improved so much as not to be affected by a change in climatic conditions.

From one year to another, agricultural production could easily decrease. However, the prospects look brighter despite the poor performance shown during the first years of the Third Plan in major crops.

Foodgrains will decrease only owing to good production in 1967. The race between food production and the increase in population will remain the Government's nightmare, while free imports under PL 480 are going down. Import policy, which will be announced early in 1969 seems to be tougher, if one refers to a recent statement by the Minister of Commerce, Nawabzada Abdul Gafoor Khan, who advised businessmen to save as much foreign currency as possible, for reserves are decreasing.

As some industries are not working at full capacity, any slackening in imports is bound to slow industrial growth, which was doing fairly well till now. But the Government has to keep an eye on the unfavourable balance of payments; the foreign exchange gap will be over Rs. 7,234 million, according to the Planning Commission. It will certainly be an improvement, but detrimental to imports. The shortfall in development imports will most probably be reduced owing to large food and defence imports. This last item is unlikely to suffer, if not to increase.

In development expenditure, the public sector's shortfall is noticeable even more than in the private sector. Despite repeated efforts by the Government to stimulate private capital, the results have not yet come up to expectations. The lack of private investment is seen particularly in East Pakistan and this situation could not be improved in 1969. On the other hand, liquidity in the money market looks restrained for the time being and there is not much chance of improvement.

A shortfall in the availability of foreign assistance seems inevitable. Whatever foreign aid might be, one fact remains: the external debt is well over $2,091 million. Debt services rose to 17 per cent of the Budget in 1967 and could reach the critical point of 20 per cent. And this percentage appears when nearly 60 per cent of the Budget is spent on defence.

D. "Massive Aid To India"—US Envoy Denies Charge: The US Ambassador in Pakistan, Mr. Benjamin Oehlert, has said in Rawalpindi that it was very wrong on the part of Pakistan to say that USA was making "massive" arms supplies to India.

In an interview, he said the word "massive" was "most inappropriate" in the case of US military assistance to India.

He said: "In comparison to US military assistance to Pakistan, US arms aid to India can by no stretch of imagination be described as massive".

Spelling out the US policy on Kashmir, he said his Government's role in seeking a solution to the problem could not be that of the initiator. "To fulfil such a role USA would be obliged to exercise pressures that would be unacceptable politically and morally both to ourselves and to one or another or both of the parties".

On the Farakka Barrage question, he re-iterated the position of his Government, which he said regarded the problem as one concerning Pakistan and India. However, his Government was hopeful that the problem could be resolved "equitably" and peacefully.

THAILAND

A. Links With Laos Power System: A transmission line linking the power systems of Thailand and Laos was inaugurated on December 16, 1968 at a special ceremony held on the Mekong River between Nongkhai (Thailand) and Thadue (Laos).

King Bhumibol Adulyadej and King Savang Vatthana of Laos, meeting on a decorated pontoon in the middle of the river, in a symbolic ceremony pressed buttons to release the supply of power from Thailand to Laos.

Before pressing the buttons the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE), U Nyun formally handed to Mr. Thanom Kittikachorn, the Prime Minister, control of that segment of the transmission line which connected Udon with Nongkhai in Thailand; and to Prince Souvanna Phouma, Prime Minister of Laos, that segment which connected Thadue with Vientiane in Laos.

U Nyun also handed over control of the international span of the transmission line which crossed the Mekong River and connected the two segments to Mr. Boonrod Binson, Chairman of the Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin. (Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and South Viet-Nam comprise the Committee).

TURKEY

A. NATO Membership Defended: Addressing a Congress of the ruling Justice Party in Ankara on December 6, 1968, the Prime Minister, Mr. Suleyman Demirel, defended Turkey's continued membership of NATO.

He said: "No one is ignorant now about how independent Turkey would be if she left NATO and falls under a totalitarian administration." He asked the critics: "Has Turkey lost her independence with its association to NATO?"

He said that Turkey entered into the NATO and CENTO alliances of her own free will. Turkey had been seeking peace since the days of Ataturk. It was to attain this goal and to safeguard her independence that it had joined NATO with great enthusiasm as an equal member of the 14-nation alliance.

He said the geo-political situation of the country dictated Turkey's entry into the defence pacts. In pursuance of the objective of peace, Turkey also established friendly relations with the Balkan States.

Referring to the domestic problems, he warned that disruptionist activities would not be tolerated by his administration. Persons shouting slogans of socialist Turkey in fact wanted to turn the country into a totalitarian Leftist State. The people of the country would not allow this to happen.

Mr. Demirel was re-elected Chairman of the Party.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Commonwealth Premiers' Conference: The 18th session of the 28-nation Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference opened in Marlborough House in London on January 7.

The Prime Ministers approved the agenda which included: (1) The world political situation, (2) the Rhodesian problem, (3) the world economic outlook, and (4) co-operation between Commonwealth countries. The immigration issue was included in item 1, while "fighting in Biafra" was dropped, being an internal affair of Nigeria.

In the afternoon session, the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Michael Stewart opened the debate with a general review of major international problems, explaining British points of view on Viet-Nam, Nigeria, NATO, immigration etc. Mr. Arshad Husain, Foreign Minister of Pakistan who followed him, referred to the deteriorating situation in West Asia and pleaded for friendly relations with China. Mr. Wilson, however, checked him when he referred to Kashmir, it being a bilateral issue not to be discussed at the Conference.

Mr. Holyoake of New Zealand, Dr. Borg Oliver of Malta and Mr. Lee Kuan Yew of Singapore expressed anxiety over the British withdrawal from the Far East and Mr. Siaka Stevens of Sierra Leone appealed for peace in Nigeria.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi (India), in her speech, pointed out "Chinese aggression and hostility towards those who did not fall in line or serve some Chinese purpose" and brushed away Pakistan's reference to Kashmir being an internal matter of the State. She advocated the withdrawal of foreign forces from Viet-Nam and expressed firm belief in non-alignment.

Earlier in the morning, a crowd of about 300 people demonstrated with banners and slogans for and against "Majority Rule For Rhodesia," "Britons Stand By Your Kinsmen," and "Scrap Ayub's Bogus Constitution". A group representing Indian Workers' Association in Great Britain, pressing for the rights of Indian immigrants in Britain and the depressed classes in India, met Mrs. Gandhi. About 30 writers and publicists opposed to the Rhodesian regime were forcibly evicted by the police from their sit-in strike at Rhodesia House. A few East Pakistanis unfurled a banner declaring UDI—Unilateral Declaration of Independence—before Marlborough House, calling it the East Pakistan House.

The Conference continued discussion of foreign affairs on January 8. Mr. John Gorton, Prime Minister of Australia desired settlement of the Viet-Nam issue with South Viet-Namese right to choose their Government through free elections and expressed his interest in the development of all the Commonwealth countries. Tengku Abdul Rehman of Malaysia blamed China for South-East Asia's problems and accused it of trying to dominate and influence it by "fair and foul means". Others who participated in the day's discussion included Mr. J. S. Gichuru (Kenya), Mr. D. Senanayake (Ceylon) and Dr. Milton Obote (Uganda).

The discussions brought out unanimity among delegates on the validity of the Commonwealth and general condemnation of apartheid. Lesotho explained that by virtue of its being surrounded by South Africa it had to maintain normal relations with that apartheid State. On the Viet-Nam issue, Britain, Australia and New Zealand held North Viet-Nam responsible for the stalemate in the Paris talks while India stressed the evacuation of foreign forces and leaving the Viet-Namese free to solve their differences.

The burning issue of Rhodesia was taken up on January 9. Mr. Thomson, British Minister in charge of Rhodesian Affairs, opened the discussions with a review of the issue, referring to the Tiger and Fearless negotiations and the effect of sanctions as a whole. He asserted that the British pledge of NIBMAR—No Independence Before Majority Rule—still stood and claimed that the Fearless proposals were not inconsistent with it and that they guaranteed unimpeded progress to majority rule. He added that direct British rule could not be imposed on Rhodesia.

President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania who followed him as the chief spokesman of African countries had earlier, in consultation with other countries, framed certain definite proposals which he now placed before the Conference. Rejecting the Fearless proposals as a means to transfer power to minority rule, he put forward his three proposals, viz., withdrawal of the Fearless offer, re-affirmation of NIBMAR and intensification of sanctions. Ghana, Kenya and other African countries lent their full support to the proposals, but the Australian Prime Minister, Mr. Gorton, said that it was essentially a British problem and should be left to her to solve. Mrs. Gandhi, at the end of the meeting, gave full support to Mr. Nyerere's proposals and urged the British Government to accept them as otherwise the very foundations of the Commonwealth would be "shattered".

Mr. Harold Wilson expressed his inability to pull down the Rhodesian flag flying in London due to the legal position and explained to Tengku Abdul Rehman why Britain maintained a High Commission in Salisbury.

The Rhodesian debate on January 10 lasted for the whole day. The participants were President Kaunda of Zambia, Mr. P. Trudeau (Canada), President A. Banda (Malawi), Mr. Lee Kuan Yew (Singapore) and Mr. Arshad Husain (Pakistan).

Mrs. Gandhi returned to India on January 11 leaving Mr. B. R. Bhagat, Minister of State, to participate in further meetings of the Conference.

World Economic Situation:

The Conference took up the next item of the agenda, the world economic situation, on January 12, with a review by the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Roy Jenkins, who dealt especially with monetary affairs.

Ghana urged the creation of the Commonwealth Development Fund, while Mr. Senanayake pleaded for reversal in the trends of world trade which made "the rich richer and the poor poorer".

The debate concluded on January 14.

The Communique:

A communique issued at the conclusion of the session on January 15 after a brief discussion on Commonwealth co-operation covered all the topics discussed.

On the question of majority rule in Rhodesia, it said, many Heads of Government urged that this could only be carried out through the normal democratic process of an election or referendum. Mr. Harold Wilson explained that it would be open to a proposed Royal Commission to assess whether any test would be possible.

On other international matters, the Commonwealth leaders re-affirmed their condemnation of South Africa's apartheid system. They urged Portugal to concede the right of self-determination to the people of their African territories.

On Czechoslovakia, they said that Moscow's action violated the principle of non-interference in the affairs of other countries and violated the United Nations Charter. They expressed unanimous support to the peace-making mission of Mr. Gunnar Jarring in West Asia.

Outside The Conference:

The delegates to the Conference participated in various social and political activities during their stay in London.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi addressed the Indian students at the Mahatma Gandhi Students' Hostel on January 7 when she expressed herself against the nuclear race with China. She met Indian immigrants at Nehru Hall in Southall where she was welcomed by the President of the Indian Workers' Association of Britain and the Mayor of Ealing. Speaking at the commercial TV programme, Today, she criticized Russian supply of arms to Pakistan as likely to create tension in the area. On January 8, she expressed sympathy for the British citizens of Indian ancestry at the BBC "24 Hours" news programme. On January 9, she had a business luncheon with Mr. Harold Wilson and his colleagues and discussed immigration and other problems. On January 10, she attended a luncheon by Indian journalists when she expressed the hope that the Indian Ocean would remain peaceful. To the people who met her on the way with the slogan "Freedom for Kashmir", she said that it so happened that some 4 million Kashmiris lived in freedom.

Other Prime Ministers:

Mr. P. Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada declared on January 9 that Canada would keep its military force in NATO for another year and confirmed that it had decided to recognize China.

Mr. Lee Kuan Yey, Prime Minister of Singapore declared at meeting of the Royal Commonwealth Society on January 9, that Commonwealth countries would "forge new links" if Britain failed to re-establish a sound economy.

Addressing Tanzanian students on January 14, President Nyerere said that Tanzania would leave the Commonwealth if Britain settled the Rhodesian issue on the basis of the Fearless proposals.

The Immigration Problem:

With a brief reference at the Conference on January 7, the immigration issue was passed on to a working group of 17 nations on January 11. Kenya, Tanzania, Zambia and Uganda boycotted the meetings on January 13. They said they would attend meetings only when Britain gave an assurance that the Asians in these countries would be accepted as British citizens.

The Kenyan Minister, Mr. Tom Mboya on behalf of East African countries laid down two conditions for co-operation, viz, (1) Britain must accept that the question of Asian holders of British passports was a matter of British citizenship and not of immigration, and (2) Britain must accept them as British citizens. India maintained that Britain must first accept her responsibility for her Asian citizens and then India would help her in several ways including their temporary admission in India.

In the meantime, the Canadian Prime Minister announced that he was prepared to accept a certain number of Indian and Pakistani immigrants in Canada and that the decision on the matter could be taken by March.

The Nigerian Issue:

Efforts outside, the Conference to end the Nigerian civil war did not produce any results. The Nigerian representative, Chief Awolowo complained that the Biafran representative had not met him.

President Obote of Uganda said that he would continue to try to find an answer to the problem, not necessarily in London but also in Africa.

B. "Soyuz-4" And "Soyuz-5" Launched By USSR—Link-up In Outer Space: On January 14, the Soviet Union announced that Col. Vladimir Shatalov had been blasted aloft in his Soyuz-4 craft at 10-38 a.m. Moscow Time (7-38 a.m. GMT).

The aim of Soyuz-4 was to study spacecraft rendezvous technique, an indispensable step for the establishment of a space platform.

Tass said the spacecraft, had been placed into orbit round the earth. The pilot "is feeling fine." The craft was orbiting the Earth once every 88.5 minutes at a maximum distance from the Earth of 225 km and a minimum distance of 173 km.

A Tass commentary recalled the Soviet space "firsts" and said: "The beginning of 1969 has been a very eventful period of space research in the Soviet Union. Two space probes were launched towards Venus in January, which are to reach their destinations in May. Today the Soviet Union launched a manned spaceship Soyuz-4. These are some of the outstanding developments that mark the start of the 12th year of space research which began on October 4, 1957, when mankind heard the unfamiliar beep-beep which later became so famous."

The following day (January 15), another manned craft, Soyuz-5, was launched with a three-man crew, which included cosmonauts Yevgeny Khrunov and Alexei Yeliseyev, and the crew commander Boris Volynov.

On January 16, the Soviet Union performed a unique space feat when Soyuz-4 and Soyuz-5 linked up in outer space to become an orbiting cosmic station, transferred two crewmen from one of the spaceships to the other and then separated to continue their flight in different orbits.

Cosmonauts Yevgeny Khrunov and Alexei Yeliseyev left Soyuz-5 through the porthole of the orbital compartment wearning space suits and entered Soyuz-4 after an hour in space to become the first men to move from one spacecraft to another. During the space walk, the cosmonauts carried out a number of scientific experiments and observations.

The link-up was achieved at 11-20 a.m. Moscow Time when Soyuz-4, on its 34th orbit, and Soyuz-5 on its 18th, were both above the Soviet Union. When the distance between the two was only 100 metres, Col. Shatalov took over manual control of Soyuz-4 and docked with Soyuz-5. The spaceships were then mechanically coupled and rigidly fastened together and their electrical circuits connected.

As the two linked-up ships continued their orbital flight, Tass described them as the world's first experimental cosmic station and noted that the station, with its four crew compartments, had facilities to implement "a large round of experiments and investigations as well as comfortable conditions of work and rest."

Tass revealed that the space suits worn by cosmonauts Khrunov and Yeliseyev were fitted with "a new autonomous regeneration-type, life-sustaining system." During the space walk and the switchover from one spaceship to the other, the cosmonauts maintained continuous communications between them.

Explaining the significance of the experiments, Tass said they created "preconditions for implementing such operations in space as replacement of crew of long-term orbital stations or the rescue of spacecraft crew in an emergency."

"Soyuz-4" Returns To Earth:

The Soviet spaceman, Lieut-Col. Boris Volynov, whirled round the Earth alone in Soyuz-5 after the two cosmonauts who went up with him returned to Earth in Soyuz-4 on January 17.

The return of Soyuz-4, marked another first in the series accomplished over the past four days by the Soviet space team. Never before had spacemen left Earth in one craft and come back in another.

Soyuz-4, carrying its commander Col. Vladimir Shatalov, and cosmonauts Yevgeny Khrunov and Alexei Yeliseyev parachuted gently to ground this morning in the specified landing area on a freezing snow-covered steppe in Central Asia.

"Soyuz-5" Also Returns Safely:

On January 18, Lt.-Col. Boris Volynov, the last of the four cosmonauts who achieved the world's first space rendezvous, also returned safely to Earth in Soyuz-5.

Col. Volynov's capsule came down only about 200 km from the Baikonur cosmodrome in Central Asia whence it was blasted into orbit.

Like Soyuz-4, Soyuz-5 came down by a newly-developed Soviet soft-landing system using parachutes and retro-engines. A braking engine was switched on to kick the spacecraft out of orbit. After the engine stopped running, the descent apparatus carrying Lt.-Col. Volynov separated itself from the orbital compartment. After braking in the atmosphere, the parachute system and soft-landing engines ensured the soft descent and landing of the apparatus in the present area.

In a round-up article on the twin space fights, Tass said the two crafts had carried out several important scientific and technical experiments:

(1) The launching complex ensured efficient and reliable prestart preparation and launching of the spaceships;

(2) The control systems of the carrier rockets ensured the exact placing of the vehicles on precalculated orbits; and

(3) The recovery capsules of the spaceships, carrying the cosmonauts, landed in the pre-set spots with high exactitude.

Tass also listed the following further gains from the flight;

(1) The principles of space navigation were perfected, observations of characteristic geological and geographical formations of the Earth's surface were carried out, as well as observations of the cloud and snow cover of the Earth of the brightness of the Earth and, star. The cosmonauts tried to spot cyclones and typhoons.

(2) Medico-biological studies of the influence of space flight conditions on the human organism were carried out according to a broad programme. Constant medical control over the state of the cosmonauts' health was conducted throughout the flight.

(3) The link-up of spaceships achieved during their flight enabled the establishment of an orbital space station. The entire complex was "oriented and stabilized" in space.

Although there was no indication of the next Soviet space attempt, Tass said the results of the flight of Soyuz-4 and Soyuz-5 were of great importance for further perfection of space technology and would be used for the development of future piloted flights and the creation of orbital manned stations for scientific and economic purposes.

Orbital cosmic stations are known to be an essential part of Soviet plans for exploration of outer space. Col. Shatalov, was reported as saying at a news conference after his return to Earth, "The future lies with orbital stations made up of several ships. There is no point in bringing such a station to Earth. Orbit crews may be changed regularly."

"Orbiting Cosmodromes" In Space:

Two Soviet scientists said in Moscow on January 18 that the Soviet Union proposed to construct '"orbiting cosmodromes" in space.

The scientists Mr. Vladimir Siforov and Mr. Alexander Mikhailov stated that future cosmonauts would have the benefit of "perfectly equipped orbting cosmodromes and comfortable interplanetary hostels." Such a programme had been made possible by the docking of the two Soyuz spaceships.

"The achievement demonstrates that the building of interplanetary bases for the launching of the space vehicles, the rotation of crew and the replenishment of supplies is no longer a dream."

24-Hour Rhythm To Be Maintained By Spacemen:

Two physiologists writing in Pravda on January 16 said that Soviet spacemen would maintain the routine of a standard 24-hour day while in space, even though on an orbiting flight the day has 16 sunrises.

They said that the 24-hour rhythm of life on Earth had been developed by "generations of our ancestors. It is but natural that it is the most stable and acceptable for cosmonauts. This means that Soviet cosmonauts will sleep for eight hours during each 24 hours in space, and not for five hours, as some American scientists have recommended.

"Soviet cosmonauts will also sleep at the same time they would have slept had they remained on earth, despite the endless procession of 45-minute days and nights as they circle the globe. This too contrasts with the American practice. Astronauts do not always observe Cape Kennedy bedtimes when they are aloft.

"The 24-hour rhythm of physiological process ensures man's highest physical and mental activity while he is awake, and at the same time raises his stamina."

USSR Leads USA In Assembling Space Equipment:

Britain's leading space expert, Sir Bernard Lovell said in Manchester on January 16 that the link-up of the two Russian crafts gave the Soviet Union a four-year lead over the United States in assembling space equipment in orbit.

He said that if all went well with the Soviet programme "my guess is that the Americans will be looking rather small fry by the middle 1970's."

"The successful creation of a space platform leaves many options open to the Russians, both for scientific observations of the earth and universe and an intermediate stage for flights to the Moon and planets". He forecast that the Soviet Union would be building on the Moon observatories and crafts for planetary exploration by 1974 or 1975.

Meanwhile, in Washington, a leading NASA official, Dr. Edward Welsh, congratulated the Soviet Union, but claimed it had no great scientific value.

Another US space official said "it is inevitable that Russia will try to use space as a military operating arena."

The official, Lt-Gen. Samuel C. Philips added that "it would be tragic for our country to slow down its efforts or to fail to develop the technology that's essential for space operations".

Shots Fired At Cosmonauts:

At the Heroes' Reception to the four cosmonauts in Moscow on January 22, a mentally unbalanced person fired several shots as a motorcade led by the four cosmonauts was moving towards the Kremlin.

Cosmonaut Georgy Beregovoy, Commander of the space-craft Soyuz-3, was injured in the neck by a flying glass piece. The driver of another car was also wounded.

Confirming the shooting incident, a Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman said he had no details.

The attack took place shortly after 2 p.m., local time. The gunman, unidentified, was described as "schizophrenic."

Annual Report On US Space Activities:

In his annual report on US space activities presented to Congress January 17, President L. B. Johnson said that the Russians "could overtake and possibly surpass the USA," in space-flight.

He said the Apollo-8 flight around the Moon and back had "greatly enhanced the prestige of the United States as the leading space-faring nation." But he left to the President-elect, Mr. Richard Nixon, decisions on any great new programmes to follow the Apollo project.

This report gave the United States a wide lead over Russia in practical applications of space exploration, such as weather, communications and navigation satellites. and in contributions to science.

The report said that since space flight began some 11 years ago the United States had launched 606 spacecraft compared to 358 by Russia. At the end of 1968 the United States had amassed 3,214 man-hours in space, Russia 631. But in 1968, the Russians had lofted 81 spacecraft compared to 64 by the United States. In a section of the report, prepared by the National Aeronautics and Space Council, it was noted that at this rate the Russians could go ino the lead.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi Hails Soviet Achievement:

On January 17, the Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi hailed the latest Soviet space feat and said, "this is yet another wonderful achievement demonstrating the courage and vision of man and the accuracy and efficiency of the team-work of many scientists".

She added: "May the extension of the horizon of knowledge and man's control over his environment always be harnessed for the service and welfare of the masses of the world who still lack even the bare necessities of life".

C. UN Action Against Hijacking Of Commercial Aircraft—IATA Call: The International Air Transport Association (IATA) on January 14 called for UN action against hijacking of commercial aircraft.

In a message to the 103 member-airlines of the Association, its Director-General, Mr. Knut Hammarskjold, called for Government support to declare armed interference with scheduled service flights an international crime like piracy or genocide.

He also asked UN member-Governments to bring criminal charges against hijackers and those who committed similar offences.

He suggested that the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization be informed of such acts and that international commissions of inquiry with neutral chairmen investigate each such incident.

D. Jobs At UN Headquarters—Country-wise Analysis: A country-wise analysis of jobs at the UN Headquarters, made by the Indian External Affairs Ministry, shows that India is not the only country to have over-representation there. There are 15 other countries in a similar position.

The reasons, according to the analysis are mainly three. First certain initial advantages went to the middle-rung countries who joined UN in the first decade. Secondly, the countries where English or French or both are used extensively seem to have had an edge over other members of UN as these two languages predominate as media of business transaction. Thirdly, the availability of skill and job opportunities.

Among the 16 countries over-represented on the UN Headquarters staff, the UAR takes the top position as having slightly more than three times the number of jobs prescribed for it by the UN General Assembly.

India, Ethiopia, Czechoslovakia and Chile come next with slightly more than twice the range prescribed for them, while Pakistan, Ghana, Nigeria, Ceylon, Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand, Yugoslavia, Colombia, Ecuador and Syria come in the next category of over-representation, with their actual strength ranging from slightly-more-than-twice or twice the limit prescribed.

The analysis also shows that the permanent members—the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and Formosa—are under-represented so far as their quota is concerned, but they are adequately represented in higher echelons. The reason would appear to be that job opportunity for the ordinary UN post is not sufficiently attractive for these countries, while they have taken care to fill up higher posts either because of their political importance or because they were comparable to other jobs available in these countries.

[The Indian External Affairs Ministry undertook the country-wise analysis of UN jobs after reports appeared in certain American newspapers giving the impression that India was the only country to have secured UN jobs beyond the quota fixed for it. The reports appeared after an Indian was promoted to a high post in the political department at UN Headquarters, headed by an Under-Secretary-General in charge of political affairs, who is a Russian.]

The quota of UN jobs each member-nation can have was fixed by the UN General Assembly on a formula based primarily on the contributions which each country made towards UN finances. The other factors taken into account are said to be the population and potentialities and availability of skilled man-power.

Out of a total of 1,118 jobs at the UN Headquarters, the 16 over-represented countries between them hold 330 posts. But staff appointments during the last one year show that an effort is being made to correct the past imbalances. Representation of African nations has increased by 12 per cent during this period, while that of West European countries by 10 per cent.

The following table shows the so-called over-representation of 16 nations as on August 31, 1968:

Country	Prescribed Range	Actual staff position
Ethiopia	2 to 6	14
Ghana	2 to 7	14
Nigeria	3 to 8	14
UAR	5 to 8	25
Ceylon	2 to 7	14
India	26 to 31	65
Indonesia	7 to 10	17
Pakistan	8 to 10	17
Philippines	7 to 10	16
Thailand	3 to 7	19
Czechoslovakia	16 to 17	35
Yugoslavia	8 to 11	19
Chile	5 to 9	22
Colombia	5 to 8	16
Ecuador	2 to 6	12
Syria	2 to 6	11

E. Heart Transplantation Not A Complete Cure—Dr. C. Barnard's View: The South African surgeon, Dr. Christian Barnard told an international Medical Congress in Florence (Italy) on January 14 that heart transplants could help a patient, but not cure him completely.

He said heart transplant patients might live long, but even after many months they must reckon with resistance reaction; this threat was always there.

He said that so far resistance reactions of the body of heart transplant patients could be stopped only by pharmaceutical treatment. The main difficulty was not to suppress the body's resistance too much, because otherwise the patient might catch infections very easily.

BAHRAIN

A. New Aluminium Smelting Plant: The foundation stone for a £20-million sterling aluminium smelting plant—Bahrain's first major heavy industrial project—was laid in Bahrain early in December, 1968 by the Ruler, Sheikh Isa bin Sulman al-Khalifa.

The plant, with a capacity of nearly 60,000 tons annually, will also be the Arab world's first aluminium smelter. It will give much-needed work to nearly 500 Bahrainis.

Built by the Aluminium Consortium (ULBA), it is expected to be in full production in two years' time.

BURMA

A. Political Leaders In Advisory Board: The Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, announced in the first week of December, 1968 the inclusion of former political leaders in a Board which would advise the Government on key problems facing the country.

Observers saw in the announcement a major shift in the Government's policy. It set off speculation that big changes were contemplated.

The official Press had since come out with a statement that the board would be only an advisory body "which could offer suggestions on means of establishing internal unity as well as on political, social and economic problems."

On December 1 Gen. Ne Win called on these leaders to advise him on a national Constitution. (Burma's Constitution was suspended when Gen. Ne Win came to power in 1962 and all political parties were dissolved under the National Solidarity Law.)

In his meeting with the former Premier, U Nu, and leaders of the other defunct parties he invited advice on ideas for future betterment of the country's stability and prosperity.

Three days later, on December 4, 1968, he announced the establishment of what was officially described as the Internal Unity Advisory Board. U Win Maung was named Chairman of the Board. One of its major tasks would be to help the Revolutionary Council draw up a Constitution. Its work would also include advising the Council on establishing national unity and progress.

B. Nationalization Programme: The Government pushed through a new phase of Nationalization in early December, 1968 when it took over six large cinemas. There are 422 cinemas in the country.

The cinema houses were taken over under the Socialist Economy Construction Law.

The newspaper, Guardian, said: "Cinemas are public entertainment houses like other public utilities and they should belong to the people."

Soon afterwards, the Government started taking over saw mills. At the end of the month, 50 had been nationalized.

On December 16, 1968, the Government nationalized 168 industrial concerns in Rangoon and Mandalay.

An official announcement said that the take-over covered 60 textile concerns, 28 in foodstuffs, nine in engineering and two in enamel and ship-building, apart from 30 other assorted organizations.

The announcement did not say whether the Government was continuing its nationalization plan for industries in other towns.

CHINA

A. New Draft Constitution For Party: Copies of a document purported to be the draft of a new Constitution for the Communist Party have been circulated in the provinces.

According to reports from Hong Kong, where some copies have reached, the draft asserts that Mr. Mao Tse-tung has brought communism to "a brand new stage."

The new draft, which is to replace the 1956 Constitution, reflects Maoist thought. The preamble says that "the base platform of the Chinese party shall be to thoroughly overthrow the bourgeoisie" and "to defeat capitalism."

"The Chinese Communist Party shall take Marxism, Leninism and Mao's thought as its ideological foundation. Mao's thought is modern Marxism-Leninism which will drive imperialism to collapse and lead socialism to world-wide victory."

In contrast to the draft, the 1956 Party Constitution—which is a much more precise, legalistic and passionless document — never mentions Chairman Mao by name and pledges the party to the principle of "collective leadership."

In an unusual departure for a political party constitution, the draft specifically named the Defence Minister, Marshal Lin Piao as "comrade Mao's intimate fighting friend and successor."

The 1956 Constitution specifically expressed friendship for the Soviet Union, which was described as the leader of the socialist world. In contrast, the new draft said that the party "insists" that its members show "proletarian internationalism" in order to "bring down imperialism headed by the United States (and) modern revisionism headed by the Russian revisionist rebel group."

Background:

According to Richard Harris, The Times' specialist on China affairs, the draft was the work of Mr. Mao Tse-tung, first circulated at the time of the party plenum last October. It will be completed when the ninth Congress of the party meets, perhaps as early as February but certainly by the Spring—that is, if "difficult" provinces whose revolutionary committee are reluctant to send approved delegations to the Congress can be brought into line.

The seventh Congress of the party held in Yenan in 1945, was the first Congress after Mr. Mao Tse-tung won control of the Central Committee in 1935 and consolidated his "thoughts" as the guiding light of the party during the rectification campaign of 1942-43. In 1945, Mr. Mao Tse-tung's power and prestige were beyond dispute in a party that saw the chances of power looming not many years ahead. There was a reference to the thoughts of Mr. Mao Tse-tung along with Marxism-Leninism as the guiding line for the party.

But by 1956, when the eighth Congress was at last held, Mr. Liu Shao-chi and Mr. Teng Hsiao-ping held effective power at the head of this much expanded and powerful institution. The revised constitution that then emerged set forth in precise Articles the duties, responsibilities and organization of the party, and reverted to Marxism-Leninism alone as the guiding doctrine.

There followed in Mr. Teng's speech introducing the constitution, some carefully worded remarks about the cult of personality. Superficially, it was no more than an echo of Mr. N. Khruschev in his denunciation of Stalin six months previously, but to the Congress it was only too obviously a warning to the dominant personality in their midst. The Cultural Revolution and the new draft constitution which marks the "victory" of that Revolution are the reply from that very live personality.

The new constitution is vague about meetings of the upper organs of the party. "Under normal circumstances" the national party Congress will meet every five years, it says, ignoring the fact that the forthcoming Congress will follow 13 years after the last party Congress was elected. As for the Central Committee, which was intended to meet about every six months under the old constitution, there is no provision for regular meetings under the new one.

According to Mr. Harris, it is the political bureau to which all the power is reserved, and indeed, it is evident that in the past 10 years Mr. Mao Tse-tung has been unwilling to call meetings of the Central Committee which obviously failed to support him in 1962 and was not called again until 1966 when the Red Guards were out in force in Peking and a packed meeting, far outnumbering the regular members of the Committee, acclaimed Mr. Mao Tse-tung's 16 points of direction for the Cultural Revolution.

Nor does the new constitution set forth the rights of party members as the 1956 constitution did. The only exception is the right of a party member to appeal directly to the highest organs of the party if he finds himself disagreeing with the lower levels. The proposal is evidently included to ensure that if the party were again to fall under the dominance of "revisionists", a future Mao Tse-tung could again begin a revolution from below as Mr. Mao Tse-tung himself has done in the Cultural Revolution. Indeed, the new document may be said to hape been drawn up by a man who has completely disregarded almost all the Articles of the 1956 constitution which has evidently hampered his "style of work" from the beginning.

Observers have noted other differences between the old constitution and the new such as the definition in 1956 of "building socialism," while the new document assumes socialism to have been built but regards communism as a long way away. Again, where the 1956 constitution had a preamble setting forth economic policies, the new hardly mentions them beyond looking forward to progress in China in building socialism independently and to faster and better results—phrases which echo the slogans of of the "great leap forward" of 1958.

There is no mention either of policies towards minorities, nor any warning against Han (Chinese racial) chauvinism as there was in the 1956 document.

B. Intellectuals Asked To Remain In Villages: Peking Radio reported on January 11 a campaign to persuade the intellectuals sent from cities to remote rural areas to remain the "new socialist peasants for the rest of their lives."

The Radio said that with the help of People's Liberation Army men, peasants in Wenyuanyau Commune, Frenchen County, Inner Mongolia, were helping such intellectuals "fight a battle of thought, life and labour" to make them "love socialist rural villages."

Army men and peasants in the commune assisted the intellectuals in criticizing ex-President Liu Shao-chi's theory on "study to become officials," and his idea for students to stay in the cities divorced from labour.

The intellectuals had been made to realize that deciding on the matter of staying in rural areas for the rest of their lives was a measure of their loyalty to Mr. Mao Tse-tung or Mr. Liu. "Wavering stand on such an important matter means disloyalty to Chairman Mr. Mao."

The Radio said that "some of the intellectuals feared the fatigue and strain of working hard. Nor were they used to the rustic house, Kang (a hard brick bed), oil lamp, and the cooking of their own meal. An old peasant woman taught them cooking and brought them to eat the 'bitter memory meal' in peasants' homes so as to let them savour peasant life." As a result, the youths are getting firmer in their decision to remain peasants in the remote rural areas for the rest of their lives."

Mr. Mao Tse-tung had thrown his weight behind the campaign. A brief message from him had been splashed over the newspapers as the fervour of volunteering was brought to a peak. Civilians and soldiers in their hundreds of millions, according to Peking Radio, were all helping to whip up enthusiasm.

The "intellectuals" who were going were university graduates, senior high school graduates and sometimes 14 to 15-year-old junior school leavers, all soldiers of Mr. Mao Tse-tung who had hitherto provided the backbone of the Red Guard movement. They were part of the vast internal migration which the Cultural Revolution had brought to a peak previously unknown in China. When the Red Guards were called up in 1966, about 11,000,000 of them made their way to organized demonstrations in Peking. As many more went from one part of China to another "making revolution" against revisionist leaders in the Communist Party. At the same time there were the evacuees of the previous decade who had found rural life too much for them and who, under the excuse of "making revolution," sneaked back to their city homes. These youths too were being rounded up for a return to the village.

From the figures quoted in the press, sometimes for a provincial capital, sometimes for the towns in a district, or for a whole province, a rough figure of 10 million may be arrived at. By the time the campaign ends something like 15 million may have been shifted from town to country.

The campaign sets out to solve several problems. One is unemployment in the cities. In a country where parents and children are equally eager and serious about education there are simply not enough jobs for the educated, especially of the mandarin status, which survives in China as an ideal even if this now takes the form of the party official. It has, of course, been one of Mr. Mao Tse-tung's chief aims in the Cultural Revolution to demolish this status in fact and in imagination.

One obvious use for the "intellectuals" is to put them to the task of education. A timely reform being introduced all over China transfers the responsibility for all but higher education from the Government down to the commune. The midway unit of the production brigade —lying between the village level production team and the 50 or more villages of the commune itself—is being given more responsibility and may have the job of running junior schools.

C. Continued Detention Of British Journalist: A member of the staff of the Chinese Charge d' Affaires in London said on December 4, 1968 that Mr. Anthony Grey, the Reuter correspondent who had been detained in Peking for 16 months, would not be released until 13 New China News Agency employees were freed in Hong Kong.

He rejected a petition signed by some 2,800 London journalists, calling for Mr. Grey to be freed, but agreed to retain the signatures for further consideration.

The Hong Kong Government reacted strongly to the statement made by the Chinese mission in London. A Government spokesman accused the Chinese of changing their attempted justification for the solitary confinement imposed on Mr. Grey.

When he was first detained, the Chinese Foreign Ministry had claimed that this was an act of retaliation for the arrest of eight "Press workers" in Hong Kong, all of whom had since been released. But now China was linking Mr. Grey's case with that of the 13 journalists and newspaper employees who were arrested after the Reuter correspondent was put under house arrest.

D. American Firm's Bid To Pay Dues Ignored: The New York Times in a report date-lined Washington on January 1 said that the Chinese authorities had not accepted payment of about $600, 000 from the Radio Corporation of America—a balance built up over 18 years for such international communication services as telegrams and telephone calls.

The US Treasury had authorized the payment last Spring, after a State Department and White House policy decision. It would have been the largest dollar payment to China since the foreign assets control embargo of 1950, which prohibited transfer of US funds to Peking without a specific license.

The Johnson Administration had made the decision to free the funds to pay the communications bill without publicity, and officials were careful not to cast it in a political light at the time. No sales of equipment were involved and it was a debt clearly incurred by an American corporation, in many cases on behalf of citizens of other countries who had sent and received messages through RCA facilities.

Chinese representatives stated no reasons for not accepting the payment when it was offered to them. A US Government Note informing Peking that the funds were ready to be paid had gone unanswered. A spokesman for RCA said the offer remained open.

At the same time, the Chinese severed all tele-communications links with USA, which had been maintained but little noticed during the years of isolation and political hostility.

Warsaw Talks To Be Resumed:

Meanwhile the Chinese agreed to resume Ambassadorial talks with the United States in Warsaw on February 20, after a suspension of over a year.

In proposing that date, Peking issued a public call for an agreement with the United States on "principles of peaceful co-existence." One of the first foreign-policy judgments of the Nixon Administration on taking office on January 20 was how to respond in Warsaw to what remained a vague and baffling declaration.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Republic Day Celebrations; Mr. T. Zhivkov's Visit; Nehru Award Presentation; IDA Credit Resumed; Telengana Agitation; Kerala Land Reforms.

A. Republic Day—President's Broadcast: The 20th anniversary of the Indian Republic was celebrated throughout the country with greater eclat than in previous years—possibly with the economy looking up and record agricultural output. It was also celebrated by Indians abroad.

In New Delhi, as usual, the Parade of the Armed forces, students and Cultural pageants from different States were impressive. For the first time on view were two surface-to-air missiles.

President's Broadcast:

In a broadcast to the Nation on the eve of Republic Day (January 25), the President, Dr. Zakir Husain drew attention to the atmosphere of "angry discontent" pervading the country and said that labour unrest, student agitations and communal and linguistic conflicts were outward symptoms of the malaise.

He urged every Indian to search his heart to see why he only thought "of all the things that have not been done for us by others, of all the things done badly by others."

Stressing the need for self-discipline, he appealed to all—students, workers in fields and factories and employees in Government and private enterprises—to bear in mind the need for self-purification and self-discipline.

Nowhere, he said, was the need for self-discipline greater than among the students. Indiscipline among students was most dangerous because the youth of today, when it took over tomorrow, might be found wanting.

He appealed to students in particular to remember that "they must, in their own interest, learn to give duty the first place in their thoughts and actions." Duty was not dumb obedience, it was an active desire to fulfil obligations and responsibilities. The performance of duty was not dependent upon or subject to the grant of rights.

Nor did the President spare those in authority. They must, whether in the Government or outside, he said, remember that in the exercise of power they were subject to the authority of the moral law.

He also took note of the lags in India's attempts to achieve the clearly defined objectives in terms of a co-operative commonwealth steering clear of the evils of both capitalism and Statism. "As we measure our advance against the goals, we find that the movement for people's co-operation has been lagging far behind". This posed a grave threat to our society.

He also spoke of the improving agricultural and economic situation and referred to the new hope in agriculture which was still there in spite of the vagaries of the Monsoon and the floods last year. "I would, however, like to caution against too much talk of an Agricultural Revolution being round the corner. There were many imponderables in the situation which had to be tackled in all their manifold aspects if we are to ensure continuing self-sufficiency."

Dr. Husain concluded by repeating his appeal for inner discipline and moral authority in every field at every level. Must they, he asked, waste so much of the nation's scant energy on work at cross-purposes? Individual, loyalty "to our people and our State" alone could give strength to our national purpose.

World Leaders' Greetings:

World leaders greeted India on her 20th Republic Day.

Queen Elizabeth and Mr. Harold Wilson (British Premier) expressed the hope that the friendly ties between Britain and India would continue to grow in strength.

In a formal message, President Ayub Khan (Pakistan) conveyed to the Government and people of India the felicitations of the Government and people of Pakistan.

In a message to Mrs. Gandhi, the Soviet Premier, Mr. A. Kosygin, expressed confidence that relations between the two countries would be developed and strengthened.

The US President, Mr. Richard Nixon, and the Soviet President, Mr. Nikolai Podgorny, in Republic Day messages to the President, Dr. Zakir Husain expressed the hope that friendship between their countries and India would grow in strength in the interest of world peace.

Among the large number of world leaders who sent their greetings were the North Viet-Namese President, Dr. Ho Chi-Minh, and the South Viet-Namese President, Mr. Nguyen Van Thieu.

President Ho wished the Indian people prosperity and happiness and hoped that the friendship between the people of India and Viet-Nam would be "further consolidated and developed day by day."

President J. B. Tito of Yugoslavia, the West German President, Dr. Heinrich Luebke, the Irish President Dr. De Valera, the Czechoslovak President, Mr. Ludvik Svoboda, Queen Juliana of the Netherlands, King Baudouin of Belgium, the Singapore President, Mr. Inche Yusof Bin Ishak, and the Polish President, Mr. Marian Spychalski, were among the Heads of States who sent messages to President Zakir Husain.

National Awards:

Eighty-nine scientists, educationists, administrators, industrialists, journalists, film producers and artists were honoured by the President with national awards on Republic Day.

The Nobel Prize winner, Dr. Hargobind Khorana, is among the five on whom the Padma Vibhushan, the second highest award for "exceptional and distinguished service in any field" was conferred.

For the third year in succession, the highest award Bharat Ratna was not conferred on anyone this year. The late Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri was given this award posthumously in 1966.

Recipients of Padma Bhushan included Mr. Prithvi Raj Kapoor, Dr. V. K. Narayana Menon, (former Director-General of All-India Radio and noted musicologist) and Mr. Naval Tata, industrialist.

A number of social workers and noted physicians and surgeons were among those who were honoured with Padma Shri.

Mr. Shri Chand Chhabra, President of the New Delhi Municipal Committee, who has played a leading role in giving a new look to the Capital, headed the list of recipients of Padma Shri from Delhi. Mrs. Indrani Rehman, (dancer) was also honoured.

The following are the Awards:

B. Mr. T. Zhivkov's Visit: The Prime Minister of Bulgaria, Mr. Todor Zhivkov, accompanied by Mrs. Zhivkov, paid a State Visit to India from January 22 to 27. They witnessed the Republic Day Parade in New Delhi on January 26.

At the end of his visit on January 27, a joint communique was issued by Mrs. Indira Gandhi and Mr. T. Zhivkov in which Mr. Zhivkov expressed appreciation of India's efforts to normalize relations with Pakistan on the basis of the Tashkent Declaration and "hoped that India and Pakistan will resolve all their differences through direct bilateral discussions."

It said that the Prime Ministers of India and Bulgaria considered the cessation of the bombing of North Viet-Nam and the commencement of negotiations in Paris as positive, though initial, steps in the political solution of the Viet-Nam problem by peaceful means.

They expressed the hope that the people of Viet-Nam would soon find it possible to decide their own future in peace and without interference from any side.

The two Prime Ministers were of the opinion that the Arab-Israeli situation continued to be fraught with danger to world peace, and expressed their grave concern at the continuing delay in resolving this problem.

They considered that it was necessary for all parties concerned to cooperate fully in reaching a peaceful settlement in accordance with the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967.

They re-iterated their conviction that peace could not be maintained unless the aggressor was denied the fruits of his military conquests.

C. Nehru Award Presentation: The Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding for 1966, posthumously conferred on the American Negro civil rights leader, Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, was presented to Mrs. Coretta King (wife of Dr. King) by the President, Dr. Zakir Husain in New Delhi on January 24.

[The award was instituted by the Government of India in 1965.]

Mrs. King accepted the award "as a tribute to a well-fought fight in progress" of Negroes, activists among whom Dr. King fondly referred to as his "ground crew."

The citation said that Dr. King's years in the land were only 39. "In that brief span of time, briefer than the flutter of a bird's wing when measured against eternity, he accomplished a moral and social revolution of Himalayan dimensions and significance, by not only taking the people of his race, the American Negroes, far up the road to equality but, even more important, by arousing the moral conscience of a whole continent....

"Dr. Martin Luther King's immediate cause was the American Negro, but his appeal and plea were directed to all men everywhere. He had said 'Sooner or later all the people of the world will have to discover a way to live together in peace and thereby have to discover a way to life together in peace and thereby transform this pending cosmic elegy into a creative psalm of brotherhood... Non-violence, the answer to the Negroes' need, may become the answer to the most desperate need of all humanity."

Presenting the award, the President, Dr. Zakir Husain pointed out that though principally identified with the struggle of his own people—even as Mahatma Gandhi was—Dr. Martin Luther King had a heart and mind which reached far beyond the bounds of race, colour or creed.

Dr. Husain added: "He had an acute social consciousness and it was natural that with his dedication to non-violence, he should be passionately attached to the cause of peace. He died, like Mahatma Gandhi, a symbol of faith in peace and goodwill amid rising fires of hate and violence."

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, pointed out that the award was the "highest tribute our nation can bestow on work for understanding and brotherhood among men." It was named after a man who, all his life, laboured passionately for freedom, for justice and for peace in India and throughout the world. Dr. Martin Luther King's struggle was for these same values. He paid for his ideals with his blood, forging a new bond among the brave and the conscientious of all races and all nations.

In reply, Mrs. King said: "To the great task ahead, I humbly re-dedicate my life with a song of praise upon my lips and a prayer of Thanksgiving in my heart. I quote one of our great Black poets, James Weldon Johnson:

"God of our weary years,
God of our silent tears,
Thou who hast brought us thus far on the way,
Thou who hast by Thy Might led us into Thy Light,
Keep us forever in the path, we pray,
Let our feet not stray from the places, our God, where we met Thee;
Lest our hearts, drunk with the wine of the world we forget Thee.
Shadowed beneath Thy Hand, may we forever stand,
True to our God, True to our Native Land."

Postage Stamp In Honour Of Dr. King: A special postage stamp in honour of Dr. Martin Luther King, was released in New Delhi on January 25.

After receiving the first set of stamps from the Central Minister for Communications, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, Mrs. King said that India was honouring not only her husband but also all black people of America and the movement which Dr. King led for non-violent social change.

Noting that the stamp would be sold not only in India but all over the world, Mrs. King said: "May the stamp remind mankind everywhere of the man who stood for noble ideas of justice, equality, peace and brotherhood so that a new humanity can be borne.

"The stamp may also carry throughout the world the message of goodwill and love, and encourage all humanity to fight for the reduction of poverty and advancement of civilization."

I. Telengana Agitation: There were demonstrations by Telangana students in December 1968 and January 1969 in Hyderabad and some others parts of the Telengana area of Andhra Pradesh— one section demanding the creation of a separate Telengana State and another section demanding greater share of Government jobs for the people of Telengana. There were clashes between the two sections of students. The police used lathis and tear-gas to disperse the demonstrators.

On January 18 and 19, the Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, convened a meeting of leaders of all political parties in the State at which agreement was reached on the students' demands and the implementation of safeguards provided for Telengana at the time of the formation of Andhra Pradesh in 1956.

Announcing the Agreement, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy said that he was happy that the leaders had supported the several steps contemplated in regard to the implementation of Telengana safeguards. "This clearly shows," he said, "that in regard to the need to achieve full integration of Andhra Pradesh there is perfect unanimity. In view of this I appeal to all concerned to call off their agitation and help maintain a peaceful and cordial atmosphere."

The Chief Minister, his colleagues and nominees of the Congress Party, Swatantra, CPI, CPI(M), SSP, Majlis, Jana Sangh, Independents and others, in an agreed statement, reiterated their decision to do nothing "which would in any way lead to fissiparous tendencies in our society."

The Agreement envisaged the appointment of a senior officer of the rank of an Accountant-General by the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India to decide the quantum of Telengana surpluses before the end of February 1969 and the relieving of all non-domicile persons from posts in Telengana and providing jobs for them in the rest of the State.

The posts rendered vacant by relieving all non-domicile persons would be filled by "qualified candidates" possessing domicile qualifications or would be left unfilled till qualified candidates became available. Those non-domicile persons would be provided employment in the Andhra region without break in service and by creating supernumerary posts if necessary. Two senior officers would be appointed to implement this decision "immediately and effectively."

The Telengana surplus would be determined subject to the principles that (1) the existing method of allocation of expenditure and receipts to either region would continue; (2) that Telengana surpluses for each year would be computed by adding to the net revenue surplus of Telengana region of that year, the difference between one-third of the total expenditure of the State in that year and the actual capital expenditure in the Telengana region in that year; (3) that all statutory and other boards except the State Electricity Board were to be treated as if they were State-wide Government departments for purposes of computing Telengana surpluses; and, (4) that the Industrial Trust Fund would continue to be utilized as before.

The Telengana surpluses so determined would be fully utilised for development of Telengana region during the next five years. A half-yearly review of expenditure in the Telengana region would be undertaken by the Government and copies of such review would be furnished to the regional committees and members of the legislature.

Another important point of agreement was that steps would be taken to afford better educational opportunities to students "irrespective of region" in the capital city of Hyderabad with effect from the ensuing academic year.

The Government would immediately file an appeal in the High Court against its judgment regarding the non-applicability of the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment Act and Rules to Andhra Pradesh State Electricity Board. Simultaneously, the State Government would move the Government of India to make the provisions of the above Act applicable to all statutory or other corporations financed by the Government for purposes of employment.

While the State Government would follow the integrated common gradation lists of Andhra and Telengana approved by the Government of India in all other cases, the provisional lists being followed by the State Government would continue to be followed, pending approval of the Centre.

Agitation:

The police fired on pro-Telengana demonstrators in Sadasivpat in Medak district on January 24.

Five students were injured in the firing which became necessary when a 1,000 strong student crowd "gheraoed" a sub-inspector and became violent. As a sharp reation to the pro-Telengana agitation, students of Andhra and Sri Venkateshwara Universities went on strike to observe "Andhra Rights Protection Day" on January 24.

Students also abstained from classes in Visakhapatnam, West Godavari, Guntur, Anantapur and other districts and took out processions decrying the separate Telengana agitation.

Agitation Suspended:

The Action Committee of the Osmania University students demanding a separate Telengana announced its decision on January 25 to "suspend" its ten-day-old strike and to have hunger-strikes by students in relays.

Andhra Students' Counter-demand:

While the nine-day-old strike of the "safeguards" faction in the Osmania University Students Union was called off, students of Andhra and Sri Venkateswara Universities called for an indefinite strike from Feb. 10 to "protect the interests of Andhra."

The Joint Action Council set up by the students of the two universities also called for the observance of "Andhra Rights Protection Day" on January 24.

But the extremist "Separate Telengana" faction of Osmania University re-iterated its decision to continue the agitation.

One person from Andhra region was killed and two were wounded on January 27 when the police fired to disperse an 800-strong mob demonstrating in front of the Nagarjunasagar police station in Nalgonda district in the Telengana region. Thirteen members of the police force were injured by stones hurled by the mob.

On January 29, the Army was called out in Vijayawada, Hyderabad Warangal, Guntur and Kodad to help civil authorities maintain law and order.

Vijayawada, which observed a strike in protest against the alleged ill-treatment of Andhras in the Telengana region, remained tense throughout the day.

A ban on assemblies, meetings and processions was ordered in Vijayawada where tension mounted as over 100 Andhra families arrived from Warangal. Mahaboobabad, Khammam and Kothagudem in the Telengana region.

Three persons were reported killed when the police fired in Kodad, a small village in the Telengana border area on the Hyderabad-Vijayawada trunk road, to chase away some lorry loads of people from Vijayawada who attempted to enter the village, allegedly to cause damage.

Official reports said the police failed to disperse the mob by lathi-charge. Two persons were said to have been injured in the police firing.

The Collector of Krishna district announced that the district authorities had set in motion a machinery to give necessary assistance like food and transport to families arriving at Vijayawada from Telengana.

Tension was sparked by the death on January 28 of Mr. Rangacharyulu, Deputy Surveyor of the Survey Department, as a result of extensive burns sustained by him at Nagaland in the Telengana region. Miscreants had poured petrol on Mr. Rangacharyulu and set fire to his clothes.

Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy Rules Out Separate Telengana:

Addressing college students in Vijayawada on January 24, the Andhra Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, ruled out the idea of a Telengana State which, he said, could not be viable.

He referred to the "Gentleman's Agreement" entered into at the time of the formation of Andhra Pradesh and said he was merely honouring it. He appealed to students to desist from agitation.

J. Regional Imbalances In Jammu & Kashmir—Gajendragadkar Commission's Report: The Gajendragadkar Commission, appointed on November 6, 1967 to inquire into complaints of regional imbalances in Jammu, Kashmir and Ladakh, in its report submitted on December 6, 1968 suggested adoption of a convention by the Jammu and Kashmir Cabinet of appointing a Deputy Chief Minister belonging to a region other than that of the Chief Minister.

The report said that the number of Cabinet Ministers belonging to the Valley and the Jammu region should be equal. It also suggested appointment of a full-fledged Cabinet Minister belonging to Ladakh.

It recommended establishment of a statutory State Development Board and regional development boards for the Jammu, Kashmir and Ladakh regions to supervise implementation of Plan programmes.

It said that the demand for regional autonomy could not be accepted. It noted with satisfaction that no party or individual with the exception of one had suggested division of the State or creation of a sub-State within the State. It did not consider it advisable to recommend abrogation of Article 370 of the Indian Constitution guaranteeing a special status to the State.

It recommended two full-fledged universities for Jammu and Srinagar and provision of law classes in the proposed Jammu University. A new medical college in Jammu was also suggested as also a regional engineering college for Jammu, if need arose.

Special recommendations were made for the development of Ladakh district: two colleges in both tehsils, adequate transport and arrangements for travellers at the Kargil halting station en route to Leh, power supply to Leh, Kargil and other important places.

The different regions, it added, should have adequate representation in the Development Board. The Chief Minister or the Planning Minister should head the regional boards which should consist of legislators of the region, economists, experts and the officials concerned.

It said that from the evidence before it, "we do not think we would be justified in concluding that the State Government has deliberately discriminated against either Jammu or Ladakh."

[The Commission's terms of reference were, among others, to examine generally and comprehensively complaints of regional imbalances in development programmes and recruitment policies, examine causes that led to irritations and tensions in the different regions of the State and to recommend remedial measures. It received 93 memoranda and examined about 100 representatives at Srinagar and Jammu.]

Share Of Government Jobs:

The Gajendragadkar Commission in its report released on January 19 held that any recommendation for fixing quotas for recruitment to Government service on a purely regional basis would be ultra vires the Constitution which was applicable to Kashmir State.

A study of the Commission's report showed that it had rejected outright the Government's rule that 50 per cent of posts should be filled by Muslims from the entire State and 40 per cent by Hindus from Jammu.

The Commission was asked to suggest measures for giving an equitable share in Government employment to various regions and communities, paying due regard to the claims of scheduled castes and other economically, educationally and socially backward communities, castes and groups.

After rejecting both communal and regional yardsticks for the distribution of jobs, the Commission conceded that the problem of identifying backward classes was not easy. It, therefore, suggested the appointment of a high-power Commission to determine which class of citizens was backward.

The Commission noted that the Muslim share was appreciably less than what it should be on the basis of the population. The Jammu region's share was only 36.1 per cent, though it constituted 44.2 per cent, of the State's population. The annual in-take of Buddhists from Ladakh in Government service had also fallen. The share of Sikhs was more than what it should be on the basis of population. The report was silent on the representation of Kashmiri Pandits.

Special Status Of Kashmir To Be Retained:

The Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, asserted in the Lok Sabha on December 6, 1968 that it was not in the interest of anybody to abrogate at the present stage Article 370 of the Constitution which conferred a special status on Kashmir State.

Intervening to explain the Government's stand on a resolution moved by Mr. A. B. Vajpayee (JS), which sought to end "the present anomalous status of Jammu and Kashmir State." Mr. Chavan urged that one had to be realistic and not merely sentimental in such matters. "I have no doubt," he said, "that the destinies of India and Kashmir are identical, but, at the same time, let us not be unrealistic and ask for the abrogation of Article 370." That Article served as a bridge between the Indian Constitution and the State of Kashmir. "Do we want to break that bridge?" It was through the instrumentality of that Article that various Acts of the Indian Union had been extended to that State.

The Home Minister conceded that there were certain psychological problems and the process of integration—not only in regard to Kashmir but also in respect of other parts of the country—was not yet complete. That called for patient work over a long time with understanding and giving others a sense of participation.

K. Kerala Land Reforms Bill: A major point of friction between the Government of India and the Kerala Government was resolved with the decision of the Central Government on January 24 to give concurrence to the controversial Kerala Land Reforms (Amendment) Bill.

The Bill had run into difficulty because of strong objections raised by the Commerce Ministry to some of its clauses relating to plantation areas. The State Government had agreed to slightly modify the Bill to meet these objections.

The Kerala Revenue Minister, Mrs. Gowri Thomas, specially visited New Delhi to dispel the misgivings of the Central Government about the legislation now before a Select Committee of the State Assembly. She had detailed talks with the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan and met representatives of the Commerce Ministry. The discussions helped to clarify the position of the Kerala Government and resulted in an agreement.

The Kerala Land Reforms (Amendment) Bill was introduced in the State Legislature on September 25, 1968. Although the Planning Commission had approved the Bill the concurrence was withheld because of opposition from the Commerce Ministry.

The Bill seeks to fix for each family a ceiling of 12 standard acres of agricultural land as against 15 standard acres previously. The ceiling for individuals is 1-½ standard acres, while there is no ceiling on plantations. Areas under pepper and cashewnut cultivation are being brought within the purview of the Bill.

The Commerce Ministry had insisted that 20 per cent of the agricultural areas within the plantation should be reserved for expansion of these plantations. It has now been agreed that if there is any agricultural land within a plantation and if it is required for expansion, the matter should be referred to the State Land Board. If the Board decides that the area should go to the plantation, then the tenants can be evicted from there.

L. Haryana Assembly—Governor's Address: Addressing the opening session of the Haryana Legislative Assembly in Chandigarh on January 28, the Governor of the State, Mr. B. N. Chakravarty, said that a scheme approved by the International Development Association (IDA) for flood control in the Ghaggar and Western Yamuna tracts would be undertaken during the Fourth Plan period.

The provision for flood control measures during the current year he said, had been increased from Rs. 82,50,000 to Rs. 1,46,50,000. Schemes were also being prepared to impound flood waters for use for irrigation purposes.

Damage to crops and loss of property due to floods during the last Monsoon had been estimated at Rs. 6.88 crores. The entire Kharif crop was seriously affected by the drought which followed the floods.

The Government's price support policy, which had contributed in part to the phenomenal increase in food production, especially of wheat, would be continued. In all 2,08,000 tonnes of wheat was purchased—40,000 tonnes for the State reserve and the rest for the Central pool. About 1,11,000 tonnes of rice had been procured out of the target of 1,50,000.

In the industrial field, the salient feature was the growth of an industrial complex around Delhi at Faridabad, Ballabgarh, Bahadurgarh and Sonepat.

About 120 new buses would be added to the existing fleet of 693 buses of the Haryana Roadways.

Tourist centres were proposed to be set up near Badkhal Lake, Suraj Kund, Sohna, Pinjore, Tajewala, Hathini Kund and Kalesar.

The milk plant in the public sector at Jind was expected to be commissioned by the end of November, 1969 at an estimated cost of Rs. 60,00,000. An ambitious road construction programme under the village road co-operative scheme had been started to meet the demands of rural areas.

M. Hindi Becomes Haryana's Official Language: It was announced in Chandigarh on January 23 that Hindi would become the official language of Haryana from January 26.

N. Mr. K. Subba Rao Pleads For Retention Of English: Addressing the Non-Hindi States' Conference in Coimbatore on January 26, the former Chief Justice of India, Mr. K. Subba Rao, said that the English language should continue to be an official language along with Hindi till such time as all States, through a referendum separately held, agreed to give up English.

He demanded that the Official Language Act of 1963, as amended by the Act of 1968, be amended again by introducing a clear provision that English should also continue till such time as all States agreed to do away with it.

He wanted both English and the regional languages as the language of the administration. The English language should be included in the VIII Schedule of the Constitution as one of the languages of the country. The regional language should be the sole medium of instruction in schools excepting for science subjects. English should be made a compulsory subject of serious study from the beginning of the secondary school stage.

He suggested the introduction of the three-language formula in all educational institutions. Even if the regional language should replace English as the medium of instruction, English should be taught in colleges as a special subject up to the completion of the university course.

O. New Pay Structure For Gujarat State Employees: The Gujarat Chief Minister, Mr. Hitendra Desai, announced in Ahmedabad on January 23 that nearly 127,000 Gujarat Government employees would get an increase ranging from Rs. 6 to Rs. 78 following the acceptance by the State Government of most of the recommendations of the Pay Commission.

The benefit, he said, would also be available to nearly 1,00,000 teachers and 32,000 employees of panchayats.

The new pay structure would be brought into force from June 1, 1967.

The additional burden on the State exchequer following the increase was likely to be of about Rs. 6 crores in the initial stages. It would rise to Rs. 8.28 crores ultimately. In the Fourth Plan period the burden would be about Rs. 40.84 crores.

P. More DA For Haryana State Employees: The Haryana Government revised on January 22 the pay-scale of more than 50,000 employees following the acceptance of the recommendations of the Pay Revision Committee.

Announcing the new scales at a news conference, the Chief Minister, Mr. Bansi Lal, said that the Government had accepted in full the recommendations of the Pay Committee.

He said that the new grades would cost the exchequer an additional Rs. 2 crores a year and be effective from February 1, 1969.

All categories of Government employees, except teachers and police personnel who had already been given enhanced pay, would benefit from the revision. The number of scales had been reduced from 500 to 100.

Q. More DA For Andhra State Employees: The Andhra Pradesh Government sanctioned on January 18 an additional dearness allowance to its employees with effect from February 1, 1969, to cover the ten-point rise in the cost of living index, as was done by the Central Government. The additional expenditure involved in this is Rs. 4.2 crores.

The DA rise ranges from Rs. 6 for those drawing below Rs. 110 to Rs. 11 to those drawing between Rs. 400 and 500. The village officers will get Rs. 1.50 more. Fifty per cent of the additional DA will be paid in cash and the remaining credited to the Employees' Provident Fund.

The increase in DA will apply to all categories of employees, who were covered by the previous rise in dearness allowance.

The last increase in DA was made in June, 1968 involving an expenditure of Rs. 4.2 crores. There was also an increase of DA in January, 1968, which resulted in an additional expenditure of Rs. 8.4 crores.

S. Corruption Charges Against Orissa Ministers — Khanna Commission's Findings: The one-man Commission of Mr. H. R. Khanna, a Judge of the Delhi High Court, appointed to probe into charges which included corruption, misappropriation and personal gain against those who held office in the Congress administration in Orissa between 1961 and 1967, has found that 12 charges of administrative improprieties and abuse of office have been established against two former Chief Ministers, Mr. Biju Patnaik and Mr. Biren Mitra, and a former Minister, Mr. Harihar Singh Mardaraj.

Against the other 12 Ministers and Deputy Ministers in the State Cabinets between 1961 and 1967, the Commission found "nothing questionable in the matter of their conduct."

The Commission's report itself was not released. Only a statement from the Chief Minister's Secretariat on the report was distributed to newsmen by the Home Secretary, Mr. B. B. Rath on January 17. He declined to be drawn into a discussion.

The statement said that the report would be placed before the Cabinet for deciding the follow-up action and only thereafter it was evident that 58 of the 70 counts enumerated in the notification and affirmed through affidavits against the former Ministers had fallen through. The commission found there was nothing questionable "in the matter of all other charges."

In issuing the statement (which was more or less a summary of Mr. Khanna's findings), the Chief Minister's Secretariat has ignored Mr. Biju Patnaik's demand on January 16 that the report should be released in toto to the Press and not a summary as the Government being a party its summary might not be impartial. Mr. Patnaik had warned that such a summary might give rise to a cause of action against the Government.

Mr. Justice Khanna, after analysing exhaustively all aspects of the sale of the low-shaft furnace by Mr. Patnaik's Kalinga Industries to the State-owned Industrial Development Corporation after Mr. Patnaik became Chief Minister, came to the finding that "the position as it emerges is that Mr. Patnaik was able to get rid of and sell to the Corporation the furnace which, in his words, was uneconomical, and retain for his company the mining lease for the retention of which he was so keen that he had to file a writ petition in the High Court. Even the low-shaft furnace and the mining lease were admitted by him to be linked together."

The Commission found that tubular trusses of the value of Rs. 77,91,000 had been purchased by various Orissa Government departments from Kalinga Industries after Mr. Biju Patnaik had assumed office. The normal procedure of inviting tenders had not been followed in placing most of the orders with this firm of which Mr. Patnaik's wife was Chairman after he became Chief Minister. The demand for trusses was made to synchronize with the number of such trusses offered by Kalinga Industries on the ground that it would be necessary to stockpile them. "This course was personally approved by Mr. Biju Patnaik as Chief Minister. The whole official machinery moved in such a manner as to reveal an attitude that the offer made by Kalinga Industries had to be accepted in its entirety."

Discussing the charge of administrative and financial irregularities in the construction of Paradeep port, it observed that even according to Mr. Biju Patnaik, the normal administrative and financial rules were directed to be suspended for the completion of the project within the scheduled time. The Commission held that this was "indiscreet."

It came to the conclusion that the reduction of the premium by Mr. Patnaik from Rs. 400 to Rs. 100 per acre on land which was leased out to the Orissa Textile Mills was "an act of administrative impropriety." The fact that the pecuniary benefit derived by Mr. Patnaik and members of his family from this reduction was less than Rs. 1,000 would be a mitigating circumstance, "but it would not completely efface or undo the act of administrative impropriety."

Mr. Biju Patnaik and Mr. Harihar Singh Mardaraj, a former Minister, were found to have adopted an "unusual and abnormal procedure" to favour a contractor, Mr. G. C. Kanungo, by giving him contract work worth Rs. 10,00,000 even though his tender was the highest. There was only one finding—"pecuniary benefits by the abuse of office."

The Commission found that Mrs. Waswaramma Mitra, wife of the former Chief Minister, Mr. Biren Mitra, had an income of Rs. 69,000, in the year just prior to the assumption of office (as Deputy Commissioner) by her husband, as proprietress of Orissa Agents. It rose to Rs. 1,29,000 in the assessment year 1962-63, and to Rs. 6,99,000 in the next assessment year. The State Government's business deals with this firm mainly accounted for this increase in Mrs. Mitra's income. Most of the orders were placed with this firm without inviting tenders.

The Commission found that the Kalinga Engineering Works, another concern in which Mrs. Mitra had a financial interest, had also been favoured with orders "because of the interest of Mrs. Mitra in that concern."

It held that the appointment of Mr. Krupanidhi Naik as Government pleader was "arbitrary and a clear act of favouritism."

It found that Mr. Brundaban Naik, a former Minister, had shown favour to a firm in which he had an interest in the matter of an order for spun pipes of the value of Rs. 1,50,000. This allegation had been "proved."

The one redeeming feature in Mr. Mitra's case, it said, was that his wife had closed the trading concern Orissa Agents, before he became Chief Minister. "This gesture, however, could not efface and wipe out all that had been done in the past."

Mr. B. Patnaik's Rejoinder:

Mr. Biju Patnaik, former Chief Minister of Orissa, charged the Orissa Government on January 16 with "gross abuse of power and impropriety" in not releasing the full report of the Khanna Commission, which had inquired into corruption charges against the former Congress Ministers.

Mr. Patnaik contended that the summary of the report, as released by the State Government, gave a biased version of the Commission's findings.

At a news conference in New Delhi, he accused the Swatantra Party and its Government in the State of deliberately suppressing the release of the entire report, which, he claimed, had summarily held their attempts at character assassination to ridicule.

He pointed out that in deference to the Commission's findings, the transactions between the State Government and the companies promoted by him should be reversed and status quo restored. The Kalinga iron plant with its expansion project should be returned to the company on exactly the same terms and conditions on which the original plant was transferred to the Government Corporation. "The national loss of less than Rs. 1,000 as claimed by the State Government on account of some land for Orissa Textile Mills could easily be reclaimed from me, if they so desired."

He asked: "Can any one tell me how in the absence of corruption, misconduct, fraud, negligence, nepotism, illegalities, wastage and misappropriation of the funds of the State, the word 'impropriety' or 'abuse of power' becomes a guilt."

Mr. Biju Patnaik, a former Chief Minister of Orissa, claimed next day (January 17) that the Khanna Commission had absolved him and his former Cabinet colleagues of the charges of corruption, misappropriation of public funds and amassing of huge wealth by misuse of authority.

In a statement, he said that even a few odd cases of administrative imprudence, lapse or impropriety out of thousands of actions taken by the Congress Government, such as were also recorded by the Cabinet sub-committee, had not been categorized by the Commission as involving mala fide or moral turpitude.

He demanded the immediate publication of the report of the Commission in full so that the public would be enabled to make a proper judgment of the conduct of his Ministry.

He also demanded the publication of the report of the Mudholkar Commission which had gone into the charges made against the present State Government headed by Mr. R. N. Singh Deo.

He alleged that the publication of this report was being deliberately suppressed despite the Orissa High Court's observation that there was no bar to the discussion of the report in the State Assembly.

He claimed that the Khanna Commission had castigated the Orissa Government on various counts including proferring various flimsy charges against us. "Now that the Khanna Commission report is out, we are actively considering taking suitable legal action against the State Government and its leaders and others who have ceaselessly indulged in character-assassination of the leaders of the Congress Party in Orissa."

V. Pre-Harappan Culture Discovered In Rajasthan: It was disclosed in Jaipur on January 5 that a two-phased microlithic culture of the pre-Harappan age had been discovered at Bagor in the Bhilwara district of Rajasthan.

The excavation, carried out jointly by the Deccan College Post-Graduate and Research Institute of Poona and Rajasthan's Department of Archaeology, brought to light the types of tools used by man of the food-gathering and food-producing age like blunted black blades, and obliquely-blunted blades. These tools belonged to the age when man gathered food and produced food—much older than the Harappan civilization.

An extended human burial, belonging to this phase, was also found at the site. The body was placed roughly in an east-west direction with the head towards the west. All bones except the vertebrae, pelvis and right fibulus were present. The skull had been much damaged, possibly due to the weight of the overlying debris.

As many as eight successive floors paved with undressed stones and pebbles were also found. The stones were often closely packed for making a compact floor. No floor, however, could be exposed to its full dimensions. Large quantities of animal bones and teeth, many hammerstones and mullers were found on the floors.

Other notable finds were a cylindrical vase, a cache of microliths and the lower part of the broken pot containing microliths mixed with sand.

IRAQ

A. Spies Hanged: On January 27, eleven persons convicted of spying for Israel by the Revolutionary Court the previous evening were hanged in Liberation Square in Baghdad.

Baghdad Radio had announced earlier that 15 Iraqis who had been spying for Israel were hanged on January 17. They included nine Jews.

It told the people to regard the day as a national holiday, and people all over the city left their work to march past the gallows in Liberation Square.

The national leadership of the ruling Arab Ba'ath Socialist Party in Iraq said that the day was "the day of the real march along the way of the long struggle".

Mr. Salah Omar al-Ali, who addressed the crowds in Liberation Square on behalf of the leadership, said that a new era was beginning with this "crushing blow" to the spies.

Today, he said, marked "the end of the era of traitors, hirelings, loiterers at the gates of embassies and insignificant Governments. Here begins the era of the struggling people who put the traitors, loiterers and hirelings in their proper place on the scaffold. What had happened today was only a small fulfilment of the great pledge made by the revolution leaders that no spy shall live on Iraqi soil after this day".

The 15 executed were: Zera Nagi Zalkha, Albert Habib Thomas, Fouad Gabbal, Jamal Sabih el Hakim, Yacoub Bourji Damerji, Daoud Haskil Barouk, Daud Ghali, Haskil Saleh Haskil, Sabah Haim, Naim Khouroudi Helale, Abdel Mohsen Jarallah, Zaki Andro Yoto, Carlos Raphael Haouche, Theodore Raphael Haouche and Abdel Hussein Mohamed el Haje.

Mr. L. Eshkol's Reaction:

Israel's Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, bitterly accused the "world conscience" of turning a deaf ear to complaints about persecution of Jews in Arab countries.

In a solemn mourning session of the Knesset (Parliament), Mr. Eshkol referred to Iraq by its ancient Biblical name of Babylon. "The blood of the innocent martyrs of Babylon cries out to us and to the world from Iraqi soil".

He revealed that the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, as well as other personalities had appealed to the Iraqi rulers some time ago in a bid to save the lives of those hanged.

U Thant Expresses Concern:

The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, and the US Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, expressed their concern on January 27 at the execution of the 15 Iraqis in Baghdad on charges of spying for Israel.

In an unusually strong statement U Thant said he feared that "the repercussions from this unhappy development will impede efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the West Asian problem".

A UN spokesman said that on January 13, U Thant had called in the Iraqi Ambassador, Mr. Adnan Raouf and requested him to convey his "deep concern" to the Baghdad Government at the trial of the alleged spies.

The Secretary-General, he said, drew particular attention to the impact they would have on public opinion both inside and outside Iraq. The Secretary-General had expressed the view yesterday that "mass trials and executions are always to be deplored and are particularly abhorrent and dangerous when they are carried out in such a way as to inflame the emotions of the populace."

The Iraqi Ambassador, Mr. Adnan Raouf, spent 30 minutes in U Thant's office and a statement issued afterwards by the Iraqi delegation to UN said that Mr. Raouf had sought clarification of the Secretary-General's critical remarks about the executions.

Mr. Raouf also "expressed his surprise that a matter which is entirely an internal affair of Iraq and within the competence of the Iraqi authorities and the jurisdiction of its courts, should become the subject matter of a statement attributed to the Secretary-General", the statement said.

It added that U Thant was told "the security of the country and the safety of Iraqi citizens is the first and foremost duty of the Iraqi Government".

Mr. Raouf also complained about the implications of U Thant's remarks in the context of Israel's claim to represent citizens of other countries by virtue of their religious convictions.

Iraq protested immediately to U Thant against his observations.

US Reaction:

In Washington, Mr. Rogers said that the executions in Iraq were "a matter of deep concern" to USA.

A statement issued by the State Department said: "The spectacle of mass public executions is repugnant to the conscience of the world".

IRAN

A. Plans For Rail Link To Moscow: According to a report published by Keyhan on January 14, a meeting of the joint Iran-Soviet Transport Committee in Moscow agreed in principle in the first week of January to introduce direct travel by rail between Tehran and Moscow in the Spring of 1970.

Under a Protocol signed between Iran and the Soviet Union at the end of the meeting, both sides agreed to increase their efforts to enlarge the volume of transport between the two neighbours. Existing port facilities would be expanded and additional facilities created.

A team of Soviet experts was scheduled to arrive in Tehran in February to work out the technical details of the new rail travel scheme.

The main problem was related to the different gauges used by the Soviet railways. This problem, however, could be solved through the use of a special "adjustment" device which could vary the distance between the wheels of wagons and locomotives.

B. Development Of Southern Region—Agreement With American Consortium: A billion-dollar project has been finalized for development of the southern parts of Iran.

An Agreement was signed in Tehran recently under which a consortium of four American companies would help implement the project.

The plan centres on a project in the area that comprises Bandar Abbas, Jask, Minab, Joroft, Bafo, Bandar Lengeh and the islands of Larak and Hangam. The area, some 45,000 square kilometres, covers the whole of south-central Iran.

Iran's Ambassador in Washington Mr. Hushang Ansari, said in a statement that "the four companies will prepare a comprehensive study for the overall development of Iran's southern region centring on the ancient port of Bandar Abbas at the entrance to the Persian Gulf. "This study, when completed, will result in the implementation of what is expected to be a $1 billion project."

The American consortium has been given 11 months during which it must "study all possibilities for the development of south-central Iran, taking into consideration studies already completed and projects that are now under way."

The Agreement stipulates that within the 11-month deadline, the combine must prepare separate feasibility reports on each field of study. These reports will be submitted to the plan organization for a final survey and will be implemented after they have been approved.

On the UAR side, the taxes involved are the real estate tax, the tax on movable capital revenues, the tax on commercial and industrial profits, the tax on wages, salaries and bonuses, the tax on private professions, the defence tax, the national security tax and the inheritance tax.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Settlement—US Reply To Soviet Proposal: According to informed sources in Washington, USA had told the Soviet Union in a Note on January 15 that it favoured a simultaneous start to two-level talks on West Asia.

But, she made it plain that she still opposed the imposition of a solution by the Big Powers and believed that Washington and Moscow should intensify their talks while Israel and the Arab countries talked within a UN frame-work.

Apart from this, the Note called on the Soviet Union to help in an international bid to restrain Arab terrorist attacks and limit arms deliveries.

It criticized certain "ambiguities and contradictions" in the Soviet communication. Listing three essentials of US policy in the area, it said:

(1) Clearly-defined frontiers between Israel and the Arab States should be recognized in a contractual agreement between the opposing sides.

(2) Israel should withdraw its forces from the territories occupied after the June, 1967 war, but only partially. Israeli forces in the occupied areas should be fixed within the frame-work of direct talks with a view to aiding the mission of Dr. Jarring.

[By contrast, the Soviet Note alluded to a "package deal" which would relate the withdrawal of Israeli forces to an Arab declaration of non-aggression. The Soviet Union viewed the "package deal" as a multi-lateral document guarantee by the Security Council and the Big Powers. USA made it clear, however, that it favoured a contractual agreement between the Arab countries and Israel.]

(3) The Note proposed, according to diplomatic sources, that Sinai should be demilitarized after the retreat of Israeli troops, though there was no elaboration on this point. It also suggested that Israel should have access to all sea routes in the area and the Suez Canal.

Meanwhile, the semi-official Egyptian newspaper, Al Ahram, published on January 19 what it claimed was the "integral text of the American reply to the Soviet memorandum."

The US reply reportedly welcomed Soviet support for the Mission of Dr. Jarring but regretted the omission of proposals for a Peace Treaty between the Arabs and Israel.

The 12-point text of the US reply published by Al Ahram said:

(1) USA believed it was of prime importance to bring a halt to Palestine resistance movements which encouraged reprisal actions by the Israelis.

(2) USA considered that the Israelis and the Arab States were interpreting the UN Security Council resolution differently and both sides would be well advised to concentrate from now on upon the main issues rather than continue the debate on the right interpretation.

(3) The US Government welcomed Soviet satisfaction at some of the Secretary of State's (Mr. Dean Rusk's) proposals to the UAR Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Riad. But it pointed out that all the proposals were dependent on a settlement between the parties involved.

(4) The Note said that the Soviet Union had misunderstood the US point of view on the armistice lines. These lines, it added, were not political frontiers, but could be modified by an agreement in the transitional phase before peace.

(5) USA said that the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 called for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from "territories occupied during the conflict", not from "occupied territories".

(6) USA said it would be best for the parties concerned to reach a preliminary agreement before the Security Council resolution was applied. This would enable Dr. Jarring to prepare a definitive plan for the withdrawal of troops.

(7) USA said it was confused by the Soviet proposal that Israeli forces should withdraw before there had been a contractual agreement as this was the situation which had led to the June, 1967 war.

(8) USA said it was ready to discuss with the Soviet Union ways by which they could state their views on an accord between the opposing sides.

(9) USA said peace could only be achieved by an agreement between the two sides.

(10) USA was in favour of all measures to safeguard the rights of navigation through the Straits of Tiran.

(11) USA thought that a partial demilitarization of the Sinai desert might not guarantee peace.

(12) USA called for a limitation on armaments in the area.

Israel rejected the Soviet proposals outright.

French Proposal:

On January 17, France proposed a four-Power meeting of UN Security Council representatives (permanent members) to examine the West Asian crisis.

A French Foreign Office spokesman said in Paris that the representatives of USA, the Soviet Union, France and Britain would discuss means by which their Governments "would contribute to establishing a just and lasting peace in West Asia."

He said the four Powers should agree to promote the implementation of the UN Security Council resolution of November, 1967, which called for Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories and Arab recognition of Israel's existence. "Such an agreement by the four Powers obviously involves preliminary negotiations and discussions. Their aim should be to open the way to a settlement with which the States concerned should be closely associated."

The US State Department reacted with reservation to the French proposal.

Promising to study the French proposal, a US State Department spokesman stressed that the UN Mission of Dr. Gunnar Jarring should remain the primary vehicle for peace efforts.

Dealing individually through diplomatic channels between the Big Four Powers, he said, would provide for a more promising way to narrow the current gap.

The British Government, a Foreign Office spokesman said, was studying the French proposal and confirmed that the proposal had been handed by the French Ambassador in London, Mr. Geoffroy de Courcel to Mr. Michael Stewart, Foreign Secretary.

The procedure recommended by France, he said, corresponded in principle to the British point of view that any discussions to settle the conflict founded on the UN resolution of November 22, 1967 should be held in New York because of the special competence of the Big Four as permanent members of the Security Council.

The Soviet Union accepted the French proposal.

UAR welcomed on January 22 the French move for a "Big Four" Foreign Ministers' meeting to discuss West Asia.

The "Allon Plan" For Colonization:

On January 22, the Deputy Prime Minister of Israel, Brig.-Gen. Yigal Allon, proposed Jewish settlements in specific parts of Arab territory captured during the six-day war in June, 1967.

Brig-Gen. Allon, author of the "Allon Plan," said that Israeli villages should be established in some areas on the West Bank of the River Jordan and in the Sinai Peninsula. He also suggested a new town in the Hebron region, also on the West Bank.

Under the "Allon Plan," Israel would give up the bulk of the populated areas on the West Bank but would retain a narrow strip along the River with a chain of fortified positions on the range of hills commanding the valley.

Replying to questions, he said he favoured the establishment of what he termed "a Palestinian entity"—an autonomous Arab province on the West Bank.

Mr. R. Nixon On Situation:

Addressing his first news conference as US President in Washington on January 27, Mr. R. Nixon described the West Asian situation as "very explosive" and said it needed de-fusing.

"At this time", he said, "we need new initiatives and new leadership on the part of USA in order to cool the situation in West Asia."

He said he was open to any suggestion for cooling off the West Asian crisis because "the next explosion could very well involve a confrontation of the nuclear Powers."

Mr. Lester Pearson's View:

Canada's former Premier, Mr. Lester Pearson, said on January 23 that Israel was entitled to a guarantee of her rights to exist as a nation, but to achieve this she would have to make concessions to surrounding Arab countries.

He said the only way to assure peace in West Asia was to have the Great Powers work together in upholding this guarantee.

He warned that if USA or the Soviet Union decided to protect either side in any armed conflict, war would be inevitable.

Pakistani National Worked For An Israeli Spy Ring:

According to The Baghdad Observer, the official organ of the Iraqi Government, on January 21, it had been revealed in a confessional statement by the accused that a Pakistani national was involved in an Israeli spy ring along with some Arabs in one of the most sensational espionage activities in Iraq.

According to the paper, the two principal accused, Sadeq Jaffer Al-Hawi and Abdul Hadi Al-Bijari, disclosed that a Pakistani merchant, Haji Abdul Hussain Jetha, had been working with some Arabs engaged in espionage activities.

In a 15,000-word statement, they revealed that the spying and espionage net-work concentrated on obtaining military information on the position of the armed forces and the kind of arms in use.

Sadeq Jaffer Al-Hawi said that the gang carried out its work in complete confidence before the July, 1968 revolution and pointed out that a number of personalities in the Government in power gave it protection. Bijari revealed that he agreed to work with an Arab named Dumurji, Jetha of Pakistan and some others to destroy bridges, roads, communication cables and railway lines.

Jetha is being tried in absentia.

President G. A. Nasser On West Asia Issue—Address To UAR National Assembly:

Addressing the National Assembly in Cairo on January 20, President Gamal Abdul Nasser said that there could be no hope of a political solution to the West Asian problem "unless the enemy understands we are able to repel him".

He added: "The enemy will never give way unless we compel him to do so by force of arms. This is why we are giving priority to the consolidation of the military front."

The internal front, he claimed, had also been consolidated but "the conditions of war" had limited possibilities of change in this direction. "We will never give up a single plot of Arab territory and we will never negotiate with an enemy occupying our land".

He said that the War Minister, General Mahmoud Fawzy, would report to a closed session of the Assembly on the military situation.

He praised the Soviet military aid, without which "none of our plans for the future would have got past the stage of wishes".

He also paid tribute to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Libya for their financial aid under the terms of resolutions passed at the September, 1967 Khartoum "summit" conference.

Of the possibilities of a new "summit" conference, he said: "Contacts are under way with all the Arab capitals and a time will come when this conference will be an urgent necessity".

Joint Arab action could have been more effective, he added, and the situation demanded closer co-operation among Arab capitals.

He paid tribute to the Palestine Arab Republic organizations and repeated that the UAR was helping the Palestinian commandos in every way possible. But the Palestinian action must not be subjected to any outside control. It must be the direct expression of the people's will. UAR fully supported the political activities of the Palestinian organizations. For this reason it understood their refusal to accept the UN Security Council resolution of November, 1967. "That resolution may be sufficient to eliminate the sequels of the aggression, but it cannot ensure the future and the fate of the Palestinian entity."

Israeli Reaction:

The Israeli Foreign Ministry Director-General, Mr. Gideon Rafael, said in a statement on President Nasser's speech: "Nasser continues the destructive policy which the Arab Governments have advocated for the past 20 years and which brought their people many tragedies."

President Nasser, he added, intended to use the Security Council resolution as a means to restore the situation which existed before June, 1967, "without making peace with Israel."

Reactions Of Mr. L. Eshkol & Mr. A. Eban:

The Israeli Premier, Mr. Levi Eshkol, told French Jews visiting Jerusalem on January 21 that the latest speech by President Nasser removed any prospect for a UAR-Israeli dialogue.

President Nasser's pronouncements before the National Assembly, he said, proved that Arab aims were unchanged, "namely, the destruction of Israel."

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, described President Nasser as a saboteur of peace.

He said in a television interview: "Nasser, who was the architect of war, has now appeared as the saboteur of peace. Never has the opposition to peace been expressed in such an extreme and uncompromising manner."

He added that President Nasser had exposed the false assumption that the United Arab Republic had accepted the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967.

In an unusually bitter attack, he accused President Nasser of smashing to pieces both the cease-fire agreement reached after the six-day war in June, 1967 and the UN Security Council resolution on West Asia. "I must stress one innovation in Nasser's speech. He apparently believes that encouragement of the terrorist activities can be reconciled with the Cease-fire Agreements and the Security Council's resolution. Israel has never accepted and shall never accept any resolution or agreement compatible with encouragement to activities of terrorist groups."

Asked whether President Nasser's speech marked the death of the Soviet peace proposals for West Asia, he replied: "The Soviet plan died long ago since Israel has declared she cannot accept any programme setting as its goal the renewal of conditions which had given birth to the war."

JAPAN

SUMMARY: Plan For Return Of US Bases; US Naval Manoeuvres Criticized; Trade Talks With USA; Talks With USSR On Northern Isles; Plans To Produce "Phantom" Jets.

A. Plan For Return Of American Bases: The United States presented to Japan in the third week of December, 1968 a plan for returning and re-locating 41 facilities and areas now used by US forces under the Status of Forces Agreement.

The plan was put forward at the ninth meeting of the Japan-US Consultative Committee on Security held at the Foreign Ministry in Tokyo. The Japanese side welcomed the US offer.

USA proposed 30 American bases be reverted to Japan. Of the 30 bases, 21 facilities and areas included the Chofu Airfield in Tokyo, the Ota-Koizumi Training Range in Gumma Prefecture, the Zama Rifle Range in Kanagawa Prefecture, the Tama Ammunition Depot in Tokyo and the south camp area of Camp Asaka in Saitama Prefecture.

USA hoped that the nine other facilities to be reverted to Japan would be made available for joint use by the US forces and Japanese Self-Defence Forces.

USA has thus conditioned the reversion of the nine facilities on a Japan-US joint use. These include the Kisarazu Air Base in Chiba Prefecture, the North Fuji Manoeuvre Area in Yamanashi Prefecture and the Ashiya Air-Ground Range in Fukuoka Prefecture.

The US proposal resulted from a thorough-going review of all the facilities and areas conducted by the US authorities. It was at a Japanese request made at the Japan-US consultations over the bare problem in mid-September, 1968. The consultative committee also agreed to request the US-Japan joint committee under the Status of Forces Agreement to agree quickly on concrete steps for the return and re-location of these facilities and areas.

Both sides affirmed that consideration should continually be given to minimizing the unfavourable effect of the presence of the facilities on the daily lives of the Japanese people.

The two countries also agreed on the necessity for their diplomatic and defence authorities to exchange opinions and information and undertake studies on matters related to the defence of Japan and peace and security in the Far East. They agreed for this purpose to have the US Forces and Self-Defence Forces hold study conferences occasionally.

The Japanese representatives pointed out that US-Japan relations were entering an important phase over questions concerning the Japanese-US Security Treaty and Okinawa's reversion. They also stated that the Government intended to promote stable relations with USA based on the understanding and support of the Japanese people. In reply, the US representatives expressed the view that the Security Treaty could not be "viable" without such understanding and support.

Anti-US Demonstrations:

In Tokyo on October 21, 1968, students armed with staves and pieces of concrete torn up from the streets fought the police in Tokyo while more than 700,000 trade unionists demonstrated quietly in 363 separate parts of Japan.

The demonstrators called on USA to withdraw from military bases in Japan, opposed the fighting in Viet-Nam and asked for the return of Okinawa to Japanese control.

A total of 14,000 dock workers joined in the one-hour strike, supported by 160,000 workers in other fields.

In Tokyo, fighting broke out again later when 1,000 students attacked the Diet compound with stones and staves. About 100 of them broke into the compound but all were arrested.

B. Mr. E. Sato On Reversion Of Okinawa: The Prime Minister Mr. Eisaku Sato, in a policy speech delivered before the Diet in the second week of December, 1968 called the reversion of Okinawa the greatest problem for Japan's foreign policy and pledged every effort to achieve an early return of the US-held Islands.

He said, however, that the efforts to restore Okinawa to Japanese administration must be based on "mutual trust with USA and due recognition of security requirements."

The speech before the two houses of the Diet was his first major policy address since he formed a new Cabinet on November 30, 1968 following his re-election as President of the Liberal Democratic Party.

He discussed the significance of the November 10 election of Okinawa's Chief Executive, in which Mr. Chobyo Yara, the candidate supported by three Okinawan Leftist parties, had won on the strength of a platform calling for an immediate and unconditional reversion.

Mr. Sato said that in the election, "our fellow countrymen in Okinawa manifested forcefully their desire to return to the Motherland." He said he appreciated the "sentiments of the people who have been placed under the jurisdiction of a foreign Power for more than 20 years."

Talks With Mr. C. Yara:

On December 8, Mr. Sato indicated his willingness to co-operate with the newly-elected Chief Executive of Okinawa, Mr. C. Yara, in bringing abcut an early administrative return of the US-ruled islands to Japan.

In his first meeting with the Prime Minister, in the second week of December, 1968. Mr. Yara appealed to Mr. Sato for an all-out effort to achieve an "immediate, unconditional and total reversion" of Okinawa. Mr. Sato told Mr. Yara that although immediate reversion was difficult, the Government would like to co-operate "hand in hand" with the Ryukyu Government in solving Okinawa's problems.

Mr. Sato assured Mr. Yara that Japan would do everything within its power, when Mr. Yara requested Government help in removing widespread Okinawa anxieties over the presence of US B-52 bombers and the alleged radio-active contamination of sea water by US nuclear-powered submarines calling at Naha Port.

As for Japan's economic assistance to the US-held islands, Mr. Yara demanded that Japan should allot funds to Okinawa in the form of Governmental subsidies since each prefectural government was entitled to accept from the central Government under the constitutional provisions. Mr. Yara also requested that the Government set up a new agency for the economic development of Okinawa to improve the structure of the Okinawan economy which depended heavily on US military bases.

Mr. Sato admitted the need to consider the problem but did not make any commitment.

C. Socialist Criticism Of American Naval Manoeuvres: The Chairman of the Japan Socialist Party (JSP), Mr. Tomomi Narita, in a statement issued in Tokyo on December 4, 1968 criticized the sending by America of a powerful naval force to the Japan Sea.

He said such movements of US naval forces could endanger Japan. He warned against the use of bases in Japan by American naval units.

In Seoul, an American military spokesman played down the importance of the naval move. The force had gone to the Japan Sea for "routine operations", according to the spokesman. However, such a powerful US naval contingent had not been reported in the Japan Sea for many months. In addition, special aircraft from Okinawa had been sent to South Korea by the United States. These were naval machines equipped for detecting movement at sea with electronic instruments.

The last time a sizable American naval force appeared in the Japan Sea, so far as the general public was concerned, was just after the capture of the American naval intelligence vessel Pueblo by North Korea on January 23, 1968 (see page 8527).

The Prime Minister of South Korea, Mr. Chung Il Kwon, on December 3, 1968 flew to the aircraft carrier Hancock, which was with the force, for a one-day visit with senior South Korean officers. The visit underlined the unusual nature of the carrier's visit to Korean waters. Korean newspapers reported that the Hancock and various destroyers were due to take part in joint exercises with the Korean Navy, but this was denied by the Americans.

There had been unusual activity on the Korean east coast since the landing of a party of at least 60 North Korean soldiers early in November, 1968. The South Koreans had been hunting down members of this party which was said to be the largest to descend from the North since the Korean armistice in 1953.

D. Trade Talks With USA: A conference of Japanese and US delegates was held in Tokyo in the last week of December, 1968 designed to remove some of the import restrictions on American products.

The conference took place against the background of growing trade protectionism in the United States, which was dissatisfied over the fact that Japan still put quantitative curbs on 121 items without the consent of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Conference sources said a sharp exchange of views took place between the Japanese and US delegations, with the US side calling for an "immediate" decontrol on 38 important items and Japan making her case in the interests of domestic industry.

The US list of farm products proposed for liberalization included beef and grape-fruit. The Japanese side reportedly presented at the meeting a list of several products including food for dogs and cats, chewing gum and beans.

The Japanese list, however, was a great disappointment to the Americans because it contained few items in which it was interested.

As for industrial products, both sides were apparently not as much divided as they were over agricultural produce. The Japanese list reportedly included movie colour film, polished sheet glass, outboard motors, typewriters, woollen fabrics, industrial sewing machines and Bourbon whisky. But other more important items, including electronic computers, leather goods, aircraft and radar equipment were excluded.

Japan also reportedly offered to liberalize the import of additional items other than the 38 products listed by USA, but it was not known what specific products were involved.

E. Continued Talks With USSR On Northern Isles: According to Tokyo reports, the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, has instructed his Ambassador in Moscow, Mr. Toru Nakagawa, to continue talks with the Soviet Government to regain Japan's territorial rights over the northern Pacific islands held by USSR.

Mr. Sato has maintained that the territorial claim over the northern islands, notably Habomai, Shikotan, Kunashiri and Etorofu near Hokkaido, is a "legitimate demand that reflects the strong sentiment of the Japanese people regarding the islands."

Mr. Nakagawa said during a visit to Tokyo in the first week of January that the attitude of the Soviet Union towards all pending Japan-Soviet problems, except the northern territorial issue, was the most favourable in years. The Soviet Union gave no reaction whatsoever to repeated Japanese requests for settlement of the northern territorial problem.

He briefed Mr. Sato on the current state of Russo-Japanese relations at a meeting held at the Prime Minister's official residence.

He also held talks with the Foreign Minister, Mr. Kiichi Aichi. Foreign Ministry sources quoted the Ambassador as saying that the Soviet Government's stand on the question of the northern territory was adamant and there was no point in discussing it further.

Mr. Nakagawa told Mr. Aichi, however, that the Soviet Union had adopted a somewhat friendly attitude towards Japan despite the Czechoslovakia affair. This Soviet attitude was noticed when Kremlin leaders received, in October, 1968, the then Transport Minister, Mr. Yasuhiro Nakasone for talks on the inauguration of JAL's independent service between Tokyo and Moscow.

He voiced his view that Moscow would maintain its policy of peaceful co-existence with the nations of the 'free world' although it would not hesitate to confront these nations in order to defend the unity of communist States.

F. Japan-Soviet Economic Committee Meeting: The Japan-Soviet Joint Economic Committee, a private co-operative body of Japanese businessmen and Soviet economic officials, met in Tokyo in the second week of December, 1968.

A joint communique issued at the end of the three-day session said agreement had been reached to create specialist committees to study the possibilities of developing Soviet natural gas, coal and iron resources for supply to Japan.

The communique also said it had been agreed that Soviet Far Eastern ports and harbours be improved and timber resources be developed if joint studies by the two sides produced positive results.

Creation of a sub-committee on promotion of scientific and technological interchanges between the two nations was also agreed on.

Creation of various working groups for such co-operation in various industrial fields wherever necessary in the near future was also promised.

According to the communique, the proposed specialist committees were to conduct preliminary studies relative to the development of the coal and iron resources in Southern Yakutsk Republic in Siberia and natural gas resources in the same Republic and Sakhalin Island. Japanese surveys of the resources to be developed with Japanese equipment would be paid for with such products.

On the improvement of Soviet Far Eastern ports and harbours, the joint committee was to decide, within the next three months, the sending of a Japanese inspection mission to the ports.

Concerning the development of timber resources for pulp-wood, both sides were to create a specialist committee on Siberian broadleaved tree pulp and chips as part of their efforts to conclude at an early date a long-range Trade Agreement.

G. Plans To Produce "Phantom" Jets: The National Defence Council at its meeting held in Tokyo under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, on January 10 decided to produce 104 Phantom F-4E jet fighters by the end of the fiscal year 1977 as the new mainstay fighters of the Air Self-Defence Force.

The Council's decision was later approved by the Cabinet.

The production of the new first-line fighters will entail a budget of about 200,000 million yen or 1,900 million yen per unit.

The Defence Agency plans to organize four flying squadrons, each equipped with 18 Phantom F-4Es, by the end of the fiscal year 1976. The first of them will be established in the fiscal year 1973.

The Agency originally sought to set up five such squadrons equipped with a total of 130 Phantom F-4Es, but was forced to reduce the scale for budgetary reasons.

Three of the projected four squadrons will be placed under command of the Northern, Central and Western Regional Air Corps. The remaining one will be assigned to the Northern Corps in time of emergency.

Domestic production of America's McDonnel fighters will be undertaken by Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Ltd. as the main contractor and Kawasaki Aircraft Co. as the secondary contractor. The engines will be manufactured by Ishikawajima-Harima Heavy Industries Co.

H. Contributions To ADB: The Government exchanged Notes with the Asian Development Bank (ADB) in the third week of December, 1968 to contribute $20 million (7,200 million yen) to the Bank's Special Agricultural Fund.

The Notes were exchanged between the Finance Minister, Mr. Takeo Fukuda and the ADB President, Mr. Takeshi Watanabe.

Japan is the first country to contribute to the Fund.

Loans from the Fund are to be repaid in 25 years after a seven-year deferment period. The interest rate is 3 per cent a year, lower than the 3.5 per cent interest on Japan's aid to Indonesia, which must be repaid in 20 years. It is the most favourable aid grant by Japan in terms of both interest rate and repayment period.

The Bank's Special Agricultural Fund was created after an agreement reached by member-nations of the South-East Asian Agricultural Development Conference during its meeting in Tokyo in December, 1968. Japan agreed in September, 1968 to make contributions totalling $100 million to the Fund on condition that USA would contribute $200 million and other countries $100 million each. Japan's $20 million contribution is part of the pledge made in 1968.

A US Bill calling for an appropriation of $200 million as its share to the Fund is still in the Senate.

Of other countries which have pledged contributions to the Fund, only Canada, the Netherlands and Denmark have indicated their readiness to contribute $25 million (in five years), $1,500,000 and $2 million, respectively.

I. Funds Of Political Parties: According to the Home Affairs Ministry, the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP), Kokumin Kyokai and the Japan Communist Party were the three biggest spenders among political organizations during the first half of 1968.

The Ministry made public in the first week of December, 1968 a report on income-expenditure statements submitted by 520 political organizations. Kokumin Kyokai is a fund-raising organ established by Japan's business world for the benefit of the conservative party.

LDP spent 2,600 million yen, Kokumin Kyokai 2,300 million yen and the JCP 1,100 million yen.

The next biggest spenders, all reporting expenditures exceeding 50 million yen in the January-June period, were organizations related to LDP's various factions. These were the New Finance Research Society (Maeo faction) with a declared outlay of 130 million yen, Current Problems Council (Fukuda faction, 70 million yen), Seisei Kai (Sato faction, 50 million yen), Homa Kai (Ishii faction, 50 million yen), and Policy Discussion Council (Miki faction, 50 million yen).

The 520 organizations, declaring their incomes and expenditures to the Ministry, spent a total of 9,520 million yen in the first half of 1968 or slightly less than their total expenditures in the first half of 1967 when a General Election of the House of Representatives was held. The big spending in the January-June period was believed to have been necessitated by the House of Councillors election in July, 1968.

The five major political parties retained the same places as in the first half of 1967 in the list of big income earners.

The LDP topped the list with 2,602 million yen, followed by the JCP 1,110 million yen and Komeito 885 million yen.

The Japan Socialist Party (JSP) reported revenues amounting to 234 million yen, compared with the same term while the Democratic Socialist Party (DSP) declared an income of 159 million yen.

The sharp increase in income reported by Komeito contrasted with the JSP's apparent difficulties in augmenting the party's incomes. (JSP suffered a big setback in the July Upper House election).

LDP drew about 93 per cent of its total revenues from political donations. Donations either from individuals or corporations accounted for a high 83.1 per cent of the DSP's incomes.

By contrast, JCP said it had counted on political donations for a negligible 0.8 per cent of its revenues. Komeito declared to the Ministry it had received nothing by way of political contributions.

The biggest donors for LDP, JSP and DSP were Kokumin Kyokai (400 million yen), the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan (77 million yen), and the Democratic Socialist Party Association (109 million yen), respectively.

Other major sources of political parties—those giving 20 million yen or more in the first half—included the Tokyo Bankers' Association, the Electric Industry Federation, the Japan Iron and Steel Fedetion, the Japan Teachers' Union, ration, the Japan Petroleum Association and the Japan Gas Association.

J. Disputes In Campus: A total of 107 universities and colleges throughout the nation were involved in campus disputes in 1968 and disputes were still not settled at 60 of them.

This means that one out of every eight higher educational institutions had had some trouble in 1968. (The total number of universities and colleges is 845.)

A National Police Agency tabulation as of December 5, 1968 showed that these 107 campuses were spread over a total of 44 prefectures, excluding only Gifu and Kochi prefectures. Of the 60 campuses where the disputes had not yet been resolved, 36 were national, two municipal and 22 private.

The disputes ranged over more than 20 different issues. The management of student halls and dormitories was the most popular cause involving 22 schools including Tokyo University of Foreign Studies, Tohoku University, Kobe University, Toyo University and Doshisha University.

Nine campuses, including the University of Tokyo and Sophia University, were involved in disputes stemming from disciplinary action against students. The disputes concerned the issue of campus democratization at Nihon University, Meiji Gakuin University, Komazawa University and five others, all private institutions. Waseda University, Fukushima University and two others were involved in disputes over university presidents.

At five campuses, including Wakayama, Saitama and Senshu universities, disputes concerned issues of everyday student life such as the provision of co-operative stores, dormitory accommodation and commuter bus services.

K. Expedition To South Pole: According to a message received in Tokyo on December 19, 1968, a Japanese team of 11 men had succeeded in reaching the South Pole after a journey lasting 83 days.

The team, led by Mr. Masami Murayama, travelled altogether about 1,243 miles from its base on Ongul Island, and used Japanese-made snowcars. This was the first time that a Japanese exploring group had reached the South Pole.

The explorers set off from their Shofa base on Ongul island with four snowcars on September 28. On October 3 one expedition member, Mr. Yasoichi Endo, was badly injured in an accident with an ice drill. He was taken back to base, and the 11 other men continued, reaching a point 561 miles from base on November 4. The next day they met bad conditions, advancing only about 12 miles in nine hours. At that point, they lightened their burdens by abandoning steel sleighs and arrived at the US plateau base four days later. They rested for four days, continuing on November 16.

Mr. Murayama, in a message to the headquarters of the Japanese Antarctic Research Expedition in Tokyo, said that all members of the team were in good health. He added that it had taken more than 50 years for Japan to raise its flag on the South Pole (an expedition in 1912 failed to get there), and American help had been essential to the team's success.

B. Soviet Arms Supplies Agreement: On January 21, the Soviet Union and Jordan signed an Agreement in Moscow for the supply of arms and spare parts to replace equipment lost in the 1967 war with Israel.

The Agreement provides for the supply of arms and equipment in exchange for such commodities as sugar.

The Agreement was based on the Soviet commitment to maintain the arms balance between Israel and the Arab nations.

Previously, Jordan had received arms from Western sources, primarily from Britain.

KUWAIT

A. Ruler In USA—Joint Communique On West Asia: In a joint communique issued in Washington on December 11, 1968, President L. B. Johnson and the Emir of Kuwait said that the United States' efforts in West Asia "are directed at the achievement of a lasting and honourable peace" in line with the United Nations resolution of November 22, 1967.

President Johnson added that the US Government "fully supports" the efforts of the Swedish envoy, Dr. Gunnar Jarring, to bring an end of the hostilities which broke out with the June, 1967 war.

The Emir of Kuwait, Sheikh Sabah al-Salem al-Sabah, explained "Kuwait's attitude toward the Palestine question and emphasized the rights of the Palestinian people to return to their homeland, and his total rejection of annexation by force of Arab territories in contradiction of the Charter of the United Nations."

The communique said that President Johnson "explained that US efforts in the area are directed at the achievement of a lasting and honourable peace based on the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967."

LEBANON

A. Government Resigns—New Cabinet: The Government resigned on January 6.

On January 8, President Charles Helou had asked the former Premier, Mr. Rashid Karame to form a new Government to replace the Government of Dr. Abdullah al-Yafi which resigned in the wake of an Israeli reprisal raid on Beirut airport on December 28, 1968.

Dr. Yafi's four-man Cabinet, formed in October, 1968 had been strongly criticized since the attack by Israeli commandos on Beirut airport.

[Mr. Karame, six times a Premier previously, is a son of another former Premier, Mr. Abdel Hamid Karame. A 47-year-old lawyer, he is a leading member of the Democratic Parliamentary Front—the largest single party in the 99-member Chamber of Deputies. Mr. Karame last held the office of Premier in February, 1968, when he resigned. He had then been in power for 15 months. Mr. Karame is one of the country's most experienced politicians. A quiet, self-effacing bachelor, he played a leading role in the 1958 civil war, which lasted 140 days and shattered Lebanon's economy. It was a Government led by him—his fourth formed in 1961—that did a great deal to build it up again. He comes from Tripoli, the small Mediterranean country's northern oil refining centre and port. He practised law there after graduating from Cairo University and embarked on a political career upon the death of his father in 1951. Within 12 months the young Arabic, English and French-speaking lawyer became Minister of Justice. Two years later, he was appointed Minister of Economy and Social Affairs.]

On January 15, Mr. Rashid Karame succeeded in breaking the nine-day deadlocked Government crisis by forming a 16-member Cabinet from within Parliament.

All the country's political parties were represented in the Cabinet, except that of former President, Mr. Camille Chamoun, which was represented by "supporters" of his line.

But, on January 16, two Ministers in the newly-formed broad-based Cabinet announced that they had offered their resignations. They were the Finance Minister, Mr. Pierre Gemayal (Phalange Party), and the Public Works Minister, Mr. Raymond Edde (National Block).

Their decision was announced in the name of the tripartite alliance which included the National Liberal Party of the former President, Mr. Camille Chamoun.

In an apparently unconnected development on January 20, a third member of the Government, the Planning Minister, Mr. Hussein Mansour, also announced his intention of resigning.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Rashid Karame appointed four new Cabinet Ministers to fill positions left vacant by recent resignations, on January 23.

The new Ministers, all members of the Chamber of Deputies, are:

Mr. Khalil Khouri—Labour and Social Affairs; Mr. Youssif Salemi—Foreign Affairs; Mr. Habib Kayrouz—Tourism; Mr. Mohammed Safieddin—Planning.

In a minor Cabinet re-shuffle, Mr. Karame relinquished the Foreign Affairs portfolio for Finance, and Mr. Rene Moawad, who was Minister for Social Affairs and Labour, became Minister for Public Works.

On January 25, Mr. Karame completed his 16-member Cabinet with the appointment of four Ministers to replace men who refused to accept Cabinet posts in his eight-day-old Government.

Background:

The West Asia correspondent of The Statesman wrote on January 10: "The resignation of the Lebanese Cabinet was welcomed as setting a good precedent for Arab Governments to pay the price for public failure.

"The Cabinet of Dr. Al-Yafi was shaky even before the Israeli attack on Beirut airport, but the near total absence of any resistance to the attack produced recriminations between the Ministers that led to its downfall. The important point is that the squabbles arose over attempts to explain away the failure and these in turn had to be made because of widespread popular demand for an explanation.

"Thus the fall of the Cabinet has established, de facto, the principle of accountability. It is true that Cabinets do not count for much in the governance of Lebanon, but loss of office is a real punishment for the politicians concerned. In no other Arab country since June, 1967 have civilian leaderships paid the price for negligence in the struggle against Israel.

"A good deal of the pressure for an explanation came from university students, some of whom are continuing with a hunger-strike in the American University of Beirut. Apart from demanding punishment for those responsible and the introduction of compulsory military service, both of which demands have now been met, the students are also asking for Government support to the Palestinian commandos and the release of those commandos who have been detained by the Lebanese authorities. This latter demand is not well founded, but that it should be made at all makes nonsense of the Israeli claim that the Lebanese Government is aiding and abetting the commandos."

MALAYSIA

A. Budget Estimates For 1969: The Budget estimates for the fiscal year 1969 were presented to Parliament on January 8 by the Finance Minister, Tan Siew Sin.

In what was described as a "painless and expansionary Budget," he said the nation had reached "generally speaking, an optimum level of taxation."

It would be necessary, he conceded, or even advisable from time to time to make minor revisions and adjustments on the grounds of equality, policy changes and harmonization between West and East Malaysia. He expected further growth in economy this year, more private participation in investments and timber replacing tin as the second major foreign exchange earner, rubber still being in the top position.

Reviewing 1968, he said the world monetary situation was never recently "so chaotic". It was still a "source of potential danger" especially to exporters of primary products, as industrial countries would make some reduction in economic activity, as world economy became less buoyant. However, the demand for Malaysian exports could continue at a high level of last year's strong growth.

The other salient points of the Budget speech were:

The GNP rose by five per cent to M$10,200 million. With the population growth at three per cent the per capita GNP rose from M$965 to M$980. Exports showed a dramatic rise. Though prices fell, the total receipts increased sharply. Imports rose at a slower rate.

External reserves rose by M$70 million to M$1,980 million. Currency in circulation was M$852 million.

Manufacturing activity grew further with new enterprises, though it contributed only 12 per cent of total domestic production. Food prices stabilized early in 1968. The rubber industry underwent a critical period last year. But the recovery in prices offered a better future. Rubber exports rose by 12½ per cent to 1.15 million tons, earning M$1,340 million. Log exports rose to M$540 million and sawn timber exports to M$147 million. Exports of tin, of which Malaysia commands 41 per cent of world production, were worth M$123 million.

Investments in the public sector rose by about 3.5 per cent against private investment growth of 1.5 per cent. Fixed capital investment in the private sector, however, rose by 4.5 per cent.

Tan Siew Sin said that the real basic problem the nation faced was unemployment over the coming years. He considered it not only an economic, but a social and political problem. A realistic way of tackling this was to assure an adequate rate of economic growth. In 1968, there was increased unemployment in the Malayan peninsula, more in the cities than in the rural areas, and more among the 15-19 age group than in the 20-24 age group, according to sample surveys, indicating that the problem was one of first job-seekers. In terms of the labour force, unemployment was 6.8 per cent compared to 6 per cent in 1962. But with the vast labour shortage in Sabah for plantations and lumber camps, migration of labour could in due course solve the problem, along with growth in technical training for which about 10 centres were being established.

The Budget estimates placed revenue at M$1,962 million (taxes for the year contributiong M$14 millon), about 3.9 per cent more— and ordinary expenditure at M$1,925 million—about M$7 million lower than the original estimate for last year.

With M$32 million in special grants to the Eastern States of Sabah and Sarawak, and special development expediture of M$720 million, the overall deficit will be about M$790 million. This would be bridged with M$350 million domestic and M$238 million foreign borrowing and from reserves.

The general trend this year is towards more exports than imports and more austerity in Government spending through avoiding overtime except for emergencies and speed; converting study grants to loans, minimizing use of light power, water and stationery; bulk and central purchases of equipment and materials; and better control and management of public buildings.

The expansionary budget, he said, should encourage greater economic growth with a steady rise in export earnings, public sector expenditure rising by 8½ per cent, private investments by 9 per cent, and retail prices remaining stable. Private investments in the chemical, rubber, oil palm, engineering, pulp and paper and textile and tourist industries would be initiated this year in 12 projects.

B. White Paper On Communist Activity: The Government issued on November 9, 1968 a White Paper in which it described the threat posed by the Communist Party and its united front to security and public order.

The White Paper, titled "The Path of Violence to Absolute Power," quoted extensively from captured documents to show that the Communist united front had abandoned the parliamentary struggle and that the Malaysian Communist Party (MCP) intended to continue its armed struggle.

The Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, in a foreword to the White Paper, warned of the threat that had cast its "sinister shadow over the nation."

He wrote: "Communist militancy has been taken to the stage where all pretence at formal compliance with constitutional requirements will be abandoned and Communist united front activities will be geared to the return of the MCP along the violent path to absolute power.

"Extremist political opportunists, who have by their past actions shown a complete disregard for the nation's safety, may now take this fresh opportunity to exploit the potentially grave situation in pursuit of their own selfish ends.

"It is in the light of these new sinister developments that the Government, conscious of its duty to keep the public informed of happenings that imperil the nation, has published this White Paper.

"The Government has never hesitated in acting firmly against those who knowingly seek to subvert and destroy the democratic way of life that the people have chosen for themselves. It will not hesitate now."

The White Paper said that two threats faced the country. First, that from MCP which had made it increasingly clear that the time had come to launch an all-out militant united front campaign in which all pretence at outward compliance with the Constitution would be abandoned. This was to clear the path for an ultimate seizure of power by violence and bloodshed.

The other was the threat posed by extremism among "certain unscrupulous power-hungry groups" seeking to secure political ascendancy by illegal means.

C. National Shipping Line: The Finance Minister, Tan Siew Sin, said in Kuala Lumpur on November 18, 1968 that a $20 million company was being formed to run Malaysia's national shipping line.

The firm, called Malaysian International Shipping Corporation, would have an initial paid-up capital of $6 million, of which the Government would contribute $1 million.

The nucleus of the line, to be known as Malaysia Line, would be the two ships promised by the Japanese Government under the "blood debt" settlement.

Tan Siew Sin, who is chairman of the Cabinet committee on the national shipping line, said: "The company will ab initio invite public participation in its capital by private placement so as to cater for Malay interests like MARA (Majlis Amanah Ra'ayat—Council of Trust for Indigenous People) and the Malayan Muslim Pilgrim Savings Corporation, together with the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and other domestic commercial interests.

"The Malaysia Line will be managing and operating, on behalf of the Government, the two ocean-going cargo ships to be obtained from Japan as 'goodwill' payment.

"The initial fleet of four to six modern cargo liners are to be designed and built specifically for the Far East-Europe trade.

"The Malaysia Line will apply for full membership of the Far East Freight Conference.

"The Line will employ Malaysians as far as possible in these vessels and recruitment of personnel for home and overseas training of officers and engineers will commence shortly."

Elaborating on the announcement, a company source said the Line's ships would be at least 10,000 tons deadweight, each costing about $12.5 million. All its vessels would be of the same size and would be built to meet the special needs of Malaysian imports and exports.

D. Search For New Sea Lane: A 21-member Japanese team is conducting a survey of the 800-km Malacca Straits between the Indonesian island of Sumatra and the Malaysian mainland, connecting the Indian Ocean and the China Sea.

The object of the survey is to find a new sea lane for oil tankers of over 100,000 tons and to conduct exhaustive investigations into what are considered 'danger areas.'

Malaysia authorised the survey on November 26, 1968. The cost of the survey set at M$1,000,000 is to be borne by the Japanese Government, Japanese Shipping Promotion Association and Japanese shipbuilding and refining industries.

The survey requires also the permission of the Governments of Singapore and Indonesia, both of whom are expected to co-operate as it would be in their interests.

Safe navigation through the Straits is of great importance to Japan as nearly 90 per cent of its oil requirements as also ore and coal imports pass through the Straits. If traffic through the Straits of Malacca and through Lombok Straits between Java and Sumatra is impeded, Japanese industries would grind to a halt.

Ever since the closure of the Suez Canal, Japan has been intensifying its search for oil in Australia, Indonesia and South America. The Malacca Straits Council was set up in Japan some time ago to study safe navigation through the Straits as some areas are dangerous to huge tankers. The British Admiralty charts of the Straits were based on surveys done in the 1930's. Early this year, a fully-laden 130,000-ton tanker, Nissho Maru, barely missed by a few yards hitting submerged rocks, and another Japanese tanker recently almost touched the bottom of the Straits.

The survey might also help to locate the ancient port of Malacca. It would be known whether it was close to the Malayan shore or miles away in the Straits. The survey is to be done by the 2,061-ton Koya Maru and is to be completed by March, 1969. The results would be processed by the Japanese Hydrographical Survey Unit and would be made available to the countries concerned by the end of the year.

E. Koran-Reading Contest: Malaysia won both the men's and women's titles in the 12-nation International Koran-Reading Competition held at Kuala Lumpur on December 14, 1968.

The men's champion was Haji Saidin Bin Abdul Rahman, while among the women it was Che Rahman Binte Abdul Rahman.

Both of them had won the previous year's competition. Malaysia had been winning the men's championship since the Competition began in 1960 and also the women's title since it started in 1960.

Runner-up in the men's section was another Malaysian, Haji Mocktar Bin Haji Ahmad, while Singapore's Inche Mohammed Fadull Bin Abdul Aziz came third.

Indonesia's Madam Mariwijah Harifai came second in the women's section. The third place went to Thailand's Che Rofiyah Binte Wan Kassim.

Participants belonged to India, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia, Thailand, Brunei, Pakistan, Cambodia, Turkey, Ceylon, South Viet-Nam and the Philippines.

NEPAL

A. Chinese Misbehaviour Towards Indian Journalist—Nepalese Regret: The Government on January 7 expressed regret to India over the misbehaviour of the Chinese in Nepal towards Mr. Frank Moraes, Editor of The Indian Express.

This followed India's request to the Nepal Government to take cognizance of the incident and to offer better protection to Indian personnel in Nepal.

A spokesman of the External Affairs Ministry said that Nepal's Foreign Minister had assured the Indian Ambassador at Khatmandu, Mr. Raj Bahadur, that the Government greatly regretted the incident and would strongly speak about it to the Chinese Charge d'Affaires, which he did. As a result, the Chinese Embassy was believed to have issued instructions to the Chinese personnel not to indulge in such actions.

[On December 26, 1968, Mr. Frank Moraes, Editor-in-Chief of The Indian Express and Miss Marilyn Silverstone, an American photographer, were detained by the Chinese for over two hours near the Sunkosi project site on the Chinese-built Khatmandu-Kodari highway, about 80 km from Khatmandu. They were in a car driven by Mr. M. R. Shrestha, editor of the local daily Motherland, when a truck driven by some Chinese technicians drove past them, barricading the road. The Chinese accused the visitors of taking photographs, although there were no notice boards prohibiting photographs and the Nepalese authorities do not normally ban pictures except in restricted areas. When Mr. Moraes and Miss Silverstone refused to get out of their car and surrender their cameras and negatives, the Chinese technicians, soon re-inforced by a yelling group of Chinese workers and engineers numbering over 20, surrounded the car and threatened to manhandle the occupants. They pounded the car with their first, gesticulated menacingly around windscreens and at one time threatened to break the car windows. They shouted and at times spat insults and threats for about two hours. The cameras and films were handed over to Nepali officers who had arrived on the scene, and after much altercation between the Chinese and Nepali project officers, Mr. Moraes and Miss Silverstone were eventually allowed to go. The cameras and films were, however, returned to them by the Nepali authorities undamaged and intact. On December 27, 1968, an Indian External Affairs Ministry spokesman in New Delhi condemned as "highly improper and arrogant" the behaviour of the Chinese against Mr. Moraes in Nepalese territory. He requested the Nepalese Government to extend protection to Indian citizens against such threatening behaviour of foreigners in Nepalese territory.]

PHILIPPINES

A. Asian Common Market Proposed: In a speech before the Asian Parliamentary Union in Manila on December 4, 1968, President Ferdinand Marcos proposed an Asian Common Market for iron, steel and power industries and a common regional shipping policy to break the "monopoly exercised by the shipping lines of the developed countries".

He said the Philippines was prepared to initiate moves towards setting up the Common Market for iron, steel and power industries from which developed countries would be excluded. He said the Common Market was desirable because of the huge capital expenditure involved.

He called on Asian nations to give priority to industrialization instead of agriculture. He warned that "unless Asia is industrialized, our future, and possibly the future of the world, remains forbidding."

He criticised donor nations and international institutions for their emphasis on agriculture, a policy he called "shortsighted and ultimately futile. While it is true that we have to produce enough food to feed our populations, it is not correct to make agriculture the main area of economic investment. We believe that the true and lasting solution to the poverty of Asia is the industrialization of Asia."

There was, he added, growing "dissatisfaction and impatience" with aid-giving nations and institutions. "Unless there is a decisive change in the policies and thinking of these agencies, the poor countries of Asia will seek assistance elsewhere or turn to each other for help."

SINGAPORE

A. Budget For 1969-70: The Budget estimates for 1969-70 were presented to Parliament by the Finance Minister, Dr. Goh Keng Swee, on December 3, 1968.

He announced that it had been decided to alter the financial year from January-December to April-March to give accounts for full years.

For the first time since the country became independent in 1965, he also announced seven taxes which were aimed at spreading the burden without hurting the investors or the poor class. Defence of Singapore and expansion of the Armed Forces were set at length in his speech, also for the first time since Independence.

The Budget for January, 1969 to March, 1970 estimated an expenditure of S$1,024.9 million, with revenue falling short by only $ 89 million. Of the development budget of S$332 million, nearly S$48 million will be spent on the Armed Forces.

The other main items were for building of the infrastructure for Singapore's future as an industrial, tourist and communications centre. These include a mechanical engineering course in a local college, extensions to the international airport for Boeing-747s, a hotel catering training centre, expansion of telecommunications with auto-telex, resiting of the meteorological station, improvements to TV and radio services, reclamation of land and urban re-development.

Though the public expected "heavy taxation because of need for huge spending on defence forces", the seven taxes announced were light, with 10 to 15 per cent levies on public utilities, telephones, transfer and registration of motor vehicles, higher stamp duties, 15 per cent import duty on ready-made garments (for the first time). These are expected to get S$35 million in additional revenue.

Defence Arrangements:

Dr. Goh spelt out plans for the Armed Forces and its rationale. He said the unexpected accelerated withdrawal of the British forces by 1971 had necessitated a revised plan. There were no plans before for an Air Force nor expansion of the Navy till the early 1970s. But now both had became necessary. For the Navy, six patrol craft had been ordered for delivery by the end of 1971.

Meanwhile, officers and men would be trained in Britain and Australia, beginning in February. The Republic's Air Force would be operational by 1971, consisting of squadrons of Cessnas (as trainers and spotters)), jet Provosts (as basic jet trainers), Alouette helicopters and Hawker Hunter interceptor jets. The Air Force is to be built up and headed in February by the present Air Commander of the Far East Air Force, Sir Rochford Hughes, on his retirement from the RAM.

The Air Force personnel were being trained in UK and France, and when attached to the local Flying Training School, would train more pilots. A Technical Training School would be established for ground crew and technical personnel.

The Army build-up which was started after Independence in 1965, with two infantry battalions, was now at five battalions, of which two were fully operational. The other three would be operational in 1969. The sixth battalion would be formed next March. Meanwhile, the first two were being re-converted with new weapons and manned by national servicemen. Necessary support for these battalions was also to be built. The Army was also supported by three infantry battalions of the People's Defence Corps (PDC) with a fourth to be raised early next year. The PDF would be confined now to internal security duties. A PDF Engineers' Battalion would be formed to run essential civilian services during an emergency. The armoured unit of tanks and cars was now being fitted with training provided by the Israeli School of Armour. An Israeli Defence Mission of 23 had been serving as advisers and instructors in Singapore for two years. The Government intended to spend about 10 per cent of the GNP on defence building up annually at around S$300 million.

By 1979 the Government hoped to have 30 infantry battalions as reserves, and 15 battalions of full-time units. Currently, after two years of national service, men were liable for service for ten years as reservists. The total strength, Dr. Goh said, was adequate by any standards to protect Singapore, which had a population of two million in 225 square miles.

SYRIA

A. Arab Conference On Human Rights: The Regional Arab Conference on Human Rights which met in Beirut from December 2—10, 1968 declared on December 10 that "Israel is a racist, imperialist base aimed at violating the rights of the Palestine Arab people to self-determination and to their homeland."

The declaration was part of a series of resolutions adopted by the Conference.

The Conference said in a communique that the "crimes committed by Israel are directed against humanity.... and should be condemned internationally."

It called on UN to apply sanctions provided for under its Charter against Israel which, it said, had been repeatedly condemned by UN.

It supported Arab Palestinian resistance against Israeli occupation and described the December 3 air attack on Jordan by Israel as "a flagrant violation of the UN Charter and the world Declaration on Human Rights".

It also denounced the Israeli authorities' arrest of three prominent Arab women in Jerusalem recently "and their sentencing to imprisonment without trial."

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Recognition By Sweden: It was officially stated in Stockholm on January 10 that the Swedish Foreign Minister, Mr. Torsten Nilsson, had sent a telegram to the North Viet-Namese Foreign Minister proposing establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Swedish-North Viet-Namese relations started on an unofficial basis three years ago through an intermediary of the Swedish Ambassador in Peking. This was followed up by a series of visits made to Hanoi by the Private Secretary of the Foreign Minister. In Stockholm early in 1968, Mr. Nilsson had met the North Viet-Namese Ambassador accredited in Moscow. This meeting appeared to have prompted the "recall for consultations" in the United States of Mr. Edward Heath, the American Ambassador to Sweden.

[Sweden recognized South Viet-Nam in 1957. At the time the Swedish Ambassador in Thailand had acted simultaneously as the Ambassador to South Viet-Nam but in 1967, when Sweden appointed a new Ambassador to Thailand, no request was made for the Ambassador's concurrent accreditation to Saigon.]

In Hanoi on January 12, the newspaper, Nhan Dan said that the "establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries is a political victory achieved by the struggle of our people for its independence and freedom."

It said: "In its battle against the United States, North Viet-Nam has the ardent support of all progressive forces including the people of Sweden and other Northern European countries".

It gave warm welcome to manifestations of support in Sweden for North Viet-Nam.

Observers believed that there were economic as well as political motives behind the Swedish move. Significance was attached to a Swedish statement "that relations between our two countries will develop favourably on an economic level". It was thought Sweden and other countries might be ready to take an active part in the reconstruction of North Viet-Nam.

Sweden is the first Western non-Communist country to have diplomatic relations with North Viet-Nam. But Hanoi has been a capital empty of all Western representatives. Britain, for example, has had a consul-general ever since the Geneva settlement of 1954. France, too, which hoped after that settlement to play an active part politically and commercially, at first sent Mr. Jean Sainteny as the head of a small Hanoi office, and although the hopes were disappointed, a French representative has been kept in the Capital.

Moreover, the French have had Mr. Mai Van Bo as a representative from North Viet-Nam with an office in Paris for more than two years. French diplomatic recognition of the South Viet-Namese Government has been maintained at the same time, though the French mission in Saigon has only lately been restored.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Venus Probe Launched: The Soviet Union blasted on January 10 a new unmanned spacecraft towards the mystery planet Venus to conduct joint experiments with a sister ship—Venus-5—launched five days earlier.

Tass said that Venus-6 would make a soft landing on the planet after its 150-million-mile journey in the middle of May. The joint flight by the two spacecraft "will help to determine the parameters of the atmosphere in different areas of the planet of riddles."

Both were on their pre-determined flight trajectories and the instruments on board were working normally.

Venus-6 was 40,700 miles from Earth five hours later when Venus-5 had already completed 864,000 miles of its journey.

The two spacecraft, each weighing about 2,500 lbs, were carrying pennants with a bas relief of Lenin and a Soviet coat-of-arms. Venus-6 was equipped with a radio transmitter designed to operate throughout the mission. Tass gave the transmission frequency as 922-763 megacycles.

The Soviet Union had pioneered interplanetary contact when Venus-4 reached the distant planet on October 18, 1967.

A. Food Aid Extended: The World Food Programme (WFP) has agreed to provide $2,000,000 in food aid to Afghanistan to help in expanding by 30 per cent the enrolment of students at boarding schools.

WFP is jointly sponsored by United Nations and FAO. Since 1964, WFP has been providing food to university boarders and to students of several schools in Kabul proper.

The food — wheat, butter, cheese, milk powder, canned meat, tea and sugar — will be used over a three-year period to supplement local food provided to 36 boarding schools outside Kabul. Admissions are expected to increase from 11,500 to 15,000.

The Government is providing additional teachers, class rooms and dormitories. WFP food will reduce the Government's food bill and the savings will be earmarked for expanded school facilities.

CEYLON

A. Indo-Ceylon Joint Committee On Economic Co-operation: The Joint Committee on Economic Co-operation between India and Ceylon held its first meeting in Colombo from January 23 to 26 when it reviewed the trends in mutual trade.

These trends revealed that the traditional pattern of trade between the two countries had been adversely affected by factors such as structural changes as well as continuing stringencies of foreign exchange. In 1968, however, there had been an expansion in total trade between the two countries.

The Indian team to the talks was led by Mr. Dinesh Singh, Minister of Commerce, and the Ceylon team was led by Mr. J. R. Jayewardene, Minister of State.

[The Joint Committee was appointed in pursuance of the resolve expressed by the Prime Ministers of India and Ceylon when the Indian Prime Minister visited Ceylon in September, 1967, and the decision to appoint a Joint Committee was taken at a meeting of the Commerce Ministers of the two countries in New Delhi in June, 1968. Please see page 8000]

A Press communique issued at the close of the meeting said that the Committee recognized the potential that exists for improving the overall trade both mutually and in respect of third countries. The exploitation of this potential, however, would require special measures of co-operation between the two countries, both internationally and bilaterally.

The Committee decided that the export possibilities of the Ceylonese and Indian products should be investigated in depth with a view to arrangements being instituted for providing preferential access into one country for the products of the other.

It was decided that a small working group consisting of representatives of each Government be set up to recommend arrangements where appropriate, for the expansion of trade between the two countries in specified commodities.

It was agreed that the Indo-Ceylon Standing Committee on Tea should have its first meeting in March, 1969 if possible.

The question of export of Indian films to Ceylon was discussed. It was agreed that the problems in this field would be examined further by the two Governments. The scope for increased co-operation between producers of films in the two countries would also be explored.

The two delegations welcomed the decision to form an Asian Council of Ministers. They agreed to set up within their respective administrations a National Unit as a focal point for Asian Economic Co-operation as recommended by the Third ECAFE Ministerial Conference on Economic Co-operation. They noted with satisfaction the close co-operation existing between India and Ceylon in international forums and agreed to continue and intensify mutual co-operation in international bodies such as ECAFE and UNCTAD.

CHINA

A. Public Appearance By Mr. Mao Tse-tung: The official Hsinhua News Agency reported on January 26 that Mr. Mao Tse-tung was in "excellent health and high spirits" when he appeared at a gathering the previous day (January 25) of 40,000 civilians and members of the armed forces in Peking.

Twenty-three leading figures, including Marshal Lin Piao, and the Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, accompanied him.

The big reception, held in a hall in north-west Peking, put an end to rumours which had gained support abroad about the health of Mr. Mao Tse-tung and the prolonged absence from the political scene of several Chinese leaders.

Among those present was Madame Chiang Ching (wife of Mr. Mao Tse-tung), who is still No. 6 in the hierarchy, which position she held when a list was published on the occasion of the national holiday on October 1, 1968. Her activities had attracted no publicity in recent months.

The Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi whose prolonged disappearance had caused speculation, was also at the reception. He recently returned to Peking after three months' absence from the Capital, although he was ill, to bid farewell to the Pakistani Ambassador, but he did not seem to have resumed his official functions.

The account of the reception mentioned all the leaders who were on the list on October 1, 1968 and in exactly the same order, with minor exceptions. The most important of these was the absence of Mr. Tung Pi-wu, Vice-President of the Republic, now old and who scarcely plays any political role.

The last indicated that the central authority had remained completely stable since order was re-established last Summer. By contrast, there were signs that the dominating role of the Army in the administration of the country might have caused difficulties in several areas outside the Capital.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mid-Term Election Results In Five States; Central Cabinet Re-shuffle; President's Address To Parliament; Railway Budget.

A. Mid-term Elections In Five States—Results: Over 101 million voters or approximately 40 per cent of the country's total electorate exercised their franchise in the mid-term polls in February, 1969 in the four States of West Bengal, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and Punjab.

This figure compares with 85.5 million voters who were on the electoral rolls in the four States at the time of the General Election of 1967. The increase in the number of voters State-wise is about 400,000 in West Bengal, about 3,000,000 in UP, about 400,000 in Punjab and about 2,000,000 in Bihar in the course of the past two years.

In order to cope with the additional 15,000,000 voters, the number of polling stations was increased from 99,600 in the last General Election to 110,600 for the mid-term polls to elect 1,127 members to the Legislative Assemblies in the four States.

Similarly, the number of polling officers and other staff to conduct the election in the four States was increased from about 398,000 to over 442,000. They were mainly drafted from the staff of Central Government offices in the concerned States, State Government officials and those working in local bodies.

Besides the mid-term poll in the four States, the quinquennial General Elections were also held in Nagaland where the Assembly was constituted in the beginning of March, 1964.

The electorate in Nagaland also increased from 124,000 to 173,000 in the two districts of Kohima and Mokokchung which were to return 40 members. Twelve other members of the Assembly were to be chosen by the Regional Council of Tuensang district.

Parties In The Arena:

Apart from the seven national parties—Indian National Congress, Jana Sangh, Praja-Socialist Party, Samyukta Socialist Party, Swatantra, Communist Party of India and the Communist Party (Marxist)—40 other State and registered political parties contested the mid-term elections. These included Bharatiya Kranti Dal, Hindu Mahasabha, Ramrajya Parishad, Republican Party of India (Ambedkarite) and Proutist Bloc.

The other registered parties which entered the contest in the different States were:

West Bengal: All-India Gorkha League, Indian National Democratic Front, Lok Sewak Sangh, Marxist Forward Bloc, Progressive Muslim League, Socialist United Centre, Workers' Party of India, Bangala Jatiya Dal, Lok Dal, Bolshevik Party of India, Minorities League, Paschim Krishak Samaj, Revolutionary Communist Party, Bharat Biplabi Communist Party, and the two State parties—Forward Bloc and Bangla Congress.

Bihar: Backward Classes Party of India, Loktantrik Congress, Soshit Dal, Bihar Prantiya Sudhwadi Party, Krantikari Communist Party of India, Bihar Prast Hal Jharkhand and Janata Party (State party).

Punjab: Punjab Janta Party, All-India Shiromani Baba Jivan Singh Masbhi Dal, Punjab Masihi Sabha, All-India Labour Party and Shiromani Akali Dal (State party).

Uttar Pradesh: Muslim Majlis, Socialist Party, UP Kisan Mazdoor Party, UP Jana Congress, Samajwadi Congress, Akhil Bhartiya Arya Sabha, Bhartiya Krantikari Parishad, Mazdoor Parishad, UP Swatantra Sangram Sainik Parishad, UP Sikh Pratinidhi Board and Vedvadi Karmavadi Parishad.

Thus, Congress emerged as the largest single party, with the SSP as the next largest. No single party could claim an absolute majority to be able to form the Government.

On February 19, Sardar Harihar Singh was elected leader of the Bihar Congress Legislature Party and on February 20, the former SVD Chief Minister, Mr. Bhola Paswan Shastri, was elected leader of the three-party alliance comprising the SSP, P-SP and Loktantrik Congress Dal.

Mr. Bhola Paswan's election followed a compromise arrived at between the P-SP and LCD on the one hand and the SSP on the other on the issue of leadership. The three parties combined had a strength of 78.

Nagaland Results:

The elections were held in Nagaland on February 6, 8 and 10, and the following are the results:

Total seats 52 (12 to be nominated); declared 40.

Nagaland Nationalist Organization	22

All the 12 nominated members from Tuensang and seven of the eight successful Independents joined the Nagaland Nationalist Organization on February 17 to raise its strength to 41 in the 52-member Assembly.

Thus, the ruling Naga National Organization (NNO) was voted back to powed.

The NNO Legislature Party met in Kohima on February 19 and elected Mr. Hokishe Sema as its new leader.

[The Lambi constituency in Ferozepore district went to the polls on March 2.]

The Akali Dal Legislature Party, the largest group in the newly-elected Punjab Assembly, chose on February 13 Mr. Gurnam Singh as its leader and authorized him to negotiate with other non-Congress parties on formation of a coalition Ministry in the State.

Mr. Gurnam Singh, former judge and Chief Minister of the first coalition Government in Punjab, returned to office 15 months after defection by 16 members from his party had led to the down-fall of his Ministry. Later, he formed a coalition with the Jana Sangh, which has eight seats in the Assembly. Thus, the Akali-Jana Sangh coalition achieved a strength of 51 in a House of 103.

On February 19, Sardar Harinder Singh, a former Minister, was unanimously elected Leader of the State Congress Legislature Party. He will now be Leader of the Opposition in the Punjab Assembly.

Uttar Pradesh Results:

The elections were held in Uttar Pradesh on February 5, 7, 9 and 20 and the following were the results:

The Congress thus secured more seats than it had in the previous Assembly, and was, by itself, only two short of an absolute majority. But, it was able to secure the co-operation of the Swatantra and Independents to be able to form a reasonably stable Ministry.

All United Front parties had distributed the constituencies even before the elections and had contested the elections as members of the "United Front" but on behalf of their respective parties. Thus, the "United Front" has a total effective strength of 218 in a House of 280, and was able to form a Ministry Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee (Bangla Congress), the former Chief Misister, was elected Leader, and Mr. Jyoti Basu, CPI (M) deputy leader on February 20.

On February 16, the West Bengal Pradesh Congress Legislature Party unanimously elected Mr. Siddhartha Shankar Ray as leader of the party in the State Assembly.

The former Chief Minister, Mr. P. C. Sen proposed Mr. Ray's name, which was seconded by Mr. Bijoy Singh Nahar. Thus, Mr. Ray became the leader of the Opposition in the Assembly.

The Congress has a strength of 55 in the 280-member Assembly.

Recall Of West Bengal Governor Demanded:

The CPI (M), after a meeting of West Bengal Committee on February 16, demanded the immediate recall of the Governor, Mr. Dharma Vira from the State, because "no normal relations can be established between the present Governor and the new United Front Ministry".

A statement issued by the party said: "The role played by the Governor and the Central Congress Government has been squarely condemned by the people. In such a situation, the least that is required is that the Governor should be immediately removed from the State".

Election Results Round-up:

A striking feature of the mid-term elections was that except in West Bengal where the two Commusist Parties made decisive gains, the major all-India parties were jolted badly, and regional and local groups and parties gained at their expense.

Thus, in Bihar, while the Congress and the Jana Sangh had more or less maintained their pre-election standing, the SSP, which was the second largest party in the last Assembly, lost nearly a third of its seats. This led to swelling the number of Independents who fought under the banners of various local parties.

In UP this phenomenon was even more marked. Though the Congress had a slight gain, all the other all-India parties suffered heavy losses, the largest loser being the Jana Sangh (the second largest party in the last elections), whose strength was cut by half from 98 to 48.

The CPI and the Swatantra each lost about two-thirds of their strength in the last Assembly, while the SSP lost one-fourth of its members.

The gainer from all these landslide reverses of all-India parties was Mr. Charan Singh's Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD) which did not exist at the time of the last elections and which had now emerged as the second largest party with 98 seats.

Likewise, in Punjab, the beneficiary was the Akali Party whose strength rose from 26 to 43, a gain of 66 per cent, at the expense of the Congress, Jana Sangh and CPI. The Congress lost 20 per cent of its strength, CPI 50 per cent and the Jana Sangh one out of nine seats. But, in the context of the peculiar pre-election situation in Punjab, the losses of the Jana Sangh may be considered heaviest. In view of the Akali-Jana Sangh alliance, it was confident of emerging as the second largest party. Judged from this stand-point, it had been virtually routed.

The Swatantra and SSP can derive small comfort from the fact that the former gained one seat where it had none before, while the latter increased its strength from one to two in the Punjab Assembly. The P-SP was not represented in the last Assembly, but managed to get one seat this time.

In West Bengal, while the Congress was completely routed, the Swatantra and Jana Sangh lost the only seat each had in the last Assembly. In spite of the support of the United Front, the strength of the P-SP was reduced from seven to five.

The Bangla Congress which entered the Assembly immediately after the previous elections with barely two seats secured 33 seats in the elections.

Thus, on the whole, it may be said that, in the mid-term polls, regional parties had carried the day.

C. President's Address To Parliament: The President, Dr. Zakir Husain, re-iterated on January 17 in his Address to a joint session of Parliament India's keen desire to settle its disputes with both China and Pakistan "consistent with our sovereignty, territorial integrity and on the basis of absolute non-interference in each other's internal affairs."

He said that in the present-day world, there was no alternative to peaceful co-existence among all nations and the Government was fully convinced of the continuing validity of the broad structure and principles of its foreign policy.

Opening the Budget session of Parliament, he took care to caution the world at the same time that, while India ardently desired peace and was dedicated to the promotion of international co-operation, she had to be quite vigilant about her defence.

He also gave a reassuring and optimistic picture of the country's economic recovery during the last year after two successive droughts.

He noted with satisfaction the decisive upward trend in both agriculture and industry leading to relative price stability and an overall improvement in the balance of payments position.

He stressed that there could be no integrated economic development without political stability. He deplored the disturbing trends of parochialism, regionalism and communalism and the general atmosphere of violence in the country and appealed to the people to make a united and purposeful effort to create an India of Mahatma Gandhi's dreams and "endeavour to wipe every tear from every eye."

Although the mid-term elections in Punjab, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and West Bengal had by and large been conducted in a peaceful and orderly atmosphere, he said, there were still some disquieting reports of violence and intimidation which prevented the people from exercising their franchise. While the Government was looking into the reports, the people in general must play their part in preserving political stability which was essential for social and economic development.

He expressed the hope that, with the co-operation of all political parties, stable Governments would be formed in all the States where mid-term elections had taken place.

He expected Parliament to carefully consider the recommendations of the Committee on Defections to ensure continued political stability and the smooth functioning of democracy in the country.

He also stressed the imperative need for maintaining discipline in the public services through a system of harmonious relationship between the Government and its employees in various spheres, and welcomed the decision to give a statutory basis to the joint consultation and compulsory arbitration machinery for redressing the grievances of Government servants.

The Address this time was devoted almost entirely to a review of the general economic recovery of the country from the nightmare of two successive droughts. Though the bumper harvest of 1967-68 proved a welcome turning point, the country had to struggle hard in the industrial sphere as well to recover from the ravages of the worst economic setback since Independence.

Now, happily, he said, there was a decisive upward trend in agriculture, the industry was recovering from recession, the employment position was improving and the Government was doing whatever possible to harness the rural prosperity to promote economic growth in various spheres. But, the President cautioned that the Government's philosophy of planned development should primarily seek to bridge the wide gap still existing between the needs of the people and the resources available.

D. Railway Budget For 1969-70: The Railway Budget for 1969-70, presented to Parliament by the new Railway Minister, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, on February 19, did not propose any increase in passenger fares and freight rates. The absence of any fresh burden on rail users, for the first time in many years, was welcomed by members of both Houses.

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh said that the Railways would have a nominal surplus of Rs. 1.91 crores in the coming financial year, after four consecutive years of deficit. This, however, depended on costs not going up for reasons beyond the control of the Railway administration.

He disclosed that the revised estimates for 1968-69 showed a net deficit of Rs. 10.01 crores contrary to the Budget expectation of a surplus of Rs. 1 crore. A temporary loan of Rs. 18.69 crores was being obtained from the General Revenues to finance expenditure charged to the Development Fund. The Revenue Reserve Fund would owe Rs. 45.80 crores to the General Revenues at the end of 1969-70.

He emphasized the need for Railways to generate sizable surpluses in the coming years not only to repay the loans from the Government but also build up the Development Fund adequately.

He disclosed that the Railway Board was considering rationalization of the fare and freight structure on the basis of the results of several cost studies into various aspects of railway operations.

He expressed concern over the "menace" of ticketless travel, which had become a "law and order" problem and appealed for the expeditious approval of a Bill on the subject which would come up before Parliament shortly.

Another distressing feature to which he made particular reference was the fact that Railway properties were increasingly becoming the target of attack and violence "arising from diverse matters not even remotely connected with Railway operations."

The Budget for 1969-70 estimated receipts at Rs. 946.8 crores and working expenses at Rs. 655.35 crores. The estimated gross receipts for 1969-70 would be Rs. 45 crores more than the revised estimates for 1968-69, while working expenses would be higher by Rs. 25.35 crores. According to the revised estimates for 1968-69, net revenue for the year would be Rs. 141.32 crores. This was Rs. 10.01 crores less than the dividend liability of Rs. 151.33 crores for the year. The short-fall was proposed to be met from drawals from the Revenue Reserve Fund.

The gap was attributed mainly to post-Budget increases amounting to Rs. 20.66 crores on account of revision of dearness allowance, travelling and running allowances, additional expenditure consequent on merger of DA with pay and increases in coal and electricity rates.

These increases were partly offset by a reduction of Rs. 5 crores in contribution to the Depreciation Reserve Fund (reflecting the lower estimate of withdrawal from the Fund this year) and the expected increases of Rs. 9.65 crores in gross traffic receipts.

The actuals for 1967-68 also turned out to be disappointing. The net revenue at Rs. 110 crores was Rs. 31.53 crores short of the dividend liability for the year. The gap was covered by withdrawal from the Revenue Reserve Fund. Of this, about Rs. 22.65 crores was due to higher staff costs.

Revenue earning freight traffic was expected to rise by 9,000,000 tonnes over the current year and yield Rs. 600 crores.

The revival of passenger traffic noticed since August, 1968 was expected to be maintained, resulting in an increase of three per cent during the year and yielding Rs. 273 crores.

Other coaching earnings were estimated at Rs. 47.5 crores and sundry earnings at Rs. 30.5 crores. An allowance of Rs. 4.2 crores had been made for an increase in unrealized sundry earnings.

A provision of Rs. 255 crores had been made for next year for investment in works, rolling stock and machinery. Rolling stock and machinery, including advances to private manufacturers for materials, will account for Rs. 118 crores and net expenditure on works would amount to Rs. 134 crores. A reduction of Rs. 4 crores was expected under the head "Inventories."

He claimed that efforts to achieve economy had begun to bear fruit. There had been no staff increase in 1967-68 and in the current year, the increase would be proportionately less than the anticipated increase of 8,000,000 tonnes of traffic. While this was encouraging, since nearly two-thirds of the Railways' working expenses were on staff, he assured continued effort to improve productivity.

Fourth Plan Outlay:

The Chairman of the Railway Board, Mr. G. D. Khandelwal, told a news conference on February 18 that the Fourth Plan outlay for the Railways would be Rs. 1,525 crores, but this would not include Rs. 50 crores to be made available for Metropolitan services.

He said that actual allocation would be on the basis of annual reviews.

The Financial Commissioner of Railways, Mr. B. Mukherji, explaining the Budget provisions, took comfort in the fact that the Railways had moved from a state of deficit to surplus.

Both Mr. Khandelwal and Mr. Mukherji admitted that the increase in passenger traffic in the current year would be a little under two per cent, as against the anticipated increase of 3.5 per cent. They expected, however, the upward trend to be maintained in the coming months, and the increase in the coming year was expected to be of the order of three per cent.

Increase In Earnings:

The Directorate of Statistics and Economics of the Railway Board circulated along with the Railway Budget on February 19 a document entitled "A Review of the Performance of the Indian Government Railways February, 1969."

It pointed out that by efficiency of Railway working over the years and increased productivity of Railway assets, the Railways had kept the increases in freight rates and fares well below the rise in the per capita cost of staff and the prices of materials.

Against increases of 139 per cent in the price of coal, 155 per cent in the price of iron and steel manufactures and 116 per cent in the per capita cost of slag between 1950-51 and 1967-68, the increase in the average rate realised per tonne kilometre and passenger kilometre was only 53 per cent and 59 per cent respectively. The benefit of the economics of scale had thus been passed on to the users.

After two years of stagnation in freight traffic, there were signs of a revival of traffic in the current year consequent upon a revival in industrial growth. An additional 5½ million tonnes of revenue-earning originating goods traffic was lifted during the first nine months of 1968-69, which conforms to the Budget estimates.

The trend of increase in passenger traffic since the end of the First Plan continued into 1967-68, but the rate of growth slowed down. The trend of increase in the average lead of passenger traffic continued in 1967-68. The number of journeys per capita ranged between 4.1 and 4.4 per annum in the last five years. In the current year, there was a halt in the growth of passenger traffic which might be considered temporary.

New Trains Introduced:

Up to the end of October, 1968, the Railways had introduced 23 new trains, of which 13 were on the broad gauge and ten on the metre gauge. The runs of 22 existing trains—eight on the broad gauge and 14 on the metre gauge—had been extended.

To augment the suburban services, 33 new trains were introduced—24 on the broad gauge and nine on the metre gauge—and the run of ten trains was extended.

A number of new long-distance trains introduced during the year account for over 3,000 train kilometres per day. They include the Paschim Express between Bombay (Central) and Amritsar.

The Rajdhani Express was introduced from March 1 between New Delhi and Howrah. It will be a biweekly service covering the distance of 1,445 km in less than 18 hours.

About 115 third class sleeper coaches had been added to the 1,260 in service at the beginning of this year. More third class sleeper coaches are to be built next year.

Review Of Accidents:

Railway accidents during 1967-68 were the lowest on record.

As against 6,017 accidents in 1965-66 and 5,889 in 1966-67, the number of accidents in 1967-68 was 5,502.

This improving trend of safety on Indian Railways was disclosed in a review of accidents for 1967-68 brought out by the Directorate of Safety of the Railway Board.

E. Mr. C. N. Annadurai Passes Away—New Ministry In Tamil Nadu: The Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, Mr. C. N. Annadurai, died at the Adyar Cancer Institute in Madras on February 3.

Mr. Annadurai was operated upon for the removal of a cancerous growth in the gullet in the middle of September, 1968 at the Manhattan Memorial Hospital in New York.

After his return, he had seldom stirred out of his house. He attended to Government business at his home.

Exploratory Operation:

His state of health caused concern and after he was examined by specialists at his residence, he was admitted to the Cancer Institute at Adyar on January 20. An exploratory operation to diagnose the exact nature of his ailment was performed at the Institute on January 25 by Dr. Theodore Miller of the Manhattan Memorial Hospital, helped by a team of Indian doctors, led by Dr. C. S. Sadasivam, thoracic surgeon of the General Hospital. The probe revealed a small mass of cancerous glands high up in the abdominal cavity. Dr. U. K. Henschke, radiologist of the Manhattan Memorial Hospital, implanted radio-active iridium "seeds" in the cancerous tissue which was said to have been inoperable. On January 27, Mr. Annadurai developed "chest complications" and was put under an intensive care programme.

Two days later (January 29), Mr. Annadurai suffered a severe heart attack. The Legislative Assembly and Council, which were debating the Governor's Address, were abruptly adjourned indefinitely and DMK members as well as those of other parties rushed to the Cancer Institute. Next day (January 30), he developed pulmonary oedema and hovered on the brink of death. He miraculously responded to treatment even as doctors seemed to be in despair. A premature report of his death was circulated by a news agency which, soon after, issued a correction. But the end was near.

Early on January 31, Mr. Annadurai's heart stopped beating for some seconds. It was soon revived by the alert doctors. But the effects of the cardiac arrest, in conjunction with the side effects of the radio-active iridium implantation, were too much for the tired body. He lost consciousness soon after the heart stoppage and never regained it.

He was buried on February 4.

Messages:

The President of India, Dr. Zakir Husain, in a message, said that the demise of Mr. Annadurai "is a loss not only to Tamil Nadu but the whole of India."

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, said: "It is tragic that death has taken him from us when he had so much more to give to the people. The nation mourns the man of wisdom whose high sense of duty earned him widespread respect."

New Ministry:

Immediately after the death of Mr. Annadurai, Mr. V. R. Nedunchezhian, Minister for Industries and leader of the House in the State Assembly, was sworn-in as acting Chief Minister by the State Governor, Sardar Ujjal Singh.

On February 9, Mr. M. Karunanidhi was unanimously elected leader of the DMK Party.

Mr. V. R. Nedunchezhian, acting Chief Minister, declined to stand for the election although his name was proposed. He told party members that he would step down as a contest would not be in the larger interest of the party. In a talk with newsmen after the meeting, he said that he would not join the Cabinet to be formed by Mr. Karunanidhi.

Next day (February 10), a seven-member DMK Ministry headed by Mr. M. Karunanidhi was sworn-in.

Earlier, Mr. M. Karunanidhi told a news conference that his Ministry would consist of all the Ministers who served in Mr. Annadurai's Cabinet except Mr. V. R. Nedunchezhian, who had declined to join the new Cabinet.

On February 12, the strength of the Cabinet was raised to 11 with the announcement of four more names. The new Ministers are: Mr. P. U. Shanmugham, Mr. S. B. Adityan, Mr. K. V. Subbiah and Mr. O. P. Raman. They were sworn-in on February 15

Mr. Karunanidhi also announced the portfolios of the Ministers as follows:

Mr. M. Karunanidhi: Chief Minister, Public, General Administration.

Mr. K. A. Mathiazhagan: Finance, Planning and Revenue.

Mr. A. Govindaswamy: Food and Agriculture.

Mrs. Sathiavani Muthu: Public, Health and Harijan Welfare.

Mr. S. Madhavan: Industries.

Mr. Sadiq Pasha: Public Works and Minor Irrigation.

Mr. M. Muthuswamy: Local Administration.

Mr. P. U. Shanmugham: Labour.

Mr. S. P. Adityan: Co-operation and Transport.

Mr. K. V. Subbiah: Religious Endowments and Housing Board.

Mr. O. P. Raman: Electricity.

Leader Of House:

On February 15, Mr. M. Karunanidhi was appointed Leader of the House in both the Assembly and the Council.

Formerly, Mr. V. R. Nedunchezhian was leader of the House in the Assembly and Mr. C. N. Annadurai of the Council.

New Speaker:

On February 22, Mr. Pulavar K. Govindan, so far Deputy Speaker of the Assembly, was elected Speaker.

The election of a new Speaker was necessitated by the resignation in August, 1968 of Mr. S. P. Adityan, who assumed charge as a Minister on February 15.

F. Phulpur Lok Sabha By-election: The SSP Secretary, Mr. Janeshwar Misra, defeated the former Central Minister, Mr. K. D. Malaviya (Congress) in the Phulpur Lok Sabha by-election by a margin of 22,305 votes in an eight-cornered contest.

Mr. Misra, who had lost to Mrs. Vijayalakshmi Pandit in 1967, polled 83,855 votes against Mr. Malaviya's 61,550.

The SSP took the seat seven years after the late Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia had challenged Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru unsuccessfully. On Mr. Nehru's death, Mrs. Pandit took the seat in a by-election and retained it in the last General Election. The seat fell vacant when she resigned after criticising the Congress leadership.

The following are the voting figures:

Janeshwar Misra (SSP)	83,855
K. D. Malaviya (Cong.)	61,550
Indu Dev (Ind.)	4,983
Badri Vishal (Ind.)	4,512
Bhagwan Dixit (Ind.)	5,259

H. Haryana Congress Regains Assembly Majority: The Haryana Congress Legislature Party, which was rocked by defections in October and November, 1968, regained its absolute majority on January 16 with the admission of Independent members of the Assembly into the party fold.

They were: Mr. Harpal Singh, Mr. Hem Raj and Mr. Rajinder Singh.

The strength of the Congress Party in the 81-member Legislative Assembly thus went up to 43.

The Chief Minister, Mr. Bansi Lal, told newsmen in Chandigarh that Mr. Rajinder Singh, another Independent who did not attend the Legislature Party meeting on January 16, would be admitted at the next meeting scheduled for January 27.

He re-iterated that he enjoyed the support of 50 Congressmen in the House as no Congress MLA who had "reportedly defected" had so far resigned from the party.

But, on January 21, the Supreme Court struck down the election of the Congress MLA, Mr Pratap Singh, thus reducing the Congress Party's strength by one.

On January 22, Mr. Rooplal Mehta, Congress member of the Haryana Legislative Assembly, resigned from the party and joined the Samyukta Vidhayak Dal.

The SVD leader claimed that with the resignation of Mr. Mehta, the strength of his group, the SVD, in the State Assembly had increased to 40 in a 81-member House.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: Mr. R. Nixon Sworn-in As US President; US "State Of The Union" Message By Mr. L. B. Johnson; US Aid Programme; Bomb Explosion Aboard "USS Enterprise".

A. Mr. Richard Nixon Sworn-in As US President: Mr. Richard M. Nixon (56) was sworn-in as America's 37th President in Washington on January 20.

He took the oath of office on two Bibles, both family heirlooms. While he raised his right hand in the traditional oath-taking gesture, his left hand rested on a celebrated Biblical passage which read: "And he shall judge among the nations and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hook: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

The oath of office was administered by the Chief Justice, Mr. Earl Warren.

The Senate minority leader, Mr. Everett Dirksen, known for his melodious and resonant voice, administered the oath to Mr. Spiro Agnew as Vice-President.

In his inaugural address which contained an eloquent plea for peace, Mr. Nixon said: "I shall consecrate my life, my energies and all the wisdom I can summon to the cause of peace among nations."

Wanting this pledge to be known all round the world, he called out: "Let this message be heard by the strong and the weak alike: the peace we seek to win is not victory over any other people but peace that comes with healing in its wings, with compassion for those who have suffered; with understanding for those who have opposed us; with the opportunity for all the peoples of this earth to choose their own destiny."

Peace permeated his address. "For the first time, because the people of the world want peace and the leaders are afraid of war, the times are on the side of peace." Peace in his view had thus become a necessity. It was now an avoidance of total destruction.

In this respect, a new Nixon seemed to have evolved from the Nixon of the fifties in which he seemed to believe in peace but only on American terms. Now he wanted to pursue it with a new passion linking America's greatness with "the title of peace-maker."

"This honour," he said, "now beckons America the chance to help lead the world at last out of the valley of turmoil and onto the high ground of peace."

He did not mention Viet-Nam, though his reference to the war abroad and divisions at home was unmistakable. Nor did he mention West Asia, another smouldering area.

Using another of his campaign slogans that he had used to destroy his previous image of the cold war warrior, President Nixon said: "After a period of confrontation we are entering an era of negotiations. Let all nations know that during this Administration we seek an open world, open to ideas, open to exchange of goods and people, a world in which no people great or small will live in angry isolation."

In a passage more directly addressed to "adversaries," he invited them "to peaceful competition not in dominion but in enriching the life of man."

He also addressed an appeal for co-operation "to reduce the burden of arms, to strengthen the structure of peace and to lift up the poor and hungry."

He added: "We cannot expect to make everyone our friend, but we can try to make no one our enemy. Those who would be our adversaries, let us invite to a peaceful competition—not in conquering territory or extending dominion, but in enriching the life of man.

"I know that peace does not come through wishing for it—that there is no substitute for days and even years of patient and prolonged diplomacy.

"As we learn to go forward together at home, let us also seek to go forward together with all mankind. Let us take as our goal: where peace is unknown, make it welcome; where peace is fragile, make it strong; where peace is temporary, make it permanent.

"To all who would be tempted by weakness, let us leave no doubt that we will be as strong as we need to be for as long as we need to be."

He promised to press urgently forward in pursuing goals of full employment, better housing, education, rebuilding America's cities and improving rural areas and in enhancing the quality of life.

Security Precautions:

Extraordinary security precautions—the tightest ever devised—were ordered to protect the new President and his family as they led the parade to the White House.

On the inaugural stand in front of the Capitol building, the white-domed home of Congress where Mr. Nixon was sworn-in, and on a pavilion in front of the White House, protective shields of bullet-proof glass were erected.

All man-hole covers along the parade route were inspected and sealed to prevent any would-be assassin from hiding in the sewers.

Roofs in the area were placed out of bounds to all but the massive security force of more than 15,000 Federal agents and local police. Confetti and streamers—which could hide weapons—were prohibited and windows along the route were ordered to be kept shut.

An elaborate communications system linked security forces throughout the city. Wide-angled scanning devices were in place, with automatic weapons ready in case of trouble.

B. World's Highest Paid Persons: With the news that USA has doubled the pay of its President from the time Mr. Richard Nixon took office on January 20, it is not correct to say that the head of the world's richest country is the best paid.

While Mr. Nixon, as head of a Government ruling 3,500,000 square miles of territory, will receive an allowance of £80,000 a year, the Grand Duke of Luxembourg, whose country covers only 1,000 square miles, gets £27,000 more than the new US President.

Several other geographically small countries pay their Heads of State far better than the Americans. At the top of the list is Queen Juliana of the Netherlands, who gets £500,000 a year. This is even more than Queen Elizabeth of Britain, whose official allowance is £475,000.

Little Belgium, next door to the Netherlands, pays its King Baudouin £350,000, while King Gustav of Sweden, King Frederik of Denmark and King Olav of Norway each receive £250,000 annually.

Even bustling Japan, one of the world's fastest growing countries economically, cannot compete with these European monarchs. Emperor Hirohito is only paid £100,000.

None of these distinguished people, however, comes anywhere near the world's highest salary. This is said to be earned by a Japanese manufacturing chemist, who draws annually £43,000,000.

And even that is dwarfed by the earnings of one famous but unacknowledged ruler. This was the uncrowned king of crime, Al Capone, the gangster of Chicago whose takings from the sale of illegal liquor in the year 1927 alone amounted to £43,000,000.

C. "State Of The Union" Message To US Congress: Presenting his last "State of the Union" message to the US Congress after five years in the White House, President L. B. Johnson urged the incoming Nixon Administration to press ahead with talks with Russia to reduce the nuclear missile race.

He said that "until a way is found to scale down the level of arms among the super Powers, mankind cannot view the future without apprehension".

He said he would leave office with USA's first balanced Budget since 1960 and that 1968 had ended with a surplus international balance of payments instead of a feared deficit.

He broke with tradition to speak to Congress and the nation over television just six days before leaving office. (Usually, retiring Presidents leave their final messages to be read by Congressional clerks.)

Mr. Johnson announced that he was leaving office with a major programme of domestic welfare legislation to be inherited by Mr. Nixon.

He said he had secured Mr. Nixon's agreement to continue the surtax "until his Administration and the Congress can ascertain that the facts justify permitting the surtax to expire or be reduced".

On Viet-Nam, he said: "The prospects for peace are better today than at any time since North Viet-Nam began its invasion with its regular forces more than four years ago. Americans were united in the hope that the still-stalled Paris talks with North Viet-Nam would bring an early peace. If this happened, military spending could be reduced and substantial savings could be made."

Apparently addressing himself directly to the incoming Republican Administration, he said that the future quest for peace required "that we maintain the liberal trade policies that have helped make us the leading nation in world trade; that we strengthen the international monetary system as an instrument of world prosperity; and that we seek areas of agreement with the Soviet Union where the interests of both nations, and of world peace, are served."

He said USA should resume talks with Russia about limiting offensive and defensive missile systems, which were due to start when the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia cast a new chill over East-West relations.

His reference to the need to "resume" the talks meant that an effort should be made to build on preliminary discussions which he and Mr. Kosygin held at Glassboro, New Jersey, when they met in June, 1967.

He pleaded for prompt US ratification of the East-West Treaty to ban the spread of nuclear weapons.

He appealed for continuing funds for foreign aid, and complained that his aid budget was cut by Congress last year "below the level of safety for ourselves and humane regard for our fellowmen".

(The New York Times)

[Prev. ref. 8316:AOA:C]

D. US Aid Programme: The US Budget statement presented to Congress with President L. B. Johnson's message on January 15 showed that the US aid programme for India, Pakistan and other countries in the Near East and South Asia in 1970 would be $679 million (about Rs. 510 crores), nearly double the much reduced 1969 figure of $352 million (Rs. 264 crores).

It said that more than 40 per cent of the programme would support improved agricultural practices and investments in water, seed, pesticides and fertilizers. "Substantial increases in food production have already been stimulated by our assistance. The US programme, along with aid from others, will help India and Pakistan expand their food production still further and enable them to take advantage of the development momentum provided by the agricultural revolution."

E. Bomb Explosion Aboard "USS Enterprise": A landing jet bounced a bomb on the flight deck of the nuclear aircraft-carrier, USS Enterprise off Honolulu in the Pacific on January 14 and set off a series of blasts which killed 25 sailors and injured 85 others.

Fifteen aircraft were destroyed in the resulting fire, which left numerous holes in the flight deck of the world's largest warship. The initial explosion was in the vicinity of an F-4 Phantom jet parked on the deck of the nuclear-powered carrier.

The US Navy said that within five minutes, there were four explosions followed by another series of four, but the Enterprise's nuclear propulsion plant was in no way badly damaged. An undetermined number of men were blown overboard and were missing in the waters south-west of Honolulu.

Three US Navy destroyers accompanying the Enterprise during operations off Honolulu helped fight the blaze and picked up the dead, injured and survivors from the water.

It was the fourth serious blaze in less than three years aboard US aircraft-carriers. About 129 men died and 62 were injured in a fire that raged through the Forrestal on July 5, 1967. Forty-three men were killed in a fire aboard the Oriskany in October, 1968, and in the following month (November, 1966) eight men died and 14 were injured in a blaze aboard the Franklin D. Roosevelt. All three of those fires occurred off the coast of North Viet-Nam in the Gulf of Tonkin.

The USS Enterprise is the world's largest aircraft-carrier and the first nuclear warship to enter combat.

Her statistics are 1,123 feet long equal to the height of a 100-storey skyscraper, tall as a 23-storey building from her steel keel to the top of the steel turret that caps the superstructure above the flight deck, 85,350 tons under full load, and capable of speeds exceeding 40 knots. She can cruise 20 times around the world without re-fuelling. She carries approximately 100 planes, many of them supersonic and capable of carrying nuclear weapons. She carries a crew of 4,600 men to man and service the planes and the ship.

F. Soviet Offer Of Talks With USA On Nuclear Missiles: The Soviet Union re-affirmed its willingness on January 20 to begin a "serious exchange of opinions" with the United States on the reduction of attack and defence nuclear missile systems.

A Soviet Foreign Ministry statement said that the Soviet Union was ready to discuss the "mutual restriction and subsequent reduction of strategic means of delivery of nuclear weapons, including defensive system."

The Soviet Union, it said, believed it was possible, "though not an easy thing," to settle "concrete questions of curbing the arms race." At the same time, however, socialist countries "must see to the further strengthening of (their) security" because of the "aggressive policy of the NATO bloc."

On the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, it said without naming any country, "one cannot fail to see that there is a group of countries which under various pretexts are seeking to delay the entering into force of the Treaty. In particular, such attempts have been made at the session of the United Nations General Assembly."

It said that world tension could be eased if disarmament proposals set out by the Soviet Union in its memorandum to all other States last Autumn were carried out.

These proposals included:

(1) Prohibition of underground nuclear weapons tests with the use of national detection means for controlling the ban;

(2) Prohibition of flights by bombers with nuclear weapons beyond national frontiers and restriction of the zone of movement of missile-carrying submarines;

(3) Prohibition of chemical and bacteriological weapons;

(4) Removal of foreign bases;

(5) Establishment of nuclear zones in different regions of the world; and the use of the sea-bed and ocean-floor for peaceful purposes only.

G. Mr. A. Harriman's "Notes" On Asian Economy: Recent developments in the Paris conversations between United States and North Viet-Namese representatives focussed attention on the prospects of ending the Viet-Nam war and turning to the rehabilitation and development of the war-torn area's economy.

Some detailed comment on economic progress in Asia was contained in the "notes" used during a recent session of the Paris talks by Mr. Averell Harriman, the chief US representative at the talks.

The pertinent parts of Mr. Harriman's statement are as follows:

"While this war is taking a destructive toll in Viet-Nam, other countries in Asia are making great progress on their own initiative and through co-operation with Asia and other countries, in expanding domestic production and foreign trade and in raising living standards.

"For example, in the last three years, from 1964 to 1967, such Asian countries as Malaysia, South Korea, Formosa, Thailand and Japan have increased their gross national product in real terms by more than 20 per cent. In fact, Taiwan's increase has been over 33 per cent. South Korea's foreign trade has almost trebled during the same period. Japan's miracle economic growth has increased its per capita annual income to more than $1,100, and Japan is now on the verge of becoming the third industrial nation in the world.

"There is no reason why North Viet-Nam could not participate in the economic and other benefits now being brought to the area by many co-operative efforts such as the Asian Development Bank, the Mekong Co-ordinating Committee and the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East.

"Even brighter hopes for the future can be seen in activities and programmes not dependent on large-scale investment in long-term projects. Recent years have seen a remarkable rise in economic productivity and trade by the countries of East Asia.

"Side by side with this economic activity there has been a marked increase in intellectual movement across national borders within the region. Education Ministers have created a secretariat which is supervising the development of a variety of educational institutions in South-East Asia, from which all will benefit through sharing each other's experience and talents.

"Peace would mean much, not only to the people of both North and South Viet-Nam, but to the people of neighbouring nations as well. Cambodia, Laos and Thailand would benefit greatly from peace. With peace, North Viet-Nam could take part in co-operative efforts to develop a region which had enormous economic potential. The people of all the countries of the area would benefit immeasurably.

"Take for instance the co-operation in increasing food production, shown by the development of the miracle rice, IR-5, and IR-8. This rice was developed in the Philippines, as a result of international co-operation, and is now helping farmers in other Asian countries. It has made the Philippines self-sufficient in rice for the first time in 65 years. In South Viet-Nam about 40,000 hectares of miracle rice are being planted this year, 200,000 hectares are planned for next year. This and other high-yield grains can help meet the urgent need for food in Asia and other parts of the world."

INDONESIA

A. President Suharto On Foreign Relations: In a statement before Parliament in the last week of January, President Suharto stressed that Indonesia would continue "a free and active foreign policy."

He said that this foreign policy was primarily aimed at the promotion of popular interests and the nation's economy.

He added that developments abroad and Indonesia's foreign relations greatly contributed to implementation of domestic programmes. Thought was now being given to stability in South-East Asia. Indonesia had been making all possible efforts to attain stability in South-East Asia, in conformity with her real capacities.

He noted with satisfaction that there was now a better understanding abroad about developments in Indonesia. She was maintaining economic and trade relations with nations willing to extend aid and establish co-operation without political commitments.

He said that the re-scheduling of payment of Indonesia's debts and new aid programmes were a major contribution. The Government was well aware that economic development was the full responsibility of the Indonesian people themselves. Foreign loans and co-operation should be regarded as an additional means to accelerate economic improvement. These achievements made it easier for Indonesia to co-operate with foreign nations in the economic sector. New foreign credits were obtained in 1968 and the understanding of foreign nations and international bodies as to Indonesia's current needs and difficulties at the Scheveningen meeting constituted positive results of Indonesia's foreign relations.

In 1968, he said, the Government permitted a number of foreign investors to operate in the sectors of industry, agriculture, mining, infrastructure, health, tourism and several others. Although not of a quick-yielding nature, the invested foreign capital would be of some benefit to the initial implementation of the Five-Year Development Programme.

He was of the view that the achievements in 1968 did not mean that all difficulties had been overcome. "There are still scores of obstacles ahead of us and there is still need for more improvements."

B. Donations To Relief Funds In India And Philippines: The State Minister for People's Welfare Affairs, Dr. Idham Chalid recently extended on behalf of the Government aid for victims of flood disaster in India and of a cyclone in the Philippines.

The two contributions, each amounting to 1,500,000 rupiah, were received by the Philippines Ambassador, Mr. Modesto Farolan and the Indian Charge d'Affaires, Mr. S. K. Bhutani.

Dr. Chalid expressed the hope that the contributions would be useful in providing relief to the stricken people.

C. Joint Lumber Venture: Two Japanese companies—Oji Paper Co. and Mitsui Co.—have been given permission by the Foreign Investment Council for a joint venture in lumber with the Indonesian company, P. T. Alas, in North Sumatra.

The joint venture will be called Trionas Forestry Development and will have an authorized capital of $1,000,000.

Both the Japanese companies will have 42.5 per cent of the entire capital while Indonesia will have 15 per cent.

Of the authorized capital, $350,000 will be invested this year and the remainder during the next five years.

Trionas Forestry Development Co. aims at turning out 50,000 cubic metres of lumber in 1969 and 100,000 cubic metres in 1970, after which the company hopes to increase its production year by year.

IRAN

A. Shah Against Any Big-Power Move In Persian Gulf: In an interview with the American weekly, US News And World Report published on January 20, the Shah said that he did not want other Big Powers to move into the Persian Gulf when Britain completed its scheduled military withdrawal from the area.

Asked how big a role he felt the Russians would play in the Persian Gulf, he said: 'This question must be settled by the countries surrounding the Persian Gulf. We do not want to see Britain leaving and then come in by the back door, still pulling strings from London. But we don't want any Big Powers trying to replace Britain."

Asked if foreign oil companies would be allowed to continue operations in Iran, he said: "It depends on how they behave. If they agree to terms, they are secure until the present Agreement ends in 12 years' time, with the possibility of three more five-year periods after that. In order to keep the Agreement there must be goodwill on both sides."

Iran, he said, was discovering new oil fields every day and should have enough oil to last the next 50 years when consumption would be much less than it was now because of the development of nuclear and and other types of energy.

He predicted that Iran would have an annual per capita income of well over $1,500 in 20 years.

Asked if he believed the Soviet Union would one day supplant the United States as Iran's best friend among the Great Powers, he said Iran followed a policy of national independence and would do what was best for the country. "Continuing good relations with the United States would depend on the Americans", he said. "If USA was friendly to Iran, naturally Iran would be the same to the United States."

About arms purchases, he said: "Iran buys the arms which best suit its needs."

Asked if Iran had recently bought Soviet arms because it was thought they were better than the American, he said: "It was not a question of knowing whether arms were better or not. We buy from the British, the Germans, the Russians and the Americans."

Asked if he wanted increased American military aid, he said it was not really a question of aid. "We buy what we need. You extend the credits. There are certain things the United States cannot sell to some countries, such as Phantom jets, which are not sold with only profits in mind. Iran's recent purchase of Phantoms should be considered in this light."

He added that Iran was very proud of the termination of United States economic aid. "That meant that this aid was no longer needed by Iran. The country has passed the stage of those countries that still need such aid and has reached the take-off point."

He believed that Iran could become, in its region, what Japan had become in East Asia. "Iran is the country in this part of the world that could be a truly developed country."

Asked what was Iran's greatest problem, he replied: "If I say foreign interference, it is our own fault. If we had not let ourselves be dominated by them, they would not have done so. That does not absolve the foreigners of their interference, even if these are old ones.

"During the last six or seven years, since I undertook the White Revolution, we have put an end to foreign interference.

"Foreigners, when they begin to interfere in a country's affairs put forward creatures who work for them. The Communists try to create Communists and the non-Communists oppose them with men they direct. They talk continually of liberty and democracy.

"These people were fighting the Americans by spreading chaos and anarchy which are the worst enemies of democracy."

B. Soviet Border Trade Office In Baku: Reporting an interview with the Deputy Director of the Soviet Union's Organization for Foreign Trade, Mr. Nikolai Masinko, Radio Moscow said on January 20 that the Organization had set up a branch in Baku to deal with border transactions between Iran and the adjacent Soviet Republics.

In Tehran, informed sources said the Baku office was established partly because of the expansion of frontier trade and partly in response to the recent visit to four neighbouring Soviet Republics by a team of businessmen led by Mr. Mohammad Khosrowshahi, President of the Tehran Chamber of Commerce.

During the visit, Iranian businessmen signed Protocols to Agreements with Georgia, Armenia, Turkistan and Soviet Azerbaijan according to which these Republics would import directly from Iran the goods they required.

Imports and exports will both be covered by the overall Iran-Soviet Trade Agreement and paid for through the clearing agreement which is attached to the Trade Agreement. However, by negotiating separate subsidiary agreements with the four Republics, the transportation of goods will be greatly facilitated and much red tape eliminated.

Iran exports consumer goods like shoes, socks, woollen wear and furnishing textiles. In return, the four Republics will sell to Iran a wide range of industrial goods such as power transformers and machinery.

ISRAEL

A. Budget For 1969-70: Presenting the Budget estimates for 1969-70 to the Knesset (Parliament) on January 6, the Finance Minister, Mr. Zeev Sharef, said that heavy burden of defence would continue for some time because peace was nowhere in sight.

He said that the Budget of I£ (Israeli Pound 7,850 million underscored the mounting pace of economic activity. Output rose by 14 per cent (industry by 28 per cent), and the number of employed persons increased by 65,000, or nine per cent. Prices and wages remained stable despite the devaluation in November, 1967, and this equilibrium was assisted by growth in savings—from 12 per cent of private disposable income in 1967 to 16 per cent last year. Higher productivity had bettered Israel's competitive position in export markets.

There was a price to be paid, however, he said, for this otherwise impressive display of economic growth. Imports shot up by the huge figure of $343 million to $1,735 million with exports rising by $186 million to $1,120 million, so that the foreign trade gap widened to $615 million. Most of this deficit was covered by capital imports of various kinds, but a paym gap was left of $100 million, wh meant a corresponding decline Israel's foreign currency reserves.

A second danger, that of infl tion, derived from the swoll means of payment owned by t public, which had expanded b I£350 million over and above sharp increase recorded in 19 Money was pumped into the econo my by the increase of bank cred to finance economic growth and by the Government's deficit-budgeting which was unavoidable.

All these considerations, b went on, had to be taken into ac count when preparing the Budget for 1969-70 which, like its two predecessors, must again be labelled a war-time Budget. Three-quarters of the tax revenue would go to defence, and in consequence half the total expenditure had to be financed from sources other than taxation. The true cost of defence was higher than what appeared in the figures. To take an example: reserve Army service cost the Treasury little, reservists' wages were defrayed by employers out of the Equalization Fund. But the removal of thousands of persons from their jobs each year cost the national economy a great deal.

The defence Budget for 1969-70 was I£2,500 million compared with I£2,200 million in the previous year.

Immigration would exceed 30,000 next year and might even approach 40,000. The new arrivals needed housing, which meant more workers in the construction branch who could otherwise be employed in industry and exports. It should be mentioned that I£50 million was allocated for settlement in East Jerusalem. Another heavy outlay was on debt redemption, which would mount to a peak of I£2,000 million a few years from now.

He said: "All this does not leave much money for other purposes, such as social advancement. Fortunately, we have reached a decent standard in fields such as health and education. We would like to go on progressing, particularly for the benefit of those with lower incomes, but such improvements have to be postponed.

"Economic growth requires a high rate of investment, which will total I£3,400 million in 1969. Of this, I£550 million goes to industry (including I£170 million, in the Budget and I£110 million from the Industrial Development Bank). Another I£160 million goes to mining enterprises.

Economic Report:

The highlights of the report on economy presented by him were:

(1) Output will rise by 11 to 12 per cent, compared with the 1968 average. The increase from January to December will be less, or 8 to 9 per cent.

(2) The number of gainfully occupied persons will increase by 57,000, or 6 per cent. This includes a reduction of 10,000 in the number of non-employed—down from 6 to 4.4 per cent of the civilian labour force.

(3) Output per worker will improve by 4 per cent. Prices will go up by 2 or 3 per cent, and so will the "wage creep," real wages thus remaining practically unchanged. Nevertheless, consumption per head will go up by 7 per cent, due partly to increased employment, partly to a confidence in the boom, which promotes spending, and partly to higher incomes from sources other than wages.

(4) Investment will rise by 20 per cent, from I£2,820 million to I£3,400 million—attracted by improved profits.

(5) Wage and price stability will keep Israel's exports competitive. They should increase by 13 per cent, from $1,120 million to $1,265 million.

(6) Higher output, bigger exports and heavy defence outlays will push up the import bill by 13 per cent, from $1,735 million to $1,960 million. Imports will increase by $80 million more than exports, widening the foreign trade gap from $615 million to $695 million.

(7) There will be a trade surplus with the administered areas. If this is seen as export, Israel's predicted trade surplus is less, rising from $600 million this year to $670 million.

(8) Diamond exports will grow by only 5 per cent, while other industrial sales abroad will forge ahead at the rate of 17 per cent. Agricultural sales will rise by the same as the overall average, or 13 per cent.

(9) Biggest import item is "Government — Non-Stated," which includes defence imports, and is up from $300 million to $365 million. Raw material imports will increase by $60 million and investment goods by $45 million, including $20 million on ships and aircraft.

(10) Net capital imports will be $630 million. This includes increased foreign investment, due to total $60 million. As the trade deficit is predicted at $695 million, the State's foreign currency reserves will fall by $65 million.

(11) The population of Israel will grow by 74,000, from an average of 2,806,000 during 1966-68 to an average in the present year of 2,880,000.

B. Labour Party-Mapam Alliance: The largest political bloc in the country's history came into being on January 19 with the alliance of the Labour Party and Mapam which would together have 62 members in the Knesset. Fifty-four of them belong to the Labour Party and eight to Mapam.

According to Mrs. Golda Meir, former Foreign Minister and one of the leaders of the alliance, the formation of the new bloc would mean that the religious parties would lose their position of holding the balance in Israeli politics.

The Secretary-General of Mapam, Mr. Y. Yaari, said that the religious parties would not now receive the same attention as before. But Mapam would not raise the question of separating State and religion, because they could not afford a struggle on the subject at present.

JAPAN

A. Mr. E. Sato On Domestic And Foreign Policies: Addressing the Diet on January 27, the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, re-iterated his Government's policies on domestic and foreign issues.

He said he would like to visit USA later this year to reach agreement with President R. Nixon on the date of reversion of Okinawa to Japan.

About Okinawa, he stressed that he aimed at setting the reversion date "in a context of mutual understanding, friendship and co-operation between the Governments and peoples" of the two countries.

He did not disclose any formula, the most delicate point in the whole reversion question, but made this clear: "I wish to seek a type of solution that will win the understanding of the people, taking cognizance, first and foremost, of the important role which the United States bases in Okinawa are playing in ensuring not only the security of our country but also the security of the Far East..."

He indicated a somewhat flexible attitude on Japan's relations with China and said: "We would welcome any development in which China would be widely received as a member of the international community."

To cope wisely with radical social changes in Japan such as various urban issues, outflow of farming populace and university problems, he said, the Japanese should work to ensure that material prosperity could be linked effectively with spiritual richness.

Discussing major domestic issues, he made an issue of campus disorders in the University of Tokyo and criticized University administrators and violent students for failing to work hard enough to restore order.

He expressed his determination to set about reforming the university system of the nation immediately. He also said he was determined to solve various problems involving US military bases in Japan on the basis of the policy of firmly maintaining the mutual security set-up between Japan and USA; patiently negotiate for the return of the former Japanese territory now under Russian rule in the northern Pacific; co-operate as much as possible for rehabilitation and development of South-East Asia as well as the attainment of peace in Viet-Nam; keep various channels open for contact with China in the expectation of a change on the part of that country and in view of the future situation in Asia while maintaining and promoting friendly relations with neighbouring nations such as the Republic of Korea and the Republic of China; exercise caution in operating the monetary and fiscal policies with the aim of maintaining the current good economic condition over a long period of years; promote a well-balanced comprehensive agricultural policy in line with the supply-demand of food and see to it that the trends of public utility charges would not badly affect commodity prices.

B. Economy In 1968: According to official figures released recently, automobiles, iron and steel, machine tools and cement recorded an all-time production high during 1968.

In foreign trade, Japan boosted both exports and imports to the highest annual level of some $13,000 million each, placing the nation as the world's No. 4 exporter after the United States, West Germany and Britain.

Gold and foreign exchange reserves climbed as much as $886 million to reach a record $2,891 million at the end of December, 1968.

In production automobiles topped the 4,000,000 unit level for the first time, ranging Japan second as automaker after USA. The 1968 output was 4,089,500 units or 30 per cent more than in the previous year. Of the figure, passenger cars accounted for 2,058,400 and trucks 1,992,700. Auto exports also jumped by 67 per cent over 1967 to an all-time high of 605,000 units, including 401,600 passenger cars and 198,400 trucks. Their value (including parts) came to a total of $1,078 million, topping the $1,000 million mark. Toyota Motor Co., out-running the Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, emerged as Japan's No. 1 exporter with its 1968 marketing, reaching about $368 million.

Crude steel output rose by 7.6 per cent to 66,890,100 tons, again an all-time record and the third highest after the United States and the Soviet Union. Japan's output accounted for 12.7 per cent of the world's total.

Production of machine tools in the first ten months of 1968 exceeded that for entire 1967, an all-time annual high. The January-October, 1968 production was put at nearly $400 million, or 41.7 per cent more than the like period of 1967.

Production of cement rose by 12 per cent to a record 47,160,000 tons.

Japan's exports on customs clearance basis soared by 24.4 per cent last year to a record high of $12-979,203,000. This pushed Japan ahead of France and Italy to the fourth place in the world, next to the United States, West Germany and Britain.

Sharp rises in exports were scored by automobiles, iron and steel products, home electric appliances, plastic products and others.

Imports on the same basis also touched a new peak of $12,989,085,-000—up by 11.4 per cent over 1967. They brought an excess of imports over exports of $9,882,999—a big improvement from the previous year's sizable deficit of more than $1,200 million.

In foreign trade, incomes from exports amounted to a record $12,750 million, and payments for imports also an all-time high of $10,-220 million.

C. Komeito Party For Recognition Of China: In a policy statement in the third week of January, the Komeito Party called for a "summit" conference of Japan and China and normalization of relations between the two countries.

It said that Japan should not take a hostile attitude towards Peking but act as a "bridge" between China and the United States.

To achieve the goal, Japan should recognize China, should not interfere with the so-called Taiwan problem as it was an internal affair of China, and should step up efforts to have China join United Nations. It also urged the expansion of trade and cultural interchanges between the two countries under Government-to-Government agreements.

The party called for the conclusion of a basic Treaty between the two countries first and others on commerce and navigation and fisheries later.

The basic Treaty, it said, should consist of three parts—political relations, economic relations and provision regarding claims and property. The first part should include the establishment of peaceful and friendly relations at the time of effectuation of the basic Treaty following Japan's recognition of the Chinese People's Republic. Both Japan and China then should observe Article 2 of the UN Charter stipulating solution of international disputes by peaceful means and mutual non-interference in internal affairs.

Japan, it said, should also make an effort to have China join United Nations and confirm that this country had abandoned any rights and claims on Taiwan and the Pescadores, or had no objection to the reversion of these islands to China.

D. Rioting By Students In Tokyo University: Radical students entrenched themselves in Tokyo University's Yasuda auditorium on January 19 and withstood a 10-hour siege by the riot police who seized control of 16 other buildings held by the students on the University's Hongo campus.

The students hurled blazing Molotov cocktails, acid bottles and huge chunks of concrete slabs and rocks at the policemen from the roof of the auditorium.

Police used helicopters to drop tear-gas shells and tear-gas solution and fired tear-gas grenades from the ground. Pressurized water was also used to break the resistance of the students. During the day-long battle the police arrested 256 radical students.

The Government and the Liberal Democratic Party on January 2 decided to cancel the University of Tokyo's entrance examinations for this Spring.

The Japan Socialist Party and the Japan Communist Party criticized the entry of the police into the University campus while the moderate Democratic Socialist Party and Komeito Party believed that the action was "inevitable."

Chinese Comment:

The New China News Agency said on January 21 that progressive students of Tokyo University had greatly heightened the militancy of Japanese revolutionaries by their tit-for-tat struggle against the police.

In a report on the clashes at Tokyo University, it said that the police, "acting on orders from the Japanese Government, tried ruthlessly to suppress the students. But the latter, infuriated by the barbarity of the police action, hit back vigorously."

[Prev. ref. 8804:GAP:J]

E. National Budget Estimates: The Finance Ministry decided in the last week of December, 1968 on its draft of the fiscal 1969 National Budget. The financial year starts every April.

It set the total expenditure on general account at 6,739,100 million yen ($18,721 million) or 15.8 per cent over the figure for the previous year.

A separate Budget for loans and investments amounted to 2,990,100 million yen.

The Ministry's tax reform system featured income-tax cuts totalling 150,300 million yen and resident tax reductions totalling 77,400 million yen up to December.

As a result, the minimum taxable income would be increased by about 100,000 yen to 935,000 yen a year for a family of five, including three children.

The increase in general account expenditures envisioned in the Finance Ministry's draft exceeded the 14.4 per cent nominal rate of growth foreseen by the Government for the economy in fiscal 1969. This contradicted the Finance Ministry's contention that the fiscal 1969 Budget would be "restraining" in its effect on the economy.

The scale of the fiscal loan and investment programme was considerably limited for fiscal 1969 because of a recent slow-down in the increase in postal saving deposits, the principal source of low-cost fiscal funds.

Allowing for additions expected as the result of the negotiations between the Ministry and other departments, the loan and investment programme was expected not to exceed 3,060,000 million yen to the 3,070,000 million yen level.

The following were the highlights of the Finance Ministry's proposals:

(1) Passenger fares of the National Railways will be raised by 15 per cent, as applied for by JNR. No increases are proposed for telephone and telegram rates.

(2) The annual pay raise for Government workers will be enforced from July in fiscal 1969. Necessary funds for five per cent wage increase are included in scheduled expenses on personnel.

(3) Both the consumer and producer price of rice will be maintained intact at the present level. Part of the nation's rice supply will be made available for free distribution outside the food control system.

(4) The Defence Agency's request for an increase of 6,000 men for the Ground Self-Defence Force, though not met in the initial draft, will be considered favourably in subsequent negotiations between the Agency and the Finance Ministry.

(5) The Finance Ministry will drop its proposal for a reduction in the rate of tax transfer to local governments, in return for loans amounting to 69,000 million yen by local government to the national treasury.

Defence Allocation:

Of the total Budget of $18,721 million, defence appropriations claim $1344 million or 7.1 per cent of the National Budget. Compared to the relative defence expenditures of other big countries, this is not a big amount, but note must be taken of the fact that this figure represents an increase of 14.6 per cent as compared with the current fiscal year's defence budget, which totalled $1,172.4 million. This is the biggest increase rate since 1963.

The emphasis on improving the defences may be regarded as reflecting a basic thinking within the Government and the ruling party on the need for greater autonomy in matters and lesser dependence on the United States within a broader fram-work of mutual security set-up between the two countries. There is also a growing body of opinion within the Government that such an autonomy is a pre-condition for Japan's efforts to build up its position of leadership in Asia.

The highlights of the defence related Budget provision are:

(1) Increase of ground self-defence forces by 6,000 men and naval vessels by 17 units, including one submarine and eight more ships of 2,000-ton class, mostly patrol boats and money is also prvided for the acquisition, through purchase and domestic production, in the first instance of 34 Phantom F4E jet fighters which Japan has just chosen to be the mainstay of its future air defence.

(2) The riot police is to be increased by 2,500 men, provision having been made in anticipation of widespread disturbances at home in 1970 when the Leftist forces are planning to mount a massive campaign against the renewal of the Security Treaty with USA which expires that year, also provision to increase the number of public prosecutors has been made keeping in mind the prospect of increase in such disturbances.

(3) Provision for increases in operating funds of Export-Import Bank and Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund—two agencies through which Japanese aid funds to developing countries are chiefly channelled—has been made in the national Budget.

The increases in the funds of the two agencies over the previous year are 11.6 per cent and 29.5 per cent respectively.

(4) Substantial increase in developmental credits to Indonesia is anticipated during the coming year as Japan is expected to foot about one-third of that country's $500 million new Five-Year Development Plan. No increases, however, are expected to other countries like India and Pakistan which, in the past, have been the chief beneficiaries.

F. Attempts To Attack Emperor: Two incidents marred the occasion when Emperor Hirohito and Empress Nagako and other members of the imperial family were exchanging New Year greetings with the public from the balcony of the Imperial Palace in Tokyo on January 2.

In the first incident, the police arrested a 48-year-old worker, Kenzo Okuzaki, immediately after he shot a small iron marble with a sling-shot in the direction of the Emperor. The sling-shot crashed into a palace window, going wide of the mark and without hurting any one.

The arrested man was among the 20,000 well-wishers who had packed the palace square when the imperial family resumed after a lapse of six years its post-War practice of personal exchange of greetings between the Mikado and his people.

The ceremony, however, went on as scheduled.

Two hours later, when the Emperor and his family returned to the balcony—they were to make eight appearances until 3-30 in the afternoon—another man burnt a smoke candle that released a pall of smoke in the Palace square.

JORDAN

A. Underground Water Project: The search for underground water by experts working on a UNDP-assisted survey project, it is learnt, has resulted in promising finds of water for agricultural, industrial and drinking purposes.

Since the project began, some 76 wells have been drilled and a further six are expected to produce water shortly.

The project, entitled "Investigation of the Sandstone Aquifers of East Jordan," is designed to determine the areas where underground water resources can be economically exploited, and to draw up exploitation programmes.

Substantial sandstone aquifers, some 1,000 yards deep, have been identified in the Wadi Utum Basin in the southern desert and are thought to contain enough water to meet irrigation and settlement requirements.

Further water deposits have been found in the Baqa Valley Catchment and the Hasa-Jafr Groundwater Basin.

The project covering about 60,000 square kilometres of east Jordan has aroused the interest of several bilateral aid organizations and prompted survey operations to locate soils suitable for irrigation with the newly found water.

The project is being financed by the Government of Jordan ($1,215,000 and UNDP $1,181,900). The executing agency is the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO.)

More than 80 per cent of Jordanian territory suffers from a chronic water shortage, and the provision of additional water is vital to both agriculture and industry.

KOREA (South)

A. Proposal For Pacific Asian Treaty Organization (PATO): Reports quoting Government sources in Seoul said on January 13 that South Korea was preparing for an Asian version of the NATO, called the Pacific Asian Treaty Organization (PATO).

One proposal is that PATO forces should be used in South Viet-Nam after the withdrawal of US forces.

PATO, it is suggested, would consist of US naval and air forces, and army units to be financed mainly by USA and Japan. The latter units would be supplied by member-nations of the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC), started by South Korea two years ago. ASPAC was created simply for consultation between non-communist allies in the Far East, including Australia, New Zealand and Japan, but not USA.

Japanese officials, however, discount the reported Korean plans for PATO. The South Korean Government has not come out openly in favour of such a plan. Further, as Japan has repeatedly said, she would not be interested in developing ASPAC into a military organization.

LAOS

A. Pathet Lao View Of Civil War: According to Soth Phetrasi, representative of the Lao Patriotic Front, the political wing of the Pathet Lao, in Vientiane, the Pathet Lao controlled three-fifths of the country and half the population.

[The Government claims that one-third of the territory is under Pathet Lao control, one-third under Government authority and one-third is contested. Three-quarters of the population is claimed to be under Government control.]

Soth Phetrasi is all that physically remains in Vientiane of the Coalition Government so laboriously approved at the Geneva Conference in 1961 and 1962 though, of course, the Government of Prince Souvanna Phouma still keeps the chairs vacant at Cabinet meetings of the Pathet Lao Ministers who walked out.

Soth Phetrasi's position can have few precedents. He has an office and 120 well-armed Pathet Lao troops in several villas. He has wide contacts in the diplomatic corps, in the Government, and among his friends and relations—all this in the "enemy" capital of a Government he readily describes as traitor, and which his movement is fighting, and recently pledged to overthrow.

But he also remains, when needed, an important contact point between the two sides and emphasizes that the sincerity of his movement is proved by its readiness to deal even with "traitors" so long as they "stop being in tow with the Americans", "return to reason", and "abandon some of their riches".

But naturally, in discussing the war in Laos in a recent interview he was fervent and indignant, and went to great lengths to insist that his movement's cause was one of simple patriotism, seeking genuine independence to install democracy at home, and to maintain neutrality towards those outside. His views on the fighting were diametrically opposed to everything asserted by the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma.

To restore conditions for a settlement, Soth Phetrasi declared, the Americans must end their "interference in Laos affairs, end their aggression against the Laotian people, and immediately cease their day and night bombing of liberated zones of Laos".

He denounced as a "pretext to conceal their aggression" American "reconnaissance flights" at the request of Prince Souvanna Phouma, and claimed that American aircraft were bombing "liberated zones" at the rate of 200 sorties a day, this rate being "three to four times what it was before the partial and total bombing halts over North Viet-Nam."

He also claimed that "Lao Peoples' Liberation Army Forces" had shot down "more than 900 American aircraft of all types, except the B-52, since bombing started in 1964".

He denounced vehemently the "special war" which he claimed was being waged in northern Laos by the Americans in the form of the Central Intelligence Agency encadrement of hill tribe armies.

He did not think any American units were in Laos, but there were "hundreds of American and Thai advisers and experts" directing this operation, which he alleged was directly commanded from Thailand.

MALAYSIA

A. Defence Plea To Britain: Closing the defence debate in Parliament in Kuala Lumpur on January 24, the Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, called on Britain to give his country more time to train her own men and acquire equipment so that she could defend herself after the British military withdrawal from east of Suez by 1971.

However, he said, Malaysia was not angry with Britain. He called for more self-reliance and limited aid from friends.

He said: "The British Government has decided on a target date and we have to accept it. What we are asking the British is to give us more time to train our own men and acquire equipment."

He assured that Malaysia would shop for the cheapest and best equipment, and not just accept second-hand goods from Britain.

During the debate, several members bitterly assailed British policy.

The Finance Minister, Tan Siew Sin, indicated that Malaysia's proposed purchase of Mirage jet fighters from France would depend on terms. "If the terms are not agreeable we may have to buy elsewhere."

[A French mission is due in Kuala Lumpur to negotiate the sale of 16 Mirages, an offer for $60 million Malaysian (about £8 million) and to discuss the possible sale of radar and anti-aircraft guns. A representative of Canada was also expected to try to sell Malaysia its CF-5 version of the American Freedom fighter.]

Tun Razak told Parliament that though the Govennment was negotiating to buy jets from France, any other country was free to make an offer.

The Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, who was on a visit to London for the Commonwealth Premiers' Conference, said on January 27 that Malaysia would agree to buy fighter aircraft from Britain rather than France if Britain herself provided air support in the interim period.

His Government, he said, was more interested in the Hawker Siddeley Harrier than in the French Mirage, but delivery of the Harrier could not be assured before 1971. He would be prepared to wait if the Royal Air Force were to keep, say, two squadrons in Labuan for the time being.

[Labuan, a small island off the coast of Sabah, formerly North Borneo, was originally ceded to Britain by the Sultan of Brunei in 1046. After Malaysia became independent it was extensively used by the RAF as a base during the three-year confrontation with Indonesia, but since 1966 it has been gradually run down].

Asked if he had considered inviting any other countries to station aircraft on Labuan, he replied that the Americans were certainly not interested. He had approached Australia and New Zealand and there were to be further talks in Canberra in May, 1969, but he gave the impression that any request to these countries would be referred to Britain.

"We do not want a large force", he said, "but at the moment we have no planes at all, you see. In the meantime, these Philippine planes have been flying over, buzzing our ships and doing all sorts of stunts, and we have nothing to drive them away."

He firmly rejected the idea that the US Government was threatening to withdraw aid if Malaysia bought fighters. "We are not receiving aid from America," he observed. "To be quite honest, I wish we were, but we are one of the countries excluded."

B. Foreign Investment: According to the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Dr. Lim Swee Aun, 14 countries had invested in manufacturing in Malaysia and the industry had grown at a steady rate of 14.5 per cent per annum.

Dr. Lim made this statement at the opening of a jute mill recently in Butterworth in Penang.

He said: "We cannot force foreigners to invest in Malaysia. We can only induce them by offering incentives. We have to compete with all the countries in the world, developed and developing, to attract investment capital. Investment capital is limited. It is mobile and will move to areas which offer the best security, the best returns and where it is genuinely welcome."

Since Independence, he added, the Government had invested in the infra-structure for industrial development and created a favourable climate for investment. Ports had been enlarged, roads and communications improved and supplies of water and power kept ahead of demand.

Referring to industrialization in Penang, he said there would be greater growth in the State in the New Year. It would not be long when the east-west road would become an urgent necessity and "Penang will then really become the industrial centre in the north."

Bagan Dalam, he disclosed, had been earmarked for a Malaysian-German ship-building yard.

Malayawata Steel had completed its plan for expansion to double its production and manufacture new types of industrial products.

A large textile factory, in a joint venture with India and the World Bank, would be built in Mak Mandin.

PAKISTAN

A. Aid From China: The Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. M. M. Ahmed, told newsmen in Lahore on January 21 that by the end of the current Third Five-Year Plan period, the Socialist countries would have contributed 32 per cent of the total foreign aid received by Pakistan and barring China, all countries had fixed 10 to 12 years for repayment of the credits. China had fixed the payment period at 20 years, with a grace period of 10 years.

He said that Pakistan was trying to persuade the aid-giving countries to agree to soft-term loans.

China had given loans totalling $142 million to Pakistan.

The first loan of $60 million was given late in 1965. This was followed by another credit of $40 million in 1967. A new loan of $42 million was announced by the Chinese Minister for Foreign Trade, Mr. Lin Hai-yun, who flew to Islamabad in the last week of December, 1968 to sign the Loan Agreement. The new credit would be utilized for development projects to be built with Chinese technical assistance. A team of Chinese experts recently conducted a three-month-long survey of development projects in East and West Pakistan and selected those which were to be built with Chinese help.

All the Chinese loans to Pakistan were interest-free, repayable over 20 years. They could be repaid in exports. The new Chinese loan was welcomed by Pakistani officials because project aid, which until three years ago came largely from the United States, had lately fallen short of Pakistani expectations. Some prestigious projects, languishing owing to the short-fall in project aid, would benefit from the new Chinese credit.

The Chinese were financing the construction of a $36 million heavy machinery complex at Taxila near Islamabad. They were also helping to set up an ordnance factory in East Pakistan which was expected to be in operation in April, 1969.

China had also promised help for Pakistan's Fourth Five-Year Plan (1970-75), now being drawn up. Mr. M. M. Ahmed had secured an assurance of continued Chinese aid to Pakistan during his Peking visit late in December, 1967.

The Pakistan Government was considering a Chinese offer to cooperate in drawing up a flood control plan for East Pakistan. Teams of Pakistani experts would visit China shortly to study Chinese techniques of flood control and the Chinese experience in tackling the problems of water-logging and salinity. They would suggest what methods could be adapted in Pakistan for dealing with these problems.

Trade Figures:

According to Pakistan's Commerce Minister, Nawabzada Abdul Gafoor Khan, Sino-Pakistani trade had expanded by nearly 1,000 per cent in the past five years. In fiscal 1967, its volume was more than $78 million. Pakistan always enjoyed a favourable balance of trade with China.

Pakistani exports to China consist mostly of raw cotton and jute, cotton yarn and jute manufactures, and a few other semi-finished products. Chinese exports to Pakistan comprise cement, coal, tools, workshop equipment, dyes and chemicals, pig-iron, paper and pharmaceuticals. Proposals for expanding Sino-Pakistani trade were under active consideration in Peking and Islamabad.

Recently, Pakistani and Chinese officials arranged to revive border trade between the Gilgit Agency of West Pakistan and neighbouring Sinkiang in China. From June, 1969, trade on this overland route would be carried by caravans of pack animals. The quantity of trade would be small because of transportation difficulties. But, the revival of trade on the eastern half of the ancient silk road would be a significant development in Sino-Pakistan relations.

B. IFC Investment: The International Finance Corporation (IFC), an affiliate of the World Bank which invests in private industry in developing member-countries, has announced that it is investing for the first time in East Pakistan's industrial expansion.

The project involves modernization and expansion of the Karnafuli Paper Mills, located near Chittagong, at a cost of $17 million.

The Karnafuli expansion will increase the country's paper-making capacity by 17,000 tons a year, bringing the total paper-making capability financed by IFC in Pakistan to 72,000 tons annually, and will also boost the plant's capacity by half. It will have the secondary economic development benefit of helping to develop East Pakistan's forest reserves. The additional paper prolution could save Pakistan foreign exchange up to $2,000,000 a year.

IFC is making a basic commitment of $5.6 million to the Karnafuli expansion in addition to a contingent commitment. The investment drew support from seven international investment institutions in North America, West Asia and Europe, which purchased half of the basic IFC commitment.

Karnafuli is IFC's ninth investment in Pakistan, over a range of industries including (besides paper) cement, cotton textiles, steel products, fertilizer, jute products manufacturing, and development banking.

C. First RCD Industrial Project: The Secretary-General of the Regional Co-operation for Development (RCD), Mr. Messarat Kossein Zubeiri, said in Tehran on January 7 that the first industrial project sponsored by RCD would be completed in a few weeks.

The project, launched at a cost of £5.5 million, was designed to produce paper for bank-notes.

Two other industrial projects related to RCD would go onstream some time this year. These were a ball-bearing manufacturing plant in Pakistan and a carbon black producing plant in Turkey.

"All three plants will be able to meet the requirements of the entire region," he said. "They can operate at an optimum level only because of the vast RCD market."

He said that the leading policy-makers in the three countries (Iran, Pakistan and Turkey) had agreed in principle to focus their attention on regional planning for industry rather than national planning. "The regional (RCD) market can support large industries and enable the enterprises to go for investments in viable industries. The most logical way for any of the three member-States to enjoy economies of scale is to go for regional industries."

Co-operation among the RCD members in industrial projects could not, however, he said, be restricted to joint-purpose industrial enterprises. Each one of the RCD member-States specialized in a certain field. Iran, for instance, was a major oil Power not only as a producer but also as a nation commanding expertise in all sectors of the oil industry. "That is why we are looking forward to the Izmir (Turkey) Refinery's inauguration when it goes on stream late this year. The Iranian crude oil will be supplied to keep this Refinery running."

D. IDA Assistance For Power Project: The International Development Association (IDA) and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) have in a joint operation agreed to provide Pakistan with $3,900,000 to assist in financing the employment of general consultants for the East Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority (EPWAPDA).

[The Authority was established in 1958 to execute the co-ordinated development and utilization of the water and power resources of the Province. The consultants selected are a consortium of three firms headed by Acres International of Canada. East Pakistan (55,000 square miles) is largely composed of the deltaic area of two of the world's largest rivers—the Ganges and the Brahmaputra. The development of its vast water resources presents problems among the most difficult and complex of their kind ever known. The World Bank Group has for many years been concerned with this problem, particularly in relation to increasing agricultural production. With a population of 65,000,000, East Pakistan is one of the most densely populated regions in the world. Although its soils are fertile, agricultural yields are low and food production has not kept pace with population growth.]

Since 1962, IDA has sent $11.5 million for three agricultural projects involving flood control and irrigation. In 1965, at the request of the Government, the Bank reviewed a master plan for water and power development and, subsequently, reached agreement with the Government of East Pakistan on a modified strategy for the execution of a programme of agricultural and water resources development. In 1967, a special group was established in the Bank to assist East Pakistan in carrying out this programme. The consultants now being retained will maintain close liaison with the Bank's East Pakistan Group.

THAILAND

A. Insurgents Step Up Activity: Reports from Bangkok in recent weeks refer to increased activity by communist insurgents in the northern, north-eastern, south-eastern and south-western areas and across the Malaysia-Thai border.

The northern area is between Nan in Thailand where a road ends with an airport and Muong Han on the Laos side. Nan and Muong Han are connected by trails. The people in the area are nomadic hill tribes who follow a traditional, shifting agricultural policy of "slash and burn." They travel freely across the borders, as they do not recognize them as such. Government authority is not much felt in this area as the few who are there collect taxes and do little administration. Trouble began in this area a year ago in clashes between the hill tribes and villagers. When the army was sent, it lost the first round. Observers believe the troops were no good to fight a guerrilla war and the command was so round-about, that if air support was needed it had to be cleared in Bangkok. The helicopters were tied down in transporting officers.

Recently, Meo hill tribesmen began trench fighting. The air force is now more active, but the jets are not effective in the hills. There are also reports that communists are instigating the setting up of a "Meo Kingdom." The Government, on the other hand, feels that the hill tribes are not interested in communism, but only do not want to be interfered with by officials and troops whom they consider as foreigners. While putting in more troops, the Government is concentrating also in resettlement schemes, helping rural areas and developing the friendship of the people. The King recently visited the area.

In the north-east plains, on the other hand, the Government is successful against the insurgents concentrated around Udorn, bordering Laos. A major incident was the blowing up of an aircraft in July, 1968 and the killing of four security guards at the US airbase. This was said to be a trigger-happy, local affair to keep up morale. Military observers think it was also amateurish.

Border Incidents:

Incidents have been reported from the south-east along the Cambodian border, but they are minor. In the central plains not much of activity is reported, though the Thai Communist Party (TCP) is building up cells. In Bangkok, the TCP is underground, but is said to be not powerful or active. Its estimated membership is about 3,000. The total insurgent strength is set at 20,000, including sympathizers.

In the south-west, around the end of the Burmese border, there are also a few communist pockets, said to be isolated and not active.

Along the Malaysia-Thai border there have been many incidents. The insurgents are of the Malayan Communist Party operating now against the Malaysian Government. They slip back into Thailand to recoup. The task of fighting the communists along the border is being done mostly and effectively by the Malaysian Government. More co-operation from Thailand could be expected in future.

As to outside support, the Thai Deputy Defence Minister, Air Marshal Dawee, said recently that China had established a base in Kumming to support and direct insurgency in Malaysia, Thailand and Laos.

According to Thai authorities, the involvement of North-Viet-Nam in Thai communist activities is evident in captured documents. In July the authorities captured in north Thailand along the Lao border, a North Viet-Namese official, who was helping hill tribes in guerrilla warfare and propaganda.

The Thai Minister for Interior, Gen. Praphas Charusathien, said on August 1, 1968 that most of the cadres and infiltrators were being trained at the "School of Anti-Americanism" in North Viet-Nam at Hao Binh, which is on the main road between Hanoi and Sam Neua, the Pathet Lao stronghold in Laos.

Radio Peking has been giving support and a lot of time for reports of the Thai Communist Party, the Thai Independence Movement and the Thailand Patriotic Front, formed in November, 1964 and January, 1965. It broadcast in full on January 12 this year the Thai Communist Party's appeal to the Thai people to join forces with it to drive out US troops and overthrow the Government.

Recently, the rebels also began terrorizing people by ambushing buses on highways and threatening plantations and demanding protection money. These are said to be aimed at controlling people who are not influenced by propaganda.

In the operations against the communists in the past three years, Government troops have killed about 450 and captured 3,400.

B. ECAFE Concern At Fall In Earnings From Commodities: The ECAFE Committee on Trade met in Bangkok from January 6 to 15 during which it expressed concern at the continued fall in export earnings from major primary commodities of the region such as tea, tin, rubber, palm oil and hard fibres.

It noted that the earnings had decreased from the peak figure of $3,000 million in 1964 to $2,400 million in 1967 because of price declines and fluctuations of demand in the world.

As imports had continued to increase more rapidly than exports, the region as a whole, including developed and developing countries, suffered in 1967 an unprecedented trade deficit of $4,800 million, equivalent to more than 40 per cent of the region's total exports in 1967 against 26.5 per cent in 1965.

The Committee noted improvement in prices of some primary commodities such as rice and copra during the first half of 1968.

According to preliminary data, the value of regional exports rose by ten per cent over the corresponding period in 1967. Exports of developed countries of the region increased by 11 per cent while exports of developing countries expanded by seven per cent.

TURKEY

A. Efforts To Increase Foreign Exchange Resources: The State Planning Adviser, Mr. Turgut Ozal, said in Ankara in the first week of January that the Government would now concentrate on projects with a high foreign exchange earning potential.

In 1969, he said, the State Planning Organization would strengthen such fields as the food processing industry, animal stock breeding, fresh fruits and vegetable production, metallurgy, mines and tourism. These were the fields promising to expand Turkey's foreign exchange earnings.

The Government was hoping to expand its foreign exchange receipts from exports during 1969 to $575 million. If this target was achieved, the country's total foreign exchange earnings would then amount to $700 million. This included non-commercial and invisible foreign currency receipts such as the remittances from Turkish workers in Germany and other countries in Western Europe.

At the same time, the authorities were banking on a forestry project for wood industries, paper and pulp, which might eventually bring in $300 million annually in foreign exchange. But this project would need assistance from abroad for its development.

Turkey's balance of payments has steadily improved during the past few years. Total foreign exchange earnings from exports amounted to $490 million plus $115 million from workers' remittances in 1966. In 1967 export earnings amounted to $522 million, but workers' remittances fell to $93 million.

For 1968, exports earnings were estimated to amount to $530 million, while the workers abroad were expected to have transferred home some $110 million.

Turkey is in a favourable position to serve as West Europe's supplier of fresh fruits and vegetables, specially when she attains closer ties with the Common Market, of which she is now an associate-member.

Tourism is also fast developing into a profitable foreign exchange source.

B. Japanese Assistance For Bosphorus Project: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil, on a visit to Tokyo, on January 15 called on the Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, who told him that his country would co-operate in the Bosphorus bridge project.

Japanese officials quoted Mr. Caglayangil as telling Mr. Sato that Japan was willing to co-operate in the proposed construction of the bridge "if conditions were satisfactory".

The bridge, which Turkey plans to build at an estimated cost of $35,000,000, would become an international span linking Europe with Asia.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Terms For Cease-fire: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Tran Thanh in talks with journalists, said on January 27 that his Government would accept a cease-fire only if it had been agreed that North Viet-Namese troops and their auxiliary forces would leave the South and return North.

He said: "There cannot be any cease-fire for communist North Viet-Nam and the so-called National Liberation Front to make territorial claims or to hoist their flags in a move to show their presence here".

He also rejected the idea of forming a Government of members "initiated by NLF" and Saigon; such a coalition was prohibited by the Constitution.

Mr. Thanh did not reject a cease-fire. The main point of his remarks was officially interpreted to mean that a cease-fire could come only after very precise agreement. In a war where there could be some, even if only a few, of the enemy everywhere, the risks that he mentioned of flags misleadingly breaking out all over was real.

He did not appear to say that a cease-fire could be agreed only when North Viet-Namese and auxiliary forces had gone back North. Agreement to do so was the condition for stopping shooting, which would apparently be resumed if the agreement were not kept. But, he added, some hard-line references about not agreeing to stop fighting while the enemy continued bringing more troops into the South, and continues to prepare for new attacks.

Mr. Thanh's remarks about coalition were also open to interpretation. The position of the NLF, as confirmed in its opening statement in Paris, was not to seek coalition, but the overthrow of what it scorns as the Thieu-Ky-Huong clique and the setting up of a "peace government" that would come to the Paris table for serious negotiations.

What Mr. Thanh rejected was the idea of forming a new Government made up of NLF "front men" and members of the existing administration. Even those politicians known as "neutralist" or "moderate" would not agree to seeing the present Government overthrown. They hope that "more representative" men (namely, themselves) will be brought into the Cabinet, and that this team would be in a position to force NLF to do a deal, accepting for itself only a minor political role as an Opposition group.

Mr. Thanh's strictures did not rule out agreement to such a development. He confirmed that four committees had been set up within his Ministry to deal with all aspects of the Paris talks.

In its latest Note to the International Control Commission, protesting at what it called communist atrocities, the South Viet-Namese Government claimed that during December, 1968, about 241 civilians were killed, 859 wounded, and 124 kidnapped in communist actions.

American War Losses:

Meanwhile, it is said, more fighting men are involved on both sides than ever before in the war in Viet-Nam.

Nearly 1,500,000 allied troops are ranged against the Viet-Cong and North Viet-Namese forces estimated at not much over 200,000.

The United States has lost more than 30,500 men killed in Viet-Nam during the build-up of advisers and combat troops since 1961. Nearly half of these were killed in 1968. The figure could reach almost 40,000 by 1970, or more than were killed in Korea.

American war spending might decline slightly from the present level of around $30,000 million a year, if economies are put into e fect and the South Viet-Name take over more of the fighting. B it would take a cease-fire or s stantial withdrawals from t 550,000-strong American force t cut the price of the war drastically. Aircraft losses alone stand a 4,750 and will probably pass th 5,000 mark in 1969.

There is comparatively little t show for this staggering expenditure of men, money and machines. The build-up of American troops—followed by South Koreans, Australians, New Zealanders, Filipinos and Thais—has been matched proportionally by the North Viet-Namese and the problem of rural security is not even in sight of a solution, a guerrilla activity continues as intensively as ever.

Up-to-date war technology and the construction of vast base areas and logistic facilities have been injected into the country. The North Viet-Namese too have revolutionized warfare by the use of Russian and Chinese rockets, against which no tank, city or base camp is safe. Even their small arms outclass those of many South Viet-Namese units.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Australian Initiative On South-East Asian Defence Talks: The Australian Prime Minister, Mr. John Gorton, on a visit to London for the Commonwealth Premiers' Conference, on January 17 took the initiative in arranging the next five-Power conference on the situation arising out of the withdrawal of Britain from Singapore in 1971.

This conference will be held in Canberra on May 12 and would be attended by Britain, Malaysia, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand.

Among those present when Mr. Gorton made the proposal were Mr. Keith Holyoake, Prime Minister of New Zealand, Tengku Abdul Rehman, Prime Minister of Malaysia, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, Prime Minister of Singapore, and Mr. Paul Hasluck, Australian Foreign Minister.

There was no discussion of the agenda or the issues. All the participants have to review the position. Tengku Abdul Rehman, for example, just before the Commonwealth leaders met, said that Singapore was unsuited as a base for modern defence needs and should be an open city.

As the British withdrawal proceeds, the Australian ground forces now in Terendak will be re-grouped in Singapore, but no decision was taken beyond that date about their deployment or the Air Force detachment and Army company to be left in Butterworth in Malaysia.

Singapore is building up its own forces simply with a view to local defence.

Britain's military withdrawal will be practically complete by March, 1970.

The decisions of the five-Power conference will depend in part on the demonstration of Britain's ability to concentrate forces quickly in the area.

On January 6, Tengku Abdul Rehman rejected the reported suggestion by Mr. Gorton that Singapore be made a base for a five-nation mobile force for regional defence. "Singapore will provide no effective defence against any attack," he said.

He added: "However, as the last War proved beyond doubt, Singapore cannot put up any form of defence. In time of war, Singapore should be declared a free area. If you drop ten bombs on Singapore the whole Island would be destroyed. Using it as a base would, therefore, endanger the lives of so many. How could we put a force there? If we put up a defence force it must be at a proper base. Air force in Singapore is good only for show or for economic purposes, certainly not for defence purposes."

He could not see the difference between a force based in Malacca and one based in Singapore.

Earlier, on January 3, Tengku Abdul Rehman welcomed the announcement by Mr. Gorton that Australia would maintain army, naval and air units in the Malaysia-Singapore area until the end of 1971. He said: "That's a very nice gesture of friendship."

B. Rise In Rice Price: The US Department of Agriculture, in a review of world rice trade, said on January 27 that the drought that had gripped several South-East Asian countries just before the rice harvest in November and December, 1968 had reduced the prospects of a second large crop and the prices were already moving upward.

The prices which had begun to fall when a large 180-million-ton crop had first been estimated for 1968-69 recovered partially when news of drought in Asia started coming in. India, China, South Korea, Cambodia, Thailand, South Viet-Nam and the Philippines have revised downward their production estimates.

It now appeared that with the exception of the United States, major producers will have only a little more rice available for export in 1969 than they had in 1968.

In India, the crop was now estimated at seven per cent below last season but still the third highest on record. India could be taking a little more than the 375,000 tons imported last year.

In South Viet-Nam, losses due to the drought were balanced by improvements due to the lull in fighting and the country will probably import less than the 700,000 tons of 1968.

C. New Czech Government: The Presidium of the Czech National Council named a 21-man Government headed by Mr. Stanislav Razl for the new Socialist Republic on January 8.

Mr. Razl (48) is a former Minister for Chemical Industries.

The Slovak Government, under the new Federal Constitution giving internal autonomy to the Czech and Slovak Republics, was announced on January 2, and is headed by Mr. Stefan Sadovsky.

Mr. Razl, the Premier, heads a young and little-known Government. Mr. Razl and his Czech Socialist Republic Government were sworn-in in Prague next day (January 9).

The new Czech Government completes Czechoslovakia's three-Government Federal set-up. Mr. Razl's Cabinet joins that of Slovak Socialist Republic Premier, Mr. Stefan Sadovsky, and the Central Federal Premier, Mr. Oldrich Cernik.

Meanwhile, Mr. Jan Palach (21), the Czech student who set fire to his clothes on January 16 to protest against the re-introduction of censorship died on January 19.

Another student set fire to himself on January 20.

Altogether, three students lost their lives in the agitation up to January 28, 1969.

D. Enzymes Artificially Created: According to a New York message, American scientists have artificially created the key chemical that controls all life—an enzyme. The feat fulfils an old dream of chemists and biologists.

Success in making an enzyme was announced on January 16 at Rockefeller University by two teams of chemist scientists working independently, using entirely different approaches; both groups reached their goal at about the same time. Their technical reports are carried in the current issue of the journal of the American Chemical Society.

Both made the enzyme ribo-nuclease. It plays a role in digestion, by breaking down a key substance in the nuclei of cells. All cells in foodstuffs must be split into simpler components, for use or discard by the body.

Without enzymes, nothing can live. They control all the bio-chemical reactions of all living things—man, germs, trees, fish, digestion, breathing, heart pumping, nerve impulses, formation of body tissues, energy to move muscles. All depend on enzymes.

A single body cell contains up to 100,000 enzymes each directing a specific reaction, each coming into play at the right time and place.

Creation of an enzyme in the laboratory, scientists said, opens exciting prospects. More can be learnt about how enzymes do their fantastic work, in only thousandths of a second. Special enzymes might be man-made to do new chemical tasks.

Enzymes might be fashioned into potent new drugs and holds promise to prevent tooth decay.

Ribo-nuclease is a protein, which means it consists of sub-units, amino acids, put together in a specific, orderly arrangement or chain, and is composed of 124 units or amino acids.

E. Core Of Planet Mars: Data from the Mariner-4 satellite which flew past Mars in 1965 has convinced US scientists that the planet has an iron core like the Earth, but the volcanic activity that formed it stopped long ago.

Dr. Alan B. Binder, if the Illinois Institute of Technology and Research, told a meeting of the American Geophysical Union in San Francisco on December 2, 1968 that the core of Mars was smaller than that of the Earth and was not molten. This had been worked out from accurate measurements of Mars's radius and mass obtained by the satellite compined with recent findings about the composition of the Earth which was believed to have a similar geological history.

If Mars, like Earth, was composed largely of minerals containing iron, silicon, magnesium and oxygen, its core must be solid and nonvolcanic because the planet's internal temperature was below the melting point of these minerals.

F. Big Powers' Race Under Water: The Soviet Union, USA and Britain disclosed on February 18 that besides racing to get men into space, they were competing to get men under the sea.

Their plans to put men on the sea-bed where they could exploit the vast mineral and food wealth buried under the 141 million square miles of oceans were revealed at the opening of the world's first International Oceanology Exhibition and Conference in Brighton (Britain).

More than 2,000 of the world's leading oceanological experts attended the conference for five days discussing how they could recover minerals from under the sea and harness the food proteins floating in the oceans.

Their first problem was how to get to the sea-bed and stay there long enough to work.

They believed they each had the answer—new forms of sophisticated diving bells which would be ocean-floor workshops serving as a base from which man could reconnoitre the sea-bed, just as astronauts were now doing in space when they leave their spaceship for a walk.

The Russians produced photographs of chernomor, a 62-ton underwater loboratory in which four Russian scientists spent a week on the bottom of the Black Sea in 1968.

British industry presented an undersea workshop designed by a British aircraft corporation scientist.

The Americans, who had the biggest foreign display publicized details of their Sea-lab—111 which would carry nine aquanauts, including two British naval officers, 600 feet down into the Pacific Ocean off California and leave them there for 60 days.

G. Super Nuclear Weapon Claimed By USSR: In a booklet "Soviet Army Day" released by the Russian Embassy in New Delhi on February 26, the Soviet Union claims to possess a nuclear warhead that combines "the power of all the explosives used in all the wars fought in the history of mankind" and the capability to deliver it to any part of the world.

The booklet says that Russia's powerful new nuclear weapon is characterized by a "set of totally new destructive factors such as powerful shock wave, luminous and thermal radiation penetrating radiation and radio-active contamination."

It estimates that a 10 to 20 megaton surface nuclear explosion will create a zone of total destruction with a radius of 15 km to 20 km.

Russia has developed 50 megaton to 100 megaton nuclear charges.

Referring to the development of rocketry and the nuclear missile system, the booklet says the trajectory of a rocket passes beyond the Earth's atmosphere at an altitude of 1,200 km or more. The automatic control systems of rockets ensure exact coverage of the targets set, irrespective of the weather conditions, reason of the year or hour of the day.

The booklet describes the newly created strategic rocket force and the rocket-carrying atom-powered submarines as the main deterrent to the aggressor—"an effective means for the decisive destruction of the aggressor in the event of an armed clash."

Then there are global rockets. Their range is practically unlimited. Since they are capable of hitting targets from any direction, these rockets are virtually impervious to anti-missile defence. The power of the rocket engines is "fantastic"—20 million HP. This is equivalent to the engine power of one million tractors or 400 000 lorries. The capacity of the missile propulsion units is many times greater than that of a large hydro-electric station.

Atomic-powered missile-carrying submarines, it says, are characterized by such essential combat qualities as concealment of approach to the launching position, hiph mobility and tremendous striking power. Missiles launched from submerged position are capable of hitting surface targets at sea and ashore hundreds or even thousands of kilometres away.

The air-borne trrops are designed to accomplish important strategic tasks. They are equipped with their own artillery and vehicles. Soviet air-borne troops may be landed in the enemy rear with material essential for combat, including medium tanks.

H. Space For Military Partners—US View On Soviet Capabilities: According to US space experts on February 28, the Soviet Union might try to use space as a military operating area.

Careful evaluation of the Soyuz IV and V joint flight is said to have convinced most US experts that the major Soviet goal is to develop an operational space station as soon as possible. By joining two manned vehicles in orbit and transferring two crewmen from one to the other, the Russians demonstrated that they would soon have the capability to build an orbiting laboratory.

The station could serve as an observation platform for weathermen, astronomers or geologists searching for Earth's hidden riches. Scientists cite the attractions to medical men, biologists and engineers of conducting experiments in a true vacuum and weightlessness.

A space station would also fulfil the long-stated Soviet target of military superiority in space. From an orbiting platform, cosmonauts can conduct daily reconnaissance missions over every part of the globe. They can intercept hostile missiles and inspect and disable foreign spaceships.

A. Central Budget For 1969-70: Presenting the first Central Budget of the Fourth Five-Year Plan period (1969-70) to the Lok Sabha on February 28, the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, said that he proposed to make such changes in the tax structure, to sustain progressively larger development outlays and to limit expenditure proposals in the short run to the total resources that could be so mobilized.

The Budget Estimates for 1969-70, he said, showed an increase of Rs. 151 crores at existing rates of taxation. He anticipated a further decline in customs receipts from Rs. 445 crores in 1968-69 to Rs. 426 crores in 1969-70. Union excise duties would show an increase of Rs. 101 crores. Corporate and income-taxes should yield Rs. 15 crores more as against Rs. 660 crores in the current year. There would also be an increased yield of Rs. 50 crores in non-tax revenues.

This increase in revenue would, however, be more than absorbed by increases in expenditure on revenue account. Defence expenditure on revenue account would be more by Rs. 42 crores. Excluding certain accounting adjustments, the non-Plan civil expenditure would be Rs. 142 crores. Of this, Rs. 41 crores would be accounted for by interest charges. As a result of the Fifth Finance Commission's recommendations, there would be an additional devolution of Rs. 36 crores to the States. Committed expenditure arising out of completed Plan schemes would necessitate an increase of nearly Rs. 35 crores. Export promotion measures would account for another increase of Rs. 10 crores.

On capital account, the net market borrowings in 1969-70 were estimated at Rs. 106 crores as against Rs. 81 crores in the current year (1968-69). Small savings would yield Rs. 135 crores, an increase of Rs. 10 crores. Of this, nearly two-thirds would accrue to the States. Public Provident Fund should yield Rs. 5 crores in 1969-70 as against Rs. 2 crores in the current year.

External Aid:

Mr. Desai anticipated that the net external aid, excluding PL 480 and other food aid, would show a marginal increase from Rs. 459 crores in the current year to Rs. 467 crores in 1969-70.

Agreements for concessional imports of foodgrains and agricultural raw material would be necessary for some more time. Consequently, the net budgetary support accruing as a result of PL 480 transactions and other food aid, but excluding PL 480 grants already accounted for in the revenue estimates, would be Rs. 224 crores next year as against Rs. 226 crores this year.

He, however, stated that the improvements under internal borrowings and external assistance, which would be Rs. 13 crores in all, would be more than absorbed by the increase in Defence expenditure on capital account of Rs. 17 crores and on Border Roads of Rs. 4 crores.

The total stocks of foodgrains with the Food Corporation would be increased by 1.5 million tonnes during the coming year. This would necessitate a Budget provision of Rs. 25 crores.

In the net, the resources available, at the existing rates of taxation and on the basis of likely availability of internal borrowing and external assistance, would leave practically no margin for increasing the provision for the Plan to be financed through the Centre's Budget next year.

As regards the budgetary contribution of public sector undertakings next year, he felt that it was not likely to show any significant improvement.

Outlining the scope of deficit-financing in 1969-70, he said that this could not be defined in terms of the Budget needs. The determinants would be the needs of the economy in the light of the likely growth in production and the saving habits of the people. "Taking everything into account", he said, "I have come to the conclusion that a budgetary deficit next year of roughly the same magnitude as this year is likely to reconcile best the concern for price stability and the maintenance of a climate for growth."

Revised Estimates:

Dealing with the Revised Estimates for 1968-69, Mr. Desai said that the budgetary deficit was now estimated at Rs. 260 crores as against Rs. 290 crores in the Budget Estimates. This ten per cent variation in deficit-financing should not be considered as an index of conservative budgeting.

Customs revenue had registered a short-fall of Rs. 94 crores. The receipts from Union Excise Duties and Income-tax, however, were expected to be more by Rs. 54 crores. After taking allowance for non-tax revenues, the total revenue receipts accuring to the Centre were likely to show a short-fall of Rs. 11 crores only as compared to the anticipated realization of Rs. 2,760 crores.

Revenue expenditures were likely to exceed the Budget Estimates of Rs. 2,629 crores by Rs. 116 crores. Almost half of this increase represented only a pure accounting change which is balanced by a corresponding gain on capital account. Another Rs. 49 crores was accounted for by additional defence expenditure on revenue account. On capital account, there was a reduction in defence expenditure of Rs. 13 crores.

It would thus be seen that, barring the increase under defence and transactions of a purely accounting nature, revenue expenditure had been held within less than one per cent margin of the Budget estimates.

The variations on capital account were of a more substantial order. Net external assistance would show a short-fall of Rs. 121 crores and PL 480 and other food aid a short-fall of Rs. 43 crores. However, improvement under market loans, reduction in the provision for transactions in foodgrains and fertilizers and some shortfalls in Plan outlays would offset these shortfalls to an extent.

Revenue Account:

The gross Revenue in 1968-69 went up by Rs. 43 crores, despite a shortfall of Rs. 94 crores under Customs duties. This was mainly because of increased Excise duties and Income-tax collections and also interest and other non-tax receipts.

States' share was also more by nearly Rs. 54 crores because of larger collections and arrear payments.

The Revenue expenditure went up by Rs. 116 crores. Nearly half of this was on account of conversion of loans to States into grants or payment of grants instead of loans. A part of loans to displaced persons was also converted into grants.

At existing rates of taxation, the gross Revenue for 1969-70 was estimated at Rs. 3,392 crores, i.e. Rs. 152 crores higher than in this year, despite a short-fall under Customs duties. This was mainly because of larger collections under Excise duties, Income-tax, interest and other receipts.

The Revenue expenditure for 1969 70 was estimated at Rs. 2,960 crores, i.e. Rs. 215 crores more than in this year. If allowance was made for the accounting adjustments of the type referred to under this year's Revenue expenditure, the increase would be Rs. 264 crores—Rs. 184 crores in the non-Plan section and Rs. 80 crores in the Plan section.

After providing Rs. 402 crores for the Plan (Central, State and Union Territories) in the Revenue Budget, there would be a Revenue deficit of Rs. 60 crores next year at existing levels of taxation.

Capital Account:

Capital receipts net of non-developmental outlay in 1968-69 went up by Rs. 97 crores. While the market loan yielded Rs. 21 crores more, external aid and PL 480 assistance had shown a short-fall of Rs. 121 crores and Rs. 43 crores respectively. This short-fall was, however, more than made up by larger recoveries of loans and improvement in the miscellaneous debt deposit heads.

The Capital disbursements show a short-fall of Rs. 59 crores. The bulk of this occurred under food and fertilizer transactions and the rest under Defence and Border Roads Capital outlay.

Capital receipts net of non-developmental outlay for 1969-70 would be Rs. 111 crores less than in the current year. While the market loan was expected to yield Rs. 25 crores more and external aid and PL 480 aid together Rs. 6 crores more, repayment of Compulsory Deposits would account for an outgo of Rs. 25 crores.

Capital disbursements for 1969-70 were placed at Rs. 1,540 crores, including a developmental outlay (both direct expenditure and loans) of Rs. 1,363 crores, Rs. 170 crores for Defence and Border Roads and Rs. 7 crores (net) on food and fertilizer transactions.

Budget At a Glance:

The following is the Budget at a glance:

(In crores of rupees)

	1968-69		1969-70
	(Budget)	(Revised)	(Budget)
Revenue Receipts	3027	3040	3302
Revenue Expenditure	2896	3036	3262
Revenue Surplus	131	4	40
Capital Receipts	2097	2213	2338
Capital Disbursements	2517	2477	2628
(Less) Revenue Surplus	131	4	40
Overall Deficit	289	260	250

Defence Expenditure:

A feature of the defence Budget is the steep rise in the capital outlay for Navy by 50 per cent over the current year's figure. At Rs. 28 crores, it will be three times the provision made in 1967-68.

The Army which has not been able to spend what was provided for 1968-69—the revised estimates for capital expenditure are Rs. 40 crores against the budgeted figure of Rs. 45.7 crores—gets now Rs. 44 crores.

The Air Force outlay marks a steady decrease in the last two years. The Air Force too could not spend the budgeted amount during 1968-69 and now gets slightly less.

The manufacturing and research establishments which too failed to measure up to the estimates have undergone a ten per cent cut. But, the outlay on industrial and related organizations has nearly doubled.

Of the three Services, the Navy expenditure exceeded the estimates of the capital expenses, even though marginally—stores mainly accounting for the increase.

In all, the Defence outlay in 1969-70 will go up by nearly Rs. 58 crores to a total of Rs. 1,110 crores. The actual expenditure during 1968-69 increased by Rs. 36 crores.

The reason for the increase given by Mr. Morarji Desai was the additional burdens due to the increase in the allowances to certain categories of Service personnel—higher dearness allowance, increase in the house rent and city allowances as a result of merger of a part of DA with the pay. The other factors accounting for higher outlay are increase in the expenditure on stores and delivery of supplies on a larger scale than was anticipated.

It was proposed to invest Rs.6 crores in the Hindustan Aeronautics Limited, the Bangalore division of which has started work on the design and development of a new combat aircraft and proposes to enter into collaboration with foreign firm for the development and production of a ground attack aircraft, pending the design development and production of an all-Indian combat aircraft.

A new public sector undertaking was proposed to be set up for the manufacture of certain defence weapons and a provision of Rs. 10,00,000 has been made for investment in the share capital of this undertaking. The official documents do not indicate the type of weapons this new factory will manufacture.

A significant sector accounting for increase in the Army expenditure was the Defence Research and Development Organization, which gets over Rs. 13 crores, which is 13 per cent more than this year's (1968-69) outlay. The increase is mainly in regard to Service personnel.

The defence expenditure has gone steadily upwards since the N-EFA debacle of October-November, 1962. In 1961-62, the allocations for defence were Rs. 313 crores, and in 1962-63 Rs. 474 crores. The upward trend started from 1963-64.

The year-by-year figures are as follows:

1963-64	Rs. 816 crores
1964-65	Rs. 806 crores
1965-66	Rs. 885 crores
1966-67	Rs. 907 crores
1967-68	Rs. 968 crores
1968-69	Rs. 1,051 crores

It is noteworthy that a little less than half of the overall expenditure on defence for next year is claimed by the pay and allowances of Service personnel. Out of an estimated revenue expenditure of Rs. 986 crores next year, pay and allowance account for Rs. 446.49 crores. This is largely due to the big expansion in the Army since 1963. Other major heads of expenditure are stores and equipment, particularly modern fighting aircraft and fighting ships and pieces of heavy armour. In next year's (1969-70) Budget, Rs. 408 crores have been provided under this head.

Little Dividends From Public Sector:

Mr. Morarji Desai said that contribution to the Central Budget next year (1969-70) from public sector undertakings "is not likely to show any significant improvement over the current year".

The revised estimate of dividends from public sector units for 1968-69 were placed at Rs. 12.10 crores. According to Budget estimates for 1969-70, dividends from public sector units were expected to rise by only Rs. 43,00,000 to Rs. 12.53 crores.

However, according to a separate memorandum presented to the Lok Sabha, dividends from public sector units were more than offset by their losses. For instance, in 1967-68, while dividends from these undertakings totalled Rs. 10.13 crores, taken together, the 80 odd public sector units incurred a net loss of Rs. 35 crores.

The total investment in public sector projects at the end of 1967-68 was Rs. 3,500 crores. Out of this investment, 55 running concerns account for Rs. 3,200 crores. Total investment in the steel sector alone is Rs. 1,180 crores. Investment in other major sectors are: engineering Rs. 833 crores, chemicals Rs. 350 crores; petroleum Rs. 378 crores, and minerals and metals Rs. 273 crores.

Taxation Proposals:

Mr. Desai then introduced tax proposals to the tune of Rs. 150.27 crores.

He announced reduction in export duties which would result in a loss of Rs. 23 crores in revenue.

Together with the new taxation proposals, the overall deficit in the Budget for 1969-70 would be reduced to Rs. 250 crores.

The following are the highlights of the taxation proposals:—

Indirect Taxes:

Customs Duties.

A. Import duties were stepped up as follows:-

(a) Lubricating oil by 12½ per cent ad valorem (Gain—Rs. 2,60,00,000)

(b) Motor cars by 40 per cent ad valorem (Gain—Rs. 60,00,000)

(c) Dry fruits and seedless dates by revising the basis of valuation (Gain—Rs. 3,00,00,000)

Total gain in revenue from import duties would be Rs. 6,20,00,000, i.e. the revenue would go up from nearly Rs. 325 crores to Rs. 331 crores.

B. Export duties were reduced as follows:

(a) Jute manufactures:

(i) Hessian by Rs. 300 per tonne

(ii) Wool sacks by Rs. 250 per tonne (i.e. completely exempted)

(iii) Cotton bagging by Rs. 200 per tonne (i.e. completely exempted)

(iv) Other sacking by Rs. 100/- per tonne

Loss of revenue as a result of these reductions would be Rs. 11,75,00,000.

Tea:

(i) Package tea by ten per cent ad valorem

(ii) Other tea by five per cent ad valorem plus 20 paise per kilogram.

Loss of revenue would be Rs. 10.55 crores.

(c) Degreased raw wool by ten per cent ad valorem i.e., completely exempted. (Loss of revenue—Rs. 30,00,000)

(d) Mica loose splittings nos. 5½ and 6 by 20 per cent ad valorem (Loss of revenue—Rs. 40,00,000)

Total loss in revenue from export duties would be Rs. 23 crores (i.e. the revenue will drop from Rs. 97 crores at existing rates to Rs. 74 crores).

Union Excise Duties:

A. Excise duties are proposed to be levied on the following new commodities:

(1) Fertilizers at the rate of ten per cent ad valorem, yielding a revenue of Rs. 22 crores

(2) Power driven pumps at the rate of 20 per cent ad valorem, yielding Rs. 2 crores

(3) Prepared or preserved foods at the rate of ten per cent ad valorem, yielding Rs. 1,50,00,000

(4) Domestic electrical appliances at the rate of ten per cent ad valorem, yielding Rs. 2 crores

(5) Cinematograph films unexposed (raw film) at the rate of two paise per metre yielding Rs. 10,00,000.

(6) Pilferproof caps for packaging at the rate of one paisa each, yielding Rs. 50,00,000

(7) Wool tops at the rate of ten paise per kilogram yielding Rs. 6,00,000.

The total yield from the above would be Rs. 28 crores.

B. The excise duties on the following commodities are proposed to be changed:

(1) On vacuum pan sugar, the existing specific rate of Rs. 28.65 per quintal will be converted into an ad valorem rate of 23 per cent, yielding a gain of Rs. 27.45 crores.

(2) On cigarettes the increases range from six per cent to 18 per cent ad valorem, yielding a gain of Rs. 15,84,00,000

(3) On motor spirit, the duty is increased from Rs. 550 to Rs. 620 per kilolitre, yielding a gain of of Rs. 14,00,00,000

(4) On superior kerosene, the duty is increased from Rs. 165.25 to Rs. 205.25 per kilolitre, yielding a gain of Rs. 14,40,00,000

(5) On rayon and synthetic fibres and yarn—cellulosic staple fibre, increased from Re. 0.80 to Re. 1.00 per kilogram; non-cellulosic staple (polyester) fibre, increased from Rs. 16 to Rs. 28 per kilogram. These increases would yield a gain of Rs. 7.20 crores.

(6) Jute manufactures— On hessians, the duty is increased from Rs. 495.00 to Rs. 605.00 per tonne. On others, the duty is increased from Rs. 275.00 to Rs. 385.00 per tonne. These increases would yield a gain of Rs. 4,95,00,000.

These changes in excise duties will yield a total of Rs. 83,84,00,000.

C. The excise duty on khandsari sugar, rubber products, vegetable product, soda ash, caustic soda, sodium silicate, soap, cement, electric bulbs and fluorescent tubes and electric fans is being modified. These modifications are incidental to other proposals or are in the nature of rationalization on account of conversion of specific rates into ad valorem rates. As a result of these modifications, there would be a gain of Rs. 3,50,00,000—i.e. Rs. 30,00,000 from khandasari sugar, Rs. 60,00,000 from rubber products and Rs. 2,60,00,000 from others.

As a result of the changes in exise duties and the imposition of excise duties for the first time on new commodities, there would be a total gain of over Rs. 115 crores.

D. The following reliefs in excise duties were proposed:-

The duty on nylon yarn of lower deniers is being reduced by Rs. 5 to Rs. 8 per kilogram, with suitable increases on some of the higher deniers (Loss Rs. 1,73,00,000)

Duty on rayon yarn, excluding industrial denier yarn in respect of big producers is being stepped up by about ten per cent and the margin for small producers is being reduced.

Relief is proposed in duty on cotton 'hank' yarn used by handlooms; differential between "sized" and "unsized" yarns for the purpose of assessment of duty is being removed with some increase in the duty on "unsized" yarn of higher count; the existing fabric compounded levy on powerlooms is being doubled (Loss Rs. 5,80,00,000).

Substantial relief is being given in duty on "gray" and "processed" medium-A, medium-B and coarse fabrics.

A surcharge is being levied on printed fabrics.

Suitable adjustment is proposed in duty on fents.

An ad valorem rate of duty is being fixed on nine selected costly varieties of fabrics.

Steel ingots or iron/steel products produced by electric furnace owners from scrap are being exempted from duty to the extent of steel ingot duty of Rs. 75 per tonne (Loss Rs. 1,00,00,000).

Duty on confectionery other than chocolates is being reduced by 50 paise per kilogram (Loss Rs. 80,00,000).

On embroidery, the effective rates of duty are being reduced by about 35 per cent (Loss Rs. 65,00,000).

Duty on electronic valves, tubes, transistors and semi-conductor diodes used by radio manufacturers is being reduced by one-half. (Loss Rs. 60,00,000)

Substantial relief in duty is being given to cinematographic films exposed, including total exemption on the first 12 prints of "black and white"; at the same time higher rates of duty are being fixed on "colour" films.

The total reliefs amount to Rs. 10,93,00,000.

The net gain under excise duties will, therefore, be over Rs. 104 crores, of which Rs. 24 crores will accrue to the States.

E. The corresponding countervailing duties on imports, notably of fertilisers, will yield Rs. 26 crores.

Direct Taxes:

A. Measure for raising additional revenue:

(1) Rates of income-tax on current incomes for deduction of tax at source from salaries and payment of advance tax on other incomes during the financial year 1969-70:

(a) Personal Incomes:
The rates of basic income-tax on incomes over Rs. 10,000/- will be stepped up as follows:

Slab: Rs. 10,001—Rs. 15,000—to 17 per cent as against 15 per cent at present

Slab: Rs. 15,001 to Rs. 20,000—to 23 per cent as against 20 per cent at present.

This means that at Rs. 15,000, the additional income-tax (including surcharge) will be Rs. 110, and at Rs. 20,000 and above Rs. 275 in each case.

(b) Co-operative Societies:-
The amount of business income exempt from tax will be raised from Rs. 15,000 to Rs. 20,000. The rates of basic income-tax on co-operative societies will be revised as under:

Income Slab	Rate of Tax
Rs. 1—Rs. 10,000	15 per cent
Rs. 10,001—Rs. 20,000	25 per cent
Above Rs. 20,000	40 per cent

(c) Registered firms: The initial slab of income exempt from tax will be reduced from Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 10,000, and on the slab of Rs. 10,001 to Rs. 25,000 the rate of basic income-tax will be four per cent.

(2) Advance Tax: Changes will be made in the scheme of payment of advance tax to make it more effective and to reduce the burden of compliance on tax-payers with small incomes.

The gains to revenue from these changes in the rates of personal incomes would amount to Rs. 21.50 crores.

From the assessment year 1970-71, agricultural property will also be included in the net wealth and subjected to Wealth Tax at the present rates. Genuine agriculturists could however, be exempted from the purview of this step. Standing crops and tools, implements and equipment will be exempted. Gains to revenue for 1970-71 (Rs. 5 crores approximately) will be passed on to States as grants-in-aid.

(b) Incentives and reliefs:

(1) Cotton and jute textile industries will be treated as priority industries for development rebate.

(2) Tax holiday concession is extended by another five years i.e. upto 31.3.1976.

(3) Public companies whose equity shares are listed in a recognised stock exchange will be treated as widely held companies.

(4) The amount of Indian company dividends exempt from tax will be raised from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1000.

(5) 40 per cent of royalties and fees received by Indian companies for providing technical know-how etc. to other concerns in India will be exempted.

(6) The area of tax relief on savings through life insurance policies is to be widened.

(7) 25 per cent of professional income of authors, artists, etc. from foreign sources in foreign exchange is exempted.

(8) The standard reduction for maintenance of motor cars is raised from Rs. 150 to Rs. 200 per month for salaries upto Rs. 15,000.

The reduction in revenue because of the above changes for 1969-70 would be Rs. 8 crores.

(C) Miscellaneous:
As a deterrent measure, penalties under Wealth Tax for certain defaults are being related to net wealth instead of Wealth Tax.

The telephone rentals in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Delhi are to be revised from Rs. 300 per annum to Rs. 360 per annum. For other exchanges, the rates will be raised from Rs. 240 per annum to Rs. 300 per annum under the measured rate system and from Rs. 300 per annum to Rs. 340 per annum for the flat rate system.

The Directory Enquiry Service which has been free will now be charged for.

A uniform additional charge of 50 per cent of the basic charge is proposed to be levied on trunk calls for Particular Person, Fixed Time and Subscriber Fixed Time calls instead of the existing additional charge on a slab rate.

The charges for greetings telegrams, multiple telegrams. telex services and a few other services will be raised. (Total yield is Rs. 6.46 crores in a full year which will cover the deficit in the Posts and Telegraphs Budget.)

Summing up:

Summing up, Mr. Desai said that the net additional revenue accruing to the Centre next year (1969-70) from the new meaures of taxation would be about Rs.100 crores, of which Rs.11 crores would be under direct taxes, Rs.80 crores under excise duties and Rs. 9 crores under customs duties, after allowing for the reduction of Rs. 23 crores in export duties. In addition, a sum of Rs. 27 crores would accrue to the States.

Summarising the Central Government's resources position for next year (1969-70), he said that the total gross revenue after taking into account the additional taxation measures was estimated at Rs. 3,519 crores, of which Rs. 519 crores would accrue to the States, leaving Rs. 3,000 crores for the Centre.

Non-Plan expenditure on revenue account, including grants to States, interest charges and defence expenditure, was placed at Rs.2,558 crores, leaving a non-Plan revenue surplus of Rs. 442 crores.

Next year's (1969-70) market borrowing and external borrowing, net of repayments, were estimated at Rs. 106 crores and Rs. 691 crores respectively.

After taking into account the transactions under miscellaneous debt deposit heads and after providing for non-Plan capital expenditure and loans, including buffer-stock provision and cash losses of some public sector undertakings, the resources on capital account would be Rs. 1,046 crores.

The Central Government's budgetary resources for the Plan were accordingly Rs. 1,738 crores, including Rs. 250 crores of deficit-financing. In addition, the public sector undertakings, including the Railways and Posts and Telegraphs, were expected to find Rs. 165 crores for the Plan from their own resources. The total availability of the resources for the Plan next year, exclusive of the States' resources, would thus be Rs. 1,903 crores. Of this, Rs. 615 crores had already been earmarked for Plan assistance to the States and Rs. 65 crores to the Union Territories. This would leave Rs. 1,223 crores for the Central Plan proper, including the Centrally sponsored schemes.

The Central Plan next year, contained a larger provision for steel production, ports, petro-chemicals, fertilizer plants, development of iron-ore mines for export and copper and aluminium production.

Broadly speaking, he said, the tax proposals were intended (1) to provide a measure of relief where necessary, especially for exports, savings and modernisation of key industries; (2) remove anomalies; (3) to further rationalize and simplify the tax structure; (4) plug loopholes to prevent tax avoidance or evasion; (5) spread the burden of taxation more evenly; and (6) generally to make the tax system more responsive to the needs of economic growth.

Rise In Income-Tax Rates:

As a result of the increases proposed in the Central Budget in the basic income-tax rates, people with annual incomes exceeding Rs. 10,000 will pay a higher tax next year.

People in the income slab Rs. 1,001 —Rs 1,800 will pay additional tax amounting up to Rs. 209, while those with higher incomes will pay Rs. 275 per year more.

The following table shows at selected levels of income of a resident, married or individual with two or more dependent children, the comparative incidence of tax (including surcharges) at the current rates and at the new rates proposed in the Budget:

Income	Tax (including surcharge) at the rates applicable during the financial year 1968-69).	Tax (including surcharge) at the rates in the Bill for computation of advance tax and deduction of tax at source from "salaries" during 1969-70).

Economic Survey For 1968-69:

An Economic Survey for 1968-69 presented to Parliament by Mr. Morarji Desai on February 21 said that having recovered considerably from the shocks of famine and recession, the country's economy was now poised for another major effort towards development but this would necessarily need higher tax revenue, larger domestic savings and more non-project assistance.

It expressed satisfaction that the pace of recovery in the economy had been continued for the second year in succession. A heartening feature seemed to be that for the first time since 1955, prices had shown a decline in relation to the preceding year.

During the year, the national income should rise by three per cent, with industrial production up by 5 to 6 per cent, and agriculture output remaining around last year's peak level of 96 million tonnes.

The balance of payments position continued to improve intrinsically though this might not be reflected significantly in the reserves owing to various adverse factors such as reduced aid withdrawals, increased debt-repayments, lower prices fetched by Indian exports and the need to make larger payments to the International Monetary Fund.

But, though the reserves had not improved, there had been "a striking growth in exports" and fall in imports. Most encouraging were the strides made in the export of iron and steel that may touch $100 million and of engineering goods expected to be $90 million during the year.

The need for a bigger tax effort was highlighted in the Survey. "The securing of an adequate buoyancy of tax revenues in relation to national income growth will be a major task of public finance policy in the coming years. More generally, it will be necessary to correct the decline in the ratio of total domestic savings to national income from about ten per cent in 1965-66 to around eight per cent in 1967-68; and an increase in public savings is a necessary part of this process in our conditions."

It expressed concern that in spite of substantial recourse to additional taxation "the proportion of tax revenue of the Central and State Governments to national income had declined from 14.2 per cent in 1965-66 to 12.3 per cent in 1967-68. The ratio of public savings to national income, which had been in the range of 2.5 per cent to three per cent during the Third Plan is likely to have declined in 1967-68".

Loans would need to play a major role in financing the Fourth Plan. "These will need to take the form not only of more intensive use of the traditional savings instruments but also the development of new media which will facilitate investments by those with larger income to finance schemes in which they may be interested. These would include deposits and loans for expansion of facilities such as power and irrigation".

It made a pointed reference to the crisis faced by the jute industry in the current year which affected both the industry and exports and hoped that the production of jute would be stepped up and an adequate buffer stock of raw jute would be created and at the same time the farmer would be assured a remunerative price.

Reference was also made to the healthy effect of the liberal policies followed by the Government in regard to industrial licences, import liberalization, export incentives and bank credits.

It listed the various steps taken to stimulate industry and exports and indicated that the process of liberalization would be continued in the coming year.

The review called for significant changes in the pattern of foreign aid and pointed out that unlike in the past when project aid was synonymous with the creation of new assets, imports under non-project assistance would now contribute more effectively to capital formation "in the sense that considerably more capital formation is possible with any given quantum of external assistance in non-project than in project form".

This was because of the large unutilized capacity built up in the capital goods industry in India which could be used if spares, components and essential raw materials could be more freely imported.

Note was also taken of the shift recently in the terms of aid from the liberal stand taken by the Aid-India Consortium countries in 1966-67. It says: "In the recent past, there has been some tendency to shift assistance towards projects or tie non-project assistance to capital machinery or project type imports. It is to be hoped that this trend will be reversed and freedom to utilize assistance in the manner that will best utilize domestic capacity will be restored."

Aid in the pipe-line which was $3,280 million at the end of March, 1967 declined to $2,676 million at the end of the March, 1968. But at the end of the current year, it would be "somewhat higher" than a year ago because of the lower level of utilization and disbursement.

Food imports would have to be continued "for some more time" to restore consumption to more satisfactory levels and to build up a buffer-stock. Aggregate stocks at the end of the year, including working stocks, may be of the order of 3,500,000 tonnes although these should rise to about 5,000,000 tonnes by the end of June, 1969.

Food prices declined by 9.5 per cent during the year. The decline varied from 0.5 per cent in rice to 30.3 per cent in pulses. On the other hand, the price index of industrial raw materials showed an increase of 7.5 per cent, but this was mainly on account of raw jute prices which rose by 67 per cent during the year.

The price stability was also reflected in the movement of the all-India working class consumer price index. The index at 214 for November, 1968 was lower by 0.9 per cent as compared to its level a year before.

In industrial commodities, the policy of gradual relaxation of controls as and when supplies improve was continued and in some cases controls were removed altogether.

A happy balance had been struck between increase in national income and money supply. While the average increase in national income over the two-year period from April, 1967 was about six per cent, the increase in the money supply this year was 6.5 per cent.

Persistent recourse to unauthorized overdrafts by the States had been a matter of serious concern, in 1968. The Reserve Bank had to issue formal notices to some States to clear their overdrafts within three weeks. This they did but with Central Ways and Means assistance.

ISRAEL

A. Developments In West Asia—Fighting Continues: According to Baghdad Radio, Iraqi forces in northern Jordan shot down two Israeli aircraft on February 3.

The aircraft crashed in the Israeli-occupied Syrian region of Golan. One Iraqi soldier was wounded in the raid.

But Israel denied the report that Israeli planes had attacked the Iraqi troops stationed in Jordan.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli spokesman said the raid was in retaliation for an attack by automatic weapons firing from Jordan territory against the Israeli forces in the Beisan Valley.

In Amman, a military spokesman said that two Israeli fighters had dropped napalm bombs on the northern valley region of Jordan, near Manshiyeh on February 3. There were no casualties but agricultural estates had been damaged.

The spokesman added that the Israeli and the Jordanian forces had earlier exchanged fire for an hour in the northern valley region.

On February 10, Jordanian and Israeli forces clashed for seven hours south of the Dead Sea when, according to a Jordanian military spokesman, Israelis opened artillery fire on Jordanian forces in the Ghor Safi area. The fire was returned.

On February 10, it was said in Tel Aviv that Israeli aircraft attacked Arab guerrilla posts south of the Dead Sea after mortar bombs had been fired at an Israeli village.

The Israeli jets dived over the firing points from which mortar shells were lobbed at the village of Neot Hakikar where they crashed without causing casualties or damage.

A Jordanian spokesman said there were no casualties on their side in Israeli artillery shelling and aircraft strafing in areas in Ghor Fifeh.

Again, on February 11, Israeli forces and Arab guerrillas fought an artillery duel 15 km south of the Dead Sea following two successive nights of clashes across the Israel-Jordan border. The attack followed a series of clashes in the Dead Sea region during the past two nights.

A Damascus report said that a Syrian MIG-21 was destroyed in a fight with Israeli aircraft on February 12 was confirmed.

An Israelli millitary spokesman said that two Syrian Air Force jets of the MIG type were intercepted over the Israeli-occupied Golan heights in the Kuneitra town sector.

It was the first Syrian plane shot down by Israeli fighters since the June war of 1967.

Israeli jet planes flew across the river Jordan on February 17 to strike at Arab guerrilla posts following an attack on an Israeli patrol car. The attack on the car was mounted from the Arab posts.

On February 21, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine claimed responsibility for explosion in the Jerusalem Super Market in which two university students were killed and nine people mostly woman shoppers were injured.

The Front had also claimed responsibility for the attack on an El Al airliner at Zurich on February 18. The police arrested 150 Arab suspects.

On February 21, three Arab commandos were killed during a clash with an Israeli patrol south of the Golan heights near the Jordan frontier.

Two otther commandos got away during the encounter.

According to Amman reports, two Jordanian villages were shelled and bombed by Israeli forces and aircraft for 50 minutes on February 25. Israeli troops opened tank and artillery fire on the villages of al-Safi and Fifeh, south of the Dead Sea. At the same time, four Israeli fighters attacked al-Safi with rockets and machine-guns.

Jordanian forces claimed on February 27 that they had killed 13 Israeli soldiers in the first of two clashes along the Yarmouk river in the region of the occupied Syrian Heights.

On February 28, Jordanian and Israeli troops exchanged fire for 20 minutes in the al-Asassiya area, about three miles south of the Sea of Galilee.

The same day (February 28), Israeli fighter aircraft violated Jordanian air space and two Israeli planes rocket-fired Jordanian territory, according to Jordanian authorities. There were no Jordanian casualties.

On March 2, Jordanian and Israeli forces fought an artillery duel for an hour and 40 minutes in the southern Jordan valley, a Jordan Army spokesman said.

Israeli forces on the occupied west bank of the Jordan opened up with artillery fire on Jordanian forces in Karameh village, five miles north of Allenby Bridge.

Mr. L. Eshkol On Occupied Areas:

The Israeli Premier, Mr. Levi Eshkol, indicated in an interview to the US magazine "Newsweek" on February 10 that Israel might give up a substantial part of the occupied territories as part of an over-all West Asian settlement. "We are flexible on everything."

He, however, added: "As for the Golan Heights. He will quite simply never give them up. The same holds good for Jerusalem. There can be no flexibility at all on this question. As long as Golan remains a dangerous spot, we have to defend it."

Asked about Jerusalem, he answered: "There is no possible way to compromise on Jerusalem. It is the very heart of our State. The river must become a security border for Israel.

Mr. M. Riad's Note To Security Council:

In a Note to the UN Security Council on February 10, the UAR Foreign Minister Mr. Mahmoud Riad, accused Israel on February 10 of expansionist aims and said that she was trying to obtain new Arab lands.

He added that the Jewish State was acting openly against the United Nations Security Council's resolution of November 22, 1967, which called for a settlement of the West Asia crisis.

He said that a recent issue of "Newsweek" magazine had carried a statement by Mr. Levi Eshkol that the Jordan river must become the security border for Israel with all that implies (see above).

He added: "This latest statement clearly explains why Mr. Eshkol now chooses to deride the establishment of demilitarized zones."

Mr. Riad said that the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban and Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan, had recently made similar statements concerning Israeli-occupied territories.

President G. A. Nasser Offers Five Concessions To Israel:

President G. A. Nasser, in an interview to the US magazine "Newsweek," published on February 3 said that he would give five concessions in return for an Israeli pull-back from the territory occupied during the war.

In a 2,500-word question-and-answer session with the "Newsweek" senior Editor, Mr. Arnaud de Borchgrave, he was asked what the Arab States would offer for evacuation.

President Nasser replied: (1) A declaration of non-belligerence; (2) Recognition of the right of each country to live in peace; (3) Territorial integrity of all countries in West Asia, including Israel, in recognised and secure borders; (4) Freedom of navigation on international waterways; and (5) A just solution to the Palestinian refugee problem.

President Nasser's five points echoed key sections of a Security Council resolution adopted on November 22, 1967.

He declined to say if he would be prepared to sit down with the Israelis to discuss other issues if they were to pull back as the first phase of a settlement.

He said: "I could not give you an answer about that until they pull out. Obviously, you would not sit down with a foreign Power occupying part of USA until it withdrew.

In reply to another question he said he would not agree to keep Sinai demilitarized if Israel withdrew to its pre-June 1967, boundaries. "'We could only agree to the demilitarization of areas that are astride the boundaries."

He doubted whether Israel would develop a nuclear capability soon and asserted that Egypt had no such plans.

Mr. Abba Eban On Concessions:

On February 4, Israel flatly rejected the ideas of President G. A. Nasser for a solution of the West Asian conflict as "a plan for liquidating Israel in two stages."

The first official reaction to President Nasser's interview with "Newsweek" magazine (see above) came from the Israel Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, who said:

"The solution put forward by Mr. Nasser is this—first, Israel is to withdraw to the previous armistice lines with Egyptian troops and air force re-occupying Sinai; then, with Egyptian support the so-called 'resistance fighters' will move 'to liberate their homeland'. The only new element in Mr. Nasser's proposal is the explicit statement of the intention to re-militarize Sinai and encourage terrorist groups."

He said that President Nasser utterly falsified the international policy expressed in the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967.

Total Mobilization In UAR:

The United Arab Republic ordered total mobilization of its military potential on February 25 as the entire country was placed under an emergency to face a possible attack from Israel.

The mobilization order followed an Israeli attack on Syria on February 24 after an Israeli Cabinet meeting on February 23 indicating that Israel was preparing to strike at more than one Arab base in retaliation to the Palestine commando attack on an Israeli airliner at Zurich recently and continued commando activities against the Israeli authorities in the occupied Arab territories.

The mobilization order meant that thousands of Egyptian troops on front-lines who would have visited their families for the Bairam Feast would now hold on to their positions.

Meanwhile, all leave in defence services was cancelled and all hospitals and other services were warned to be in a state of preparedness.

British Arms Shipments To Israel—Mr. D. Healey's Statement:

The British Defence Minister, Mr. Denis Healey, said in London on February 20 that Britain had taken no decision on whether to meet requests for further arms supplies to West Asian countries.

He said: "We have supplied arms to Arabs and we have also got contracts with Israel which we intend, unlike some other Governments' to carry out. Further deliveries would be subject to a large number of considerations. We have not made a decision on further supplies of arms and we would not in any case give any details if we did take one. We never do. Our policy on supplyinb arms to West Asia must be governed by political considerations."

Meanwhile, on February 20, the UAR National Assembly denounced Britain's reported plan to supply arms to Israel on the ground that such a deal "threatens, if not sabotages, all attempts to achieve a just and peaceful settlement to the West Asian crisis."

Israeli Warning Against UAR Violations Of Cease-fire:

A Foreign Ministry spokesman warned at a news conference in Tel Aviv on February 13 that if Egypt did not end its "constant violations of the cease-fire along the Suez Canal" there would be an escalation which Israel was anxious to avoid.

He denied an Israeli press report that Israel had told Egypt that these violations would not be permitted to remain one-sided.

Arab Businessmen In East Jeruselem:

The Israeli Justice Ministry said on February 9 that Israel was delaying for three months the enforcement of the law to bring Arab businessmen in East Jerusalem under Israeli control.

The date on which Arab companies in Jerusalem must join the Israeli business register will be May 23 instead of February 23. But it denied that the move was linked to Jordan's request for a Security Council meeting.

Zurich Attack On Israeli Plane—US Note To Security Council:

On February 19, USA formally protested to the UN Security Council on February 19 against Arab terrorist attack against an Israeli airliner in Zurich on February 18 and warned that such incidents could only impede efforts to bring peace to West Asia.

The US Note said: "The concern of USA arises as well from the fact that the February 18 attack represents a continuation of the tragic cycle of violence that has come to characterize the West Asia situation and which in itself is so obstructive to the search for peace. This latest incident demonstrates once again how urgent it is that all concerned exercise restraint and prevent actions which increase tension and impede efforts toward peace."

USA also requested that the International Civil Aviation Organiation (ICAO) in Montreal take up the question "of a number of incidents growing out of the Arab-Israeli disputes and involving safety of civilian air transport".

B. Mr. Levi Eshkol Passes Away: The Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, died in Jeruselam on February 26 after a heart attack. He was 74.

Mr. Eshskol was Israel's third Prime Minister since the State was established and the first to die in harness.

He suffered his first heart attack three weeks earlier. The fact was not published.

There was a State funeral on February 28.

The Deputy Premier, Gen. Yigal Allon (51) temporarily took oyer the Prime Ministership till the ruling party decided formally on who should be the next Prime Minister.

Shortly after the death of Mr. Eshkol was announced, the Palestine Liberation Organisation, — Al-Fatah—issued a statement in Beirut implying that it was connected with a commando rocket attack on the Premier's summer home on February 28.

An Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman immediately denied as "ridiculous and childish fabrication" any suggestion that the Al-Fatah attack caused Mr. Eshkol's death.

The Ukraine-born Mr. Eshkol came to power in June, 1963 after the resignation of Mr. David Ben-Gurion. He led his Mapai Party to victory in the 1965 elections and held his post until death. He was Prime Minister during the lightning victory of Israel over the Arabs in June, 1967.

He came to Israel in 1913, beginning work as an agricultural labourer in what was then Palestine. In Palestine, he swiftly climbed the ladder of the Jewish labour movement, formed to compete with cheap Arab labour. He was Director-General of the Ministry of Defence when the State of Israel was proclaimed in 1948. He was later made Finance Minister and then Prime Minister — and automatically Defence Minister.

The Defence Ministry was handed to the present incumbent, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, on public acclaim just before the 1967 war broke out.

He is survived by four daughters.

He had been married thrice. His first marriage to Rivka Marshak ended in divorce. His second wife, Elisheva Kaplan, died in 1959. He married the third, Miriam Zelikowitch, a former Librarian in Israel's Knesset in 1964, when he was 68 and she was 34.

C. Land Bridge Project: It was stated in Jeruselem on February 14 that Israel was making efforts to expand trade with East Asia and East Africa and also to develop a "land bridge" between the Mediterranean and Red Sea across Israel as an alternative to the Suez Canal.

Israel's "land bridge", in fact, already exists, said the Transport Minister, Mr. Moshe Carmel, in Haifa, now moving some 500 tons of cargo every month. The bridge had aroused great interest abroad and was likely to develop on a large scale.

Israel, he added, had ordered four super-tankers of 230,000 tons each and one tanker of 120,000 tons. These would ply on the Red Sea, run along the Gulf of Aqaba to Eilat Port, hauling oil from eastern suppliers.

PAKISTAN

A. Mounting Opposition To F-M Ayub Khan—Demonstrations And Political Developments: Students armed with hockey sticks and slingshots fought a two-hour pitched battle with the riot police on the campus of Dacca University on January 18.

The students were trying to march in procession—in defiance of a ban on public meetings — to condemn police action during political demonstrations against President Ayub Khan. Six students got minor injuries and two were arrested.

All Opposition members of the East Pakistan Assembly staged a walk-out on January 18 in protest against the disallowance of an adjournment motion on the incident in the wake of the protest day in Dacca on January 17 on the ground that the matter was sub-judice.

On January 21, student agitators were fired upon by the police at two places in Pakistan and at least 30 students were injured in Dacca and six in Rawalpindi.

Police lathi-charged and tear-gassed anti-Ayub student demonstrators in Rawalpindi and Hyderabad (Sind) on January 22.

Four persons were killed and 15 injured when police fired on anti-Ayub demonstrators in Dacca where life was paralysed by a hartal on January 24. A 24-hour curfew was imposed.

Earlier, the army was called out to help the civil authorities when several buildings were set on fire.

The call for the hartal had been given by the Democratic Action Committee of eight Opposition parties.

On January 25, two persons were killed and 30 injured in East Pakistan in various police-student clashes on the second day of the Anti-Ayub agitation.

Curfew was imposed in Karachi and Khulna, while it was extended by 24 hours in Dacca, Narayanganj and neighbouring areas in Sudhirganj, Dimrao and Bunder.

All domestic flights of the Pakistan International Airlines were cancelled on January 25 except two to Chittagong and one flight each to Chittagong, Cox's Bazar, Dacca Jessore and Dacca-Sylhet.

On January 26, three persons were shot dead and seven received bullet injuries in Narayanganj in East Pakistan when they came out in violation of the curfew order.

Unconfirmed reports reaching Karachi said that two people were killed and 12 injured when troops opened fire on curfew-breakers in the riot-torn East Pakistan capital of Dacca on January 25.

The death toll from anti-Government violence since January 24 was said to be at least 15.

The West Pakistan Governor, Gen. Mohammed Musa, declared in a broadcast on January 27 that the West Pakitan Government would put down what he called "anti-social elements with a heavy hand and "let there be no mistake about it."

He said: "If so far as no action has been taken against such elements they should not be under the delusion that in future too they could do what they wanted freely."

He added that violence did not do anybody any good but only meant "tarnishing the image of the country."

On January 27, troops were called out in Karachi and Lahore, the two major cities of West Pakistan, following a fresh outbreak of street violence. In Lahore, four persons were killed and several injured when the police fired on demonstrators who set fire to the offices of the pro-Government newspaper, Kohistan.

Both the cities were put under curfew. A 48-hour curfew was clamped on the riot-torn areas of Liaqatabad, Nizamabad and Gilimar in Karachi. In Lahore a 24-hour curfew was enforced.

Truck-loads of armed soldiers moved into the two towns to help civic authorities in restoring order. In Karachi, 700 arrests were made:

Troops had already been called out in the East Pakistan capital of Dacca, where security forces had fired on some 4,000 people defying the curfew on January 26.

On January 28, the fifth day of country-wide anti-Government violence, the police at Peshawar clashed with student demonstrators in which at least 24 people died. The authorities said that troops had been called out to enforce a 30-day ban on all public gatherings. All schools and colleges in Peshwar and five other north-western towns were closed indefinitely.

On January 29, the police fired on anti-Government demonstrators in East Pakistan, and Dera Ismail Khan, in West Pakistan.

Over 1,000 left-wing Opposition leaders, including the 82-year-old pro-Peking Awami Party leader, Maulana Abdul Hamid Bhashani, were arrested in East Pakistan in an attempt to head off more violent anti-Government demonstrations on January 31.

Despite President Ayub Khan's offer on February 1 to hold talks with "responsible" political parties to solve the political crisis in Pakistan, anti-Government demonstrations were reported from many cities and towns in both wings of the country on February 2.

About 1,500 demonstrators clashed with the police in Rawalpindi after a protest march during which they demanded restoration of democracy.

Dusk-to-dawn curfew continued to be in force in Lahore, Gujaranwala, Sialkot and parts of Karachi. In Sialkot, the police fired tear-gas shells and made a lathi-charge to disperse demonstrators.

More than 1,700 people were arrested.

The police charged with steel-tipped staves several times in Lahore on February 12 as thousands of students tried to march on the house of the West Pakistan Governor, Mr. Mohammad Musa, where President Ayub Khan was conferring with him on the political troubles. Six students were injured.

More than 15,000 students had Lahore's fashionable Mall Road area under their control, directing all traffic. They chanted "Bhutto is our President" and demanded democratic and educational reforms.

A new blow was struck against the Government on February 13 with the resignation from the National Assembly of three Left-wing National Awami Party members in protest against what they called the oppressive policies of F—M Ayub Khan.

It was the first bloc resignation from the Pakistani Assembly to protest against the Government.

The three who resigned were Mr. Masthur Rahman, Mr. Mujibur Rahman and Mian Arif Iftikhar, who acted on the orders of the 83-year-old Maulana A. H. Bhashani, chief of the pro-Peking faction of the National Awami Party.

An NAP spokesman said that the party refused any compromise as long as its leader, Khan Abdul Wali Khan, detained in Peshwar since December 13, 1968 remained in prison.

A Radio Pakistan broadcast on February 13 said that a large number of railway workers demonstrated to press for better wages and improved service conditions as they marched through the city.

Labour unions also took out processions in response to a call by the West Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions. Processions were also taken out by engineers, students of the University of Engineering and Technology and by teachers of non-Government colleges.

Women also took out a procession in response to a call by the Demoncratic Women's Committee.

Doctors throughout West Pakistan observed a general strike on February 13 to press their demand for higher status. They held demonstrations in a number of cities.

A general strike called by the Democratic Action Committee (DAC) for February 14 touched off a fresh wave of violence necessitating calling out of troops in at least two cities of Pakistan. The Government released some top political leaders, including the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, and announced that the Emergency would end on February 17.

Withdrawal of the Emergency and release of political prisoners had been the pre-conditions set by the DAC for acceptance of President Ayub Khan's offer of talks on constitutional reforms.

Mr. Ayub Khan had earlier set February 17 for talks between himself and the DAC convener, Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan. The announcement that the state of Emergency would end on that day was made by the Law Minister, Mr. S. M. Zafar, in Islamabad on February 14.

Two persons were killed in police firing in Lahore and another two in a "shooting incident" in the Golimar-Lasbella area in Karachi.

Demonstrators clashed with police in Karachi, Lahore and Hyderabad, and two newspaper offices, a shoe market, a glass factory and several shops and restaurants were set on fire.

In the Eastern Wing of Pakistan, the strike was stated to have been complete and rail and air services there were suspended.

One person was killed and 15 were injured in police firing in Dacca on February 16 where the Army had been called out to control a violent demonstration. A 12-hour curfew was imposed in Dacca.

The mob violence occurred when some persons in the funeral procession of Sergeant Zurul Haq, an accused in the Dacca conspiracy case, who died on February 15 "indulged in arson" and set fire to a provincial Minister's residence. A sentary at the Minister's residence had fired on the mob.

Troops and armed police patrolled the streets of Karachi on February 18 following clashes on February 17 between the supporters and opponents of Presiden' Ayub Khan's regime during which five people were killed.

This raised the death toll to 50 since Pakistan's political upheaval began in mid-January.

On February 19, rioters clashed violently with troops in defiance of the curfew in Dacca and four people were killed and 35 injured, according to hospital sources.

Three persons were reported to have died in demonstrations in East Pakistan on February 18—one in Dacca and two in Rajshasi. Nine persons were wounded when troops fired in Dacca on February 18 after demonstrators surged into the streets shouting anti-Ayub slogans.

Three persons were killed and several others injured when the police fired on an unruly mob in East Pakistan on February 18.

On February 21, three persons were killed in Police firing and a policeman was beaten to death by a mob in Khulna in East Pakistan. At least 20 people and five policemen were wounded, one seriously.

The clash occurred after part of a 20,000-strong crowd had set fire to the house of a Minister, Khan A. Sabur, and stopped fire engines from reaching the place. A 30-hour curfew has been imposed in the city.

People in East Pakistan observed Martyrs' Day on February 21 in memory of those killed in the 1952 agitation for parity of status for Bengali with Urdu. The Government withdrew curfew and prohibitory orders to enable people to observe the day.

For the first time, Martyrs' Day was officially observed as a holiday.

The death toll in the rioting in Khulna on February 21 when a mob beat to death a policeman and set fire to a Minister's house reached nine when four people wounded by police and army bullets died in hospital.

On February 22, five persons were wounded when the police fired on anti-Government demonstrators in Khulna in East Pakistan, for the second time in two days.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Affidavit In Court:

In the affidavit which the former Foreign Minister of Pakistan, Mr. Zulficar Ali Bhutto filed in the West Pakistan High Court on February 5 in support of his writ petition challenging his detention under the Defence of Pakistan Rules, he stated that he was subjected to "grotesque harassment" for two reasons:

(1) To restrain him from making a political issue of the cease-fire with India (of September 1965) and the Tashkent Declaration; and

(2) To get a categorical assurance from him that he would not contest the Presidential election in 1970.

He said that President Ayub Khan had offered him the post of ambassador in Paris or any other place of his choice "on specially worked-out terms", but he declined it.

The President, according to him, made various other offers to him and, "to make things perfectly clear, he proceeded to tell me that I should remember that if I incurred his enmity, he would "follow me to the grave."

Mr. Bhutto said that various emissaries, including the President's eldest son, Mr. Akhtar Ayub, were sent to him in an effort to persuade him (Mr. Bhutto) to give up his intention to contest the Presidential election in 1970.

President Ayub Khan's Denial Of Allegations:

In a statement read by Attorney-General, Mr. Sharifuddin Pirzada, to a two-man High Court Tribunal hearing Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's petition for release from prison. President Ayub Khan vehemently denied on February 6 that he had ever tried to force the imprisoned former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, into staying out of politics after leaving the Government in 1966.

He said: "I did not at any time authorize any person to approach him on my behalf to dissuade him in any manner from entering politics or contesting the presidential elections.

"On the contrary, on his departure from the Cabinet I wished him well."

Mr. Ayub Khan said in his statement, however: "In the affidavit, certain statements have been ascribed to me. These are absolutely incorrect, erroneous and misleading. The insinuations, allegations, threats and warnings are figments of Mr. Bhutto's imagination."

The Attorney-General also read out a statement from West Pakistan Governor Gen. Mohammad Musa, denying Mr. Bhutto's allegation that the Governor had advised him to avoid speaking about the controversial Tashkent Declaration, signed in January, 1966 by Mr. Ayub Khan and the late Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri.

Mr. Bhutto's criticism of the Tashkent Declaration led to his departure from the Cabinet.

High Court Orders Mr. Bhutto's Release:

The West Pakistan High Court ordered the Government on February 10 to release the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, from jail and take him to Larkana, his home town, to be kept in custody at his house.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Fast & Release:

On February 14, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto began a fast despite the Government announcement of ending the State of Emergency on February 17 and planned to continue it until the Emergency was actually lifted

A spokesman from Larkana said that several of Mr. Bhutto's supporters were also fasting.

A Government official went to his residence to give Mr. Bhutto word of his release, but he refused to see him.

The official then relayed his message through a friend of Mr. Bhutto to him.

Mr. Bhutto's release from custody came exactly three months and one day after he was jailed on charges of inciting the Pakistani masses to violence.

Attempt On Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Life:

On February 15, supporters of Pakistan's former Foreign Minister, Mr. Zulficar Ali Bhutto, grabbed a would-be assassin as he whipped out a pistol and took aim at Mr. Bhutto.

Mr. Mustafa Khar, a member of the National Assembly and a close friend of Mr. Bhutto, said that the attempt took place as Mr. Bhutto was leading a procession in his honour in Larkana.

Mr. Khar said that the gunman pulled out a pistol and pointed it at Mr. Bhutto from only five yards. "As soon as the crowd noticed the pistol it was yanked from the man's hands and he was beaten until Mr. Bhutto came to his rescue."

"This is not the first time an attempt has been made on my life," Mr. Khar quoted Mr. Bhutto as saying.

Mr. Z. A Bhutto On His Policies:

In an interview on February 25, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto said that his unpopularity in Britain was because of his attitude towards Kashmir and his attack on Britain's East of Suez policy.

He said: "I was not prepared to take a soft line on Kashmir. Britain had a short-sighted, unrealistic policy then. This is a question which can only be settled between India and Pakistan and the Kashmir people, without outside interference. I notice that Mr. Michael Stewart now appears to advocate the same policy.

"It's time India put the lollypop out of her mouth. If she feels hemmed in by Pakistan and China, why doesn't she resolve her disputes with either of her neighbours?"

He did not advocate armed conflict with India. "When I said we will not rest, I meant we will defend the principle of Kashmir's self-determination without compromising ourselves. Sooner or later, India will see the reality of the 1970's when the struggle will come from the Kashmiri people themselves.

"In all good faith, I don't want trouble with India. But there is an awakening among the people of Kashmir. They have seen what has happened in other parts of world and they are now for an Algerian type liberation war. Sheikh Md. Abdulla, with all due respect to him, is getting on in years. A new leadership is coming up in Kashmir and the youth is on the march".

He said he would continue President Ayub Khan's policy of bilateral ties with Peking, Washington and Moscow. "In fact, I am the author of bilaterialism. President Ayub Khan had only followed it in principle by remaining in CENTO and S-EATO".

Regarding internal policies, he was less explicit, but alleged that the Ayub regime had allowed free enterprise "to run away in the Jesse James style". He would nationalize heavy industries, banks, insurance and petroleum, but would not chase out foreign capital. "What we went is a Scandinavian type of socialism in Asian terms".

Mr. Bhutto said the second reason for his unpopularity in Britain was the view that sooner or later Britain would have to return to Europe. "I was punished in Britain for having powers of anticipation".

Mr. Z.A. Bhutto Denies Pro-Peking Leanings:

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto said on February 25 that "President Ayub Khan should make a declaration that he is prepared to step aside and negotiate an orderly transfer of power."

"This," he said, "would contribute to an easing of tension and save the country, going through the most serious crisis in its 21 years, from further trouble. If he (Ayub Khan) holds on to power, heaven knows what will happen."

He rejected the "pro-Peking" label frequently applied to him, but admitted that Pakistan's detente with China in 1963 had come about while he was Foreign Minister.

On Pakistan's friendship with China, he said: "The extent of our dependence on the United States in those days was really frightening. I wanted diversification. We had closer relations with East European countries. We still have close relations with China in all fields and these will be maintained under a new Government here."

While he described Mr. Mao Tse-tung as "like granite" he termed President Richard Nixon as a "very competent and efficient man."

According to Radio Pakistan, Mr. Bhutto has renounced his title of Hilal-e-Pakistan Nishan in deference to the wishes of the All-Party Students' Action Committee.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto Promises Reforms:

In a major policy speech to his supporters at an open-air rally in Lahore on February 25, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto promised sweeping economic reforms, including nationalization of key industries if his Leftist People's Party comes to power, ridiculed other Opposition leaders and kept up a hardline policy towards the settlement of the Kashmir dispute with India.

Commenting on President Ayub Khan's decision not to seek re-election, Mr. Bhutto said: "An elephant has been roaming about the jungle. Now that the elephant has been wounded, small animals have come out into the open to claim they wounded him".

President Ayub Khan Invites Leaders For Talks:

On February 5, President Ayub Khan invited Opposition party leaders to meet him in Rawalpindi on February 17 to discuss their demands and review the political situation.

The invitation was contained in a letter addressed to the Democratic Action Committee's convener, Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan.

The previous day (February 4), the Pakistan Government withdrew two Bills to amend the electoral laws at a National Assembly meeting in Dacca in advance of talks President Ayub Khan had proposed with Opposition parties on constitutional reform.

The Opposition wants direct adult franchise instead of the President's system of indirect ballots for the Presidency and the National Assembly which, it says, is geared to keep him in power always.

Bowing to the Democratic Action Committee's (DAC) demand, President Ayub Khan agreed on February 16 to the inclusion of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman—principal accused in the Dacca conspiracy case—in the political talks on the country's future set-up to which the DAC has agreed.

At the end of two-day deliberations in Lahore, the DAC issued a statement that its conditions for talks with President Ayub Khan had not only been fulfilled basically by the Government "but the Government has also agreed that the East Pakistan Awami League President will be brought to attend the talks."

The DAC suggested that the talks should take place on February 19 instead of on February 17 as originally proposed by President Ayub Khan.

A Radio Pakistan broadcast quoted the DAC statement as saying: "Keeping in view the steps taken by the Government towards the fulfilment of the DAC demands—lifting of emergency, release of political detenus and restoration of civil liberties—the DAC has agreed to take part in the conference proposed by President Ayub Khan."

On February 18, the eight-party Democratic Action Committee (DAC) of Opposition parties in Pakistan announced the terms under which it would be prepared to help President Ayub Khan settle the country's political crisis.

The terms include election by a popular vote of the President and members of the Central and Provincial Parliaments together with a Federal form of Government.

The Committee also seeks freedom of the Press, supremacy of the legislature, and separation of the executive and the judiciary.

The twice-postponed Round Table Conference called by President Ayub Khan to discuss Pakistan's future political set-up with the Opposition leaders opened in Rawalpindi on February 19. But, after 35 minutes, it adjourned to meet again on March 10.

State Of Emergency Lifted:

According to a Presidential proclamation issued in Rawalpindi on February 16, the State of Emergency was revoked from midnight on February 16.

A Radio Pakistan broadcast quoted the Presidential Order as saying: "The President is satisfied that the grounds on which he had issued a proclamation for the State of Emergency in the country in September, 1965 have ceased to exist."

Political Prisoners Released:

The West Pakistan Government released on February 14 Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, who was under house arrest in his village after the High Court had ordered his release, Khan Abdul Wali Khan, son of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, and Mr. Ajmal Khattak in view of the Government's decision to lift the State of Emergency from February 27.

The Provincial Government also ordered the release of all persons detained under the Defence of Pakistan Rules.

The Government's decision was announced while the country was in the grip of a general strike, the latest move in a mounting campaign by President Ayub Khan's opponents for constitutional reforms.

Six Ordinances:

But, on February 17, the Pakistan Government armed itself with six Ordinances which effectively maintained part of its Emergency powers simultaneously with the lifting of the 41-month State of Emergency at midnight on February 16.

[The ending of the Emergency means the release of prisoners held under the Pakistan Defence Rules. It also means the closure of the eight-month-old trial by a Special Tribunal of the East Pakistan Opposition leader, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, and 33 other people accused of secessionist activities. However, the men will still be liable to civil court proceedings.]

The six Ordinances promulgated by the Government were: (1) War risks insurance giving protection against war damage; (2) Enemy property, permitting the Government to maintain control of Indian property seized since September 1953; (3) Requisitioned lands, allowing the Government to keep taken-over buildings and to hold others in future if necessary; (4) Employment control, forcing employers to take back conscripts; (5) Essential commodities, allowing Government control of necessary production; and (6) Patents and designs.

Dacca Conspiracy Case Withdrawn:

President Ayub Khan yielded all the way to the Opposition with the withdrawal on February 22 of the Dacca Conspiracy Case.

The Government's decision to drop the conspiracy case and release all the 34 accused was announced by the Home Minister, Vice-Admiral A. R. Khan, in Dacca after he and Khwaja Shahabuddin (Information Minister) had met Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.

According to a Press Note issued in Dacca, the conspiracy case had been withdrawn and all accused released as the Ordinance under which a Special Tribunal was constituted to try the case stood repealed with the ending of the State of Emergency and restoration of fundamental rights.

The so-called Agartala Conspiracy Case arose out of the arrest of 28 people including some junior army officers in January, 1968 for allegedly trying to bring about the cession of East Pakistan.

The Pakistan Home Ministry, while announcing the arrests, had said that some of the arrested persons had visited Agartala to discuss their plans and that some of them were in touch with Mr. P. N. Ojha, First Secretary of the Indian Deputy High Commission in Dacca.

The Pakistan Government had also expelled Mr. Ojha from Dacca on the charge of giving money to Pakistani nationals and assisting them to leave East Pakistan.

The Indian Government, in a strongly-worded Note to Pakistan, had rejected as "false" the allegations against Mr. Ojha.

Air-Marshal Ashgar Khan Returns Decorations:

One of President Ayub Khan's chief opponents, 47-year-old retired Air Marshal Ashgar Khan returned two of his country's highest decorations back to the President on January 29.

In a letter to the Secretary of the Cabinet, Mr. M. H. Sufi, the former Commander of the Pakistan Air Force said he had done so "as a token of my disgust and disapproval of the uncivilized conduct of the Government".

SUMMARY: Mr. K. Holyoake's Visit; Dr. Adam Malik's Visit; Sardar Swaran Singh On Pakistan's Military Build-up; Dalai Lama's Message; United Front Ministry In West Bengal.

A. Mr. K. Holyoake's Visit: The Prime Minister of New Zealand, Mr. Keith Holyoake, accompanied by Mrs. Holyoake, arrived in New Delhi on January 28. They were welcomed at Palam airport by the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, and her Cabinet colleagues.

Later in the day (January 28), the two Prime Ministers exchanged views on a number of political issues and on the prospects for strengthening bilateral relations specially in trade between the two countries.

At a dinner given in his honour by Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Mr. Holyoake spoke of the Asian-Pacific region desperately in need of peace and stability to ensure social and economic development and looked forward to co-operating with India in promoting social and economic progress throughout the Asian-Pacific region.

The Communique:

He left Bombay on January 31 for Karachi.

In a joint communique issued at at the conclusion of their talks, the two Prime Ministers expressed anxiety at the situation in West Asia hoping that peace would be achieved there in accordance with the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967.

It said that India would send a trade delegation headed by the Chairman of the State Trading Corporation of India to work out a list of commodities that could be exchanged between the two countries.

The two Prime Ministers further re-iterated their faith in the Charter of the United Nations and agreed that all nations must respect the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of other States and that all disputes between nations should be settled through peaceful means.

[This was Mr. Holyoake's second visit to India, the first being 12 years ago. Mrs. Indira Gandhi had visited New Zealand on May 27, 1968 when, through the joint communique, she indicated expansion of trade and increasing collaboration in economic, technical and scientific fields to strengthen friendly relations between the two countries.]

B. Dr. Adam Malik's Visit: The Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. Adam Malik, who arrived in New Delhi on a four-day visit on February 21, told a news conference on February 22 that his Government had "invited India to contribute to the implementation of the Five-Year Plan of Indonesia not only in the form of direct investment but also in the shape of joint ventures."

He added that though some Indian business interests had withdrawn from his country, a fairly large number still remained in Indonesia.

Explaining the broad outlines of Indonesia's First Five-Year Plan just formulated, he said that the emphasis during the period would be on development of agriculture and creation of an infra-structure such as a net-work of transport and communications.

He rejected the idea of a joint Indian-Indonesian front against China. He did not think that the stage had arrived for such a front. He did not regard China as an enemy. What Indonesia did not like about China was the latter's interference in the internal affairs of his country. In India, he had gathered the impression that India also was desirous of good neighbourly relations with China.

Indonesia, he said, could not play the role of a defender and protector of South-East Asia consequent upon the possible withdrawal of American forces from Viet-Nam. But he felt that co-operation among the nations of South-East Asia might be needed so that they might be strong enough, "to cope with any effort by any country to interfere in or divide us in South-East Asia.

He added: "I do not think that the British pull-out of South-East Asia by 1971 would expose the region to any great danger. With the passage of time these countries will become more mature and, in the end, will be able to defend themselves."

He was asked whether the Soviet Union might try to "fill the vacuum," and he replied: "We do not like to look at the situation in this light. It is our opinion that the presence of foreign troops in any area is not conducive to the well-being of the countries concerned."

Dr. Malik said that though the Communist Party was banned in Indonesia, the Indonesian Government was not against the communist ideology as such.

A joint communique issued at the conclusion of Dr. Malik's official four-day visit to this country, on February 24 said the two sides had agreed that further discussion should take place between India and Indonesia "to identify areas of economic co-operation including commodity arrangements and to undertake studies in specific aspects of trade promotion and related matters."

The Indian Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, and Dr. Malik, it said, re-iterated the need for greater international effort towards solving the problems of economic growth in the developing countries and bridging the widening gap between the developed and developing nations.

In this context, they expressed concern at the failure of the developed countries to respond in adequate measure to the needs of the developing countries and hoped that continued and determined efforts would be made to achieve the aims and objectives of the second UNCTAD.

C. Mr. Swaran Singh On Pakistan's Military Build-up: The Defence Minister, Mr. Swaran Singh, told Parliament on February 19 that since 1965 Pakistan had acquired military equipment valued at well over $700 million from various countries.

But Pakistan's principal source of supply, he said, was still China, although it had obtained substantial quantities of electronic equipment, anti-tank missiles, ammunition and spares from other countries.

He had stated on November 13, 1968 that China had supplied Pakistan complete equipment for two infantry divisions, about 250 tanks, 120 MIG aircraft and two squadrons of IL-28 bombers. China had also given a large number of artillery pieces and military vehicles, besides substantial quantities of ammunition and aircraft spares for the tanks and aircraft. This massive Chinese military aid had enabled Pakistan to virtually double its land forces which now included two armoured divisions.

Mr. Swaran Singh, however, assured Parliament that India had taken suitable steps to augment the strength of its armed forces to meet any possible threat from Pakistan, But it was not in the national interest to disclose details of the equipment acquired by India or its sources.

D. Two New Destroyers For Navy: Two new destroyers joined the Indian Navy during February. They were named Kamorta and Kadmath after islands of the same names.

The acquisition of these vessels with up-to-date gunnery, anti-submarine weapons and the latest submarine detection devices, marks a further stage in the programme, launched two years ago, of strengthening and modernisation of this arm of India's defence services.

Before the arrival of these two destroyers, the Indian Navy had six vessels of this category, three R class—Rajput, Rana and Ranjit—and three Hunt class escort destroyers—Godavari, Gomati and Ganga. All these are over 27 years old, which is well over the normal life span of a warship, which is 20 years.

E. Trade Talks With Thailand: At the conclusion of trade talks in New Delhi between India and Thailand, a joint communique was issued on February 23 identifying some of the commodities and items where a potential existed for expansion of trade between the two countries.

It was recognized that India would increasingly be in a position to export to Thailand a wide range of manufactured products including machinery and machine tools, rails and rail track accessories, transmission lines including towers, aluminium conductors, insulators and line accessories, telecommunication equipment and structural steel.

Similarly, Thailand was interested in the export of rice, kenaf (mesta), tin, antimony and flourspar. The two countries could also co-operate in matters relating to production and marketing of seedlac and shellac.

The communique stated that the exploitation of this potential would require closer co-operation between the two countries. The attempt should be to seek not only to strengthen the existing patterns, but also evolve new ones.

F. Indo-French Consultative Talks: Hope of increased co-operation between India and France "in many diverse directions and new fields of fruitful collaboration" was expressed in a joint communique issued in New Delhi on March 7 at the end of the two-day consultative talks between the two countries.

It said: "It was gratifying to observe the remarkable identity of views between them on major international problems."

It was agreed that these consultations should be held regularly every year.

The next talks will be held in Paris.

Technical co-operation and cultural exchange were among the main subjects discussed. It was decided to work out plans to train Indians in France in various fields. such as administration, industrial production, education, television, cinema, theatre and music.

G. Credit From Italy: An Agreement was signed in New Delhi on March 10 under which Italy agreed to provide India with a credit of $5.5 million (Rs. 4.13 crores).

The sum represents Italy's share of debt relief, pledged by it at the last Aid-India Consortium meeting.

The credit is repayable over 12 years with a grace period of three years. It will carry an interest rate, including credit insurance, of four per cent.

H. Tri-lateral Trade Deal With Tunisia & Bulgaria: India has concluded a tri-lateral trade deal with Tunisia and Bulgaria in a bid to give a new dimension to the concept of rupee trade.

Under the deal, India will supply tea and other commodities to Tunisia, which will in turn export phosphate to Bulgaria against Bulgarian exports of urea to India.

The contract, valued at Rs. 3.4 crores, was concluded by the State Trading Corporation with commercial organizations of Tunisia and Bulgaria.

The supply of urea from Bulgaria under this deal will be over and above the normal supplies to be made by that country under the annual trade plan for 1969.

Payment among the three countries will be in non-convertible rupees.

I. Tibetan Uprising Anniversary —Dalai Lama's Message: The Dalai Lama called upon Tibetans living within and outside the plateau on March 10 to re-dedicate themselves to the task of securing a free Tibet governed by Tibetans themselves.

Addressing a mass rally of Tibetan exiles held in Dharmsala (India) to observe the tenth anniversary of the Tibetan uprising against Chinese occupation, he reminded them that no imperial power had succeeded for all time to keep other people in subjugation for long.

He said that even if the Chinese left nothing but ashes in the sacred land, Tibet would rise from these ashes as a free country even if it took a long time to do so. It would be for the people of Tibet to decide what form of Government they would have. The system of governance by the line of the Dalai Lama might or might not be there. But the will of the people would ultimately determine the future of Tibet.

Indian Leaders Demand Recognition Of Tibet:

On March 9, Members of Parliament belonging to different non-communist parties issued a statement demanding the recognition of the political status of the Dalai Lama "as the lawful spiritual and temporal ruler of Tibet whether within or without that country."

The statement issued on the eve of the 10th anniversary of the Tibetan uprising was signed by Mr. Jaya Prakash Narayan, Mr. Atal Bihari Vajpayee (Jan Sangh), Mr. S. M. Joshi (SSP), Mr. N. G. Ranga (Swatantra), Mr. Nath Pai (PSP), Rev. Kushak Bakula, Mr. C . D. Pande, Mr. T. N. Singh and Mr. Prem Chand Verma (Cong). Among the other signatories were Mr. N. C. Chatterji, Mr. B. P. Mandal of the BKD and Mr. Frank Anthony.

Criticizing the Government of India for having recognized the suzerain rights of China in Tibet in the past, the statement said that this grievous blunder had not only resulted in the enslavement of Tibet but had also caused great damage to India's security as the events of 1962 had proved. Independent Tibet was vital not only to India but also to the Soviet Republic of Central Asia, of Mongolia, Pakistan, Nepal, Bhutan, Sikkim and Burma. The convergence of the national interests of so many countries provided India with a rich scope for diplomatic initiative and manoeuvre in formulating the country's foreign policy.

This apart, they felt that many more nations would be ready to take a second look at the question of Tibet if only India gave the lead because of the requirements of the balance of power in Eurasia and the world.

J. Tarapore Nuclear Power Station Goes "Critical": India moved closer to commercial production of atomic power when the second reactor of her first nuclear power station at Tarapore, about 100 miles from Bombay, went "critical" on February 27 at the end of two days of fuel loading operations. Criticality was achieved at 11-51 p.m.

The achievement came in less than four weeks after the first of the two reactors became "critical" on February 1.

The station is scheduled to begin trial production of power in May, 1969 and commercial operation in July, 1969, the beneficiaries being Maharashtra and Gujarat.

When the plant goes into full production in July, or possibly earlier, it will generate 380,000 kw of power relieving the power scarcity, particularly in Bombay, where a power cut is in force from November, 1968.

The US Government has given a loan of $75 million for the import of essential equipment for the Tarapore project. The US Atomic Energy Commission provided enriched uranium worth $15 million for the initial fuel load of the reactors. The fuel was supplied on a long-term deferred payment basis.

K. Hostile Nagas Killed In Upper Burma: According to reports reaching Imphal on February 20, Burmese troops killed 45 China-trained Naga hostiles in three fierce gun battles in January in upper Burma.

The troops also captured large quantities of Chinese arms and ammunition, including automatic weapons.

The reports said that over 1,000 China-trained Naga hostiles, who were now camping near the dense jungles of upper Burma under "general" Mowu Angami, commander-in-chief, "federal Naga army", were trying to return to Nagaland through Manipur. These hostiles, who were now associated with the "Kachin Insurgent Army" (KIA), had resorted to looting and forcible collection of rations in the local Kachin areas. As a result, hundreds of Burmese refugees from Kachin had taken shelter in Myitkyina and further south

L. Censure Motion In Lok Sabha Lost: The Lok Sabha rejected on February 20 the Communist-SSP censure motion against the Government with a decisive 213-83 vote, with the Swatantra group abstaining.

The vote came shortly after the Prime Minister's call to all political parties to try to find a common answer to the triple threats of caste, community and region.

The censure motion, as its mover Mr. P. Ramamurthi, had predicted on the opening day (February 18), was foredoomed to failure. But the motion was able to gain the support of the Jana Sangh, DMK and P-SP groups who had refrained from being counted in its favour at the admission stage.

Intervening in the debate on February 20, (which was spread over three days), the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, sought the co-operation of all parties in putting down the trend towards regionalism. The Government, she assured, would play its part, but the problem would also have to be dealt with at the political level by the joint endeavour of all parties.

Every solution to outstanding regional problems she said, would always leave an element of dissatisfaction, and every such element she knew also was likely to be exploited by one party or the other. It was against this background that she felt called upon to ask all parties to refrain from exploiting regional or other similar issues for party advantage.

In this context, she assured the Chief Ministers of non-Congress States of the Centre's readiness to help them. But co-operation, she added, could not be had unilaterally. "We do expect some co-operation from the State Governments also on matters which concern not only the Governments but on matters which have repercussions in other parts of the country."

Mr. P. Ramamurthi who moved the censure motion, in his reply, said he was not convinced by what the Prime Minister said. He repeated his charge that the Congress Party had encouraged the Shiv Sena in Bombay. He was also not impressed by Mrs. Gandhi's reference to the steps being taken to mitigate the hardships of the people of Telengana.

The UF admitted to its membership four P-SP MLAs, who had entered into electoral adjustment with the Front and had organized themselves into a new organizing committee of the P-SP in West Bengal.

The Cabinet sworn-in is one of the largest for the State ever. After the 1962 General Election, the Ministry that was formed under the leadership of the late Dr. B. C. Roy had, of course, 36 members. But then the number of Ministers with Cabinet rank was only 15.

The Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, retained the political branch of the Home Department. The Home (Jails) goes to Mr. Niranjan Sen, the Home (Transport) to Mr. Abdullah Rasul and the Home (Passport and Civil Defence) to Mr. Golam Yazdani, who is an Independent supported by the CPI(M).

Decisions On Communists In Jail:

On February 26, at the first meeting of the Council of Ministers, it was decided to release immediately all Naxalite Communists (Marxists) who are now in detention under the Preventive Detention Act and to withdraw cases against Central employees in connexion with the token strike.

The question of those who were arrested in connection with the Naxalbari movement, including Mr. Kanu Sanyal and Mr. Jangal Santhal, also came up for discussion. It was decided on principle that they should also be released. The Home Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu, was authorized to review individual cases and the legal implications before giving the release order.

Pending release, however, the Cabinet decided to meet the Naxalite prisoners' demand for a higher jail classification. [Kanu Sanyal and others who were on a hunger-strike for the realization of this demand broke their fast on February 26].

Regarding the non-political Preventive Detention Act cases, the Cabinet felt that quite a few people had been detained without sufficient reason and decided that their cases should also be reviewed.

It discussed the question of alleged police excesses following the dismissal of the United Front Government in November, 1967. Mr. Jyoti Basu would investigate the allegations and decide on the appropriate action to be taken.

The question whether the Inspector-General of Police in West Bengal, Mr. U. Mukherji, would, if he was asked to do so, quit his office before his term expired on March 31 this year was discussed. The consensus was that he should be asked to leave the post as early as possible.

Policies Outlined:

An outline of the policy and programme of the United Front Government in West Bengal was given by Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, leader, and Mr. Jyoti Basu, deputy leader of the United Front Legislature Party, at a rally in Calcutta on February 23.

Mr. Mukherjee said he would not make tall promises for the UF knew of no magic by which the problems of the State could be solved overnight. The UF would try to implement its 32-point programme and its immediate aim would be to attain self-sufficiency in rice in two or three years and to relieve unemployment.

He said the problem of unemployment could not be tackled without growth of industry. The UF Government would, therefore, encourage industrial expansion in both rural and urban areas. Industries, big, medium, and small, must grow so that new employment opportunities might be created.

Mr Jyoti Basu said that the condition of the people could not be changed radically by some laws. They wanted to bring about this change peacefully but there was little hope of the Government of India co-operating in it. The people would, therefore, have to be prepared for all eventualities. If the Congress Government at the Centre wanted a confrontation, the people would have to be ready for it. He had no doubt that whatever might be the form of that confrontation, the people would meet it.

Thirty-two Point Programme:

In its 32-point programme, the UF Government, it is said, will "work for changing the Articles of the Constitution in the sphere of Centre-State relations in order to secure more autonomy and powers for the States."

It has also promised to change the rules governing the service conditions of the ICS, IAS, and IPS cadres with a view to exercising effective control over them by the State Government.

Declaring that it will "not use the police against legitimate mass movements," the programme envisages changes in the existing police code, so that it "may not be used against the rights and interests of the people." It would also suitably amend the Jail Code.

The UF Government will also take steps against concentration of wealth and possession of unlimited land and housing property in urban areas.

It will go in for radical land reforms, which include, exemption of revenue for holdings of not more than three acres, distribution of surplus land among the landless and sites to the homeless in villages.

New Communist Party Proposed:

The All-India Co-ordination Committee of Communist revolutionaries comprising Naxalites (Marxists) and other extremist elements from different States (according to The Statesman), decided at a secret conference held recently to form a new Communist Party. Leading members of the Committee, including some from Andhra, were stated to have attended.

The resolution passed in this regard says: "A stage has now been reached when the formation of a new Communist Party brooks no further delay. The party should immediately be formed with those revolutionaries as the core who are building up and conducting revolutionary class struggles".

Maoist in outlook, the party seeks to unite with "our class brethren who are waging heroic struggles in Burma, Thailand, Malaya, Indonesia and various other countries of the world and forge that great bond of internationalism which has been given noble expression by Chairman Mao Tse-tung in the great proletarian Cultural Revolution".

The party, it said, was necessary to develop the agrarian struggles going on in different areas to a higher stage and also to infuse in the cadre "revolutionary discipline, the spirit of self-sacrifice and death-defying abandon". Agrarian revolution would be the main content of the democratic revolution in India today.

The resolution criticized "all the parties of the ruling classes, including the various revisionist parties which are feverishly trying to strengthen parliamentary illusions".

Approving the Co-ordination Committee's "boycott election" call, it said that the call had exposed "the hollowness of parliamentarianism and the counter-revolutionary character of the revisionist and neo-revisionist parties".

The Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, asked the Central Government on February 18 to "immediately hand over" Chandigarh, the Bhakra complex and other Punjabi-speaking areas to Punjab.

When it was pointed out that the Punjab Government had agreed to arbitration by the Prime Minister on these issues, Mr. Gurnam Singh said: "We had agreed to arbitration but they have wasted time. We cannot afford to wait any longer. They must hand over Chandigarh and Bhakra to us immediately".

If Chandigarh was not handed over to Punjab immediately, he added "I will consider that they are deliberately and consciously keeping us out of Chandigarh".

He said that Punjab was prepared to "accommodate Haryana in Chandigarh" till Haryana built its own capital.

P. Shiv Sena Agitation In Bombay: Bombay was in the grip of violent agitation for five days from February 7 to February 11, when loot, arson and attempts to hold meetings and lead processions against the Government ban led frequently to lathi charge, tear-gas and firing by the police.

The agitation was engendered by the Shiv Sena under its leader, Mr. B. Thackerey. They had been demanding re-distribution of the boundary between Mysore and Maharashtra, scrapping up of the Mahajan Commission report on the issue and merger of Belgaum and Karwar with Maharashtra on a linguistic basic. In January, the Shiv Sena launched a campaign to block the entry of some Central Ministers into Bombay city. They blocked the entry of Mr. Y. B. Chavan in January and on February 7, they tried to prevent Mr. Morarji Desai, the Deputy Prime Minister, from going to his residence from the airport.

The police, during these five days, fired at the crowd several times, nine times on February 11, at different places in North and Central Bombay. The death toll till February 14, was 52 with over 750 injured and over 1,500 arrested. Ten city buses were burnt on a single day on February 8, several suburban railway stations set fire to or otherwise damaged, public property looted on a large scale and IAC flights cancelled on February 9. The 67 textile mills and 500 other industrial establishments worked only one shift resulting in a loss of Rs. 75,00,000 per day. About Rs. 15 crores worth of property was estimated to have been destroyed. The loss to the Western Railways was about Rs. 15,00,000.

Mr. Thackerey (who was kept in detention since February 8) called off the agitation on February 11 and Bombay gradually resumed normalcy, though police resorted to firing both on February 12 and 13. Schools and colleges re-opened on February 12 and property worth Rs. 3,50,000 looted during these days was recovered till February 14. About 75 persons were arrested in this connection.

The Chief Minister of Maharashtra, Mr. V. P. Naik, said at New Delhi on February 14 that the delay in solving the boundary dispute gave opportunity to the opposition to carry on propaganda against the Central and the State Governments. He pleaded for shelving the Mahajan Commission report and for a fresh approach to the dispute.

Finally, on February 26, the Shiv Sena suspended the agitation.

Mr. S. Nijalingappa's Condemnation:

The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, demanded in Bangalore on February 22 a judicial inquiry into the recent orgy of violence in Bombay over the Mysore-Maharashtra border dispute.

It was necessary to find out which were the forces behind the Shiv Sena and who were responsible for the Bombay atrocities in which innocent people had been killed and public property looted, he declared.

Condemning the activities of the Shiv Sena as anti-social and anti-national, he said, that if possible, that organization as well as similar organizations like the Gopal Sena and the Bhim Sena should be banned in the national interest. In his view, this was a legally valid step.

He ridiculed the interest taken by the Shiv Sena in the Mysore-Maharashtra border dispute. Did the Shiv Sena know what exactly was the controversy or which were the areas under dispute? Or was it merely fishing in troubled waters? Did the Shiv Sena believe that only Maharashtrians had built up Bombay? Had not the Parsis, the Gujaratis, the Kannadigas and the Maharashtrians together contributed to Bombay's growth?

Mr. Nijalingappa described the Bombay violence as a shame. The worst sufferers appeared to be those who hailed from South Kanara in Mysore State.

Q. Public Employment In Telengana—Andhra High Court's Verdict: On February 3, the Andhra Pradesh High Court held Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957, as amended in 1964, void on the ground that it violated Article 16 (1) and (2) of the Constitution on Fundamental Rights.

Soon after the judgment was delivered, the State Government filed an appeal before a Division Bench.

[One of the measures taken by the Andhra Government to pacify those agitating in Telengana for implementation of the promised safeguards is the enforcement of the Act to see that posts reserved for the people of Telengana are not held by outsiders. In pursuance of the decision, taken at an all-party conference on January 19, officials not domiciled in Telengana but posted there are being transferred elsewhere.]

The judgment dealt with two writ petitions filed in June, 1968, by 37 teachers of schools in Nalgonda Zilla Parishad (Telengana), whose services were sought to be terminated on the ground that they were either non-domiciled temporary candidates or that they did not satisfy the residential requirement under the Act Rules of 1959.

Delivering the judgment, Mr. Justice Chinnappa C. Reddi said that at the time of the re-organization of States in 1956, it was not thought fit to amend the Constitution to provide any safeguards in the matter of public employment to persons belonging to transferred territories. The States' Re-organization Act also contained no such provision. Therefore, he was convinced that Article 16 (3) did not permit division, by parliamentary legislation, of a State into regions for the purpose of employment under the State Government and consequent mutilation of the unity of the State and the nation. The lapse of 10 years "does not add to the validity of an enactment encroaching upon fundamental rights."

Reading Section 3 of the Act in juxtaposition with Article 16 (3), he observed: "It is clear that the legislative function of prescribing any requirement as to residence prior to employment has been delegated by Parliament to the Central Government. That function cannot be delegated to any other authority since that would amount to an abdication of legislative power."

A division bench of the Andhra High Court admitted the State Government's appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice O. Chinnappa Reddi.

The Chief Justice, Mr. P. Jaganmohan Reddy, and Mr. Justice Sambasiva Rao, admitting the appeal, stayed the operation of the judgment.

Order Stayed By Supreme Court:

On February 17, the Supreme Court stayed the operation of the Andhra Government orders under which non-Mulkis (not residents of Telengana) employed in the Telengana area will be relieved before February 28.

The court issued the order while admitting a batch of writ petitions by Mr. A. V. S. Narasimhan and 54 others of the Andhra Pradesh Secretariat Services challenging the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act.

The petitioners contended that the Act and the orders issued under it were discriminatory and violative of Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution. Under the Act, only persons who had been residing in Telengana for 15 years could hold certain posts.

The Act had been challenged in the Andhra High Court by some school-teachers. A single judge of the court, who heard the matter, struck down Section 3 of the Act.

Act And Rules Upheld:

On February 20, however, a Division Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court held Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act and Rules made under it valid under the Constitution.

Allowing the State appeal against the judgment of a single judge (Mr. Justice Chinnappa Reddi), striking down Section 3 of the Act, and rules made under it. Their Lordships set aside Mr. Justice Chinnappa Reddi's order.

The Bench, consisting of the Chief Justice, Mr. Jaganmohan Reddy and Mr. Justice Sambasiva Rao, also allowed the writ petitions questioning the Government order of January 21 under which non-domicile employees holding posts reserved for Telengana domiciles were to be relieved before February 28 and subsequently posted to the Andhra area.

Delivering the judgment, their Lordships observed that the Government order would apply subject to modifications. They directed that non-domiciles should not be relieved of their jobs as they would be entitled to be appointed in supernumerary posts to be created in places where they were working. "We direct that the respondents (non-domiciles) in these appeals will not be ousted until supernumerary posts are created in places in which they are working and they are appointed to them. We feel that there will be no insurmountable difficulty in implementing these directions."

Supreme Court's Stay Order:

On March 6, the Supreme Court directed the continuance of its earlier order staying the operation of the Government of Andhra Pradesh Order known as the "Mulki (domicile) Order" under which all non-domicile employees in service in the Telengana region were to be relieved from their respective posts in January, 1969.

The operation of certain directions given by a Division Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in a group of appeals and writ petitions impugning the same Government order was also stayed.

The Division Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court had upheld the validity and constitutionality of the Government Order in question and the provisions of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957, under which the Order was issued by the Andhra Pradesh Government. In order to mitigate hardship to those affected, the Division Bench had directed that disturbance from their posts (place of work) of the Andhra region personnel already employed in the Telengana region should be minimized or avoided by the State by the creation of necessary "super-numerary posts" to accommodate them.

The State Government's petition which came up for hearing on March 6 prayed that the Supreme Court "may permit the implementation of the directions of the Division Bench of the High Court vacating its interim ex-parte order of stay passed on February 17, 1969."

This order was passed by the Chief Justice of India, Mr. Justice Hidayatullah, while admitting a direct writ petition to the Supreme Court under Article 32 of the Constitution by A. V. S. Narasimha Rao and others affected by the Andhra Pradesh Government's order. The petitioners had challenged therein the validity and constitutionality of the order and the Act and rules giving birth to it.

Telengana Ministers' Statement:

All Telengana Ministers except the Information Minister, Mr. Konda Laxman Bapuji, in a joint statement issued on March 1, appealed to the people of the region not to be misled by the slogan of a separate Telengana.

Mr. Konda Laxman Bapuji was also present at the two-hour meeting of Telengana Ministers with the Chief Minister, but issued a separate statement.

Emerging from the meeting, the eight Telengana Ministers said that whatever might be the concern and anxiety in regard to implementation of safeguards, "there is no justification whatsoever to make this a ground for demanding a separate Telengana."

They admitted that failure to implement fully the safeguards over the years had caused disappointment to the Telengana region and assured the people that they would pursue the matter relentlessly.

They pointed out that the formation of Andhra Pradesh was not based on mere linguistic emotionalism but on "the irrefutable logic of administrative convenience, geographic continuity and economic viability." "A separate Telengana or for that matter, a separate Andhra State cannot be viable and would not enable full exploitation of the resources of both regions. Political stability also demands that such regional separation is not encouraged."

The statement was signed by Mr. V. B. Raju, Mr. J. V. Narsinga Rao, Mr. K. V. Narayana Reddy, Mr. B. V. Gurumurthy, Mr. S. Sidda Reddy, Mr. M. Ibrahim Ali, Mr. Arigary Ramaswamy and Mr. P. V. Narasimharao.

Telengana Convention:

A Telengana Convention organized by the Telengana Students' Action Committee in Hyderabad on March 9 called upon the students of all educational institutions in the region to abstain from classes till a separate Telengana State was formed.

By another resolution, the Convention called upon the Ministers representing Telengana and legislators from this region "who have betrayed the confidence of the Telengana people to forthwith resign their respective positions and seek a fresh mandate from the electorate on the separate Telengana issue."

The resolution stated: "The paltry dose of so-called safeguards can neither retrieve the people of Telengana from their suffering nor is there any bonafides therein.

"Our agitation is not against our Andhra brethren who are as near to us as the people of the rest of the country and we owe absolutely no antagonism or malice to them.

"Our demand, apart from being a legitimate democratic right, is the only alternative to meet our aspirations; we pledge we will make every peaceful endeavour to achieve our objective, namely, statehood for Telengana and resolve to make it a strong and prosperous State in our country. We ardently believe in the introduction of Hindi as the national language and Telugu as the State language."

R. Mid-term Poll Analysis: According to a poll analysis of the mid-term election early in February, the Indian National Congress polled the largest percentage of the popular vote in the States of Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal. The voting figures for Punjab have not yet been worked out.

West Bengal:

Although the Congress secured only 55 seats in a House of 280 members—as against 127 in the 1967 General Election—the party polled more votes in the mid-term election than two years ago.

In the mid-term election in February the Congress won 55 seats, polled 5,538,617 votes, showing a percentage of 41.31. In the 1967 General Election, the corresponding figures were—seats won 127, votes polled 5,198,347, percentage 32.13.

Rao, who expressed the hope that more Indian scientists would emulate the British cosmologist, mathematician and science fiction writer by popularising, interpreting and disseminating science among the masses.

The citation noted that his works in relating science to life and human needs, as also the approach, insight and his philosophical views, represented a simulating fusion of education, science and culture, the ideal for which UNESCO stood.

The citation was read out by Mr. Salah El-Din Tewfik, chief of UNESCO Mission in India.

ISRAEL

A. Confidence Vote For Government: The Government defeated a motion of no-confidence tabled by the Opposition Free Centre Bloc in the Knesset (Parliament) on February 11 by a vote of 74 to three with seven abstentions.

The motion had sought to censure the Government for its reported readiness to yield West Bank territories.

The Government's victory came amid signs of a split in the coalition. Members of the Gahal party faction, who favour retention of all the lands conquered in the 1967 war with the Arab States, announced after voting with the Government that they would decide soon whether to resign.

The dispute revolved around a statement reported to have been made by the Prime Minister Mr. Levi Eshkol, in an interview with the magazine Newsweek, where he was reported to have said that Israel was "flexible" about every aspect of a peace settlement except that it was determined to keep the Golan Heights and Jerusalem, and to have troops stationed along the Jordan River and at Sharm el-Sheikh.

He was also reported to have said: "Israel is not interested in any part of the inhabited regions of Judea and Samaria," the Israeli terms for the West Bank of Jordan, "such as Shechem (Nablus), Jenin, etc." Mr. Eshkol's comments about returning these West Bank towns, where most of the area's 600,000 Arabs live, raised a political storm.

Members of Parliament and those in the Cabinet who favour retention of all occupied areas objected to what appeared to be a Government decision to give up these areas.

Mr. Eshkol did not deny saying that he had made the comment in the interview, only that it was not in the text of the interview submitted to his office by Newsweek.

C. El Al Air-liner Shot At By Arab Gunmen: Some unidentified gunmen, believed to be Arabs, shot at an El Al Israeli air-liner at Zurich airport on February 18 injuring five aboard.

Airport sources said that one of the attackers was fatally shot by a security official.

The four-jet Boeing-707 was about to take-off for Tel Aviv with 15 passengers aboard when it was attacked.

The popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine claimed "full responsibility" for the attack on Israel's airline.

A communique said that the attack by four commandos, including a girl, was a reprisal for "brutality and torture" allegedly committed by Israeli authorities against "unarmed and innocent civilians in occupied Arab territory."

Next day (February 19) Israel called on UN to act swiftly and effectively to halt the escalation in disruption of international air routes by attacks like that on an Israeli airliner at Zurich.

U Thant said in New York that he had heard "with dismay and deep concern" of the terrorist attack on an Israeli airline and appealed to Israel not to retaliate and said that such attacks should be condemned by all Governments and peoples if civil aviation is to be saved "from chaos and anarchy."

In Washington, the US State Department condemned the attack as a "senseless act."

LAOS

A. Move For Resumption of Political Talks: The Soviet Ambassador in Vientiane, Mr. Victor Ivanovich Minin, delivered a personal letter from the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, to the leader of the pro-communist Neo Lao Haksat, Prince Souphanouvong, at his headquarters in the north Laos town of Sam Neuth on February 4.

This was the first time that Prince Souvanna Phouma had written personally to Prince Souphanouvong—his halfbrother—since the latter went to Sam Neua six years ago to lead, with Hanoi's backing, the forces of the Pathet Lao (the military wing of Neo Lao Haksat) against the Government.

Observers said the move represented an attempt to begin talks between the Government and the Neo Lao Haksat. Diplomats and politicians believed that talks between the two sides were inevitable in the Laotian crisis, which had developed alongside that in Viet-Nam, was to be resolved.

In theory, Laos has a neutral status guaranteed by 13 countries and is ruled by a Government of National Union representing the Right, neutral, and Left wings. In fact, the Left-wing Ministers led by Prince Souphanouvong had been in armed rebellion since 1963, supported by thousands of North Viet-Namese troops.

Observers believed that the North Viet-Namese were in Laos to protect their supply routes to South Viet-Nam and to provide a barrier to invasion on their western frontier. The American aim, demonstrated by bombing the Pathet Lao's "liberated zones", was to defeat these objectives.

On paper, a return to the formula of national union and neutrality respected by all countries seemed a reasonable solution, acceptable to the outside Powers as well as to the Laotian factions. However, difficulties could come from the extremists in both camps and from their support from foreign Powers.

Pathet Lao Allegation:

Earlier, on February 6, the Pathet Lao forces and the Laotian Government were continuing to intensify their air raids on lower Laos.

The Pathet Lao said that during the week ending January 14, US and Laotian Government planes had flown 4,783 sorties over the provinces of Thamouon, Savannakhet, Ta Ven Oc and Attopeu.

The Pathet Lao said the planes had unleashed 719 bombs, including 466 incendiary bombs, and 180 rockets, causing extensive losses to the lives and property of the local population.

NEPAL

A. King Zahir Shah's Visit: King Mohammed Zahir Shah of Afghanistan arrived in Khatmandu on February 16 on a five-day visit to Nepal at the invitation of King Mahendra.

He was welcomed at the airport by King Mahendra and Crown Prince Birendra.

The Afghan King was accompanied by his two sons — Prince Mohammed Nadir and Prince Mohammed Daoud.

The first ruling monarch to visit Nepal after Queen Elizabeth's visit in 1961, King Zahir Shah said at Tribhuvan airport that relations between Nepal and Afghanistan were based on "our common respect for the independence of peoples and nations and peaceful co-existence and world peace".

Earlier welcoming King Zahir Shah, King Mahendra referred to the common characteristics of the two countries. including the fact that both were landlocked and mountainous.

He also referred to the "many possibilities of co-operation and common approach of our two countries in both national and international fields".

State Banquet:

At a State banquet given in honour of King Zahir Shah on February 16, King Mahendra said that Nepal was and would remain "eternally vigilant to keep our (panchayat) system away from any kind of vicious or unfavourable influence in all matters concerning the honour and freedom of our country".

Nepal, he said, wanted peace and "we do not like to be involved in any unnecessary rancour or conflict with anybody".

It was a speech directed to his own countrymen reminding them that the non-party panchayat system had come to stay.

King Zahir Shah, in his reply said that his country believed in a policy of "positive non-alignment" and "firmly supported people's right to self-determination."

Civic Reception:

At a civic reception accorded to him in Khatmandu on February 27, King Zahir Shah said that he was pleased at the progress made by Nepal in the field of economic development under King Mahendra's leadership.

Both Afghanistan and Nepal, he said, were developing in accordance with their own tradition and culture.

Joint Communique:

In a Joint Communique issued on February 23, King Zahir Shah and King Mahendra expressed their concern at the situation in West Asia and hoped that a settlement would be reached on the basis of the Security Council's resolution of November 22, 1967.

The two Heads of State expressed the hope that the Paris peace talks on Viet-Nam would lead to a just and lasting settlement in accordance with the Geneva Agreement of 1954.

King Zahir Shah, the communique added, was "highly impressed by the social and economic progress made by Nepal under the unifying leadership of King Mahendra."

The two Kings exchanged views on international questions of common interest, particularly those relating to development in the region and re-affirmed their desire to serve the cause of peace and international understanding.

They "re-affirmed the need for elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations and supported the principle of self-determination as envisaged in the UN Charter".

They also expressed satisfaction at the progress of the ECAFE-sponsored Asian highway project and pointed out that the project would result in the "emergence of new opportunities in land transportation."

King Zahir Shah left on February 23.

B. King Mahendra On Panchayati System: In a broadcast to the nation on "Democracy Day" (February 18), King Mahendra ruled out revival of political parties in Nepal and said that the panchayati system assured the people full "democratic freedom."

> [According to observers, this is the first time, since the Royal take-over in December, 1960 that the King has spoken in such emphatic terms against political parties.]

The King said that the parliamentary system of democracy was tried in Nepal also, but the "masses could not feel their association with the administration, and democracy remained as distant as ever."

He re-iterated the thesis he first propounded in public in the early 1960s that the parliamentary system of government did not suit Nepal as the people lacked education. It was not practical and desirable from the national view-point to leave the way open for exploitation of the common people by allowing emergence of political parties.

He added: "Nepalese society seems to have already realized the fact that in any country where education and means of creation and utilization of public opinion are lacking, political parties only confuse the common people and create internal competition and conflict, weakening the national strength.

"Though there is no place for political parties in the panchayat system, there is full democratic freedom to reach a proper decision through mutual discussions.

"The panchayat system can provide no room for rivalry, power, groupism or opportunism. None should have any misunderstanding in this respect.

"To obstruct the progress of this system, which is progressively strengthening and developing, will be tantamount to undermining the nation and hampering its progress."

He singled out students for special mention and said that the goal of democracy would be out of reach if anybody indulged in selfish and anti-national acts. "Nepal and the people, especially students, would have to suffer dire consequences in future."

C. Help To Border People: On March 6, the Nepal Government announced measures to help people living in the areas bordering Tibet who lost their sole means of livelihood following non-renewal of an Agreement between China and Nepal which expired in September, 1967.

The Agreement, which was valid for five years, allowed Nepalese people to take their animals across the border to Tibet for grazing in Tibetan pasture lands, a traditional practice for both Tibetans and Nepalese living in the border areas. Failure to renew the Agreement was a blow to the Nepalese people whose only means of livelihood in those mountain areas was rearing animals like yaks.

The Government, it was announced, would send specialists in botany and veterinary science and experts from the Cottage Industries Department to these areas to undertake afforestation and growing of grass in those areas. The plan also envisages poultry farming, rearing of pigs and beekeeping.

D. New Mountaineering Rules: The Nepal Government announced on March 9 new mountaineering rules which will make expeditions to the Himalayan peaks in this country costlier, but will increase the income of Nepalese nationals associated with the expeditions and make their service conditions more secure.

According to the new rules, a team attempting to scale Everest (29,028 feet) will have to pay a royalty of Rs. 10,000, Rs. 8,000 for peaks above 26,000 ft. and Rs. 6,000 for peaks below that altitude.

The Nepal Government will provide liaison officers who have to be taken by each expedition compulsorily and pay him in addition to prequisites a fixed salary of Rs. 800. Guides, porters and Sherpas will be provided by the Government alone through the Himalayan society.

The new rules make it obligatory for expeditions to provide these people with all types of equipment and food from the base camp to the top at the same standard as enjoyed by other members of the expeditions. Compensation is to be paid to families of liaison officers and guides, porters and Sherpas in case of death or disablement.

The rules also lay down the route to be followed by the expeditions. The expeditions could scale no other peak than the one for which permission has been granted. Teams have been forbidden from taking pictures that endangers the security of Nepal and were detrimental to the religious and moral beliefs of the people.

Wireless sets cannot be used without permission from the Government and must be supervised by liaison officers. Of special importance to reporters, is the rule that all news have to be channelized through the Government. The rules prohibit publication of narratives which may be considered harmful to the interests of Nepal.

Everest and 37 other peaks have been thrown open to foreign mountaineering teams this season and a German team that will attempt Annapurna 1 (26,493-ft) is now on its way to Nepal.

Most of the rules are just a restatement of the old rules that were in force when mountaineering was banned four years ago, but special rules have been framed now laying stress on the security of Nepal and greater consideration for Nepalese nationals associated with expeditions.

Tall and powerfully built, ex-King Saud of Saudi Arabia, was born in 1902. He was fond of shooting and hiking, and was a fine horseman. In his early youth, he took part in many skirmishes, and later helped his father to put down two rebellions. In 1934, when his father, Ibn Saud, went to war with Yemen, he was given command of the Saudi forces. In a difficult mountain campaign he defeated the Yemenis within six weeks. The following year (1935) his father sent him to England for a short visit. There, among other activities, he attended a Royal Court. During Ibn Saud's life-time, he was Viceroy of Nejd.

On his father's death in 1953, he ascended the throne. For two years he reigned, allowing his brother, Prince Faisal, to run the country as Finance Minister. But in 1960, he started asserting his power and dropped hints of wanting to introduce constitutional reforms. However, when the time came to institute the reforms, he vetoed all proposals for it.

In the winter of 1955, King Saud paid a 17-day State visit to India. The following year, Mr. Nehru went to Saudi Arabia at the King's invitation.

Since February, 1964, his family had been insisting that he hand over his powers to his younger brother—Prince Faisal. In November, 1964 he was forced to abdicate and his brother, Emir Faisal, became King of Saudi Arabia.

He lived for several years in Greece after leaving Saudi Arabia and in 1966, surprised the Arab world by announcing that he would live in Cairo despite the fact that he and President Nasser had quarrelled for many years.

A. Bid For Japanese Assistance: According to Japanese trading sources, North Viet-Nam is seeking Japan's technological and economic co-operation for its economic rehabilitation.

North Viet-Nam also hopes to set up joint ventures with Japanese enterprises and export processed goods made of Japanese materials.

These plans were made known by North Viet-Namese leaders to Mr. Mitsunobu Nakahara, managing director of the Japan-North Viet-Nam Trade Association, when he visited Hanoi in January at the invitation of the North Viet-Namese Chamber of Commerce.

Meanwhile, six Japanese firms trading with North Viet-Nam have received invitations to send their officials to Viet-Nam for the first time in two years.

Hanoi's basic trade policy with Japan, according to these sources, calls for (1) cash settlement (in £ sterling) for small-scale transactions, (2) deferred payment for larger transactions; and (3) export of processed goods made of Japanese materials.

BHUTAN

A. Admission To UPU: It was stated in New Delhi on March 13 that the Swiss Government had informed the Government of India that Bhutan had been admitted as a member of the Universal Postal Union (UPU)—an agency of United Nations.

Bhutan has also been told of its membership.

The Universal Postal Union had entrusted the work of carrying out the necessary formalities regarding the UPU membership to the Swiss Government.

India first supported Bhutan's application for UPU membership in 1967, but this could not come through owing to the inability of several nations of UN to reply to the Swiss Government's circulars on Bhutan's entry in time.

Bhutan applied afresh in 1968 followed by a strong Indian support and lobbying for its membership.

Bhutan is already a member of the Colombo Plan. Its membership of the UPU entitles her for a place in UNCTAD.

CEYLON

A. Independence Day: Ceylon celebrated the 21st anniversary of her Independence on February 4 with traditional pageantry, parades and cultural shows.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake, in a broadcast pointed out that the occasion also marked a stage when the country had been able to "pull itself through by its own efforts from the throes of an economic crisis and to forge ahead."

He said that the Government had formulated a plan for agricultural development and noted that Ceylon had already established a record in agricultural production.

The following are excerpts from his speech on the country's achievements:

"We can proudly claim that after 21 years of Independence our free system of government and our free ways of life and belief are preserved intact. Among the factors that contributed to this, in my opinion, the one of fundamental importance is the fact of our having enjoyed uninterruptedly the benefits of universal franchise. We were able to preserve that heritage of freedom because we in Ceylon realized the great value that lay in universal franchise—that power which we enjoyed for 38 years past and which enabled the people to change the Government at their will. We must, therefore, make a firm determination—whatever our difference of political opinion may be—to safeguard that democratic system which ensures the liberty of the people, which guarantees the power of the people.

"When we take a look at our population, we notice that about 70 per cent of our people are those who earn their living by cultivation and farming—by agriculture. Therefore, in any programme for development, in any scheme for progress, we must give pride of place to agricultural development.

"And to properly raise the standards of living in the country, we must develop the industries as well. Some of the developed countries in the world bear testimony to this fact. This twin development is essential; it must go hand in hand.

"The year 1968 has witnessed a spectacular national development. We were able to increase our national income. I would, therefore, exhort you to consider that we are living in a very momentous era in the history of our nation; we should not think that we have been unfortunate to live through these times, undergoing the economic hardships that we did. It has been the good fortune of this, our present generation, to have been able to face that challenge and deliver the nation from the depths into which it had fallen. I appeal to you to take heart at our good fortune and I earnestly pray that every one of us will be able to render significant service towards the progress of our nation."

B. Liquor Policy: The liquor policy of the Government was outlined in a communique issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs on February 3.

The communique said: "With a view to implementing at some future date the system of permits as described in the Report of the Prohibition Commission, the Department of Rural Development and Small Industries, in conjunction with the Information Department, the Ceylon Broadcasting Corporation, the Education and Cultural Departments and the Department of Health Services will formulate a plan to carry out propaganda work against the evils of taking liquor and the benefits of abstinence.

"The following measures will also be taken: (i) The bar at the Senate will be closed with the consent of the President and the Members of the Senate; (ii) Liquor will be banned at all official functions of the Government of Ceylon, whether in Ceylon or abroad; (iii) Occasional liquor licences, which are now issued to carnivals, fairs, etc, will not be issued in the future; (iv) New liquor licences to hotels, restaurants, etc, will not be issued except on the recommendation of the Ministry of State for the furtherance of tourism; and (v) The penalties under the various laws that deal with drunkenness will be enhanced by suitable amendments of the law."

C. Food-for-Peace Agreement With USA: The third major Economic Agreement between the United States and Ceylon in the past 18 months was signed in Colombo on February 19. It provided for the supply of approximately 150,000 metric tons of wheat flour at an estimated cost of $17,500,000.

The Agreement came into effect immediately. Deliveries of flour were expected to begin as soon as the necessary procurement and shipping arrangements could be made.

The preferential Loan Agreement was made possible by the US Food-for-Peace Programme which gears American farm production to the needs of other countries with carefully constituted plans for increase of their own food production capabilities.

Since October, 1967 three Agreements between the two countries had been signed under the Food-for-Peace Programme. At that time, Ceylon and the United States signed a $9,970,000 Agreement for USA to deliver 87,000 metric tons of flour and 6,000 tons of maize.

On June 21, 1968 the Agreement of $15,000,000 provided for the delivery of approximately 150,000 metric tons of wheat flour.

D. Loan Pacts With Canada: Two Loan Agreements totalling Canadian $2,000,000 between Canada and Ceylon were signed in Colombo on February 18.

Under the Agreements, the two loans, each worth Rs. 5.5 million, will be used for the purchase of newsprint and asbestos fibre.

The terms of both loans are similar to the previous Development Loan Agreements. There will be no interest payable on either loan. Repayments will be made semi-annually over a period of 40 years, following a ten-year grace period.

E. Trade Agreement With UAR: Representatives of Ceylon and UAR signed Letters in Colombo on February 21 relating to the exchange of commodities between the two countries in 1969. Trade between Ceylon and the United Arab Republic is expected to expand to the level of £8,000,000 in 1969.

Under the Letters exchanged, Ceylon expects to purchase, among others, raw cotton, cotton yarn, hosiery yarn, textiles, cement, ground phosphates and sugar.

The United Arab Republic expects to buy from Ceylon tea, rubber, coconut products, spices, graphite, tobacco etc. The bulk of the UAR purchases from Ceylon will be tea, expect to total £3 million.

CHINA

A. Warsaw Talks With USA Cancelled: The Foreign Ministry in Peking announced on February 18 that China would not participate in the talks with the United States scheduled in Warsaw for the following morning (February 19).

[The talks were to have marked a resumption of contacts between the Governments of the People's Republic of China and the United States. On November 26, 1968 China had proposed that a meeting be held on February 20 in Warsaw, one month after the President, Mr. Richard Nixon, had been in office. The statement issued by the Chinese Foreign Ministry had aroused interest because it publicly called on the US Government to join in an agreement on the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence]

A Ministry spokesman cited US role in the defection of Mr. Liao Ho-shu, the Charge d'Affaires in The Hague, as the reason for withdrawing from the talks, and called the defection a "grave anti-China incident deliberately engineered by USA in collusion with the Dutch Government."

Mr. Liao, he said, was incited to betray his country and carried off to USA by the American Central Intelligence Agency. "This undeniable crime against China committed by the US Government has aroused the boundless indignation of the entire Chinese people."

He said that he had been instructed to state formally that the Chinese Government "considers that in the current anti-China atmosphere which is solely created by the US Government, it is obviously most unsuitable to hold the 135th meeting of the Sino-US Ambassadorial talks on February 20 as scheduled."

He added that the acting Charge d'Affaires of the Chinese Embassy in Poland, Mr. Chen Tung, had already conveyed to the US Ambassador to Poland, Mr. Walter Stoessel, notification of the Chinese move by letter.

American Reaction:

In Washington, the American Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, declared that USA stood ready to meet China at any time and regretted Peking's action in calling off the Warsaw talks.

He disclosed that Mr. Stoessel had been instructed "to make or renew constructive suggestions." These included: "Consideration of an agreement on peaceful co-existence consistent with our treaty obligations in the area; the subject of exchange of (news) reporters, scholars, scientists and scientific information; and the regularization of postal and tele-communications problems."

He rejected China's charge that USA had created a grave anti-China incident by deliberately engineering the defection of Mr. Liao Ho-shu.

[The acting Charge d'Affaires in Holland, Mr. Liao Ho-shu, left his Embassy in The Hague and was granted permission to stay in Holland "for the time being" on January 25. The Dutch Justice Ministry said: "The Charge d'Affaires ad interim of the Chinese People's Republic, Liao Ho-shu, reported to the main police station in The Hague. He stated that he no longer wished to remain functioning and asked for permission to stay in the Netherlands for the time being. After this request had been met, he left The Hague." A few days later, American officers confirmed that he had sought asylum in the United States].

B. Reported Top-level Military Conference In Peking: The Hungarian news agency, MTI, reported on February 11 that a top-level conference of military and civilian leaders was being held in a Peking suburb.

The news agency, in a despatch from its correspondent in Peking, said there were signs that the Chinese leaders might be preparing convocation shortly of the long-delayed ninth Congress of the Chinese Communist Party. (The Party's Central Committee had announced in October, 1968 that the national Congress, the first to be held since 1956, would be called during 1969.)

The report by MTI's correspondent, Karoly Patak, suggested that both the current top-level conference in Peking and the expected party Congress would seek to consolidate the leadership of the forces led by party Chairman, Mr. Mao Tse-tung following the 1967-68 Cultural Revolution.

The despatch said that the Mao leadership "has evidently decided that it is necessary to acquire the support of the most mature social force of the peasantry."

C. Deployment Of Troops: According to news agency reports from Hong Kong, an extensive redeployment of troops was being carried out in China for reasons regarded by observers as political rather than military.

The Chinese authorities were thought to be transferring units which had not been moved for a long time, and were regarded as too involved with local factions and too sympathetic with the discontent felt by local populations. Some troops were being moved from the cities to enforce Maoist policies in the country-side. The re-dispositioning was sometimes from one part of a province to another, but in other instances involved transfers to distant provinces.

Information on the re-deployment came partly from broadcasts over provincial radio stations and partly from travellers arriving in Hong Kong from China, who had noted large troop movements along railway lines.

Kweichow Radio, in a broadcast on January 21, disclosed troop movements in that province when it called for "the warmest welcome for new People's Liberation Army units transferred into our province" in accordance with "the great strategic plan on the movement of troops drawn up by Chairman Mao, Vice-Chairman Lin, the party central, the central Cultural Revolution group, the State Council and the Central Military Affairs Commission".

D. No Admission To UN: The UN General Assembly on November 19, 1968 rejected by 58 votes to 44 with 23 abstentions a new attempt to seat the Peking Government in UN and expel Formosa.

Last year the vote on a similar resolution had been 58 to 45 with 17 abstentions. The closest vote was 47-47 in 1965.

It was the 18th time in the past 19 years that the Assembly had voted on the China representation issue.

France, Britain and the Soviet Union voted in favour of the motion. USA opposed it.

The resolution was submitted jointly by Albania and Cambodia demanding the admission of China and the immediate expulsion of the Formosan delegation.

Earlier, the Assembly re-affirmed its seven-year-old ruling that the issue of Chinese representation must be subject to a two-thirds majority decision. The vote on an Australian-led resolution to that effect was 73 to 47 with five abstentions. Only one member, Indonesia, was absent.

The Assembly also rejected by 67 votes to 30 with 27 abstentions a move sponsored by Italy to appoint a committee to study the whole issue and report back to the Assembly. Last year, a similar motion was defeated by 57 votes to 32 with 30 abstentions. India voted against the Italian move, which was supported by USA.

HONG KONG

A. Budget For 1969-70: In his Budget for 1969-70 presented to the Legislative Assembly on February 26, the Financial Secretary, Sir John Cowperthwaite, announced that Government spending would reach a record level of about £140 million in the year.

Revenue was due to be more than £145 million at existing tax rates.

However, Sir John proposed reductions in minor duties and a cut in primary school fees which will reduce the predicted surplus to just under £3.5 million.

Referring to the continued economic expansion of the Colony in spite of the political crisis created by the communists in 1967, he said: "It is extraordinary how an apparent setback acts as a spur to the people of Hong Kong."

While he suggested that Hong Kong might enjoy a much more adequate system of public assistance before long, the Budget did not indicate any changes in official priorities. Health, education, housing and social welfare account for some 44 per cent of total Government spending—the same proportion as last year.

In an earlier review of present problems in the Colony, the Governor, Sir David Trench, was not enthusiastic about the introduction of an ombudsman.

He also pointed to the obstacles in the way of adopting a full scheme of social security.

Trade Figures:

According to official trade statistics, exports of domestic products to the European Economic Community totalled HK$732 million as compared to HK$581 million in 1967.

The break-down is (1967 figures in brackets): West Germany—HK$499 million (HK$370 million); the Netherlands—HK$121 million (HK $109 million); Belgium and Luxembourg—HK$31 million (HK$26 million); France—HK$31 million (HK$26 million); and Italy—HK $48 million (HK$47 million).

Imports from China totalled HK $2,426 million in 1968—HK$147.52 million more than in 1967, but less than HK$2,739 million during 1966.

Trade figures and other indicators suggested that Hong Kong's trade and industry were heading for a substantial boom in the first part of 1969, provided that world trading activity would maintain its recent momentum.

Between June, 1967 and June, 1968, industrial establishments increased by about three per cent and the industrial work force by nine per cent; 350 new factories were set up and 38,000 new jobs were created during this period.

INDONESIA

A. First Five-Year Plan: Outlines of Indonesia's First Five-Year Plan were given by President Suharto on January 14 in his Address to the plenary session of Parliament.

The country, he said, would begin on April 1, 1969 simultaneously with the new fiscal year, its First Five-Year Plan at an estimated cost of 1,059,000 million rupiahs, which at the present conversion rate (about 500 rupiahs to a US dollar) will amount to $2,118 million.

The Plan, which would concentrate on food production and development of small industries, power and tele-communications was termed by President Suharto as "simple and pragmatic". No complex projects like a steel plant or aircraft production is contemplated in the First Plan.

The current Plan is tailored to "limited economy, to harmonise aspirations with reality". President Suharto said its objectives were to raise the living standard of the masses, to pay attention to current capabilities while adhering firmly to long-term projects and to lay a strong foundation for subsequent Five-Year Plans. He said that "with some reservations I can say that our economy at present already shows stability in strategic sectors."

The appropriations for the various sectors are as follows (in rupiahs): agriculture and irrigation— 319,000 million; industry and mining—130,000 million, electricity—100,000 million; communications and tourism—230,000 million; rural development —50,000 million; health—42,000 million; education and culture—95,000 million; other social welfare projects—35,000 million; defence and security—28,000 million and miscellaneous projects—30,000 million.

Plan Priorities:

The Chairman of the National Planning Body (BAPPENAS), Prof. Widjojo Nitsastro, who has been the leading economic adviser to President Suharto and to whom much credit can be given for successful planning, said the Plan put top priority on rice production.

He estimated that under the Plan, the current rice production of 10.52 million tons a year would rise to 15.42 million tons in 1974. Land under rice would rice from 7.6 million hectacres to 9.3 million hectacres. Land and water resources would be preserved and priority would also be given for repair and modernization of irrigation systems. Though production of fertilizer would be increased at the three factories, the Government would also increase the fertilizer import from the current $33 million to $111 million by 1974.

The Plan saw no future for rubber which is so far one of the important primary products of the country. Production of palm oil, on the other hand, would be increased from 41,000 tons to 68,000 tons Among the other targets were tea—from 46,000 tons to 50,000 tons; fish—from 1,423 million tons to 1,696 million tons; cement—from 515,000 tons to 1,650,000 tons; textiles—from 300 million metres to 900 million metres; and paper—from 10,000 tons to 66,000 tons by 1974.

Petroleum crude oil, which is the greatest foreign exchange earner for Indonesia, would continue to dominate the economy. Off-shore oil also would be exploited. Tin production would be increased. Among other minerals, though the production of nickel and bauxite would rise only slowly, because of the time required to explore them, increased production of these two was anticipated in the Plan.

Electric power would be increased considerably with the expansion of the Djatiluhur Power Plant and the addition of smaller units throughout Indonesia. About 11,000 kilometres of road would be reconstructed and 6,000 kilometres upgraded during the next five years throughout the Republic. The railway system would be rehabilitated entirely—the permanent way bridges, locomotives and railway cars. Dredging of ports and modernization of airports would be done, but not too ambitiously. Domestic air service would be given priority over international flights. Tele-communications, with more automatic exchanges, and tourist facilities in Bali and Java would be improved.

As the Plan is tailored essentially for the masses who are 70 per cent agricultural, rural development is given great attention. Each village would be offered 100,000 rupiahs for repairs of roads and village facilities.

To finance the Five-Year Plan, the Government will provide a portion from its revenues and rely mostly on loans from banks, local and foreign capital investments and reinvestments of foreign capital.

Indonesia, which asked for and got $200 million in foreign credits for the first year after the fall of Dr. Sukarno, got the next year $310 million and this year would get about $500 million. Though the Government has to lean rather heavily on foreign aid for the import of foreign goods for development, it is not likely to encounter much difficulty in realising them. On its part Indonesia too is trying to diversify its production, minimize the imports of essential goods by local production and utilize the resources of the armed forces for development schemes.

Foreign Investment In Forest Lands:

Meanwhile, a total of 8,605,000 hectares of forest lands has been committed to foreign capital investors.

The specifications are as follows: France: 4 companies with 4 operational units; USA: 5 companies with 5 operational units; Holland: 1 company with one operational unit; Britain: 2 companies with 2 units; the Philippines: 10 companies with 15 units; South Korea: 3 companies with 5 units. Hong Kong: 20 companies with 2 units; Japan: 10 companies with 12 units; Singapore: 3 is now a total of 47 companies sia: 7 companies with 8 units. There is now a total of 47 companies operating 57 units.

The total foreign capital to be invested is $393,700,000. Of the total, $125 million will be invested in 1969-73.

B. New Minister Of Interior: Maj-Gen. Amir Machmud of the Fifth Military Area (Greater Djakarta) was named in the last week of January as Minister of the Interior to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Lt.-Gen. Basuki Rachmat in mid-January (see page 8799).

A staunch supporter of the 1945 Constitution and the President, Maj-Gen. Machmud was described by Djakarta reports as a distinctive representative of the New Order and the Army.

It was Maj-Gen. Machmud together with two other Major-Generals (Basuki Rachmat and Jusuf, now Minister of Industry) who "convinced" ex-President Sukarno by musjawarah (deliberations) and "soft power" to transfer at least a considerable part of his power to Gen. Suharto, thus paving the way to the March 11, 1966 order for a constitutional solution to the problems arising from the September 30, 1965 coup.

C. Curbs On Indians Lifted: In a decision made public on January 29, President Suharto lifted restrictions imposed by the former President, Gen. Sukarno, on 25,000 Indian citizens living in Indonesia.

President Suharto waived the regulations calling for the freezing of transactions involving companies and fixed assets owned by Indians.

The curbs had been imposed by the former regime as a gesture of sympathy with Pakistan during the Indo-Pakistan conflict.

D. Alleged Massacre Of Communists In Kuwu: The Deputy Chairman of the Human Rights Institution, Mr. H. J. C. Princen charged on February 26 that troops had massacred more than 800 alleged communists in Kuwu district (in Central Java), in December, 1968.

Mr. Princen said in an interview published by the student newspaper, Karri, that the troops had killed their victims by hitting them with iron bars.

He said that on a tour of West Java, he learned that one man had screamed out: "I am not dead yet," while soldiers beat him.

Mr. Princen said that the massacre had followed a two months' round-up of alleged Communists who were put into detention camps at Purwodadi (40 miles from Semarang), Gundi (15 miles from Purwodadi) and Kuwu town (60 miles from Semarang). He named Capt. Tedjo Sarwono as leader of the troops who made the arrests.

E. Australian Aid: According to a Canberra report put out by the Antara news agency, Australian aid to Indonesia in 1968-69 will total $12,700,000—more than double the amount of aid in 1967-68. Of this, $10,700,000 will be under the Bonus Exports Scheme and $2,000,000 under the Colombo Plan.

During 1967-68, Australian aid to Indonesia amounted to almost $6,000,000, bringing the total at June 30, 1968 to $21,800,000.

This assistance was part of an expanding Australian international aid programme which in 1968-69 will total $155,000,000—an increase on the preceding year of 11 per cent—and will represent a contribution for the year of nearly $13 for each Australian.

Excluding Papua and New Guinea, Australia will spend on its aid programme which in 1968-69 will than $56,000,000—a rise of 16 per cent on 1967-68. Of this total, about $41,000,000 will be spent through bilateral aid programmes directed predominantly to Asian countries.

G. Earthquake: The news agency Antara reported on February 26 that an earthquake accompanied by huge waves had destroyed the town of Madjene in the Celebes.

A telegram from the Military Commander of the area sent to Macassar, the capital of the south Celebes, said that only 20 people out of an estimated population of 20,000 had been killed.

Madjene is situated in an exposed corner on the western side of the islands. People living near the coast at Macassar, 250 miles to the south, said that they had heard a rumbling noise from the sea, followed by big waves and earth tremors.

Macassar itself was not damaged, but smaller towns and villages along the western coast were thought to have been damaged.

Relief teams of Red Cross workers rushed to the area with medicine, food and clothing.

IRAN

A. Oil Output: Figures released by the Iranian Oil Operating Companies (IOOC) show that actual crude production in 1968 fell far short of the Government's demand.

Production for 1968, as announced by the IOOC, averaged 2,704,000 barrels a day against 2,467,000 barrels achieved in 1967. This meant a production increase of 9.6 per cent.

Informed sources said that IOOC had decided after talks with Iranian officials to directly link oil revenues with the Fourth Plan by basing payments to the Government according to the Iranian year and not the Western calendar.

IOOC had reportedly calculated payments to the Government for the current (Iranian) year ending March 21, 1969 as $865 million—$153 million more than the previous year. This increase in revenue was to come through four basic means—through an increase in production and export of light crude and heavier-gravity oil, an increase in production and export of Abadan Refinery products, and elimination of a one per cent royalty discount that Iran had been granting the oil companies.

Production figures for 1968, however, showed that actual production had achieved a 9.6 per cent growth rate and exports of crude had increased by 9.5 per cent. This meant that IOOC hoped to bridge the gap by an increase in the production and export of Abadan Refinery products and through the elimination of the one per cent royalty discount. But it still seemed difficult how IOOC would achieve the $865 million mark through these two means, when actual production figures showed an increase of only 9.6 per cent.

Revenue For Fourth Plan Assured: Tehran reports, quoting highly placed sources, said on January 26 that IOOC had guaranteed Iran the revenue she would need for her Fourth Plan.

The sources said that the Treasury would receive around $850 million in oil revenues from the operating companies for the current Iranian year ending March 21, 1969 despite an increase in crude production of only 9.6 per cent in 1968 over the 1967 figure. (Iran had demanded that production be increased by 16.8 per cent annually during the five years of the Fourth Plan, which began on March 21, 1968).

The sources confirmed that the revenues would meet Iran's demands through four basic measures agreed upon in 1968 following prolonged negotiations between the Government and the operating companies.

The sources added that agreement had been reached in principle that oil revenues for the Iranian year 1348 (beginnin on March 21, 1969) should be around $1,000 million—a 17.7 per cent increase over the 1960 figure.

B. Opium Smugglers Released: The Minister of Justice, Mr. Manuchehr Partou, said on February 17 that about 3,000 opium smugglers would be released from prison.

The fate of an equal number of people, who were in gaol for similar offences, was yet to be decided.

Mr. Partou told newsmen that under an Amnesty Bill now being discussed by Parliament, those people who continued to smuggle opium, heroin or morphine into the country or tried to make them would face trial by military courts and the death sentence if found guilty. Any one found with more than five kg of opium or 25 gms of heroin would also be liable to capital punishment.

The Amnesty Bill was a sequel to a Government decision in January to lift the 13-year-old ban on poppy cultivation on the ground that Iran's neighbours, Turkey and Afghanistan, had failed to ban poppy cultivation and thus had become a source of supply of opium to Iran.

This decision had been criticized by United Nations and a number of countries.

He said that pardons generally would be given to people who had been agents or victims of big men in the smuggling underworld. Those affected by the new Bill would risk "the highest possible sentence" if they were found guilty of smuggling, peddling, or possessing narcotics after release.

IRAQ

A. More Executions Of Spies: The Government executed on February 20 seven more men accused of spying for Israel and strung up their bodies for public display in Baghdad.

It was the second time in less than a month that bodies of convicted spies were left to hang in the capital's Liberation Square.

There were world-wide protests when 14 men—nine of them Iraqi Jews—were executed and displayed in this way in Baghdad and Basra on January 27.

Baghdad Radio announced that three soldiers and four civilians—none apparently Jewish—had been executed after being found guilty of supplying Israel with military information on Russian-made tanks in the Baghdad Rashid Camp and about the Air Force.

The names of the dead men given by the Radio indicated that they were Arabs and that no Jews were executed on this occasion.

It said that the four soldiers were shot by a firing squad at Salman park, south of Baghdad, and the civilians were hanged in Baghdad central prison.

A fifth soldier, Qassim Kate' al-Lami, was reprieved by President Ahmed Hassan Bakr and his death sentence commuted to life imprisonment "as he helped the authorities to uncover the espionage ring."

There was no mention of jubilation or of crowds massing in the Square to see the bodies as was the case on January 27.

JAPAN

A. Mr. E. Sato Rules Out Regional Military Alliances: The Prime Minister, Mr. Eisako Sato said in the Diet on February 6 that Japan could not become a party to any military alliance under its present war-renouncing Constitution.

He also told the House of Representatives' Budget Committee that Japan would refuse to join a Pacific and Asian Troop Organization (PATO) which, according to reports, was being planned by South Korea, (see page 8828) even if it should ask Japan to join it.

Supplementing Mr. Sato's reply, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Kiichi Aiichi said: "I always keep in touch with the Korean Government but it has not made such a proposal to Japan."

He dismissed a charge by a Socialist interpellator, Mr. Kanji Kawasapi, that South Korea, the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia and Taiwan, all members of the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC) wanted to turn the consultative council into a military alliance.

B. Relations With China: On February 3, Mr. Sato regretted that Japan was only maintaining private trade relations with China, a neighbouring country with which Japan had a long history of contacts.

At the present moment, he said, he was endeavouring to settle the problem concerning 13 Japanese nationals who had been detained in that country for more than one year on espionage charges. The only way possible to improve relations with China would be to restore China's confidence in Japan step by step.

He said Japan and USA had a clearly different attitude towards China in that Japan dealt with China under the policy of separating politics from economics and had concluded an International Treaty with Formosa, while USA only recognized the Chiang Kai-shek Government.

C. Air Services With China: On February 13, the Foreign Ministry, quoting a statement by Mr. Kiichi Aiichi to his officials, said that direct flights between Japan and China might become possible for the first time since the communists took over on the mainland.

So far there had been no approach from China, according to the Ministry, but there would be "no objection" in principle by Japan to direct flights between the Capitals of the two countries. For example, an arrangement might be made, on an unofficial basis so far as Japan was concerned, to fly a Chinese ballet company from Peking to Tokyo.

This new twist in Japanese policy towards China came on the heels of a Soviet-Japanese aviation arrangement, embodied in a memorandum signed in Tokyo the same day (February 13) under which Japan Air Lines (JAL) will be allowed to fly its own DC-8s, manned by JAL pilots and staff, across Siberia to Moscow.

D. Indo-Japan Consultative Committee Meeting: The Indo-Japan Consultative Committee held its fourth meeting in Tokyo from February 3 to 5.

The Japanese delegation to the talks was led by the Deputy Foreign Vice-Minister, Mr. Shinichi Kondo, and the Indian team was headed by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. T. N. Kaul.

The two sides exchanged views notably on bilateral relations between the two countries, particularly economic co-operation and trade expansion.

A joint communique issued on February 5 said the two delegations were in basic agreement that exchanges between India and Japan should take place at every level and sector.

The communique said that among subjects discussed at the meeting was the current situation in Asia.

E. Re-scheduling Of Credit: An Agreement was signed in Tokyo on February 5 between India and the Japanese Export-Import Bank that gave India debt relief for an amount of $3.25 million (about Rs. 2 crores).

With this, Japan completed debt re-scheduling of the previously agreed amount of $17 million for the current fiscal year.

On February 14, India signed a new Agreement with the Japanese Government and the Export-Import Bank that immediately made available to India a fresh commodity loan amounting to $28.17 million (Rs. 21.12 crores).

With this loan, Japan completed its commitment of $45 million (Rs. 33.75 crores) yen credit to India under the Aid-India Consortium decision of May, 1968.

The latest 5¼ per cent loan will bear interest at quarter per cent less than the previous rate.

The credit is to be used entirely in Japan mainly to finance purchase of chemical fertilizers and raw materials and components needed for Indo-Japanese joint ventures in India.

F. Manganese Contract: On February 15, India signed a contract valued at $3.17 million to supply 300,000 tons of ferruginous manganese to a group of nine Japanese steel mills.

G. Plane Crash: An Air Self-Defence Force F104J jet fighter crashed in a densely populated section of Kanazawa on February 8, killing four residents and destroying 14 houses in a subsequent fire.

Fifteen other houses were damaged.

H. JSP Convention: The 32nd extraordinary Convention of the Japan Socialist Party (JSP) was held in Tokyo in the fourth week of January. It ended on January 25 with a declaration calling for an all-out struggle against the Japan-US Security Treaty.

The declaration also urged Socialists to do their utmost to modernize their party.

The Convention had been called to plan measures designed to restore unity in the Party and lay a solid foundation for the Party which had suffered a major election defeat in July, 1968.

The outcome of the Convention, however, indicated that the main Opposition party was still divided over key issues, particularly foreign policy matters.

The Convention adopted 19 resolutions, including those calling for the removal of B-52 bombers from Okinawa and opposing the proposed fare increase for the Japanese National Railways (JNR) and 2500-man increase for the riot police.

One resolution concerned the proposal that JSP should decide before June, 1969 whether it would oppose the scheduled holding of the World Exposition in Osaka in 1970.

I. Komeito Convention: A two-day convention of Komeito held in Tokyo in the fourth week of January approved a plan to conduct a "conditional campaign" against the Japan-US Security Treaty.

The plan called for removal of US bases in Japan as a pre-requisite to the gradual phase-out of the Japan-US Security Treaty and normalization of diplomatic relations with China.

It also envisaged the establishment of a United Nations Headquarters in Asia.

It approved six proposals including the action policy for 1969, which called on the party to prepare for a General Election this year.

Mr. Yoshikatsu Takeiri, Chairman, was re-elected to the post. He told a news conference later that his party would force the Government to call an election for the House of Representatives in April, 1969. The election should be held to seek popular mandate over major issues facing the country, including the Security Treaty and Okinawa.

The convention named 75 candidates who would run in the next General Election on the party ticket.

[Komeito's policy of "conditional" campaign against the Security Treaty is based on the belief that "automatic extension" of the Security Treaty in 1970—meaning that neither signatory needs to take any action at all to continue the pact—is inevitable. The party's basic position is that the Security Treaty should be phased out after 1970 on a gradual basis while Japan's friendly relations with the USA are maintained.]

J. Anti-US Demonstrations: Ten Left-wing students, armed with staves, forced their way into the heavily guarded US Embassy in Tokyo on February 3 and hung out anti-American slogans.

A force of about 200 riot police rounded up the students on the roof of the building, close to the main chancery office, after a scuffle in which some students brandished iron pipes.

According to an Embassy spokesman, there had been probably no incident of comparable importance involving the American Embassy in Tokyo in the past ten years, not even in the riots of 1960.

After the incident, Mr. Nobuhiko Ushiba, the Deputy Foreign Minister, at once went to the Embassy to apologize, and there was a second apology by Mr. Shigeru Hori, spokesman for the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato.

In Okinawa, students at the three universities went on strike to protest against the American use of the island for B-52 bombers.

K. Development Of Trade With Soviet Union—Resolution By Chamber Of Commerce: The Japan Chamber of Commerce and Industry adopted a resolution recently calling for development of Japan-Soviet inter-coastal trade across the Japan Sea by "various means," including relaxation of Japan's export and import restrictions.

The trans-Japan Sea inter-coastal trade between the two nations steadily developed in the past several years—last year it reached an annual total of $13,040,000 in value—$6,070,000 in exports and $6,970,000 in imports.

This kind of private-level Japan-Soviet commerce, apart from the annual Government-negotiated regular trade, has proved to be increasingly important to Japanese Prefectures situated along the Japan Sea coast.

The resolution reflected the strong wishes of local chambers of commerce and industry in these Prefectures.

Various ways suggested in the resolution for stepping up the trade included:

(1) Opening of regular shipping services between Japanese ports along the Japan Sea and the Soviet Far Eastern and Sakhalin ports, co-operation in the improvement and expansion of the port of Nakhodka, and opening of a regular airline service between Niigata and Khabarovsk;

(2) Expansion of Russian purchases of consumer goods from such Japanese Prefectures and development of joint industrial ventures by industries in these Prefectures with their Soviet counterparts;

(3) Translating into concrete form the Russian concept of this type of trade with Japan;

(4) Intensification of commercial activities of the Japanese Embassy at Moscow and the Japanese Consulate at Nakhodka and the opening of an office of the Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO) at Nakhodka or other key Soviet Far Eastern cities; and

(5) Relaxation of Japan's remaining import controls on fishery products and of the US-led Cocome (Co-ordinating Committee on Export Control against the Communist Bloc) control through diplomatic efforts.

L. Air Agreement With USSR: Japan and the Soviet Union signed on February 13 an Agreement which would open Siberia to a foreign airline.

The Pact, to take effect by the end of March, 1970, provides for independent carrier-operations via Siberia by Japan Air Lines and the Soviet Union's Aeroflot, which have been jointly operating a weekly Tokyo-Moscow service since April, 1967.

As soon as a change-over is made to independent flights, the two carriers will be able to extend their flights to three points beyond Moscow and Tokyo. Japan is considering Paris, London and one other European city, by way of Moscow. The service would begin in the Spring of next year and use DC-8 jetliners.

The present service employs TU-114 turbo-prop planes flown by Russian pilots and staffed by Japanese stewardesses. When the arrangement was set up two years ago, the Russians had said that for military reasons they could not permit Japanese planes to fly across Siberia.

The Siberian route offers the quickest means of travel from Japan to Europe. It takes 18½ hours to fly from Tokyo to Paris via the North Pole route, while the time required via the Siberian route is 15 hours and 10 minutes, even if the slow TU-114 turbo-prop is used.

Because of the time-saving, the current joint flights are quite popular in Japan. The passenger average of these flights last year was 64.4 per cent of capacity as compared with 55 per cent on the trans-Pacific route.

If Japan Air Lines uses DC-8s on the Tokyo-Moscow-Paris route, the time can be reduced to 13½ hours, and it is considered certain that this will become the airline's main route to Europe.

Japan and the Soviet Union also agreed to add a flight to the present once-a-week joint service. This would be done by chartering IL-62 jetliners.

A statement by the commando organization said the Society will also shoulder its responsibilities in the local and international spheres towards Palestinian Arab detainees and prisoners in the occupied lands.

KOREA (South)

A. Alleged Spies Released: The Prosecutor's Office in Seoul announced on February 25 the release of composer Yun I-Sang who had been kidnapped from West Germany in 1967 by South Korean agents and later jailed for spying.

[Seventeen South Koreans living in West Germany were taken home by South Korean special agents without Bonn's knowledge and were put on trial in Seoul. Two were sentenced to death. West Germany demanded the return of all the Koreans].

The announcement said that Mr. Yun (51) who was convicted in December, 1968 of spying for North Korea and sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment, was released on February 24 on health grounds.

A miner, Kim Sung Chil (34), who was also taken from West Germany and sentenced to 3½ years, was released at the same time as Mr. Yun, also because of poor health.

On March 9, two more Koreans, both convicted of espionage activities, were released with their prison terms suspended for health reasons. They were Lee Ung Ro (65), a painter from Paris, and Chung Kil (29), a former University student in West Germany.

Their release brought to six the number of prisoners in the case, all former residents of West Germany and France, who had been freed since a West German envoy, Mr. Paul Frank, visited Seoul in January to win their release.

Double Agent Arrested:

Meanwhile, according to the South Korean Central Intelligence Agency, a North Korean journalist who fled south in 1967 was really an agent disguised as a defector (see page 7691).

It disclosed on February 13 that Mr. Soo-keun Lee, former Vice-President of the North Korean central news agency, had been arrested while on his way to Cambodia in January with a forged passport.

Mr. Lee had been regarded as an important defector when he sought asylum at the armistice village of Panmunjom in March, 1967. He had been given a reward of 1 million hwan (then worth £1,333) and a house.

A. Amnesty To PPS Prisoners: Parliament recently approved legislation under which 90 leaders and followers of the Syrian People's Party (PPS), sentenced in Beirut to long terms in prison following the abortive putsch of December 31, 1961, will be released.

The first Amnesty Bill passed in December, 1968 was not signed by the President because that Bill would have also pardoned officers participating in the putsch and a number of criminals. Parliament then passed a new version.

Apart from the imprisoned party men, the amnesty covered a number of PPS followers sentenced in absentia and some people sentenced for their part in riots that broke out during the Beirut demonstrations one day after the cease-fire in the June, 1967 Arab-Israel war.

PPS, advocating a greater Syrian State, is outlawed in Lebanon.

MALAYSIA

A. Mid-term Review Of First Plan: An unexpected increase in exports was a major factor in the rise of Malaysia's gross national product at the rate of 6.7 per cent annually during the past three years, according to the mid-term review of the First Plan (1966-70) issued on February 1.

The review said that the volume of exports grew by 7.6 per cent a year. This was more than five times the rate projected in the Plan for 1966-68. The higher export volume reflected the Plan's under-estimation of the growth potential of several commodities, notably palm oil, timber and tin.

Production for the domestic market expanded by 5.7 per cent a year. "As a result, the volume of output or GNP at constant prices rose by 6.7 per cent a year between 1965 and 1968, 2.2 percentage points higher than the rate envisaged in the Plan and 0.5 point higher than the rate achieved during 1961-65."

Economic progress during the three years under review was encouraging despite the sharp decline in rubber and oil palm prices.

Adjusting for price changes, the total real income accruing to Malaysians grew at an average annual rate of 4.1 per cent. After providing for population growth of about 3 per cent annually, real income per capita rose by over one per cent, as compared with 0.5 per cent projected in the Plan.

The economic integration of the country was also substantially advanced in the planning, tariff and tax fields.

Gross investment expanded by 3.1 per cent annually between 1965 and 1968 compared with the Plan target of 4.2 per cent.

Gross national savings expanded by 0.8 per cent a year, though the trend of savings was uneven during the period reviewed. After a decline between 1966 and 1967, savings rose substantially last year.

A far less volume of foreign resources, however, was attracted than envisaged in the Plan, which projected that some Rs. 82.96 crores net would be drawn to Malaysia last year.

The review said that an accelerated economic growth would certainly necessitate more rapid growth of imports of capital. Public development expenditure during the period was estimated at Rs. 612.2 crores—55 per cent of the five-year Plan target.

Allocation of the expenditure was concentrated on projects designed to increase productivity and investment in primary and secondary industries. Projects in support of agricultural and industrial development, therefore, accounted for one-third of public development expenditure.

Rubber would continue to be the country's main export earner for some time, but a lower earnings yield was envisaged by the Plan because of lower prices. There would also be a small short-fall in output growth because the re-planting of rubber estates with oil palm had been more rapid than expected.

A decline in tin production was anticipated, and the decline would be higher than originally foreseen.

The review stated: "In the longer term, there is evidence that off-shore prospecting which is now being initiated will lead to a new boost in production."

A sustained demand at higher prices for tropical timber could be anticipated because of a rising world per capita income. In view of the industry's demonstrated capacity to respond vigorously to this demand, timber production was expected to show "strength for both round and sawn timber."

The main contribution to national output would come from production for domestic use. Between 1961 and 1967, the volume of production for the domestic market expanded by 8.2 per cent annually. The annual increase in the volume of national output was expected to average 5.5 per cent in 1969.

It said: "As the country looks to the immediate future, there is every reason to believe that existing capacity and the inherent natural and human resources of the economy be more fully exploited."

Central to the country are development plans was the exploitation of millions of acres of new land. Of 16,000,000 acres of cultivable land, only about seven million acres were now being used. Considerable inroads would be made into the remaining 9,000,000 acres during the next two decades. The Federal and State Governments would work closely to ensure the speedy alienation of land to private enterprise, both local and foreign.

Other important elements of long-term development strategy which will be emphasized are: intensification of research on primary commodities; exploitation of Malaysia's substantial potentials for forestry and timber-based industries; expansion of foreign exchange earnings from export commodities and services such as tourism; improved means of channelling savings into productive investment.

B. British Offer To Supply Fighter Aircraft: Britain made a two-step proposal on February 13 to help Malaysia strengthen her Air Force by 1971.

The proposal was a response to an offer by the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman to buy British jump-jet Harrier fighters provided the Royal Air Force remained in Labuan until 1971.

The British offer was first to supply six Hunter ground-attack fighters and two Hunter trainers; and second to supply 12 Harriers and two Harrier trainers—all to be fully operational by 1971.

These proposals were submitted by General Sir Michael Carver, the Commander-in-Chief, Far East, when he met the Tengku in Kuala Lumpur.

At a news conference later, the General said that the Malaysian Government was considering the proposals, which would "go a long way" to improve the Malaysian Air Force by 1971.

He emphasized that it would not be in Malaysia's interest to plunge hurriedly into buying sophisticated aircraft such as the French Mirage. "The combination of the Hunter and the Harrier is a cheaper solution and will meet Malaysia's requirements to have her own Air Force capability by 1971."

On stationing the Royal Air Force in Labuan until 1971, he said that he did not "see any military threat which would justify our aircraft returning to Labuan. There has been no strike aircraft at Labuan since the end of confrontation. In any case, we can at very short notice send aircraft from Singapore to Labuan or re-inforce Singapore and Labuan from London—as we have shown in exercise."

A. Oil Exploration Agreement With American Firm: Representatives of the Government and the American International Oil Company finalized in Islamabad on February 6 an Agreement for oil exploration and prospecting in Pakistan by the company.

American International Oil will begin its operations during the current year.

[Pakistan had during the 'fifties entered into a number of oil exploration agreements with different countries. However, the interest of Western oil companies slackened as they found no oil and there had not been much exploration activity by them since 1960. B. Economic Co-operation With Indonesia: A meeting of the Ministerial Council of the Indonesia-Pakistan Economic and Cultural Co-operation Organization was held in Islamabad on February 25 and 26.

At the meeting, representatives of both countries pledged themselves to further strengthen "by all practical and feasible means their special relationship brought about through the Organization."

A communique issued at the end of the meeting (which was attended by the Foreign Ministers of the two countries) said they had discussed Kashmir, Viet-Nam and the West Asia crisis.

According to the communique, the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Arshad Husain, explained Pakistan's stand on disputes with India and explained the lack of progress in settlement of any issue. His Indonesian counterpart, Mr. Adam Malik, hoped that all disputes between India and Pakistan would be settled peacefully and on a just and honourable basis.

Regarding Viet-Nam, the two Ministers agreed that peace must be based on the will of the people themselves without outside interference.

They re-affirmed their support for a solution of the West Asia crisis on the basis of the November 22, 1967 resolution of the UN Security Council.

Endorsing the recommendations of the Economic Council, the Ministerial Council asked the two Governments to explore all possibilities of increasing trade between Indonesia and Pakistan on the basis of lists of commodities exchanged during the meeting.

The next meeting of the Council will be held in the first week of February, 1970. It will be preceded by meetings at committee levels in the last week of January.

D. Loan Agreement With USSR: An Agreement providing for a loan of 19,000,000 roubles for economic and technical assistance to Pakistan in the search and prospecting for oil and gas was signed in Islamabad recently between the Governments of USSR and Pakistan.

A. Development Of Dubai: Plans for developing the Arab Gulf Sheikhdom of Dubai into a major sea and air link between East and West were announced in London on January 22.

A year ago the Ruler, Sheikh Rashid bin Said al-Maktoum, had signed a contract for Costain civil engineering of London to construct four berths at Port Rashid at a cost of $9,400,000. Now, his chief aide, Mahdi al-Tajir, who is also Director of Petroleum Affairs, signed another preliminary agreement, this time worth £15,600,000, for an additional 11 deep water berths at the port. It also went to Costain.

When Port Rashid is completed in 1973, it would be made a free port, with all imports and exports passing through Dubai free of taxes and import charges would be cut even before then.

From June, when oil is expected to flow from the recently discovered off-shore oilfield, it was the Ruler's intention to have the duty on all imports. Based on imports last year, the Ruler would be giving up £33 million. Mr. Tajir estimated that this year Dubai would import goods worth £100 million.

Under construction at Dubai is a £4,100,000 international airport, the first to be built in the Middle East to take Jumbo-jets.

SYRIA

A. Gen. H. Assad's Coup: General Hafez El Assad, Defence Minister and Air Force Commander-in-Chief, staged a successful coup d'etat on March 1, and had the Head of State and Government, Mr. Nureddin Atassi, placed under house arrest.

General Assad, supported by his deputy, General Moustafa Tiass, First Vice-Minister of Defence and Chief of the General Staff, was reported to be in full control.

An attempt at resistance led by the Interior Minister, Mr. Mohamed Rabah Tawil, and the Foreign Affairs Minister, Mr. Mohamed Eid Achavi in the north of the country failed. The two men were disarmed by Army units obeying the Defence Minister as they were leading a march of peasants and workers towards Alep, capital of Northern Syria.

Altogether ten of the Ba'ath Party's Syrian regional leaders—out of a total 16—were under arrest. But the arrests were reported to have begun as early as February 23.

Syrian fighter planes were flying regul patrols over the capital for the first time since an Israeli attack nearby on February 24. Otherwise, Damascus was quiet. So were all provincial towns.

General Assad presented a six-point ultimatum against Soviet interference in Syria's affairs. His other demands included preparation for war with Israel.

Suicide By Col. A. K. Jundi:

It was reported on March 2 that the Intelligence Chief, Col. Abdel Karim Jundi, had committed suicide.

Col. Jundi, a member of the Ba'ath Party's Regional Directorate—the real power behind the Government—had been missing for two days.

The suicide came, it was said, as General Assad and General Mustapha Tiass tried to persuade the Head of State, Dr. Nureddin Atassi, to put the stamp of legality on their take-over. President Atassi refused to accept modifications to the Government which General Tiass proposed and the argument became heated. Col. Jundi then drew his revolver and shot himself. He was taken to hospital but died shortly afterwards.

President Atassi, the former Prime Minister, Mr. Youssef Zeayen, and the Ba'athist Assistant Secretary, General Salah Jadid, all attended the funeral of Col. Jundi, but Gen. Assad did not.

B. Improvement In Economy: A Damascus despatch published in The Times (London) on February 24 said that within less than two years of the 1967 war with Israel, Syria had given birth to a promising and profitable oil industry (with known reserves of 1,200 million tons).

It had also seen the beginning of work on the Euphrates Dam project, which is equal in size and potential to Egypt's Aswan High Dam. The foundations for a firm industrial base had thus been laid.

Both in terms of strength and capability, the Syrians had more than made good their military losses in the June, 1967 war. More than 65 per cent of the Budget was devoted to military purposes. The declared Syrian policy of a "war of liberation" against Israel was nowhere near getting off the ground; but a popular army had been established, officially estimated at 100,000 strong, and military training introduced into the secondary school curriculum. Syria's unbending attitude against "peaceful solutions" to the West Asian crisis certainly had the approval of the Syrian people while Israel remained in occupation of their land.

The oil industry, developed with Soviet co-operation only six months ago, had already earned more than £4 million from the two main producing wells at Suwaidiyah and Kurachuk in north-west Syria.

At first the Syrians marketed the oil on a 50-50 barter cash basis, but future deals will be mainly on a straight cash basis in convertible currency.

The industry was expected to add more than £140 million to the national income in the five years up to 1973. There had been a further boost for morale in the fact that Syria was the first Arab country to market directly the oil she produced.

Apart from this impetus, the Euphrates Dam project, when it is completed in 1975, would double the existing irrigated land to three million acres and produce almost five times more electricity than was available in the country at the moment.

The present Ba'athist regime relies much on Soviet assistance, and her ports are open to ships of the Soviet fleet in the Mediterranean. However, an indication that Syria may have wider horizons was given when she lifted the restrictions on West Germans—who with British and Americans had been banned since the June war.

A. Student Protests Against Visit Of US Sixth Fleet: The arrival on February 10 of the American Sixth Fleet on a five-day visit set off a series of student protests.

The visiting vessels included the Students demonstrated near the American Logistics Services Headquarters in Ankara on February 13, and some of them threw stones, breaking a window in the offices of the Commanding General.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. American Assessment Of Chinese Nuclear Missile Capability: The American Defence Secretary, Mr. Melvin Laird said on February 15 that he was deeply concerned that China would present a nuclear missile threat to the United States in the early 1970s.

But in a reference to the growing political opposition to construction of the controversial sentinel anti-ballistic missile (ABM) sites, he said the Nixon Administration was reviewing the possibility of locating the defensive missiles further away from American cities.

The US Administration was conducting a review of the Sentinel programme and had put a temporary halt on construction of sites. This came after Congressional opponents renewed their attacks following increased complaints from residents of areas where the defensive missiles will be placed.

Mr. Laird emphasized in a television interview that he felt the Chinese missile threat was real. He said the Peking Government was expected to test-fire its first intercontinental ballistic missile within 18 months. "I am more concerned about that defence than I am about any other defence." He added that China "might develop some 18 to 20 of these missiles and I believe that we do not want to become hostages of the Chinese at any time in the future."

However, some American sources estimate that half of the 20 nuclear missiles which China expects to have in a few years' time would be incapable of hitting their targets.

According to them, China might be able to build these rockets by 1972 at the earliest. But if for some reason China's progress was less rapid than expected, then Peking would probably not have even a modest arsenal of ballistic weapons before 1975.

China's seven nuclear tests to date (including the last, a three megaton H-bomb which was set off in December, 1968) had shown an advance of technical skill. But, the same sources noted, it was unlikely that China had been able to make comparable progress in the field of inter-continental vestors.

On the other hand, it was thought that the Chinese were using liquid fuel for their rockets, and had not yet reached the stage of using solid fuel.

If the estimates on the Chinese ballistic missile threat were correct, and if President Nixon orders the resumption of work on the anti-ballistic missile net-work, USA may have quite effective protection against any Chinese ICBM threat within five to six years' time.

B. Australia And New Zealand Offer Defence Support To South-East Asia: Australia and New Zealand announced on February 25 that they would maintain military forces in Malaysia and Singapore after the withdrawal of British defence there in 1971.

The commitment by the two Governments though relatively small in terms of weapons and man-power was viewed in Wellington and Canberra as far-reaching and new in the defence concepts for the region.

The Australian Prime Minister, Mr. John Gorton, told Parliament in Canberra that his Government favoured augmenting military measures with efforts to promote "a non-aggression pact or pacts" among South-East Asian countries to advance regional stability.

He declared that Australia would seek the support of "outside Powers if a situation arose in which Malaysia and Singapore needed help beyond Australia's resources."

Reports said that implicit in the declaration was the confidence that Britain would retain a military obligation to Malaysia and Singapore even after the departure of British forces from its present bases east of Suez.

In Wellington, the New Zealand Prime Minister, Mr. Keith Holyoake, declared in a speech to Parliament: "It is obvious that a fundamental change in the frame-work of our operations in South-East Asia is taking place. The decision has great significance for New Zealand's future policy and role in the area."

C. Czech-Soviet Supplementary Pacts: It was announced in Prague on February 22 that Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union had concluded Supplementary Agreements to 1968 October's Treaty on the "temporary stationing" of Soviet troops in the country.

One of the Agreements laid down that Czechoslovak citizens could be tried only according to CSSR law and in Czechoslovak courts for any offence.

Soviet soldiers committing an offence in conflicts with Czechoslovak citizens would be prosecuted and tried in CSSR courts.

The Supplementary Agreements also provided for full payment by the Soviet Union of all expenditure incurred by the stationing of Soviet troops. Czechoslovakia would supply only such goods and materials for the personal consumption of soldiers so that no shortages occurred in the market. The amount sanctioned for such purchases amounted to 120 million Cezch crowns per year, which was 0.8 per cent of the country's entire annual retail trade turnover.

BRUNEI

A. More Oil Royalty: The Financial Officer, Dato John Lee, told the Budget session of the Legislative Council recently that the Government had negotiated new Tax and Royalty Agreements with Brunei Shell Petroleum (BSP) which would raise the State's 1969 revenues to B$220.

As a result, he said, the State would have a surplus of B$90 million in the recurring Budget.

During the negotiations, BSP agreed in principle to the application of the new Agreement with effect from January 1, 1964. Honouring this Agreement the company paid to the Government in 1968 B$34 in back taxes—a major factor in the State's overall Budget surplus of about B$27 million for 1968.

Under the new arrangements, instead of royalty payments being credited against the State's share under the 50-50 profit-sharing agreement, as previously, they would now be charged in the company's accounts and paid before ascertainment of the profit to be shared.

Further, for tax purposes, the oil produced is to be valued no longer on the realized price, but on the posted prices of comprehensive oil in the Persian Gulf. Safeguards are incorporated against unduly heavy taxation which may arise from changes in Persian Gulf prices, in the quality of Brunei crude oil, or in freight charges.

At present, BSP is the only oil producing company in the Sultanate. But the arrangements would apply to all companies which might, at any time, produce oil in Brunei.

BURMA

A. Shipping Agencies Nationalized: The Government took over the business of 24 shipping agencies, all limited companies, on February 7.

The nationalization of the shipping agencies, mostly handling cargoes, followed the taking over of cinema houses and industrial establishments.

The agencies were all operating between Rangoon, Akyab, Bassein and Moulmein, and included among others the Finlay and Fleming Company, Mackinnon Mackenzie and Company and the United Liner Agency of Burma.

Another measure relating to the country's economy was announced on March 12 when the Government banned the exploration or mining for precious stones and possession or transfer of unpolished stones.

The Government had also taken steps to tighten up industrial discipline. Mine-workers were recently told that some mines would have to be closed down unless their production record was improved.

Decline In Economic Growth:

Meanwhile, in an interview, the Chief Economic Adviser to the Government, U Ba Nyein, admitted that things had not been going too well, that agricultural and industrial production, per capita income and foreign trade had declined drastically Burma was passing through the transition period from capitalistic economy controlled by foreigners to a socialist State.

He spoke of the Government's Four-Year Plan (details of which have not been published) now in its second year. The Plan called for immediate concentration on agriculture, with top priority for increased rice cultivation, coupled with expansion of irrigation, mechanization and the use of fertilizers. In industry, the Plan emphasized consumer goods, chemicals, fertilizers, oil refineries and hydro-electric power.

U Nyein said that after agriculture, the Plan placed top priority on producing consumer goods. He said: "We plan to start this stage of the Plan around 1970 and hope it will be completed by 1975."

The Government was investing $120 million a year. But it was faced with an external debt of $180 million and a deficit in the current fiscal year (October, 1968 to September, 1969) of $28.8 million. The answer to this financial dilemma could be foreign investment. But, according to U Nyein, "private foreign investment is out of the question. Only the Government can borrow capital for development."

CEYLON

A. Aid Group Meeting: A meeting of the representatives of countries and institutions interested in assisting Ceylon was held in Paris on March 11 under the auspices of the World Bank.

The Ceylonese delegation to the meeting was led by the Permanent Secretary to the Ministry of Planning and Economic Affairs, Mr. Gamani Corea.

The Aid Group comprises Australia, Canada, France, West Germany, Japan, Britain and USA. Representatives of the International Monetary Fund and the Asian Development Bank, as also observers from Denmark, Italy and India, attended the meeting.

The meeting re-affirmed the Group's endorsement of Ceylon's long-term development strategy of encouraging growth in the two most promising sectors of the economy—agriculture and manufacturing—and welcomed the major policy decisions taken toward this end in 1968.

A World Bank Press release said that the meeting "noted with satisfaction that Ceylon's development efforts, combined with financial assistance from abroad, have begun to bear fruit in accelerating economic growth which, in 1968, had reached the highest level in the post-War period. The Group voiced its concern over the decline of export earnings for the third consecutive year and agreed that more attention needed to be given to the problems of Ceylon's export industries, particularly tea, which accounts for two-thirds of these earnings."

It said: "Fresh commitments by the Group in 1968 amounted to $68 million and disbursements to $50 million. These were the highest annual levels reached since the Group came into existence in 1965. On the basis of indications given by the member-countries of their intentions during the rest of this year, disbursements in 1969 (including aid from earlier commitments) are expected to be substantially larger than in 1968.

"Several members, including the Asian Development Bank, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association, also expect to be able to make substantial commitments for projects in several fields, including irrigation, power and industry. Several delegations expressed the view that the terms on which assistance is provided should pay due regard to the potential debt-servicing problems facing Ceylon.

"The Group noted the need for substantial financial assistance from abroad in future and agreed provisionally to meet again early in 1970."

CHINA

A. Border Clash With Soviet Union:

Tass reported on March 2 that an armed Chinese unit crossed the Soviet border earlier in the day and fired at Russian Guards. It said there were casualties, but did not give details.

The news agency said that the incident occurred in the area of Nizhnemikhallovka border post on the Ussuri River. This is north of Vladivostok in the Soviet Far East.

According to Tass, the Soviet Union sent a Note of strong protest to Peking against the "provocative actions of the Chinese authorities on the Soviet-Chinese border."

The Soviet protest said that "any provocative actions by Chinese authorities on the Soviet-Chinese border will be rebuffed and resolutely cut short by USSR."

This was the first official Soviet report of a border incident with China that had led to bloodshed. It evidently marked a sudden worsening in the already strained relations between the two great Communist Powers.

It gave no explanation for the alleged violation of the border by the Chinese.

[Reports have often reached Moscow in the past of trouble along the 4,150-mile Soviet-Chinese border. Sometimes firing was said to have been involved. But Moscow had never before confirmed that any incidents of this kind took place. Peking claims much Soviet territory in the border region. The Ussuri River serves as a boundary between Manchuria and the Soviet Far East.]

The incident reportedly took place about 110 miles south of Khabarovsk, or half-way between that city and the Soviet naval port of Vladivostok on the Sea of Japan.

The Tass despatch read: "At 4:10 Moscow Time on March 2, the Chinese authorities staged an armed provocation in the area of the Nizhnemikhailovka border post (Damansky Island)) on the Ussuri River.

"An armed Chinese unit crossed the Soviet frontier and proceeded towards Damansky Island.

"The Chinese side suddenly opened fire at Soviet Border Guards guarding the area. There are killed and wounded. The violators of the frontier were chased away from Soviet territory by the resolute actions of Soviet Border Guards."

Following reports of the border clash, tens of thousands of demonstrators held the Russian Embassy compound in Peking in a virtual state of siege in protest against the "violation of China's territory."

The demonstrators shouted against "American imperialism", as well as "Soviet revisionism".

Demonstrators were hostile, without violence, to foreigners attempting to drive through towards the Embassy. They shook their fists at cars, shouting "hang Kosygin" and "fry Brezhnev."

The demonstrations continued for five days.

A Soviet Embassy Counsellor rejected a protest Note on the border clash. The Counsellor, Mr. F. I. Potapenko, was called to the Chinese Foreign Ministry by the Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Chiao Kuan Hua, who tried to give him the protest Note.

An Embassy spokesman said that Mr. Potapenko rejected the Note "because it does not coincide with the facts and because it was written in an unacceptable form."

Chinese Version:

A Chinese Foreign Ministry statement, broadcast by Peking Radio on March 3, said that Soviet Border Guards had crossed into Chinese territory, killing and wounding several soldiers in an incident.

It warned: "Further intrusion of Soviet troops will be firmly rebuffed by the Chinese Army".

The Radio said that China had strongly protested to the Soviet Union about the incident and added that it had rejected a protest Note from Moscow.

The Chinese statement said that a large number of Soviet Border Guards, in armed cars and trucks, openly intruded into Chentapac area and carried out "frantic provocation" against the Chinese patrolling Border Guards. They opened fire first, killing and wounding a number of Chinese soldiers, but did not give figures. The Chinese soldiers returned the fire in self-defence only after warnings to the Soviet troops were ignored. "The grave bloodshed was entirely created by the Soviet authorities. It is another new atrocious crime committed by the Soviet authorities. The Chinese Government demands the Soviet Government to punish the culprits responsible for the shooting incident and stop immediately encroachment on Chinese territory together with its armed provocations."

It said that China reserved its right to claim all losses.

The Chinese Press, in an editorial on March 4, warned that China would "wipe out all Russian troops that might again stage armed provocations within its territory."

The Peking People's Daily and the Liberation Army daily, quoted by Peking Radio declared: "The days when China could be bullied are forever gone."

It warned the Soviet Government: "You are blind and day-dreaming if you think you can apply the old Tsarist tricks to the Chinese people."

It rejected the Soviet territorial claim to the island which the Soviets call Damanusy, and re-iterated that the river island was indisputably Chinese territory that brooked no violation. "If you dare repeat armed provocations, you will be severely punished. How many people you may send with whoever else you may come along, we will thoroughly, cleanly and totally destroy you".

It declared that China, however, would never be the first to strike and would only hit back when attacked.

It accused the Soviet Union of concentrating large numbers of troops along the Sino-Mongolian and Sino-Soviet borders and further charged that "Soviet troops have repeatedly encroached upon our nation's territory and air-space, created border incidents and started military intimidation against China."

Anti-Russian rallies were held throughout Chinese territory. There were reports of rallies in Canton, Nanking, Tientsin and Shanghai.

An Earlier Incident:

Meanwhile, the occurrence of a border clash of unknown proportions between Chinese and Soviet troops some time in 1968 in the same island area in Ussuri River frontier was officially, even if casually, divulged by China on March 9. When exactly the clash took place, however, was not indicated.

The disclosure was made in the course of a report by the official New China News Agency.

The admission of the 1968 clash came when the report quoted a militiaman of Hutou production brigade in Hulin country giving expression to his determination to fight against the Russians.

[An account of the developments in the border trouble after March 6 will be given in another issue of Asian Recorder.]

Background:

In 1963, territorial disputes were added to the ideological conflict between the Soviet Union and China. Since then, a certain tension has been noted in some of the frontier regions, notably along the Amur River and the Ussuri River.

China had never recognized the Amur River as the real boundary between China and USSR, as Chinese atlases show.

In February, 1966, a Red Guard newspaper in Peking mentioned "many provocations committed on the border by Soviet revisionists." A wall poster put up at the same period said that Mr. Mao Tse-tung had called on the army to be prepared for the eventuality of a border conflict.

On the Soviet side, the Komsomolskaya Pravda accused China of committing provocations on the Amur River boundary.

A few months later, the writer, Mr. Constantin Snetov, returning from a visit to the Far East, said in the newspaper Pravda that the Soviets in the border areas worked only with rifles slung on their backs and that only the cool-headedness of the Border Guards had prevented serious incidents between the two countries.

But the provocations mentioned on both sides apparently involved only civilians, and there were no reports of incidents in which soldiers, Border Guards or customs officials took part.

However, in 1967, the Ming Pao mentioned an incident in that year in which Soviet soldiers had prevented Chinese troops from going to an island which USSR considered to be Soviet territory. And in March, 1967, Peking Radio accused Soviet soldiers of manhandling the personnel of a Chinese trawler.

In the last two years, the Chinese have several times accused USSR of massing troops along their common borders. The Far Eastern sector of the Sino-Soviet frontier extends for 2,000 miles along the Amur River and its tributaries—the Argun and Ussuri—separating Eastern Siberia and the Soviet Far East from China.

Stretching from Afghanistan in the West to the Sea of Japan in the East, the entire Sino-Soviet border areas are generally divided into three main sectors: Inner Asia, Mongolia and the Far East. These borders were determined by a series of Treaties and Agreements, described by the Chinese as "unequal," dating back to the Treaty of Nerchinsk in 1689.

The Inner Asian sector contains Russian and Chinese Turkestan, now known respectively as Soviet Central Asia and the Sinkiang-Uighur Autonomous Region. It is arid, rugged country, inhabited largely by Turkish peoples who practise Islam.

In addition to the native population, 50 years of Soviet rule have brought a great many Eastern Slavs into Soviet Central Asia. These migrants have settled primarily in urban areas, and they have done much to make the region more responsive to Moscow's control.

Nominally under Chinese administration, Sinkiang has in the past often been in the Russian sphere of influence. Even after the Chinese Communists seized power in 1949, Soviet joint-stock companies continued to exploit oil and non-ferrous metals in the area. China followed the Russian example by moving large numbers of Han Chinese into Sinkiang. Chinese rule over the region has been consistently marred by outbreaks of "local nationalism," some of which reached the proportions of major uprisings.

When Sino-Soviet relations became openly hostile after 1960, internal strife in Sinkiang became a prime target for Russian intrigue. Stories began to filter out of China that Soviet agents were circulating throughout the countryside, actively encouraging Moslem tribesmen to seek a better life among their co-religionists in Soviet Central Asia.

When the border was closed in late 1962, Chinese troops had to quell the resulting bloody riots.

The passage of time has brought no discernible easing of tensions in Sinkiang, an important centre of China's nuclear research and development. China frequently reiterates charges of Soviet subversive activities, and both sides of the border have been turned into armed military camps.

At the north-eastern tip of Sinkiang, the Sino-Soviet border divides around the Mongolian People's Republic, which was founded in 1921 and existed as a virtual Soviet satellite until after the death of Stalin. China has traditionally claimed suzerainty over this area, and actually has a large Mongol population of her own in the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region.

As late as 1964, in fact, Mr. Mao Tse-tung referred to Mongolia as "Chinese soil." In addition, Chinese maps clearly indicated territorial claims along the entire length of the Sino-Mongolian frontier.

With the signing of the ten-year Sino-Mongolian Agreement on Economic and Cultural Co-operation in 1952, China launched a vigorous campaign to expand Chinese influence in Mongolia. Thousands of Chinese labourers went to Mongolia in 1955 to work on aid projects, and China emphasized the "fraternal friendship" between the peoples of Mongolia and China.

However, Mongolia's ties with USSR remained strong. Although assuming a public stance of neutrality in the Sino-Soviet dispute, Mongolia has been drawing increasingly closer to the Russian camp. China retaliated by gradually phasing out her aid programmes to Mongolia and bolstering Chinese forces in Inner Mongolia.

Following charges that China intended to "incorporate" Mongolia into China, the Soviet military presence in Mongolia has increased greatly to include tanks, artillery, combat rockets and anti-missile units.

The present demarcation between Chinese and Soviet territory was established more than 100 years ago, when the Czar took advantage of weakness in the Manchu dynasty to incorporate vast tracts of Chinese land into the Russian Empire.

Dividing Issues:

Besides the disputes over the border, the issues which have split the two countries are:

(1) Is war with the capitalist nations inevitable?

Soviet Position: War is no longer inevitable. Their strength is now so great that most communist goals can be gradually achieved without resort to war. However, wars of national liberation should be supported.

Chinese Position: Wars are inevitable so long as capitalism exists. Global war can be avoided, wars of national liberation should be firmly supported.

(2) How have nuclear weapons affected world politics?

Soviet Position: A global nuclear holocaust would benefit no one, and steps should be taken to insure that one does not break out.

Chinese Position: Although the destructiveness of nuclear weapons is awesome, fear of nuclear war should not be permitted to paralyze the communist nations and prevent them from actively promoting popular revolutions.

(3) Is world disarmament possible?

Soviet Position: Total disarmament can be achieved even while capitalism still exists. It is a desirable goal.

Chinese Position: Universal and complete disarmament can be realized only after imperialism and capitalism have been eliminated.

(4) Can nations with different social systems co-exist peacefully?

Soviet Position: In the struggle between the forces of communism and capitalism, "war is not a fatalistic inevitability."

Chinese Position: Peaceful co-existence is a short-term strategy at best. Communists should support the revolutionary struggle of oppressed nations. In the words of Mr. Mao Tse-tung, "...if the worst came to the worst and half of mankind died, the other half would remain while imperialism would be razed to the ground and the whole world would become socialist."

(5) Is economic competition an effective means of struggle against the capitalist nations?

Soviet Position: The down-fall of capitalism can be achieved through peaceful struggle, an important part of which is economic competition between capitalist and communist States.

Chinese Position: Communist victory can be achieved only through violent struggle.

(6) Is transition to "socialism" possible without violent revolution?

Soviet Position: Revolutions are possible without wars, and the transition to "socialism" through parliamentary means is becoming increasingly probable. Progressive post-colonial regimes should be supported and urged to accelerate the trend towards "socialism." Wars of national liberation should also be supported.

Chinese Position: No communist government has yet achieved power by parliamentary means. All forms of struggle, including use of parliamentary methods, should be used when appropriate; and communists should not permit any restrictions whatever to be placed on the means of strupgle available to them. Neo-colonialist regimes should be crushed.

(7) How has the system of economic production incentives, recently introduced in the Soviet Union, affected "socialist" production?

Soviet Position: The economic incentives, first propounded by Prof. Lieberman, have greatly improved industrial efficiency without disturbinp the cardinal principle of "socialist" ownership of the means of production.

Chinese Position: The introduction of economic rewards is further proof of the return of the Soviet revisionists to capitalist principles. A true communist does not need material rewards to inspire him to sacrifice his selfish interests for the good of the whole.

B. Military Strength: Estimates by Western observers place the strength of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) regular ground force at 2.7 million.

[Since 1960, China has not disclosed her defence expenditure and the military strength can only be estimated].

According to these estimates, the strength of the Air Force is about 100,000 men; the Navy and Marines total between 128,000 and 163,000; while the Public Security Forces have between 300,000 and 500,000. These are backed by a Militia of some 12 million.

An estimated 128,000,000 males of military age are subject to conscription. About 750,000 are called up each year, usually at age 18. Service is for a period of four to six years, followed by reserve duty until the age of 45.

Ground force: Combat elements consist of separate armies (called Corps in many other armies) which, in time of war, are grouped into other units. Troops have both military and production responsibilities. An estimated break-down follows: Field armies (3 divisions per army) 30-40; infantry divisions (11,000-12,000 men) 105-154; armoured divisions 2-4; air-borne divisions 1-2; cavalry divisions 2-3; plus mountain troops. Infantry makes up about 90 per cent of the total force.

Air Force: Although "old guard" Chinese apparently tended to downgrade the effectiveness of air power, the Air Force was regarded as the world's fourth largest in 1960. It declined following the Sino-Soviet split, largely because of jet-fuel shortages and lack of replacement aircraft and spare parts. Of an estimated 3,850 planes, 3,000 are thought to be various models of the MIG fighter, plus some 500 light bombers and perhaps 350 transport and commercial planes.

The British publication Jane's All the World's Aircraft reported that China can now manufacture spare-parts for earlier MIG models and probably has a MIG-21 factory at Mukden.

Navy: Although virtually all the naval force went to Taiwan with the Kuomintang in 1949, China has built up a substantial Navy. Premier Chou En-lai has declared that nuclear submarines would be added in 1970. Among an estimated 822 vessels are included: 4 destroyers, 4 destroyer escorts, 12 frigate escorts, 30 submarines, 78 minesweepers, plus gun-boats, torpedo-boats, landing ships, and others. Additionally, there are an estimated 10,000 junks. Naval aircraft, including land-based light torpedo-bombers and MIG fighters, total about 500. Naval personnel includes some 28,000 marines.

Public Security Force (PSF): This complex quasi-military force, scattered throughout the country, is concerned with people's political activities and is akin to the "constabulary" systems found elsewhere. It reaches down to the village level to enforce political, economic and public order; frontier security and it is also meshed with the Party's secret police machinery.

The Militia: Originally formed in 1927 as the Red Protection Corps, it guarded the Red Army's flanks during the civil and Sino-Japanese wars and had intelligence and communication responsibilities. Estimates of its strength run as high as 50 million, with the 12 million figure regarded as more accurate. Militiamen assist the PSF in maintaining public order and suppressing internal elements considered dangerous to the State, protect State property, including factories and farm crops, and maintain order at mass rallies and demonstrations.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Soviet Arms To Pakistan; New Chief Of The Army; HAL Record; FICCI Annual Meeting; NCAER Study Of Economic Outlook; Agricultural Prices Commission's Report; Asian Labour Conference.

A. Soviet Arms Supplies To Pakistan: It was implicitly confirmed in the Rajya Sabha on March 14 by Mr. L. N. Mishra, Minister for Defence Production, that Soviet tanks had reached Pakistan.

And, though the Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh refused to give a direct answer to a similar question in the Lok Sabha he admitted that Soviet military hardware—"maybe tanks, maybe something else"—had been received in Pakistan and that the Russians stood by their decision to continue arms supplies to that country.

The Soviet Union, he said, had not given any details of the arms it had sent and would supply to Pakistan, nor was it expected that it would do so. This was on the same basis that India did not expect Russia to give information about arms supplied by her to any other country.

He added: "But, we have left the Soviet Union in no doubt about our grave concern on the matter and our belief that any accrual of arms to Pakistan is a threat to us".

He made the statement during the visit of Marshal Grechko, the Soviet Defence Minister, to India.

According to diplomatic sources in New Delhi, the tanks supplied to Pakistan were reported to be more or less of the same pattern which China had supplied to Pakistan. China had been manufacturing these tanks according to original prototypes given by the Soviet Union before the Sino-Soviet rupture.

The Soviet Union had also given Pakistan, according to these sources, some essential spare-parts for the MIG-19 aircraft it had obtained from China after the 1965 conflict. These spares were urgently needed by Pakistan to keep these aircraft in an operation conrition, since China was unable to supply them in requisite quantities.

These tanks and aircraft spares were evidently part of the first instalment of Soviet military aid to Pakistan which was first agreed to in principle during Mr. A. Kosygin's visit to that country in early 1968. The quantum of supplies and delivery schedules were finalized during the Pakistan C.-in-C.'s visit to Moscow in 1968.

B. New Chief Of The Army Staff: It was announced in New Delhi on March 20 that Lt-Gen. S. H. F. J. Manekshaw, General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Eastern Command, would be the next Chief of the Army Staff. Succeeding General P. P. Kumaramangalam when the latter retires on June 8, Lt-Gen. Manekshaw will then be promoted to the rank of General.

Gen. Manekshaw (55) who is popularly known as "Sam", was commissioned in the Army in 1934. He is an Infantry officer and is known for his ability in tactical planning. Among the important appointments he has held are Director of Military Operations at Army Headquarters—as a Brigadier—during the critical days of the Kashmir operations.

In addition to holding several regimental Staff appointments, Gen. Manekshaw saw action during World War II. In the first Burma Campaign, he took part in many battles against the Japanese, and on the Sitting River Front, he led his company with courage when the Japanese were pushing towards Pegu and Rangoon. For this, he won the Military Cross. He was wounded in the operations and after recovering, he attended the Staff College course at Quetta and joined a Brigade on the North-East Frontier as Brigade-Major. He was an Instructor at the Staff College, Quetta, for some time and later went back to Burma to join his regiment (12 Frontier Force Rifles), which was then on the move astride the Rangoon-Mandalay highway as part of the victorious 14th Army troops under General Mongi Slim. He was wounded for a second time and returned to India. During the closing days of the War he went as a Staff Officer to General Daisey in Indo-China, where, after the Japanese surrender, he helped in the rehabilitation of over 10,000 prisoners-of-war.

To bring home to Australians India's war effort and the achievements of her Armed Forces, Gen. Manekshaw was sent on a six-month lecture tour to Australia in 1946.

Later, Gen. Manekshaw commanded an Infantry Brigade for two years. He officiated as Director of Military Training at Army HQ for a year before taking over as Commandant of the Infantry School at Mhow. He commanded a Division in the Jammu and Kashmir theatre for a short duration and worked as Commandant of the Defence Services Staff College at Wellington for three years before being put in command of a Corps on the eastern frontier in November, 1962. He was GOC-in C, Western Command, before taking over as GOC-in-C, Eastern Command, in November, 1964. He was awarded the Padma Bhushan in 1968.

Gen. Manekshaw grew up in Amritsar where his father had served as the Chief Medical Officer with the Municipal Committee.

He is a graduate of the Imperial Defence College, UK.

Other Army Appointments:

It was announced on March 19 that Lt.-Gen. J. K. Khanna, Corps Commander, had been appointed Quarter-Master General at Army Headquarters in place of Lt.-Gen. Rajinder Singh Paintal who had retired.

Gen. Khanna took over in the middle of April.

Major-Gen. H. K. Sibal, Commandant of the Infantry School, Mhow took over the Command of a Corps in the acting rank of Lt.-General. Major-Gen. O. S. Kalkat, Chief of Staff, Eastern Command, became Commandant of the Infantry School, Mhow.

C. Navy's First Helicopter Squadron: Admiral A. K. Chatterji, Chief of the Navy Staff, inaugurated the Navy's first helicopter squadron at Dabolim in Goa on March 15.

In doing so, he congratulated the pilots of the newly-commissioned 321-squadron and said that with the overall expansion of the fleet, the role of helicopters had widened considerably.

Apart from air-sea rescue operation and submarine detection, he added, helicopters fitted with torpedoes could provide an effective answer to hostile submarines.

Each of the Leander class frigates under construction would have a helicopter embarked.

D. HAL Produces 1,000th Aircraft: The 1,000th aircraft manufactured by Hindustan Aeronautics Limited (Bangalore Division) was handed over to the Defence Ministry at Bangalore on March 28.

The Bangalore Division, originally known as Hindustan Aircraft Ltd (HAL), is engaged in: (1) design development and manufacture of a supersonic jet fighter; (2) manufacture of the Gnat aircraft, including its engine; (3) design, development and manufacture of the basic jet trainer—Kiran; (4) manufacture of the French Alouette helicopter, including its engine; (5) manufacture of the air observation post aircraft —Krishak—for army use; (6) design, development and manufacture of an agricultural aircraft; and (7) manufacture of gliders.

After assembling the first Harlow trainer in August, 1941, only 18 months after its establishment, HAL assembled the first Curtiss Hawker in July, 1942.

During World War II, the manufacturing programme was suspended and the factory was transformed into a large overhaul and repair base in the East.

In 1948 HAL manufactured Percival Prentice.

HAL's all-metal basic trainer HT-2 has been supplied to the Indian Air Force, the Navy and the Civil Aviation Training Centres.

Since March, 1950, it has been making Vampire jets which are now being phased out. In 1956, it started making Gnat light transonic fighters.

A team of German engineers have assisted HAL in the design and development of a supersonic fighter aircraft since 1956. The first two HF-24 manufactured in Bangalore were handed over to the Air Force in May, 1964. HAL is now working on reheat process to secure Mach-14 speed from HF-24's Orpheus-703 engine.

The undertaking has also produced 125 light trainer Pushpaks.

HAL is now planning to build "a secondary ground attack aircraft" of greater capability than HF-24.

E. Protocol With UAR For Agricultural Development: A Protocol was signed in New Delhi on March 19 between India and the United Arab Republic for collaboration in the field of agricultural development.

It came at the conclusion of a 12-day visit to India of an UAR agricultural delegation led by the Minister for Land Reclamation, Mr. Mohamed Bakr Ahmed.

The Protocol provides for the setting up of a joint advisory committee of experts and officials, which will meet at least once a year alternatively in New Delhi and Cairo to review and formulate specific programmes.

The UAR will accord preference to the import of Indian tea following its recent decision to raise the import quota for tea from 25,000 tonnes to 30,000 tonnes annually.

F. Indo-West German Consultative Meeting: India and West Germany agreed on March 20 that there was need to strengthen and extend co-operation between the two countries in the economic, industrial and commercial fields.

A joint statement issued in New Delhi on the conclusion of the consultative meeting of officials of the two countries said: "The two sides reviewed and exchanged information on bilateral questions and the broad spectrum of global matters of mutual interest.

"They discussed the past performance and future prospects of co-operation between India and the Federal Republic of Germany in the economic, industrial and commercial domains."

Cultural Agreement:

India and West Germany also signed a Cultural Agreement in New Delhi on March 20, seeking to strengthen and develop the existing cultural contacts between India and West Germany.

It provides for co-operation between the two countries in the fields of education, art, culture, mass media, sports, medicine and libraries. Exchanges of personnel and materials in these fields would be regulated under the provisions of the Agreement.

Offer Of Projects:

A credit of Rs. 7 crores for the establishment of a Petro-Chemical Complex in Gujarat was offered by the West German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Dr. G. F. Duckwitz, in New Delhi on March 20.

This was one of seven "further examples of Indo-German co-operation" announced by Dr. Duckwitz at a news conference.

Other items for which West German assistance would be available were:

(1) An agricultural development project in Almora in Uttar Pradesh —the fourth such West German-aided scheme in this country;

(2) Sixty scholarships for technical training;

(3) The erection of a television studio in Bombay and TV transmission stations in Bombay and Poona;

(4) The extension of the "Vollrath" project to promote Indian engineering exports will be seriously considered by West Germany to ensure the continuity of the success of this scheme;

(5) A technical aid project for the promotion of tourism in India; and

(6) 90,000 tonnes of wheat and wheat products in accordance with decisions taken by the European Economic Community.

Dr. Duckwitz declared: "I am happy to say that there are no differences between our two Governments that might disturb our relations now or in future. This is of particular importance for our bilateral relations."

G. Indo-French Trade Protocol: A Trade Protocol providing for increased quotas for some of the Indian products still subject to quantitative restrictions in France was signed in New Delhi on March 17.

It was also decided to renew the Trade Agreement between the two countries for a year from January 1, 1969.

This followed the meeting of the Indo-French Joint Economic Commission in New Delhi from March 7 to 11.

The Indo-French Trade Agreement, concluded on October 19, 1959, had since been renewed from time to time.

The Trade Agreement expressed the common desire of the two Governments for the expansion of trade between the two countries. It also provided for a Joint Economic Commission comprising representatives of the two Governments to take steps to widen the trade and economic relations between the two countries.

H. Indo-French Consultative Meeting: The annual consultations between India and France held in New Delhi on March 13 revealed that the two countries were "very close" to each other in their assessment of the international situation.

The French delegation at the two-day talks was led by Mr. Jean de Lipkoski, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, while Mr. Surendra Pal Singh, Deputy Minister in the Ministry of External Affairs, led the Indian team.

I. Trade Surplus With Britain: According to statistics released by the British High Commission in India on February 14, export and import trade between India and Britain resulted in a record surplus of about £63.7 million (Rs. 115 crores in a total trade of Rs. 335 crores) in India's favour during 1968.

In recent years, India had been running a favourable balance with UK on the trade account, but this sharp swing in India's favour was brought about by a marked improvement in India's exports to UK and a sizable slashing of imports from that country, partly accounted for by the continuance of recessionary conditions in India's engineering industry.

The trade surplus in the previous year (1967) was £44 million (Rs. 79 crores) on the basis of total exports to UK of £125.7 million and imports of £81.5 million.

At the end of the year just ended, India's total exports to UK increased by over £10 million to £185 million and simultaneously imports from that country decreased by almost an equal amount to £71.6 million, boosting the trade surplus by about £20 million (Rs. 85 crores).

J. Export Performance: According to statistics available in New Delhi on February 26, India's position among the exporting nations of the world and even among the developing Asian countries had slipped considerably in the past two decades.

As of 1966, the index of world exports (1953-100) had risen to 246, and developing Asia's index to 205. India's index by contrast had risen to only 144.

Stated as average annual rates of growth over this 13-year period, India's exports grew by 2.8 per cent per year, whereas developing Asia's exports advanced at the rate of 5.7 per cent a year and world exports at the rate of 7.2 per cent. At the end of the Fourth Plan period only, India hopes to achieve an annual export growth rate of 7 per cent.

A comparison with selected countries showed even more strikingly India's poor export performance over the past two decades. The contrast was particularly marked with respect to Taiwan and South Korea.

These two small countries, with a combined population in 1966 of only 42.6 million (or less than 10 per cent of India's population), had combined commodity exports in 1966 worth $786 million or almost half of India's commodity exports of $1,607 million.

Moreover, exports of Taiwan and South Korea had continued to rise sharply, and the officially reported 1968 exports for the two countries were $848 million and $500 million respectively (a combined total of $1,348 million). This total amounted to almost 80 per cent of India's estimated 1968 exports of about $1,700 million.

In 1948, India accounted for 2.41 per cent of world exports, but in 1966 the percentage had declined to 0.8. Even comparing with the export performance of developing Asian countries, India had lost ground, falling from 21 per cent of the Asian total in 1948 to only 9.5 per cent in 1966.

These figures showed that although India had improved her export performance over the years, still she had a long way to go before she could emerge as a major exporting country.

K. FICCI Annual Meeting: Inaugurating the 42nd annual meeting of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) in New Delhi on March 15, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi said that as long as wealth and the power that went with it were concentrated in the hands of a few, controls could not be totally dispensed with and it was not unnatural in the economic and social conditions prevailing in India that monopolies should be attacked.

It was not possible in the Indian context, she said, to let wealth grow at the top in the hope that it would eventually trickle down to the masses.

She made it clear that the Government neither believed in controls for their own sake nor shared the view of some in business circles that controls were bad in themselves. The Government policy was to streamline and rationalize controls so as to "enthuse social purpose at strategic points in decision-making while avoiding cumbersome and unnecessary invention."

In the past few years, she went on, the Government had found conditions suitable for considerable relaxation of controls. Several fields had been substantially or totally decontrolled and delicensed. The future trend had been indicated in the draft Fourth Plan. The idea in the Plan would be to confine detailed planning to key sectors and permit flexibility in other fields. All basic and strategic industries involving large investment or substantial expenditure of foreign exchange would have to be scrutinized and planned very carefully.

But where the foreign exchange required was nominal and the interests of small and village industries were not at stake, delicensing could take place.

Mr. Morarji Desai's Address:

Addressing a dinner meeting of the session, the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai said: "We hope to get rid of the country's difficulties completely in a year or two and then march forward faster than in the past 15 years."

He asked the rich to give up thinking in terms of how much more money could be brought in or saved and of how they could give the least to the Government or others.

He asked businessmen to contribute to the creation of conditions "where life can be secure in the sense there is full employment for all talents and development proceeds in all sectors."

He said: "We want to make life in this country more satisfactory for everybody. We want to have an India where there will be equality of opportunity for everyone and equality of status, irrespective of one's profession. You (businessmen) will be judged by the measure in which you contribute towards building up such a society."

President's Address:

Earlier, the FICCI President, Mr.

G. M. Modi, in his address, reviewed the current economic situation in the country and made several suggestions for accelerating the pace of economic development.

He, however, expressed the business community's concern at the growth of fissiparous tendencies, tension in Centre-State relations and the re-emergence of a United Front Government in West Bengal, and said: "The memories of the last United Front Ministry are still fresh in our minds. Gheraos, strikes, lawlessness and social unrest made life difficult. They made a mockery of our democratic institutions and traditions."

He expressed satisfaction with the improvement in agricultural production and suggested that at least one-third of the cropped area be brought under irrigation in the next five years to avoid fluctuations in food production.

Regarding controls on industry, he said many investment opportunities had become unattractive because of control on prices and urged the Government to reduce controls to the minimum and use them only in an emergency.

On monopolies, he said, restraints on the size of Indian companies could place them at a disadvantage in the world market. Even now, the size of Indian companies was small and, therefore, their production costs were high.

After comparing the size of Indian companies with that of foreign monopolies, he said it would be "unrealistic" to control the expansion of companies having assets of over Rs. 1 crore.

Regarding taxation, he regretted that there was no relief for the corporate sector in the new Budget.

He referred to the small beginning made in the field of investment by Indian parties in some foreign countries and said that already about 60 proposals were in the process of negotiation or implementation.

He suggested that the Government should set up export banks to look after the financial side of export and joint ventures.

Further, the Government should protect foreign investment against political risk, permit cash remittances up to a certain percentage and give other facilities which would encourage investment abroad.

FICCI Awards:

After the inaugural ceremony, Mrs. Gandhi gave away awards instituted by the Federation for distinguished service and initiative shown by companies and individuals in the fields of agriculture, export promotion, family planning, industrial relations and research in science and technology.

The awards given were:

Agriculture: Jayshree Tea and Industries Ltd., Kallyar Estate, Coimbatore; Export Promotion: Mukund Iron and Steel Works Ltd., Bombay; Family Planning: Mrs. Aloo Mowdawalla of Messrs. Godrej and Boyce Manufacturing Co. (Private) Ltd., Bombay (individual award) and New Central Jute Mills Ltd., Calcutta (company award); Industrial Relations: Mr. K. N. Naoroji of Messrs. Godrej and Boyce Mfg. Co. Ltd. (individual award); Research in science and technology: Mr. S. C. Gupta, Director, National Sugar Institute, Kanpur.

The jury included Mr. P. B. Gajendragakar, Dr. D. S. Kothari and Dr. A. Ramaswamy Mudaliar.

Resolutions:

The Federation passed a number of resolutions on March 15, 16 and 17. One of them opposed the move to empower Parliament to abridge the Fundamental Rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

By another on "new factors in economic growth" it urged the Government to create conditions which would make it possible for the industry to grow up to international standards.

In the wake of the intensive application of science to industry, it said, business operations had necessarily to be on a large scale. The Government was urged to remove all controls and impediments to investment, production and distribution for the purpose and to reduce taxation on corporations and individuals to increase national savings and investment.

Other demands included appropriate financial measures and removal of procedural difficulties to help exports to expand and imports to reduce and improvement of the working of the public sector undertakings.

It noted the transition of economy from the under-developed to an intermediate stage and the restrictive trade policies being adopted by the developed countries and wanted the Government, trade unions and business to take note of the many new factors that had emerged both in the national and international scenes and appropriately revise their attitudes, policies and actions so that the process of economic development could be accelerated and social stability strengthened.

It urged upon business to cater effectively for the demand in rural areas for new goods and services and adopt new techniques of production and management so as to bring about modernization and reduction in costs.

In its resolution on "National Integration and the Business Community" it said that language, religion, State boundaries and river waters had become causes for violent thoughts and action. Political parties were not unwilling to use fissiparous forces for their own ends at the expense of national unity. The highly political "sons of soil" movement, unfortunately was receiving tacit or even open support fiom some authorities. The proliferating 'senas' were a dangerous extension of the same movement.

New President:

Mr. Ramnath A. Podar (Bombay) was unanimously elected President of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry for 1969-70.

Mr. D. C. Kothari (Madras) was unanimously elected Vice-President.

The session ended on March 17.

L. Economic Outlook For 1969-70—NCAER Study: The National Council of Applied Economic Research (NCAER), presenting an outlook of the economy during 1969-70, said on February 7 that "despite the emerging favourable trends, any attempt to force the pace and increase the level of public investment immediately is liable to be self-defeating."

It was of the view that the order of public investment proposed in the annual Plan for 1969-70 "could just be feasible." The total outlay proposed by the Planning Commission, Centre and States taken together was Rs. 2,335 crores for the first year of the Fourth Plan.

The study envisaged production of 102 million tonnes of foodgrains, a seven to eight per cent increase in industrial output and a six per cent increase in national income during 1969-70.

While cautioning against forcing the pace of investment in 1969-70, it said that "the time was ripe for a fruitful search for avenues of useful and rewarding investment in all sectors. But as this process would necessarily take some time, one could expect investment to gather more momentum only after a year or so, by which time, if the economy progressed as envisaged, matching resources would be available."

The key to the outlook for next year still remained agriculture. Given average seasonal conditions, the production of foodgrains next year would be 102 million tonnes and was likely to be of the order of 108 million tonnes in 1970-71. "In all probability further imports of wheat beyond what has already been arranged for may not be required, while marginal imports of rice may still be found to be necessary."

The downward pressure on foodgrain prices should lead to larger selling to Government at the support prices already in force. This should facilitate procurement of foodgrains for public distribution and for building up a buffer stock.

On industrial production next year, it estimated a four or five per cent increase in the growth of demand for cotton textiles which had to compete with synthetic fabrics, but in all other industries, "conditions are ripe for a general increase in demand which in turn should stimulate production." On the whole, industrial production might be expected to increase by seven to eight per cent.

The increase in national income might well be of the order of six per cent next year as against about three per cent in 1968-69. "This should not cause any undue satisfaction or sense of complacency. To a large extent it merely represents making up for lost time."

On exports and imports, it said that while the course of events in the current year had justified the earlier hope about encouraging growth of exports, efforts would have to be intensified and it would not be prudent to count on an expansion of the exports by more than five per cent.

M. Outstanding Central Loans To States: The Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, told Parliament on February 24 that the Central loans outstanding against the State Governments as on March 31, 1968 amounted approximately to Rs. 5,191 crores.

The total was expected to rise further by about Rs. 340 crores by the end of this year.

He added that the Government was evolving a scheme for consolidating Central loans to the States and re-fixing the re-payment terms.

A statement placed on the table of the House disclosed that Uttar Pradesh owed the Centre the highest amount—Rs. 594 crores. Then came Bihar with Rs. 519 crores. Andhra and West Bengal followed next with Rs. 491 crores and Rs. 469 crores.

Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Rajasthan and Tamil Nadu fell in the Rs. 300-crore category, while Assam, Gujarat, Mysore and Punjab in the Rs. 200-300-crore bracket. The relatively smaller States like Haryana, Kerala, Jammu and Kashmir took a more modest place in the Rs. 100-200-crore line. The poorest of the lot, tiny Nagaland, owed the Centre only Rs. 9 crores.

N. Land Reforms Survey: It was officially learnt on February 6 that more than 30,00,000 tenants and share-croppers had acquired ownership of more than 70,00,000 acres of land as a result of legislation undertaken in the various States.

The maximum number of tenants who had benefited by the measure was in Uttar Pradesh where 15,00,000 tenants inherited 20,00,000 acres. In Maharashtra, 7,40,000 tenants got ownership of 21,38,000, which means each got roughly three acres.

Tenants have fixity of tenure in all States except Assam, Haryana, Punjab, Madras and West Bengal.

In West Bengal the right of resumption of land by the landlord is a continuing right. In Andhra Pradesh and Bihar, comprehensive legislation has not been enacted.

Rents have been regulated in all the States. The Government of India is said to be of the view that the statutory rents are still on the high side in Andhra Pradesh, Jammu and Kashmir, Madras, Haryana, Punjab and West Bengal.

Most of the States have enacted laws to impose ceiling on land holdings. The ceiling varies from State to State. There are some States where the ceiling varies from place to place depending on the quality of land.

Rajasthan, where the class of land various widely, the ceiling varies from 22 to 336 acres. Next comes Andhra Pradesh where too the ceiling is low at 27 acres and high with 324 acres. In Mysore also, the ceiling is 27 acres for good quality land and 216 for poor quality.

In respect of ceiling, the complaint is that it has worked out more on paper than in reality. The landholders have resorted to devious means to thwart the imposition of ceilings and have partitioned the land among the family members. In some States, land has been switched over to cash crop as cash crop land does not come under the purview of the land ceiling.

The story of distribution of land rendered surplus as a result of imposition of ceiling is also not a happy one. In Andhra Pradesh, for instance, 73,692 acres of land was declared surplus. This was considered too meagre and even so, this has not been distributed among the landless. In Haryana, 1,82,250 acres was declared surplus but only a little over 25 per cent has been distributed.

Jammu and Kashmir is the only State where there has been 100 per cent distribution. The State declared 450,000 acres surplus and distributed the entire surplus.

O. Agricultural Prices Commission's Report: The Agricultural Prices Commission, in its report published on March 19, recommended an increase in wheat procurement by 50 per cent, the suggested figure being 3.6 million tonnes against 2.2 million tonnes last year. The present restrictions on the movement of wheat should be maintained.

Procurement prices remain unchanged with the recommendation that the addition of Rs. 6 per quintal by the State Governments should be discontinued.

The Commission's view derives from two considerations. First, the crop is expected to be even better than last year's—about 17.23 million tonnes compared to 16.57 million tonnes in 1968. The increase has also occurred in surplus areas, making it possible to push up the level of procurement.

The Commission stressed the need for a proper programme, particularly in Punjab, in order to avoid the mistakes of last year.

The second major factor in the situation is the Commission's fear that under the established Monsoon cycle, the next year may turn out to be comparatively a poor one.

For this and other reasons, the Commission has also urged that imports should be deferred towards the end of the year. This will enable the procurement operations to proceed vigorously, the import programme being drawn up afterwards with a view to making up the balance.

The procurement prices suggested by the Commission are Rs. 66 for the red variety, Rs. 70 for the common white, Rs. 74 for the superior farm quality and Rs. 70 for the Mexican varieties. The prices will be uniform for all States.

No targets have been suggested for gram or barley. In the Commission's view, purchase of these grains should be undertaken by the Food Corporation or the State Governments at the prevailing market rate.

P. Asian Labour Conference: Inaugurating the Asian Labour Ministers' Conference in New Delhi on January 28, the Vice-President, Mr. V. V. Giri, regretted that the trade union movement in Asia still operated within very narrow limits.

The bulk of agricultural labour, he added, remained outside the pale of trade unions. If the trade union movement was really to represent the working class of Asia as a whole, then it should go beyond its present bounds and take within its fold the many more millions who worked outside industry. In spite of all determined efforts that had been made by many Asian countries, the bulk of their workers engaged in agriculture had only inadequate employment. "While industry has the advantage of taking in only as many as it requires, no such choice is open to agriculture. Like Mother Earth it has to accept all that get born and we know how their number is increasing."

The President, Dr. Zakir Husain, and the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, wished the Conference success. Fourteen Asian countries participated in the Conference.

The Central Labour Minister, Mr. Jaisukhlal Hathi, who was elected President of the Conference, said that in the Asian context, the compulsion was to carry on the drive for more production, employment and higher productivity so that nations could move out of the morass of poverty which had grown over the generations.

He said that in a democratic society, differences were bound to arise and a dispute was only a difference of opinion regarding how a problem was to be tackled.

He thought it was not possible to provide a guarantee against disputes, but it should be possible to guard against the hold-up of employment and production while the differences were being sorted out.

In this context, Mr. Hathi asked to what extent the right to strike, which had the sanction of the international standards set by ILO, was valid today. "But can there be a State guarantee for such a right which operates against the health and stability of the State itself?"

He wondered whether the State should not have the right to create a frame-work within which the trade union freedom was to be exercised and whether in the conditions existing in many Asian countries workers required to be protected against exploitation only by their employers.

The plenary session unanimously elected Mr. Hathi as President and Mr. M. H. Mohamed, Ceylon's Labour Minister, as Vice-President of the Conference.

Two Committees were set up—one to consider industrial relations and wage determination and the other to study technical co-operation and ILO's role in Asia. This Committee will discuss the formulation of an Asian man-power plan.

The Conference recommended the setting up of a machinery "for the prompt examination of the legitimate demands of workers and for their just and fair settlement."

In its declaration concerning trade unions and industrial relations, the Conference made several recommendations which would be considered by the Government of India in due course and action initiated on those which are acceptable to it.

Q. Congress Resolution On Indiscipline: The Congress Working Committee adopted a resolution in New Delhi on March 13 prohibiting personal attacks by Congress members against their own party colleagues in Parliament or State Legislatures.

It noted with concern the growing tendency of Congressmen to make personal allegations against party members, including Ministers, and said that such allegations would be deemed as acts of indiscipline and prompt action should be taken at the appropriate level against those Congressmen.

The resolution was passed in the light of Mr. Chandra Sekhar's alleged campaign of vilification against the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai.

At its meeting on March 12, the Working Committee took a serious view of this campaign and asked the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, in her capacity as Leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party to take strong action against Mr. Chandra Sekhar.

The resolution, however, did not make any reference to Mr. Chandra Sekhar's charges pecause it was felt that the Executive Committee of the Congress Parliamentary Party was fully seized of the issue.

The Working Committee thought it necessary to re-iterate the resolution passed by it on April 7, 1951, in which it had spelt out its policy to deal with cases involving breach of party discipline. Instead of passing a new resolution, the Committee added two paragraphs to the 1951 resolution expressing concern at the growing indiscipline and asking members not to indulge in personal attacks against other members.

The following is the text of the 1951 resolution:

"The Working Committee has noted with regret a growing lack of discipline among Congressmen as well as in Congress committees and Congress Parliamentary parties, and an encouragement of disruptive tendencies, which come in the way of effective work and do injury to the Congress prestige and the objectives for which it works. In the circumstances of today, maintenance of discipline among Congressmen is particularly necessary and breaches of it must be dealt with according to rules made therefore.

"No separate parties can be formed within the Congress and Congressmen must not condemn or criticise policies which have been adopted by the Congress or by Congress Governments, except in party or committee meetings. Members of Congress Parliamentary parties must bear this in mind in all their activities in Parliament or the State Assemblies. Any activity contrary to this will be considered a breach of discipline.

"The Committee, therefore, calls upon all Congressmen, in whatever sphere of activity they may function, to act with restraint and in keeping with the traditions and dignity of the Congress."

R. Mr. D. P. Mishra's Election Declared Void: On March 12, as consultations were in progress as to who should form the Ministry—Congress or SVD—in Madhya Pradesh on the resignation of the Chief Minister, Mr. G. N. Singh on March 10, the Madhya Pradesh High Court declared the Congress Party leader, Mr. D. P. Mishra's

1963 election to the State Assembly void.

Mr. Mishra was elected to the State Assembly in May, 1963 from the Kasdol constituency in a by-election. The election was challenged by the defeated Praja-Socialist candidate, Mr. Kamalnayan Sharma, on grounds of corrupt practices.

The Election Tribunal which heard the petition earlier had dismissed it and Mr. Sharma appealed to the High Court.

A division bench, consisting of Mr. Justice Shiv Dayal and Mr. Justice S. P. Bhargava, allowed the appeal and declared Mr. Mishra's election void. The High Court held that it had been proved that Mr. Mishra incurred or authorized expenditure in excess of the prescribed limit and that he was guilty of corrupt practices.

Mr. Mishra was re-elected to the State Assembly in 1967 from the Katangi constituency.

Mr. Mishra was re-elected Leader of the Congress Party in 1968 after he had stepped down from the post for some months soon after the SVD Government replaced the Congress Ministry headed by him. Mr. S. C. Shukla was the leader of the party for a brief spell.

The judgment disqualified Mr. Mishra from being a member of the Assembly for a period of six years with effect from March 12, 1969.

According to political observers, the judgment had jeoparadized Mr. Mishra's political future.

S. Central Employees' Strike—Re-instatement: The Minister of State for Home Affairs, Mr. V. C. Shukla, announced in Parliament on March 13 that the Central Government employees under suspension for participating in the token strike on September 19, 1968, excepting those against whom there were complaints of intimidation, violence and active instigation, would be permitted to rejoin duty.

He said that the Government had decided to terminate legal proceedings, according to law, in respect of the cases where there was not sufficient evidence. This would be preceded by a careful scrutiny of the pending prosecution cases.

Cases of employees who had been placed under suspension in connexion only with disciplinary proceedings would be dealt with on the same liberalized principles as employees who had been prosecuted, and re-instatement ordered accordingly.

He hoped that the liberal spirit in which the Government had taken these decisions would be reciprocated by the employees through devoted and disciplined service.

T. New Jammu-Srinagar Road: It was stated on February 14 that an 11-mile road to by-pass the Nashri hillock between Batote and Ram Ban had been built by the Border Roads Organization.

This would ensure a smooth flow of traffic from Jammu and Srinagar and facilitate supplies of essential stores and equipment to the Kashmir Valley.

The road, which had been built after two years of hard and strenuous labour at a cost of Rs. 1 crore, is a 20-foot-wide single-traffic road, allowing 12 feet of carriage in the middle and has an easy gradient to permit all heavy vehicles taking a convenient course.

The road is meant to serve as an alternate route when the Nashri hillock is blocked.

U. Phosphate Deposits In Rajasthan: It was officially stated in New Delhi on March 1 that phosphate deposits, estimated at about 54 million tonnes, had been found in Rajasthan, both by the Geological Survey of India (GSI) and the State survey agency.

When these reserves are exploited on commercial scale, India—which is importing all rock phosphate requirements at present—is expected to become self-sufficient in this important raw material and thus save much foreign exchange.

For instance, in 1967, India imported 630,000 tonnes of rock phosphate costing about Rs. 9.60 crores. By the end of the Fourth Plan period, India's rock phosphate requirement is estimated at 4.5 million tonnes (with a pentoxide content of 30 per cent). This quantity of rock phosphate will cost Rs. 72 crores.

Out of the total estimated reserves of 54 million tonnes, 14 million tonnes have been reported from areas were GSI-conducted surveys. The balance is accounted for by the surveys conducted by the State agency.

The GSI survey revealed phosphate deposits at Kanpur, Karbaria-a-Gurha and Maton in the Udaipur area and also at Birmania, Kohra and Dakan Kotra. The pentoxide content of these deposits ranges between 15 and 25 per cent.

The Rajasthan Government, it is reported, has located deposits in Jhamar-Kotra, 20 km from Udaipur.

Hindustan Zinc Limited, a public sector undertaking, has applied to the Rajasthan Government for rights to mine rock phosphate deposits at Maton.

V. Per Capita Income: According to estimates based on prevailing price, it was stated, Punjab had the highest per capita income among the States in 1964-65.

Its per capita income was Rs. 575. Maharashtra, Gujarat and Haryana followed with Rs. 526, Rs. 523 and Rs. 504 respectively. West Bengal's per capita income was Rs. 493. The lowest among the States was Bihar (Rs. 299).

The per capita income in other States was: Andhra Pradesh Rs. 438, Assam Rs. 441, Jammu & Kashmir Rs. 341, Kerala Rs. 393, Madhya Pradesh Rs. 373, Mysore Rs. 420, Orissa Rs. 347, Rajasthan Rs. 356, Tamil Nadu Rs. 434 and Uttar Pradesh Rs. 374.

JAPAN

A. Renewal Of Claims To Soviet-Held Islands: The Government took new steps on March 7 to strengthen its claim to four off-shore islands occupied by the Soviet Union since the end of World War II by officially deciding to include them as part of Japan.

[The four islands are Etorofu, Kunashiri, Habomai and Shikotan.]

The Soviet Union took over these islands by virtue of the war-time Yalta Agreement. Subsequently, during Japan-Soviet talks to normalize their relations in the mid-fifties, Moscow indicated its readiness to return only Habomai and Shikotan in return for Japanese agreement to the Peace Treaty, but rejected demands for the return of Etorofu and Kunashiri on grounds that the question had been solved once and for all at the end of the War.

Presumably, in order to keep the question alive and to back up its claim to the Islands, the Japanese Government now decided to include them as Japanese territory in all official maps to be issued from April 1.

On March 19, the Cabinet decided to establish a Special Association to handle problems involved in trying to re-gain the islands of Etorofu, Habomai, Shikotan and Kunashiri.

Friction over these islands has so far prevented Japan and the Soviet Union from signing a Peace Treaty as a formal ending to World War II.

Japan's new efforts to get back these territories coincide with her efforts to regain southern islands including Okinawa which USA still has after war-time victories.

The Russian-held island group to the north and the US-held group to the south are the last of Japan's war-lost lands still out of Japanese control.

B. Trade Accord With USSR: Japanese trade negotiators in Moscow said in the last week of February that they had reached agreement with Soviet officials on a plan calling for a two-way volume of trade to the value of $703 million in 1969.

The overall figure represents a 21 per cent expansion over the trade performance during 1968.

Japanese exports are expected to reach $356 million and imports $34 million, both on the f.o.b. basis, according to the trade plan.

Japan placed the greatest emphasis on Russian acceptance of increased imports from Japan in order to reduce Japan's big payment (import) excesses recorded in 1967 and 1968.

The Japanese negotiators said they had generally achieved that objective through the negotiations.

The talks were at one stage stalled over a difference regarding Russian imports of consumer products from Japan.

The Soviet Union, however, opened the way for an early agreement by assuring that it would import no less quantity of consumer items in 1969 than in 1968.

The Japanese export list comprises 80 items. These include plant equipment and consumer products to be supplied to the Soviet Union under a Lumber Resources Development Agreement signed in July, 1968.

Among other newly-added Japanese export commodities are rolling stock and their parts, tin plate, vinyl chloride, etylene glicol and carbon black.

The Russians have agreed to increase imports of woolen textiles, woollen yarn, rayon and synthetic rubber, wax and paints and equipment for food processing industry and fishery equipment.

The Japanese import list comprises 35 items. Japan has agreed to increase imports of timber and coal, while cutting down on purchases of raw cotton and pig iron.

C. Giant Steel Firms Plan Merger: The Fair Trade Commission (FTC) announced on February 24 what were interpreted as "conditions" for the merger of the two leading steel companies in Japan—Yawata and Fuji.

FTC selected three items of production—tin plate, rails and pig-iron for casting—in which it felt the two companies had jointly too strong a position, and on which Yawata and Fuji should yield ground.

FTC has, in effect, given the green light to the most important merger in post-War Japan. The merger will create a steel company far larger than any other in Japan, with joint production last year of 23,678,000 tons (almost as much as the whole of the British steel industry last year.)

This compared with total steel production in Japan last year of 66,893,000 tons, and put the new company far ahead of its rivals—Nippon Kokan, Sumitomo Metal Industries and Kawasaki Steel.

The new firm will also be the largest company in Japan in terms of sales, excluding the mammoth trading companies. In the last full business year Yawata and Fuji had joint sales of 823,299 million yen, as against the runner-up, Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, with sales of 626,243 million yen.

In addition, Shin Nippon Seitetsu will become the second largest steel producer in the world. According to 1967 production figures, the new Japanese combine would be second only to US Steel, and just ahead of the British Steel Corporation.

D. Seminar On Japan-US Relations: Political scientists and defence experts at a conference held in Kyoto in the last week of January examined the outlook for Japan-US relations in the post-Okinawan reversion years.

The majority of participants agreed that, in spite of some difficulties, Okinawa could be returned to Japan with US military bases there reduced to a similar, non-nuclear status as those in the Japanese mainland.

There were some who thought that the US Government and people would not understand readily the need for handing the islands back to Japan.

Many participants believed it possible that Okinawa could be returned to Japan without Japan conceding the American forces a free use of the bases or the right to deploy nuclear weapons. But others felt that USA would ask for unrestricted use of the bases.

None of the participants, however, saw the need for USA to stockpile nuclear weapons at Okinawan bases.

E. Steps To Prevent Air Pollution: The Cabinet decided on February 12 on the environmental standards for sulfurous acid gas as its first major step designed to prevent air pollution.

The new measure was based principally on the recommendations submitted to the Government by the Environments Council, an advisory organ to the Health and Welfare Minister, in July, 1968.

The new measure was the first of its kind to be enforced under the Basic Law on Public Hazards Counter-measures which was enacted in the Summer of 1967.

The Health and Welfare Minister, Mr. Noboru Saito, in a statement issued on February 12, described the new measure as the first step toward the prevention of air pollution and said that further efforts would be made to set standards to prevent carbon monoxide gas and noises.

CHINA

A. Clash With Russian Troops

Across Ussuri: China and the Soviet Union accused each other on March 16 of having provoked another border clash the previous day. (Account of earlier clash appeared on page 8872).

Russia accused China of using troops in infantry regiment strength to attack a Russian-held island in the frozen River Ussuri.

An infantry regiment can number up to 2,000 men.

At least one officer of the Soviet frontier guard forces and an undisclosed number of other men died in the fighting, which lasted for seven hours. According to the Russians, the Chinese used artillery and mortars in the assault.

Maj-Gen. Vasily Lobanov, the border guard commander-in-chief of the Pacific frontier district, told Soviet correspondents in Vladivostok that the Chinese attack against Damansky island (which the Chinese call Chen Pao) began at 9.45 a.m, local time. Tass quoted the General as saying that the Chinese came in "wave after wave. Every intrusion was accompanied by artillery and mortar fire. The provocateurs fielded up to an infantry regiment with support units against the Soviet frontier guards. They tried to seize the island and wipe out the Soviet troops". At first, the Chinese managed to penetrate the island under cover of artillery and mortar fire from their bank of the River. Once on the island, they opened fire on Soviet frontier guards stationed there since a previous clash on March 2, when 31 Russians died.

"In spite of the numerical superiority and strong fire of the enemy, the frontier guards repelled the attack and drove the Chinese from the island", Gen. Lobanov added.

In Moscow, a crowd of about 200 people gathered outside the Chinese Embassy soon after mid-day. Groups of youths shouted slogans and waved their fists, and one threw a stone through a window. The groups dispersed soon afterwards.

A Chinese Embassy official delivered copies of China's counter-protest over the incident to Western news agency offices in Moscow. He also handed over a well-printed map, illustrating China's claim to the disputed island. A caption to the map said that, even under the "unegual treaty" by which Imperial China ceded vast areas of the Pacific sea-board region to Tsarist Russia in 1860, the island was regarded as Chinese. Vladivostok and Khabarovsk, the two main cities in the area claimed by Peking, were given both their Russian and Chinese names on the map. Vladivostok was marked as Haichenwei and Khabarovsk as Poli.

Chinese Version:

The Chinese version, issued by the New China News Agency, stated that "dozens of tanks and armoured vehicles and large numbers of armed troops had crossed the frozen Ussuri and entered Chinese territory at 4 a.m.

"They occupied the middle part and southern end of Chen Pao island. At this point the Russian forces encountered Chinese border patrols, who called on them to withdraw. The Russians then opened fire, but the Chinese rose in self-defence and dealt head-on blows to the intruders."

In Peking, the Foreign Ministry summoned the Soviet Charge d'Affaires to receive an official protest, but the Russian diplomat "rejected the meeting without justification."

Naval Preparations:

Peking Radio reported earlier on March 12 that units of the North China Sea fleet were completing preparations to oppose new Soviet provocations after the recent armed clash in Manchuria.

Quoting an article by "all members" of the fleet, the broadcast said that they had increased patrolling of the Chinese naval base at Port Arthur and other areas along the north-east coast. "The invaders had better beware lest they meet with heavy blows".

Since the clash on March 2 at Chen Pao island, the fleet had been working to complete plans to smash Soviet aggressive ambitions, the article said. It claimed that the clash had followed troubles "provoked many times by the Soviet revisionists" in Sinkiang and other frontier regions of China.

Background:

The Amur and Ussuri River area remains vaguely demarcated, according to Peking. Significantly, a 1964 publication of the Chinese Foreign Language Press, entitled A Concise Geography of China by Jen Yu-ti, left the Amur River boundary undefined.

The existing, disputed Sino-Soviet border was basically fixed by accords which Peking now terms "unequal treaties." They were signed between expanding Tsarist Russia and the declining Chinese Manchu dynasty in Aigun (1858), Peking (1860), Tarbagatai (1864) and Ili (1881). (Peking rarely mentions the Nerchinsk Treaty of 1689 in which China came out on top.)

As a result of these agreements, Russia gained control of the Amur-Ussuri line in the east, as well as large Chinese-claimed tracts in Central Asia, totalling some 2,162,368 square miles.

Russia later moved further south into Manchuria and fought Japanese forces there. Japan withdrew from Manchuria at the end of World War II; Russia finally fell back to the Amur-Ussuri line in the 1950's, after the Communist regime emerged in China.

Chinese concern over the "unequal treaties" was voiced long before the communists finally seized control of the country in 1936. Mr. Mao Tse-tung reportedly told American journalist Edgar Snow in Yenan of his intention to recover "all our lost territories."

Mr. Mao did not reveal his plans, but in April, 1964, the Chinese delegation to the eighth congress of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers in Budapest advocated China's right to alter existing State frontiers by force if necessary under the "principle of respecting State sovereignty and territorial integrity."

In July, 1964, Mr. Mao reportedly told a visiting Japanese Socialist Party delegation: "About 100 years ago, the area to the east of Lake Baikal became Russian territory, and since then Vladivostok, Khabarovsk, Kamchatka and other areas have become Soviet territory. We have not yet pressed our account for this list."

Peking's anxiety over her "lost territories" was further emphasized by the Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi, in May, 1966, when he reportedly told a group of visiting Scandinavian journalists that the Russians had annexed a total of 932,055 square miles of Chinese territory." Beyond that, he accused the Russians of adopting an "expansionist policy" and of refusing to settle the issue on the basis of abrogation of "unequal treaties."

For its part, the Soviet Union has invested huge capital and other resources in these border areas in the form of railroads, factories, reservoirs and people. For instance, the populations of Alma Ata, in the west and Vladivostok, in the east, have reportedly become predominantly Russian.

Some of the border areas are considered potentially rich in mineral resources. Significantly, Moscow Press reports have told of the recent discovery of huge coal deposits in the Bikin River area, not far from the scene of the recent border clash.

B. Deterioration In Relations With UAR: A Beirut despatch in The Times (London) on March 18 said that relations between Egypt (UAR) and China, which had soured after Egypt refused to return a Chinese official who defected to Russia while in Egypt early in 1968, had deteriorated further.

Egypt had alleged that the Chinese mission in Cairo gave active support to the student revolt in November, 1968.

The Egyptians, according to the report, made the allegations privately to the Chinese Ambassador, Mr. Huang Hua, claiming that the Chinese gave the rebel students financial support to stage the Alexandria demonstration in which thousands of rioters rampaged through the city, looting and destroying. There were more than 20 deaths.

The Chinese were also alleged to have supplied the students, whose tone from the outset was strongly Marxist, with printing facilities to produce their manifestos which denounced the regime and demanded widespread reforms.

Although the latest incident was only one in a long line of problems affecting Sino-Egyptian relations, the report said its roots lay in the wider conflict between the Soviet Union and the Chinese.

An important cause of the present situation was the arrival in Cairo in February, 1968 of Mr. Kuan Yu-chen, an official of the Chinese Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Committee. He had immediately telephoned to the Soviet Embassy asking for political asylum and was taken from his hotel by Egyptian security men, who managed to rescue him from Chinese Red Guards.

As UAR has no extradition arrangements with China, she did not accede to her request for Mr. Kuan's extradition, and confirmed that the Japanese passport on which he had been travelling was valid. The Chinese called for his return and the return of important documents he was carrying, but it was said, he had left for Moscow.

C. Trade Pact With Yugoslavia: According to an announcement from Peking on March 19, China and Yugoslavia had signed a Trade and Payments Agreement two days earlier.

No other details were given.

The announcement said the Agreement was signed by Mr. Liu Hsi-wen, Assistant Minister for Foreign Trade, and Mr. A. Ikonomovski, head of the Yugoslav trade delegation and Assistant Secretary for Foreign Trade of the Yugoslav Government.

China's imports from and exports to Yugoslavia in 1967 were of the value of $0.97 million and $14.19 million respectively.

Since 1964, Sino-Yugoslav trade had been steadily increasing. China's exports to Yugoslavia had increased by more than 10 times in 1967 compared to the figure for the previous year.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Foreign Trade Policy; Tentative Agreement With Ceylon On Kachchativu; State Budgets; Nagaland Ministry.

A. Foreign Trade (Import) Policy For 1969-70: The Foreign Trade Policy—hitherto known as import policy—for 1969-70 announced on March 31 provided for the import of six more items through the State Trading Corporation and the Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation. The items are copra, mutton tallow, soyabean oil, palm oil, cork goods and sodium nitrite.

The import policy is essentially export-oriented. Hence the change in its nomenclature and it will now be called Foreign Trade Policy. Though it contains a mixture of concessions and restrictions for private trade, it is essentially a continuation of the current year's policy which has been rated as the most successful in recent years.

Exports in 1968-69 were the highest and imports and the trade deficit the lowest in the whole decade, according to Mr. K. B. Lall, Commerce Secretary. It was, therefore, only natural, he said, that in broad terms this "carrot and stick" policy be continued in the first year of the Fourth Plan.

The policy, which was presented to Parliament by Mr. B. R. Bhagat, Minister of Foreign Trade and Supply, on March 31 put 316 more items on the banned list of imports and placed some restrictions on the import of another 129 items whose import by actual users was allowed without restrictions. The quotas of established importers in 19 other items have been reduced. But where it is essential in the interest of exports, the import of banned items will be allowed.

The policy of according favoured treatment to 59 priority industries will be continued. But the majority of the units belonging to 10 priority industries selected for special treatment may have their import quotas cut in the coming year for failing to keep the commitment of exporting five per cent of their produce.

In a broadcast later over All-India Radio, Mr. Bhagat said: "Our exporters have succeeded in winning the confidence of foreign importers in the quality of our products and of our capacity to deliver them in accordance with the terms of sales contract".

The new policy provides several fresh incentives to export. Established export houses, which were so far allowed only to export and not to import, will now be able to function as general trading houses engaged in both exports and imports like their counterparts in the West.

These houses will be allowed to build ready stocks of essential industrial materials. It will help manufacturer-exporters to draw their "off-the-shelf" import requirements from the export houses and to reduce the time lag in deliveries.

The Government will give the export houses foreign exchange to build up their initial stocks. Thereafter they will have to replenish them against the import licences of the actual users.

Another innovation planned is the registration of long-term export contracts so that these contracts are not adversely affected by the annual changes in the foreign trade policy.

The new policy also contains measures to liberalize the supply of financial, technical and managerial assistance to exporters.

B. Indo-Ceylon Tentative Agreement On Kachchativu Island: India and Ceylon agreed on March 17 to refrain from taking any administrative action to alter the status quo or buttress their respective claims to Kachchativu in the Palk Straits during the Easter festival, pending a peaceful settlement of the minor territorial dispute.

It was decided that neither country will send any uniformed policemen or Customs officials, or resort to aerial reconnaissance or naval patrolling of the adjacent waters during the four-day St. Anthony's festival in the third week of March when pilgrims from India and Ceylon go to Kachchativu to worship at the local Roman Catholic church.

Last year, Ceylon sent a police contingent and a Customs squad to regulate the flow of pilgrims from both countries, Ceylonese aircraft and naval boats also patrolled the southern side of the Palk Straits to ensure that no illegal immigration or smuggling took place.

But now it was agreed that there would be only plain-cloths policemen to maintain order and regulate the movement of pilgrims. The Customs and health officials would operate from their respective territories as the pilgrims proceeded to Kachchativu and returned home.

C. Andhra Pradesh Budget (Vote On Account): The Andhra Pradesh Budget for 1969-70 presented by the Chief Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, to the State Assembly in Hyderabad on March 3 disclosed a deficit of Rs. 8.5 crores on revenue account.

Mr. Reddy proposed no new taxes because he hoped that the entire revenue gap would be covered by the award of the Fifth Finance Commission.

For the present, he said, he was only seeking a vote on account for six months until September, 1969 as in the meantime, the award of the Finance Commission would have been released. By that time, the Fourth Five-Year Plan would also have been finalized and the Telengana surpluses worked out.

The Budget estimates provide for a total revenue of Rs. 279.91 crores and an expenditure of Rs. 288.47 crores. The total estimated capital output is Rs. 40.19 crores. A sum of Rs. 18.11 crores is provided for disbursements as loans and advances. The year is expected to close with a minus cash balance of Rs. 45.94 crores.

Interim Award:

Under the Interim Award of the Finance Commission, he said, what Andhra Pradesh would get for the next financial year (1969-70) by way of its share of taxes and duties and grants would not even marginally cover the revenue gap.

In its final memorandum to the Finance Commission, he said, the State Government had urged larger devolution of taxes and duties and increase of grants-in-aid to cover the minimum requirements, including the committed expenditure in respect of the past three years' annual Plans.

The State's draft Fourth Plan envisaged a total outlay of Rs. 650 crores. Central assistance had yet to be settled as some issues regarding allocation of outlays between the Central and State sectors remained unresolved.

Not to speak of the size of the Fourth Plan, the annual Plan for 1969-70 was still to be finalized. Because of the particularly difficult resources position, the outlay on the annual Plan had been restricted to Rs. 84.87 crores, which, according to him, was the minimum required to meet spillover commitments, specially under power and irrigation.

The Budget makes a provision of Rs. 7 crores for the special development of the Telengana area and Rs. 6 crores for the Pochampad project in the area. The latter provision was double of what was allotted last year.

D. Bihar Legislature—Governor's Address: Addressing the joint session of the Bihar Legislature in Patna on March 13, the State Governor, Mr. Nityanand Kanungo, outlined the Government's programme for the year.

He welcomed the members to the new Assembly and expressed satisfaction at the peaceful conduct of the mid-term poll in the State.

He said that his Government was determined to maintain law and order at all costs. It was then only that the development schemes could be executed efficiently. He expressed the hope that all sections of the people would come forward to lend their helping hand in the making of a prosperous Bihar.

He added that a Regional Development Council would be constituted for advising the Government on the all-round development of Chotanagpur and Santal Parganas in view of their special problems.

E. Bihar Budget: The Bihar Budget for 1969-70, presented to the Legislative Assembly in Patna by the Chief Minister, Mr. Harihar Singh, (who is also Finance Minister) on March 13, revealed a net deficit of Rs. 41.72 crores, including Rs. 31 crores on revenue account.

He indicated that the cumulative deficit in the Consolidated Fund at the end of the financial year might soar to Rs. 101.92 crores.

He pointed out that the current financial year was likely to end with a deficit of Rs. 60.20 crores and said that part of the deficit would be covered by public loans to be floated in the next financial year.

In keeping with the Planning Commission's suggestions, the Government was also considering a proposal to float rural debentures. The small savings drive would be intensified to raise additional resources.

He did not suggest any new taxation measures.

The Government also proposed to start lotteries with a view to raising additional resources.

The Budget proposals for the next financial year envisaged revenue receipts of Rs. 180.75 crores. Revenue expenditure was estimated at Rs. 211.88 crores. The net deficit on revenue account would thus amount to Rs. 31.13 crores.

The additional deficit of Rs. 10.59 crores on capital budget would increase the net deficit to Rs. 41.72 crores during the next financial year.

The capital receipts for the next financial year were estimated at Rs.

211.50 crores as against an expenditure of Rs. 222.09 crores.

F. Goa Budget: The Goa Chief Minister, Mr. Dayanand Bandodkar, who also holds the Finance portfolio, presented to the Goa, Daman and Diu Assembly the Budget of the Union Territory for 1969-70.

He said the receipts on revenue account were estimated at Rs. 59.6 crores and expenditure on revenue account would be Rs. 112.3 crores, of which Rs. 19.5 crores would be for Plan schemes and Rs. 92.7 crores for non-Plan expenditure.

No new taxes were proposed for the time being.

G. Gujarat Assembly—Governor's Address: Addressing the opening session of the Gujarat Legislative Assembly in Ahmedabad on February 3, the Governor, Mr. Shriman Narayan, said that the State Government had requested the Government of India to refer the Narmada project dispute to a Tribunal under the Inter-State Water Disputes Act, 1956.

He added, however, that the prospects of a negotiated solution of the problem appeared bleak.

Mr. Narayan referred to the Government's efforts to provide, improve and extend irrigation facilities in the State and said that steps had been taken to ensure that the Ukai Dam was completed on schedule by June, 1971.

About the vagaries of weather and the unprecedented floods in August, 1968, he said the Government had decided to conduct surveys and investigations on other rivers. A special organization would prepare schemes for flood control and protection. He sought the co-operation of upstream States in this.

He hoped that the Central Government would soon clear the Dharoi project which, besides raising the irrigation potential, would supply water to Ahmedabad city and Gandhinagar.

The aims of the industrial policy, for which the Government had set up a high-power Commission to provide speedy directions, he said, were the creation of an optimum infra-structure, appropriate institutions and package assistance modulated to the needs of different sectors. "Our experiment in the joint sector, as exemplified in the Gujarat Fertilizers Company, has not only paid off but strengthened our belief in the significant role which the sector can play in the economy."

Despite the food deficit in the State, he went on, Gujarat had become one of the leading States in per-acre yield of foodgrains.

I. Haryana Budget: Presenting the Haryana Budget for 1969-70 to the Legislative Assembly in Chandigarh on February 10, the State Finance Minister, Mrs. Om Prabha Jain, proposed no new taxes and revealed a deficit of Rs. 1.45 crores on revenue account.

The overall deficit during the year was, however, expected to be reduced to Rs. 1.24 crores because of loans and fresh public debt. The net deficit was being left uncovered for the present.

She noted that the budgetary position at the end of 1968-69 would be a distinct improvement over the earlier estimates. The current year (1968-69) which had opened with a minus balance of Rs. 7.71 crores and should have closed according to the earlier estimates with a deficit of Rs. 8.16 crores, would now close with a deficit of Rs. 6.50 crores. Even this gap would be narrowed after credit was taken for a loan of Rs. 1.40 crores from the Centre in respect of the rural electrification scheme implemented in 1967-68.

The improvement in the 1968-69 position was mainly due to strict control over non-Plan expenditure and better realisation of Government dues.

The total minus balance in the State exchequer at the end of 1969-70 would be Rs. 7.74 crores.

Revenue receipts in 1969-70 were estimated at Rs. 78.34 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 79.79 crores.

Capital expenditure during the next year would be about Rs. 7.33 crores.

The tax revenue of Rs. 42.28 crores would mainly come from sales-tax Rs. 12.76 crores, State excise duties Rs. 8.60 crores, share from Central taxes Rs. 8.44 crores, other taxes Rs. 1.10 crores and land revenue Rs. 1.48 crores.

The net expenditure, on the other hand, had increased by Rs. 2.46 crores during the period. Raising of new resources by taxation and other economy measures had brought Himachal Pradesh to a much happier position as regards its income and establishment charges in which it was in surplus by Rs. 52,00,000 now as against a deficit of Rs. 2.58 crores last year (1968-69).

P. Madhya Pradesh Assembly—Governor's Address: Opening the Budget session of the Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly in Bhopal on February 17, the Governor, Mr. K. C. Reddy stressed that Madhya Pradesh had no dispute with any other neighbouring State in regard to such major rivers as the Narmada, because the dams that were to be built on these rivers and the water that would thus be made available would remain within this State.

After the Third Five-Year Plan, he said, 94 irrigation projects were started in 1968-69. Of these, nine would be completed by the end of March, 1969 and 40 more in the course of the next financial year (1969-70).

A directorate of tube-wells had been set up in the State and it had been planned to dig 7,000 shallow wells and tube-wells in the next three years. Besides, 13,000 wells would have been energized by the end of March, 1969 while in the next year, 15,000 new lift pumps would have been installed.

Referring to the dacoity menace, he said, the Government was vigilant about the problem. Q. Madhya Pradesh Budget: The Madhya Pradesh Budget estimates for 1969-70, presented in the Legislative Assembly by the State Finance Minister, Mr. V. S. Pradhan, on February 21 revealed an overall deficit of Rs. 33.93 crores.

The estimated revenue receipts during 1969-70 were Rs. 187.35 crores, while the estimated expenditure was Rs. 210.44 crores.

While leaving uncovered a deficit of Rs. 23.09 crores on revenue account, Mr. Pradhan proposed the introduction of a State-run raffle and enhanced sales-tax on foodgrains and cash crops and water rates to reduce the deficit of Rs. 10.84 crores on other accounts to Rs. 3.99 crores.

He said he was leaving the revenue deficit uncovered in the hope that the Fifth Finance Commission would consider the genuine requirements of the State and bridge this through devolution of Central taxes and make a further grant.

As regards the uncovered gap of Rs. 3.99 crores on other accounts, he said, he proposed to await the presentation of the Central Budget to see whether, as a result, the receipts of the State Government from Central taxes and duties would improve.

He announced the introduction of a State lottery during next year, to yield an income of Rs. 60,00,000 in the next financial year.

He decided to revise the fees under the Motor Vehicles Act and estimated the additional revenue from this at Rs. 10,00,000.

He also announced a steep rise in the rates for the supply of water from Government water works and estimated it would fetch the exchequer Rs. 50,00,000 extra every year. The existing irrigation rates would be raised. There would be an increase in the tax on land growing cash crops. Thus, the land where cotton, groundnut, opium, sugarcane and tobacco were raised, would be liable to a tax of Rs. 4 per acre in place of the existing rate of Rs. 2 per acre. State trading in minor forest produce, which had been decided upon in the past but for which Presidential assent had not been secured, would be brought into force from the next financial year. The measure was expected to yield Rs. 55,00,000 in 1969-70. Fifty per cent of the enhanced dearness allowance granted from March 1, 1969 would be deposited in the Provident Fund accounts of the employees. This would improve the balance in the public accounts of the State by Rs. 1.50 crores.

K. Nehru said that the Government machinery had been adequately strengthened throughout the State in order to consolidate the forces of law and order on a permanent basis and that the situation was normal.

Referring to various measures adopted by the State administration to ward off any possible threat to peace and security, he said: "With the police battalions which the Central Government has placed at our disposal and with raising of our own Nagaland Armed Police, we are now in a position to spread our protective wings throughout the State."

Ansari, said that the State Government proposed to take action on the Khanna Commission's findings against the former Chief Ministers, Mr. Biju Patnaik and Mr. Biren Mitra.

The Government, he said, would take action on the findings which related to the loss suffered by the Government and public sector undertakings by the actions of the two former Chief Ministers and also those relating to their personal and family interests.

He said that the State's Fourth Plan outlay was too inadequate even to implement the schemes on hand. The Planning Commission had suggested an outlay of Rs. 179 crores. The Plan outlay should be at least Rs. 265 crores to achieve a growth rate of 5 per cent during the Fourth Plan period.

Y. Orissa Budget (Vote On Account): The Orissa Budget estimates for 1969-70 presented to the State Assembly in Bhuvaneshwar on March 12 showed a revenue deficit of Rs. 12.28 crores at existing rates of levies and a capital account deficit of Rs. 13.65 crores.

Presenting the Budget, the Chief Minister, Mr. R. N. Singh Deo (who also holds the Finance portfolio), announced that he proposed to reduce the revenue deficit through measures to bring in Rs. 2.75 crores.

These proposals included imposition of a tax on bus fares, a toll on expressway, revision of sales tax and motor vehicles tax, rationalization of assessment of agricultural income-tax and of the rates of stamp duties, increase in the rate of land cess and collection of "salami" for leasing Government land.

Taking into account this additional income, the revenue receipts in the Budget were shown as Rs. 121.38 crores and expenditure was put at Rs. 130.91 crores, resulting in a deficit of Rs. 9.53 crores.

The forecast of a surplus of Rs. 88,00,000 in the current year's Budget (1968-69) thus turned out to be wide of the mark. The revised estimates revealed that the year would close with a deficit of Rs. 12.73 crores. To make good this gap, the State Government had asked the Government of India for ad hoc assistance.

New schemes worth Rs. 40.61 crores were provided in the Budget estimates, both on revenue and capital accounts.

Z. Pondicherry Elections—DMK Forms Ministry: No party was able to secure an absolute majority in the mid-term elections to the Pondicherry Assembly held on March 10, though the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam emerged as the largest single party.

In its first attempt to enter the Assembly, DMK secured 15 seats in the 30-member House, while its ally, the Right Communist Party, was returned in three places.

The DMK and the Right Communists contested the elections with an electoral understanding.

The Congress, which had fielded 30 candidates, had secured only ten seats. In the last General Election held in the Union Territory in 1964, it had secured 22 seats. Its strength got depleted in the Assembly later due to large-scale defections, resulting in President's Rule being imposed in September, 1968.

Independents won two seats—one in Mahe on the Kerala coast and the other in Yenam on the Andhra coast.

Among the notable successes was that of the former Chief Minister, Mr. Farook Maricar, who contested on the DMK ticket from the Calapeth constituency. He defeated his Congress rival, Mr. Murugesa Mudaliar, by a margin of 1,400 votes in a straight contest.

The only Muslim League candidate—Mr. A. M. Hameed Maricar—from Karaikal North constituency was defeated by Mr. Jambulingam (C). The League was a constituent of the front consisting of the DMK and CPI.

The biggest defeat was that of the former Congress Chief Minister, Mr. V. Venkatasubba Reddiar, in the Nettapacom constituency at the hands of a DMK candidate, Mr. D. Ramachandran and a relation of Mr. Reddiar, by a margin of only 152 votes.

Mr. V. K. Subbiah, Right Communist leader, retained his seat from Modeliarpeth (Pondicherry) by defeating his sole Congress rival, Mr. A. S. Janakiraman, by a majority of 1,839 votes.

The other Right Communist elected was Dr. N. Ranganathan from the Mellithope constituency (Pondicherry).

According to the Chief Election Commissioner, 70 to 72 per cent of the electorate exercised their franchise in Pondicherry region and 65 to 70 per cent in Karaikal region.

The total number of voters in this Union Territory is 229,000.

Mr. Farook Maricar (32) was unanimously elected leader of the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam Legislature Party in Pondicherry on March 13.

A. Budget Passed By Lower House: The House of Representatives passed in the first week of March the 6,739,500 million yen Budget for 1969. The vote was 251 for and 183 against.

The Lower House approval came about two hours after it had been passed by a majority vote at the House Budget Committee.

The Budget, completed by the Government on January 14 and introduced in the Diet late that month, puses portended an early dissolution for final action.

The Budget, which covered the general account of the Government, represented a 15.8 per cent expansion over the 1968 Budget.

The Opposition parties fired a broadside against the 1969 Budget following its passage through the House. They said the "expansionary Budget" would accelerate the upward price spiral and put a heavier burden on the people.

During the Budget Committee debate, the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, rejected Opposition allegations that the Liberal Democratic Party's decision to prepare legislation for restoring order to university campuses portends an early dissolution of the Lower House.

The Budget was automatically enacted 30 days after it was passed by the Lower House.

The group concerned consists mainly of students and a few graduates in their early twenties, and is led and mainly financed by the Japanese writer, Mr. Yukio Mishima, the most active Right-wing intellectual in Japan.

Some 50 members of this group, with Mr. Mishima at their head, were recently trained at a camp on the snow-covered slopes of Mt Fuji in basic fieldcraft and "guerrilla tactics" as Mr. Mishima describes them. They trained with the latest 1964-type Japanese rifle.

All these students are members of Mr. Mishima's Tate No Kai (Shield Society), a kind of private army whose self-proclaimed function is to act as a "nation guard" with a responsibility to "protect the Emperor", possibly by taking action against Left-wing students in the future.

Tens of thousands of Japanese civilians have stayed for short periods at Japanese army camps since the War, largely because they provide cheap camping holidays and a change of air. Mr. Mishima's group has been afforded quite unusual privileges, however. No other civilians are permitted to handle firearms in the camps. No other large group is permitted to train for a month at a time. No other group is receiving anything like the concentrated attention and professional care given to the Tate No Kai.

Mr. Mishima prepared the way for training his "army" by negotiations with the military authorities, especially the Defence Agency, two years ago. The principal concession he sought from the head of the Agency at the time was on an agreement to permit Tate No Kai students to handle firearms. After a year of negotiations, the matter was finally agreed, but Tate No Kai members are still not allowed to fire rifles. One striking feature of the Tate No Kai is their splendid khaki and green uniforms, paid for by Mr. Mishima and designed by him.

C. Progress Of Aircraft Industry: Japan's aircraft industry continues to have a steady growth.

It received a big boost in 1954 with the establishment of the Self-Defence Force. A steady flow of orders for defence purposes started coming in and military planes became the mainstay of the industry. To start with, most of these planes were of foreign design built under licensing agreements with Western manufacturers.

In recent years, however, the industry has come up with pure domestic makes, except engines and propellers, such as the YS-11 and MU-2. The former is a turbo-prop passenger transport plane, and the latter, a midget utility plane—"Flying Executive Suite"—both of which are winning high acclaim in the domestic as well as overseas markets.

Development of the YS-11, in particular, spells the most significant phase in the post-War history of the industry. Built with industry-wide-co-operation and Government support, the 60-seater enabled the industry to get rid of whole-sale dependence on military orders. It has also helped it advance into the overseas market.

Work on the basic design began in May, 1957. The semi-governmental Nihon Aeroplane Manufacturing Co. (NAMC) was established in 1957 and took over the task of management for manufacturing the YS-11. After eight years of work on the drawing board and the most rigid tests ever known, the No. 1 trial YS-11 successfully made a test flight in August, 1962. In designing the YS-11, the basic concept was a faster, bigger and more economic successor to the then out-dated, yet still tremendously popular, Douglas DC-3.

Since the YS-11 was first commissioned for regular domestic service about four years ago, the sales of the aircraft have steadily increased owing to its excellent STOL (short take-off and landing) performance, large transport capacity and low operational cost.

Since turboprop engines are used, the YS-11 is highly economical for short-distance flights. Moreover, because of a large wing area, the plane can take off and land on a short runway with as many as 60 passengers aboard. And compared with other planes of a similar class, it ensures a wider profit margin. YS-11 has thus caught on well among foreign airlines, which are impressed with its low frequency of troubles, ability to take off and land easily on the short runways of provincial airports, and large seats for passengers.

D. New Okinawa Law On Foreign Investments: The Government of the Ryukyu Islands on March 4 enforced a controversial law to regulate foreign investments in Okinawa in defiance of continued opposition by the US Civil Administration.

The law limits foreign investments in Okinawan industries up to a maximum of 5 per cent alien ownership of any local enterprise in case of foreign individuals and 35 per cent in case of foreign corporations.

It was passed by the Ryukyu Legislature and signed into law in September, 1968 by Mr. Seiho Matsuoka, then Chief Executive of the Government of the Ryukyu Islands.

Mr. Chobyo Yara, Chief Executive, who succeeded Mr. Matsuoka in December, signed an order to enforce the law after turning down a request by the US Civil Administrator, Mr. Stanley S. Carpenter, for halting its enforcement.

PAKISTAN

A. Exit Of F-M. Ayub Khan—Gen. A. M. Yahya Khan Takes Over – Martial Law Proclaimed: F-M. Mohammed Ayub Khan (61) stepped down from power on March 25 in the face of a massive wave of bloodshed and lawlessness which had swept the country for nearly five months.

In a broadcast to the nation, he announced that he was standing down as President after a decade of rule and was handing over power to the Army Commander-in-Chief, Gen. Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan (52).

With his voice showing slight emotion, F-M. Ayub Khan said that the country was deteriorating day by day and its economy had also been shattered.

A separate announcement said that F-M. Ayub Khan was going on three months' leave, but it was stated on March 31 that he had left for Swat to stay with the Khan of Swat, who is related to him.

Gen. Yahya Khan, with the backing of the Army, Navy and Air Force, immediately proclaimed Martial Law throughout the country.

Gen. Yahya Khan, like President Ayub Khan, is a Pathan from N-W Frontier.

On March 31, Gen. Yahya Khan took over as President of Pakistan, within seven days of his becoming the Chief Martial Law Administrator. He is to function as President till a new Constitution is framed by elected representatives.

[In his broadcast as the Chief Martial Law Administrator on March 26, he had said: "I have no ambition other than the creation of conditions conducive to the establishment of a constitutional Government."]

He said in a proclamation that he "has assumed office" of Presidentship since the day Mr. Ayub left the scene.

An official announcement said it had become necessary for the Chief Martial Law Administrator to assume the office of Presidentship for "proper functioning of national and international practices and usages."

The proclamation said that while laying down the office of Presidentship, Mr. Ayub Khan had "'handed over all powers" to him as Chief Martial Law Administrator and Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and that the assumption of office of President by him "became effective from the 25th of March."

F-M. Ayub Khan's Exit:

F-M. Ayub Khan's dramatic exit from Pakistan's politics came after weeks of near anarchy in East Pakistan in particular, with gangs of men roaming about summarily executing local officials, mostly supporters of F-M Ayub Khan's Muslim League Party, and peasants in a state of virtual revolt.

In the northern parts of East Pakistan, people's courts were formed, "wrong-doers" sentenced to death and quickly crucified, beaten to death or thrown into fires.

F-M. Ayub Khan had appealed passionately for order in his broadcast and made eleventh-hour concessions to his opponents by replacing the Governors of both East and West Pakistan.

He said that a strong Centre was essential for the very existence of Pakistan. He could not accept the demand of some Opposition parties that the Centre should be weak and the country should be divided into two parts. This was contrary to the very concept of Pakistan.

He recalled the decisions taken at the recent (March 10) Round Table Conference with Opposition leaders and said there were two unanimous demands and he accepted those demands—namely, a federal parliamentary form of Government and direct elections on the basis of adult franchise.

He had accepted them because, he thought, a strong Centre would be possible even by accepting these demands, but he was not prepared to make the Centre weak.

In a mood of complete despair, he said that if the National Assembly met in such a situation "it may be a target of bloodshed."

He said it pained him to announce that industrial and farm production had touched a new low and the economy had been severely crippled.

F-M. Mohammed Ayub Khan came to power in a bloodless military coup on October 27, 1958, ousting President Iskander Mirza. He ruled for ten years as a military strong man virtually without opposition.

On February 21, 1969, he bowed to a wave of unrest over his rule and pledged not to contest Presidential elections due before March 23, 1970 and to implement sweeping democratic reforms.

Despite agreement between him and Right-wing politicians at a Rawalpindi Round Table Conference on March 10, violence—which was believed to have taken more than 250 lives since November, 1968—continued, particularly in Pakistan's Eastern Wing.

Before President Ayub Khan's dramatic announcement, the situation in East Pakistan, where a wave of mob killings had already led to troops being called in, appeared to be returning to normal. But the country was gripped by a wave of labour unrest and industry was virtually paralysed, crippling the economy.

Gen. Yahya Khan's Proclamation:

Gen. Yahya Khan announced the dissolution of the National and Provincial Assemblies and placed the two Wings of the country under the charge of two administrators—Lt.-Gen. Mohammed Ataqur Rahman for West Pakistan and Maj-Gen. Muzaffaruddin for the Eastern Province.

He appointed three Deputy Martial Law Administrators from the three wings of the Defence Services —Lt.-Gen. Abdul Hamid Khan, Vice-Admiral Ahsan and Air Marshal Noor Khan.

Gen Yahya Khan said in a Proclamation: "I, General Khan Mohammed Yahya Khan, Commander-in-Chief of the Army, do hereby declare that the whole of Pakistan shall be under Martial Law with immediate effect and I assume the powers of Chief Martial Administrator and the command of all the armed forces of Pakistan.

"The Martial Law Regulations and orders shall be made by me as the Chief Martial Law Administrator or any officer or authority empowered by me and shall be published in such a manner as is convenient.

"Any person contravening Martial Law Regulations or orders shall be liable to such penalties as may be prescribed by the Regulations."

The Martial Law Regulations provided for the setting up of military courts for trial and punishment of any offences for the contravention of Martial Law regulations or orders.

The Proclamation said that "the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan shall stand abrogated. Persons holding offices of President, members of the President's Council of Ministers, Governors of Provinces and members of their Council of Ministers shall cease to hold office with immediate effect. The National Assembly and the two Provincial Assemblies shall stand dissolved.

"Notwithstanding the abrogation of the Constitution and such regulations or orders given by the Chief Martial Law Administrator, all laws including Ordinances, Martial Law regulations, orders, rules, or such regulations, notifications and other instruments in force immediately before the abrogation of the Constitution shall continue to be in force.

"All courts and tribunals in existence immediately before the abrogation of the Constitution shall continue and exercise all their powers and jurisdictions which they would have exercised had the Constitution not been abrogated.

"All persons who immediately before the abrogation of the Constitution were in office such as the Chief Justice, judges of the Supreme Court or of any High Court, the Comptroller and Auditor-General or others who had been in the service of Pakistan as defined in the Constitution shall, unless the Chief Martial Law Administrator otherwise directs, continue in the said office or in the said service on the terms and conditions as were applicable to them and shall continue to exercise their powers and perform their functions.

"Unless the Chief Martial Law Administrator otherwise directs, all other officers and authorities appointed, constituted or established under the Constitution shall continue and shall exercise all powers and functions which they may have exercised and performed had the Constitution not been abrogated."

Gen. Yahya Khan issued 25 regulations and four orders under the Martial Law.

Under the new orders, holding of public meetings and demonstrations without prior permission and hartals and lock-outs was banned.

Gen. Yahya issued his first decree under the Martial Law ordering all civilian fire-arms and ammunition turned over to the police within 24 hours.

In his first broadcast, he said the armed forces had no political ambitions. He promised early return to "democracy" based on adult franchise — when conditions were normal. The armed forces had to do their duty and "save the country from disaster. The armed forces belong to the people. They have no political ambitions and will not prop up any individual or party."

After initial excitement over F-M Ayub Khan's sudden decision, Karachi appeared peaceful—as if nothing untoward had happened. Cinemas and restaurants were opened and doing their normal good business.

The East Pakistan leader, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, also sat quiet in his home in Dacca. The National Awami Party leader, Maulana A. H. Bhashani left for home.

The police arrested 21 labour leaders on the city's industrial area on March 27 on charges of instigating workers to strike—an offence under Martial Law regulations carrying a maximum penalty of 14 years' rigorous imprisonment.

The factory complex in Karachi had been crippled by a week-long strike until Gen. Yahya Khan imposed martial law.

The police also arrested eight people who had gone on a fast, charging them with attempted suicide-

Apart from the Karachi incident, the rest of the country was reported quiet with armed troops and police still keeping a firm grip in towns and cities which had been torn by four months of violent industrial strike and demonstrations against F-M. Ayub Khan's 10-year-old regime.

In what appeared to be a quick return of confidence in Gen. Yahya Khan's handling of the situation, the Karachi stock market showed a sharp recovery, with most stocks regaining losses suxered in the past month.

Throughout the country, ordinary workers, business men and even foreign visitors handed in fire-arms under Martial Law orders requiring the surrender of all weapons. Pathan tribesmen are not covered by the order.

In Karachi, the police estimated that nearly 15,000 pistols, revolvers and rifles were turned in. Among those handing in arms was the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, leader of the Leftist People's Party.

In Lahore, workers went back to work. Hunger-strikers had abandoned their posts and resumed their duties. For the first time in three months roads and streets were without processionists.

In Rawalpindi, tanks rumbled through the streets and kept guard at key Government installations.

A total of 459 Chinese-made tanks were reported outside the Cantonment railway station.

For the first time in many years, a correspondent in Rawalpindi said, office workers arrived punctually at 7-30 a.m.

The Administrator had imposed strict censorship on newspapers. Checkposts on the border have been instructed to keep a watch on "smuggling" of newspapers.

For the first time after the imposition of Martial Law, seven persons were tried by a Court Martial at Tangail on March 27 on charges of defiance of Martial Law regulations.

Military pickets were posted at Dacca, Chittagong and Rajshahi universities and also at the Mymensingh Agriculture College.

Cabinet Members Appointed:

Gen. A. M. Yahya Khan appointed two members of the Ayub Cabinet to advise him on administration on March 27.

The former Foreign Minister, Mr. Arshad Hussain, will advise him on foreign affairs and the former Defence Minister, Vice-Admiral A. R. Khan on defence.

Another former Ayub aide, Mr. Fida Husain, was appointed to advise Gen. Yahya Khan in General Administration and co-ordination.

Gen. Yahya Khan's Career:

Gen. A. M. Yahya Khan became Commander-in-Chief of the Army in 1966.

A stocky professional soldier, he has risen rapidly to the peak of an Army career.

At the age of 34, he became Pakistan's youngest Brigadier and at 40 his nation's youngest General.

For some time, he had been tipped as the man most likely to succeed F-M. Ayub Khan as President.

Born in 1917, a member of the old distinguished Quizibash family of Peshawar, Gen. Yahya Khan was commissioned in 1939 after graduating from Punjab University and the Indian Military Academy.

He was attached first to the Second Battalion of the Worcester Regiment and, after a year, to the Third Battalion of the Baluch Regiment in the North-West Frontier region. During World War II, he served in West Asia and Italy.

After the Indo-Pakistani Partition in 1947, he was promoted to the rank of Colonel, set up the Pakistani Staff College and later took command of various battalions. He became Brigadier in 1951 at the age of 34.

Senior appointments at Corps and GHQ followed until 1957 when he was appointed Chief of the General Staff with the rank of Major-General.

During the Indo-Pakistani conflict in September, 1965, he was in command of an Infantry Division and was awarded the order of Hilal-I-Jura't for his "boldness, determination and devotion to duty."

In 1960, when the capital development authority was instituted, Gen. Yahya Khan was appointed its first Chairman.

He was promoted Lieut-General in March, 1966, and appointed Deputy Commander-in-Chief. He succeeded Gen. Mohammad Musa as Commander-in-Chief of the Army on September 19, 1966, and was promoted to the rank of full General.

Events Before Martial Law—Round Table Conference:

The Round Table Conference between President Ayub Khan and the Opposition leaders had met for two hours on March 10 at Rawalpindi to discuss the Opposition demands for parliamentary system of government, regional autonomy and direct elections on the basis of adult franchise.

This session was the second of the Conference.

On March 12, Air Marshal Asghar Khan had walked out of the conference as a big political row flared over who was to blame for the latest outbreaks of violence in Pakistan.

On March 13, President Ayub Khan had announced that a broad agreement had been reached at the Round Table Conference on direct elections on the basis of adult franchise and a parliamentary system of government.

He told newsmen at the end of the RTC that these decisions would enable the country to "settle down" and that the people would no longer indulge in destructive activities.

The Democratic Action Committee was dissolved on March 13 as Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan, its convener, said that its eight-point programme had been achieved.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, who boycotted the Conference, expressed dissatisfaction at the outcome of the talks and re-iterated his demand for the immediate resignation of President Ayub Khan and the formation of a national care-taker Government.

The National Awami leader, Maulana A. H. Bhashani, who also declined Mr. Ayub Khan's invitation to the RTC, and that the President's acceptance of adult franchise and a parliamentary form of government were an "important step", but the country's problems could be solved only by Islamic socialism. "Political freedom is meaningless without economic independence."

The former East Pakistan Chief Justice, Mr. S. M. Murshed, commented that President Ayub Khan had taken away with one hand what he had given with the other.

On March 16, President Ayub Khan had replaced the West Pakistan Governor, Gen Mohammed Musa, by a civilian, Mr. Yusuf Haroon, to pave the way for a Parliament after almost ten years of military rule.

On March 23, Dr. N. M. Huda was sworn-in as the new Governor of East Pakistan.

Proposed Reforms:

The Law Minister, Mr. S. M. Zafar told a news conference in Rawalpindi on March 17 that Pakistan would have a federal parliamentary government headed by a Prime Minister and a nominal Head of State by March 23, 1970 when President Ayub Khan retired after ruling the country for more than 12 years.

Explaining the provisions of a new Constitutional Amendment Bill proposed to be moved in the National Assembly, Mr. S. M. Zafar said that the tenure of the National and Provincial Assemblies would be five years. The elections would be held in such a manner as to be completed by March 23, 1970 when the President's term expires.

He said that regional autonomy was inherent in the federal system envisaged in the Bill in terms of the decision of the Round Table Conference.

The Bill sought to amend 90 Articles of the present Constitution to incorporate the demoncratic reforms which the Opposition parties wrested from Mr. Ayub Khan in a four-month-long agitation.

The Centre would not be allowed to encroach upon the legislative powers of the Provincial Assemblies. The powers of the Central and Provincial Governments would be listed separately. If there is any dispute it would be decided by courts.

Under the federal system,, the Assemblies would have more financial powers than at present.

The salient points of the proposed Bill were:

(1) Election of National and Provincial Assemblies by direct adult franchise;

(2) Supremacy of the Legislature with power passing from the Presidency to the Prime Minister, who is responsible to Parliament;

(3) The Head of State is only to symbolise the authority of the State and to act on the Prime Minister's advice.

(4) A federal parliamentary system, with regional autonomy and a prohibition on the Centre legislating on provincial subjects. Transgression of each other's subjects by either the Centre or the provinces to be justifiable before the courts.

Pakistan would thus adopt a government pattern on the lines of India's.

Life in Pakistan was paralysed on March 17 by a rash of strikes organized by student bodies, political parties and workers' organizations.

In the Eastern Wing, where the strike seemed completely successful, traffic by air, rail and road came to a standstill. Ten towns of the West Wing, including Rawalpindi, Lahore, Hyderabad and Peshwar went without electric power for two hours.

At Multan, about 800 km from Karachi, six workers were injured when watchmen opened fire to prevent marchers from entering a cotton mill. Six watchmen were injured by stones thrown by workers.

Reports of incidents poured in from a number of other places where big workers' rallies were held.

Maulana A. H. Bhashani, chief of the pro-Peking National Awami Party, had given notice of a labour uprising in Pakistan.

The Pakistan Government had ordered troop movements from West Pakistan to East Pakistan in a bid to suppress the people's revolt there.

Two ships, the Ocean Endurance and the Ocean Energy, were chartered for transporting troops and tanks and other military equipment from Karachi to East Pakistan.

Radio Pakistan had stated on March 21 that about 39 persons were killed in looting and arson in Dacca during the previous two weeks.

It quoted official sources as saying that anti-social elements had taken advantage of political conditions to commit acts of lawlessness.

It said that 45 "goondas" had been arrested and that police and East Pakistan Rifles had opened a special control room.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mr. Dinesh Singh On Foreign Policy; Shift In USSR Attitude; New Chief Of Air Staff; Hostile Nagas Captured; New Madhya Pradesh Ministry; New Bihar Ministry; Irrigation Commission And River Disputes Tribunals Set Up; Telengana Safeguards Issue.

A. Mr. Dinesh Singh On Foreign Policy: Replying to demands for grants for the External Affairs Ministry in Lok Sabha on April 8, the Minister of External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh, supported the Soviet proposal for a peaceful solution of the Sino-Soviet border dispute and re-iterated India's policy of opposition to the use of force to change unilaterally historical borders.

He rejected the view that India should demand Tibet's Independence.

He said it would not be proper to make such a demand from the Indian soil as it would amount to interference in the affairs of a foreign country.

He assured members, however, that the Government would consider taking up the question of the suppression of human rights in Tibet at UN.

Referring to India's relations with China, he sought to lay emphasis on peaceful negotiations. "We do not wish to adopt Chinese methods even with China". India was prepared to discuss any matter, including trade with China, but was equally prepared to defend her borders against Chinese aggression.

He hoped that China would not be able to resist the winds of friendship blowing in the world today. While India might be moving slowly towards development, China, in her desire for violent change, was needing perpetual revolutions, and even wanted to export them.

He added that China's attempt to use certain misguided elements in India for subversion had been effectively met by the Government.

He also referred to the situation, in Pakistan and defended the Government's policy against Opposition charges that India had failed to welcome the democratic movement in Pakistan. He hastened to add that as the Minister for External Affairs he had to work under certain limitations and it was not possible always to lay down the grand design to be followed towards any country.

His speech was prefaced by a reference of the economic situation in the developing countries.

He stressed the need for international economic co-operation and reminded the Opposition that the hallmark of Indian foreign policy was to serve the country's national interests within the family of nations and he felt that his critics had failed to suggest an alternative to this.

The Government's policy in the Indian Ocean area, he said, was not to replace British power by planting the Navy there, but to aid the development of the economies of the countries in the region to enable them to defend themselves against foreign aggression.

Re-iterating the need for peaceful co-existence and non-interference in the affairs of other countries, he said that greater economic content would be introduced in India's foreign policy. With this view, the Government had decided to strengthen the Economic Division of the Ministry.

He referred in this connexion to the various Trade Agreements between India and several other developing countries, and added that he planned to visit Iran early in May to explore possibilities of closer co-operation.

B. Soviet Arms To Pakistan—Sardar Swaran Singh On Shift In USSR Attitude Towards India: The Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, freely admitted for the first time in the Lok Sabha on April 9 that there had been a shift in the Soviet Union's policy towards Pakistan after the Tashkent Agreement of January, 1966.

But, he added a rider that Russia had been assuring India that she wanted friendly relations with Pakistan but that would "never be at the cost of India."

Sardar Swaran Singh was replying to a half-hour debate on the Soviet supply of arms to Pakistan.

He said that India had explained more than once to USSR that any accrual of arms to Pakistan would only make that country more intransigent and render any normalization of India-Pakistan relations more difficult. This aspect was discussed by him during his visit to the Soviet Union and re-iterated when the Soviet Defence Minister visited India. "We have, however, to admit that we have not been able to convince USSR of the greater danger that is implicit in the supply of arms to Pakistan. The Soviet policy continued to be to supply arms to Pakistan."

He added that whatever the quality of lethal equipment supplied to Pakistan, it would impose an additional burden on India in the sense that it would have to divert resources to make adequate defence arrangements. India had continued to re-iterate its point of view and made it clear to all countries, including the Soviet Union, that any supply of arms to Pakistan would create a difficult and explosive situation. "We have succeeded in convincing some countries, but not certain others."

At one stage, he referred to the Soviet-Pakistani Arms Agreement as a "wretched" Agreement.

He made it clear that India had never accepted the theory of a military balance of power as between India and Pakistan. The expression was coined by several countries, but India had never accepted its validity because it was meaningless in the context of the situation this country was facing today. "Our size is bigger, our problems are different and we have two hostile neighbours." Any talk of a military balance between India and Pakistan in these circumstances was totally invalid.

C. New US Envoy: Mr. Kenneth B. Keating (68), currently serving as Associate Justice of the New York State Court of Appeal, was nominated on April 3 as the next Ambassador of the United States of America to India.

Mr. Keating served in the US Army in World War I as private sergeant and in World War II as Major and Brigadier-General.

He was a member of the US House of Representatives from 1947 to 1953 and, again, from 1957 to 1959. He also served as Senator from New York from 1959 to 1964.

D. New Chief Of Air Staff: It was announced on April 2 that Air Marshal P. C. Lal (52), Chairman of Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd., had been appointed as the next Chief of Air Staff in the rank of Air Chief Marshal.

He will succeed Air Chief Marshal Arjan Singh, who retires on July 15.

Air Marshal Lal was the Vice-Chief of Air Staff during Indo-Pakistan conflict in September, 1965. He was awarded Padma Bhushan for distinguished service of a high order during those operations.

Air Marshal Lal is the first Indian-trained Air Force pilot to rise to the top post in the service. He was commissioned on November 14, 1939. The earlier three Air Chiefs, Air Marshal Mukherji, Air Marshal Engineer and Air Chief Marshal Arjan Singh were all trained in England at Cranwell. Air Marshal Lal had, however, taken to flying earlier in 1933 as a hobby.

E. Hostile Naga "Army Chief" Captured: The security forces in Nagaland reaped their richest reward on March 16 when they captured alive "General" Mowu Angami, the "commander-in-chief" of the so-called Naga underground army.

He was caught while attempting to move to a secret jungle camp north-east of Kohima along with 200 guerrillas, who had managed to infiltrate across the Indo-Burmese border earlier.

Mowu Angami was immediately flown in an IAF plane to New Delhi for interrogation by Army Intelligence.

Other China-trained Nagas Captured:

According to reports reaching Kohima on March 21, a gang of China-trained armed Nagas, numbering about 170, had been captured by men of the Revolutionary Nagas in Sema area of Nagaland.

On March 20, three more underground Naga leaders belonging to the second batch of China-trained rebels led by Isaac Swu were captured in Tuensang district, bordering Burma. This brought the number of China-trained hostiles captured so far to eight. Automatic rifles and ammunition of various kinds with Chinese marking were also seized from them.

Another group of 29 Chinese-trained Naga hostiles was captured by the Indian security forces in south-west Tuensang district on March 31.

The security forces also recovered from the group 26 Chinese-made weapons, including a rocket-launcher, sub-machine guns and semi-automatic rifles.

Thus Mowu Angami's group numbering 170, which had entered Nagaland on March 6, had been completely eliminated with the capture of all of them.

"Peking Radio's" Admission Of Failure:

With the arrest of the rebel Naga 'army chief' Mowu Angami and his men, came Peking Radio's admission that China's military backing for resurrection by the hill peoples had proved unavailing.

Peking Radio devoted its entire 1,000-word English language broadcast on March 16 to a report in the extremist Bengali weekly Deshabrati and in the English monthly Liberation analysing the causes of the failure of the Naxalite adventures in West Bengal and the rebels' activities in the hilly areas of eastern Himalayas.

According to the report, Peking Radio said, the reasons for the failure were "the lack of strong party organization, failure to build up a powerful mass base, ignorance of military affairs, thinking on old lines, a formal attitude towards the establishment of political power and the work of revolutionary land reforms."

Naga Rebels' Capture:

It was stated in Kohima on March 22 that 30 more China-trained Naga rebels were captured by the security forces in Tuensang district of Nagaland bordering Burma in the previous few days. The security forces had about six encounters with the rebels.

Combing operations to capture Isaac Swu and his 150 men were intensified in the district bordering Burma. The Isaac Swu batch entered Nagaland on the night of March 14-15.

Among those who were captured were stated to be three senior underground leaders, including a doctor. Mr. Isaac Swu had so far succeeded in evading the security forces.

The latest captures were made following a brief encounter near Somdal in Tangkhul area.

Large quantities of arms and ammunition and some medicines and first aid boxes bearing Chinese markings were seized from the rebels.

An estimated 200 China-trained Naga hostiles were either killed or injured at the hands of Burmese security forces during several encounters in Upper Burma since October, 1968. The Burmese troops also seized large quantities of Chinese arms and ammunition brought by an estimated 800 Naga hostiles who had gone to China in October, 1967.

An armed gang of underground Nagas, opposed to the pro-Peking faction, captured the underground camp at Khensa, three miles west of Mokokchung town, in a raid on March 28.

An official source said in Kohima on March 29 that they had seized large quantities of arms and ammunition with Chinese markings from the Khensa camp, supposed to be the stronghold of the pro-Peking faction.

Cease-fire Extended:

The suspension of operations in Nagaland was further extended by one month from April 1, on March 31.

The suspension of operations had been uninterruptedly in force in Nagaland since 1964.

Pakistanis Among Captured:

It was learnt in Calcutta on March 28 that two Pakistani nationals were among the 165 China-trained Naga hostiles captured by security forces.

With their round-up and the capture of 60 others early in March with their leader, "Gen" Mowu Angami, who had been to China for training and arms, the backbone of the hostile movement was stated to have been broken.

F. Surrender Of Hostile Mizos: Mr. Mohendra Mohan Choudhury, Revenue Minister of Assam, told the State Assembly on February 22 that 2,393 Mizo hostiles had so far surrendered and all of them had been granted amnesty.

He said that two Mizo hostiles surrendered with arms and 539 without arms in 1967. Fifty-three hostiles surrendered with arms and 1,776 without arms last year. Four hostiles surrendered with arms and 19 others without arms also surrendered to the security forces during this year.

H. New Madhya Pradesh Ministry: Owing to reported differences among the constituent parties of the Samyukta Vidhayak Dal (SVD), the Chief Minister of Madhya Pradesh, Mr. G. N. Singh, resigned on March 10.

The same day (March 10), the SVD Legislature Party elected Raja Naresh Chandra Singh of Sarangarh as its leader, and Raja Naresh Chandra Singh accepted the Governor's invitation to form a new Government in Madhya Pradesh on March 12. He was sworn-in as Chief Minister on March 13.

On March 12, the State Assembly was prorogued by the Governor on the advice of the outgoing Chief Minister, Mr. G. N. Singh.

At a news conference, Mr. S. S. Shyam, leader of the newly-formed Progressive Vidhayak Dal (PVD), gave newsmen a list of 23 SVD members who had joined the PVD. He said they were negotiating with the Congress Party the terms on which a coalition was to be formed.

Mr. Shyam said they had severed their connexion with the SVD since it had too many "reactionary forces" and too many constituent units pulling in different directions.

The Speaker of the Assembly informed newsmen that 20 SVD members had informed him in writing that they would like to join the Congress Party. He said Mr. S. S. Shyam, leader of the newly-formed Progressive Vidhayak Dal (PPD), had also written to him that his group of 22 members would sit separately and support the Congress Party.

In a subtle move, the Chief Minister, Raja Naresh Chandra Singh, had three Ministers sworn-in at a hurriedly-arranged ceremony on March 18 following a decision taken by the SVD Co-ordination Committee.

The three Ministers sworn-in were all members of the out-going (G. N. Singh) Ministry—Mr. Brijlal Verma, Mr. L. N. Gupta and Mr. Drigpal Shah.

Soon after the swearing-in ceremony, the new Council of Ministers held a formal "Cabinet" meeting at the State Secretariat when the portfolios were distributed.

But, two days later, Raja Naresh Chandra Singh resigned and advised the Governor to dissolve the Assembly.

The SVD leader, Rajmata Vijaya Raje Scindia of Gwalior, said that the dissolution of the Assembly was demanded on grounds of instability caused by defections.

The Cabinet, it was disclosed, had already adopted earlier in the day a resolution recommending dissolution of the Assembly which Raja Naresh Chandra Singh was apparently hesitating to act upon under pressure from the Congress, but the SVD leaders finally succeeded in persuading him to act upon their advice.

Raja Naresh Chandra Singh, who had succeeded Mr. G. N. Singh, remained the Chief Minister for exactly one week. With his resignation, the curtain was finally drawn on the non-Congress coalition's 600-day chequered career.

Next day (March 21), the Madhya Pradesh Governor, Mr. K. C. Reddy, rejected the advice of the out-going Chief Minister, Raja Naresh Chandra Singh, to dissolve the Assembly and impose President's Rule.

The Governor's decision was announced in a brief Raj Bhavan communique which did not give any reason for rejecting the advice beyond saying that all aspects of the issue involved had been carefully examined.

According to informed sources, the Governor felt that Raja Naresh Chandra Singh could not ask for dissolution of the Legislature when he had been invited to form a Ministry and face it to prove his majority.

Mr. G. N. Singh Re-admitted To Congress:

Mr. Govind Narain Singh, former Chief Minister, who had organized large-scale defections from the Congress and toppled the Congress Ministry in 1967, re-joined the Congress along with 19 other SVD MLAs on March 19.

Mr. Shankar Dayal Sharma, A-ICC General Secretary, told newsmen that Mr. Singh and his followers had been re-admitted to the Congress on condition that they would neither be made Minister in any Congress Government, nor given a party ticket in a mid-term poll. If, however, there was a leadership contest, they would have the right to vote.

He said that the policy evolved by the Central Parliamentary Board in regard to the defectors was being strictly followed. There was no question of making any departure from it.

According a news conference, Mr. Govind Narain Singh said that he and his supporters had made it clear to the various constituent units of the SVD in May, 1968 that if any demand for dissolution of the Assembly was made by them, they would return to the Congress 'en bloc'. Three constituents — Jana Sangh, SSP and the Rajmata's party —had now made the demand separately. This had been done without prior approval of the Co-ordination Committee of the SVD. The implication of the demand was that there was no co-ordination among the constituent units. He and his colleagues, therefore, decided to re-join the Congress. They had done so without pre-conditions.

Mr. S. C. Shukla Becomes Chief Minister:

On March 25, Mr. Shyam Charan Shukla, deputy leader of the Madhya Pradesh Congress Assembly Party, was elected leader of the party in place of Mr. D. P. Mishra.

There were two contestants for the office—Mr. Shukla and Mr. Kunjilal Dube, who was known to be Mr. Mishra's nominee.

Out of a total present strength of 171 members of the party, 151 members were present at the meeting.

Almost all the 20 defectors led by Mr. Govind Narain Singh, former SVD Chief Minister, did not exercise their franchise. Others who returned to the party fold recently were reported to have cast their votes. The number of such former defectors totals 51.

Mr. Shukla was sworn-in as Chief Minister on March 26, as well as Mr. Kunjilal Dube as Minister.

The Congress Party thus assumed the reins of office in Madhya Pradesh, 606 days after it had been ousted from power following the mass walk-out by Mr. Govind Narain Singh and his supporters.

This was the 14th swearing-in ceremony in the past 20 months.

Mr. Dubey, who retains the Finance portfolio which he had held in Mr. D. P. Mishra's Ministry, presented to the House a vote-on-account Budget of Rs. 118 crores to cover the Government's expenditure over the next four months.

Expansion Of Ministry:

Two weeks after his installation as Chief Minister, Mr. Shyam Charan Shukla expanded his Ministry on April 9 by the addition of 34 members.

With four Parliamentary Secretaries to be appointed shortly, the Ministry will have a strength of 40. The former SVD Ministry had a maximum strength of 34.

The 34 members who were administered the oaths of office and secrecy on April 9 included 13 Cabinet Ministers, 17 Ministers of State and four Deputy Ministers.

Prominent among the new Ministers were Mr. Vasantrao Uikey, Mr. Shatruguna Tiwari, Mr. Krishnapal Singh and Mr. Ved Ram who were members of the Mishra Ministry, and Mr. H. P. Chaturvedi, a party veteran.

The dissidents were evidently not satisfied and the crisis in the main constituent of the coalition remained unresolved. The dissident group leader, Mr. Daroga Prasad Rai, declined to join the Cabinet as a protest against "breach of faith" by the Chief Minister, Mr. Harihar Singh.

Mr. M. R. Mandu (C) and Mr. P. C. Cirua (Jharkhand), whose names were included in the list, could not take the oath as they were out of station.

The Ministers who were administered the oath of office were:

Of the 316 members, 305 participated in the voting. One member, Mr. Adunandan Singh, registered his preference both in favour of and against Mr. Ram Narain Mandal.

Besides the 116 Congress Party members, 13 members of the Janta Party, six of the Soshit Dal, three of the Swatantra and 12 of the Jharkhand and Independents voted for the Congress candidate.

Mr. Singh then finalized and submitted the list of portfolios to the Governor for distribution among his Cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Harihar Singh was sworn-in as Chief Minister on February 26. His Cabinet colleagues were sworn-in on March 7. But the distribution of portfolios had not been made till now.

L. Telengana Safeguards Issue—Supreme Court Declares Them Unconstitutional: The Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by the Chief Justice, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, struck down on March 28 the Andhra Government's order passed on January 21, 1969 prescribing "domicile" (mulki) qualification for appointment to subordinate services in the Telengana region.

The second part of the Government's order directing that all non-domicile persons holding posts in the Telengana area should be relieved from service by February 28, 19 9 was also quashed by the Court.

The decision was given on a writ petition filed by Mr. A. V. S. Narasimha Rao and other members of the ministerial service of the State, challenging the constitutionality of the order, and also the rule and the parliamentary enactment under which the impugned order was issued by the State Government.

Accepting the petitioners' request, the Supreme Court declared as ultra vires of the Constitution Section 3 of the parliamentary enactment. "The Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act of 1957" and also Rule 3 of the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) rules made thereunder.

The impugned section and rule empowered a State Government to prescribe and notify that any class or classes of posts should be held only by persons fulfilling the prescribed requirements as to residdence.

On a writ petition filed by some employees of Andhra Pradesh, a single judge of the Andhra Pradesh High Court had struck down the Government order dated January 21, 1969 prescribing Mulki qualification, but a Division Bench of the High Court had reversed that decision and upheld the rule and the Government order in question.

Thereupon, Mr. A. V. S. Narasimha Rao and others had petitioned direct to the Supreme Court under Article 32 of the Constitution complaining that their fundamental right of "non-discrimination on grounds of residence" in matters of employment, guaranteed under Article 16 of the Constitution was violated by the State Government.

The petition was heard by a Bench consisting of the Chief Justice of India and Mr. Justice J. C. Shah, Mr. Justice V. Ramaswami, Mr. Justice G. K. Mitter and Mr. Justice A. N. Grover.

Delivering the judgment, the Chief Justice said that two questions arose in the case—whether Parliament, while prescribing the "requirements as to residence" under Article 16 (3) of the Constitution may prescribe requirement of residence "in a particular part of the State"; and whether Parliament can delegate this function of making a declaration and leaving the details to be filled in by the "rule-making power" of the Central and State Governments.

Agreeing with the arguments of Mr. S. V. Gupte, former Solicitor-General who appeared for the petitioners, the Chief Justice answered both the questions in the negative.

He said: "The Constitution, as it stands, speaks of a whole State as the venue for residential qualification and it is impossible to think that the Constituent Assembly was thinking of residence in districts, talukas, cities, towns or villages. The fact that Clause (3) of Article 16 was an exception to the general guarantee under Article 16 (1) and (2) and the fact that it came as an amendment must dictate that a narrow construction should be placed upon it."

Telengana Regional Committee's Report:

The Telengana Regional Committee, in its first report on the service problems of the Telengana employees, published on March 14, blamed the State Government for deliberately ignoring the instructions of the Central Home Ministry regarding the preparation of common gradation lists and education of posts in accordance with the States Re-organization Act.

The Committee's report, which covers the 12-year period from the date of the formation of Andhra Pradesh in November, 1956, regretted that four mandatory criteria meant for the integration of the Services like status, scales of pay, duties and responsibilities were not applied in a uniform manner by the departments concerned for want of proper guidance by the General Administration Department.

"Each department", it felt, "had its own way of equation by giving much consideration to such of the four criteria as are favourable to the Andhra employees". There was a deliberate denial of promotions to the Telengana employees in some cases. Even "the High Court's decisions wherever they were favourable to the Telengana employees have not been implemented to this day."

Telengana's Surplus Revenues:

The Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, told the State Assembly on March 13 that the net Telengana surplus for the period from November 1, 1956 to March 3, 1968, had been worked out at Rs. 34.10 crores by Mr. Kumar Lalit, an officer of the Accountant-General who was deputed by the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India to do so.

Mr. Brahmananda Reddy, who read out this operative portion of the report in the State Assembly, said that the State Government would like to consult the Telengana Regional Committee on the report.

He said that according to the report, "net surplus after taking into account capital expenditure for the two regions—Andhra and Telengana—worked out to Rs. 34.10 crores for the same period."

State Government's Steps:

The Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, told newsmen in Hyderabad on March 24 that a senior IAS officer from Telengana had been appointed as Additional Chief Secretary to the Andhra Pradesh Government to "ensure prompt and effective action at the official level in all matters relating to Telengana and, in particular, matters relating to the Services."

Mr. S. Abdul Quader, now Special Secretary in the Food and Agriculture Department, had been given that job. He belongs to the former Hyderabad Service.

Mr. Reddy also announced a number of steps to provide an "effective mechanism" for the implementation of Telengana safeguards.

He denied that these steps were being taken under the "pressure of circumstances". The Government had initiated these steps, he said, in line with the January 19, 1969 all-party accord for the speedy implementation of the safeguards.

He said that the most important of the safeguards related to the utilization of Telengana surpluses and the creation of employment opportunities in the region and redress of grievances of members of services belonging to Telengana.

A high-power Committee of the Cabinet, consisting of all Telengana Ministers, he said, had been set up. It would work in close co-ordination with the Telengana Regional Committee and would ensure prompt and effective action in matters relating to planning and development of the region.

Mr. Reddy announced these other steps:

(1) A sum of Rs. 9 crores had been provided for, in addition to the normal allocations due to Telengana in the current year for the nine Telengana districts for such other works as the zilla parishads might decide upon;

(2) Action was being taken immediately to create nearly 2,000 posts, to start with, in Telengana;

(3) The Government had taken action to provide an opportunity to members of the Services to represent their grievances if they had any to the Central Advisory Committee set up under the States Re-organization Act. This Committee would visit the State shortly.

Mr. Konda Lakshman Bapuji Resigns From Ministry:

On March 28, Mr. Konda Lakshman Bapuji resigned from the Andhra Cabinet following differences with the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, over the handling of the Telengana issue.

Mr. Bapuji, who was among the nine Ministers in the Andhra Cabinet belonging to Telengana, was dissatisfied with the steps taken by the Chief Minister to meet the demands of the people of the Telengana region.

State CPI Demands:

The State Council of the Communist Party of India suggested on March 24 a 12-point programme for the implementation of the Telengana safeguards and threatened to start direct action if the Andhra Government did not act on it by April 15.

It demanded, among other things, that the Government:

(1) Utilize the Telengana surplus funds for the development of Telengana in the next five years in accordance with the proposals of the Regional Committee;

(2) Take up the multi-purpose Pochampadu project and other irrigation projects in right earnest;

(3) Take steps forthwith to set up Kakateeya University in Warangal, an agricultural college in Suryapet in Nalgonda district and a medical college in Nizamabad; and

(4) Create a special department under a Minister from Telengana to oversee implementation of the development programme in the region.

M. Removal Of Disqualification Of Dr. M. Chenna Reddy—Petition Rejected: The Chief Election Commissioner, Mr. S. P. Sen-Varma, dismissed the petition of Dr. M. Chenna Reddy on April 1 for removal of disqualification for being a member of Parliament as well as of any State Legislature.

Dismissing the petition, Mr. Sen-Varma said that "corrupt practice" in elections was in a sense "more heinous and destructive" of the democratic system than ordinary criminal offence. Ordinary crimes relating to a person or property did not so much endanger the basis of the fabric of democracy and national unity as corrupt practices.

He added: "In the interest of the electoral processes and democracy in this country, it will neither be proper nor appropriate for me to allow the prayer of the petitioner, Dr. M. Chenna Reddy."

Both the High Court of Andhra Pradesh and the Supreme Court had earlier found Dr. Chenna Reddy guilty of corrupt practices and disqualified him from being a member of Parliament or State legislature for six years.

Mr. Sen-Varma, in his judgment, said that there was a significant passage in the judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court. The High Court not only set aside the election of Dr. Reddy but also specifically named him under Section 99 of the Representation of People Act, 1951. The High Court held Dr. Reddy personally guilty of corrupt practice and not his election agent. Therefore, under Section 8 (A) of Representation of People Act, Dr. Reddy incurred this disqualification for a period of six years.

N. Assam Re-organization (Constitution Amendment) Bill Checkmated In Lok Sabha: The Constitution Amendment Bill, which was intended to pave the way for the implementation of the Assam re-organization scheme, got checkmated in the Lok Sabha on March 25, after it had got through the first reading.

Clause 2 of the Bill having failed to secure the majority of the total strength of the House—262 was the requisite minimum—the Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, who was piloting the Bill, was obliged to withdraw the Bill.

It was a totally unexpected development since the motion for consideration of the Bill was adopted by 265 votes—three more than the minimum. There were 19 dissenting Jana Sangh votes and four abstentions. Within a quarter of an hour when the next division was taken on Clause 2, only 248 votes were cast in favour of it—14 short of the required minimum.

Thereupon, Mr. K. Raghuramaiah, Minister for Parliamentary Affairs, and two Deputy Chief Whips of the Congress Party, Mr. P. Parthasarathy and Mr. D. Sen, submitted their resignations to the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

In his letter to Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Raghuramaiah said that he had done his best to ensure the passage of the Bill and took full responsibility for what had happened. He was resigning both as Minister for Parliamentary Affairs and for Shipping and Transport.

But, later, Mrs. Gandhi refused to accept them.

The Bill was re-introduced in the Lok Sabha by the suspension of the relevent rule on April 10.

Q. Trade Pact With Indonesia Extended: The validity of the Trade Agreement between India and Indonesia, which was signed in Djakarta in December, 1966, was extended up to October 25, 1970 on March 28.

Under the Agreement, the two countries agreed to extend to each other the most-favoured-nation treatment in regard to Customs, tariffs' taxes, charges and Customs procedures.

The Agreement also listed products which are available for export from either country.

Since the signing of the Agreement, there has been a considerable expansion and diversification of India's exports to Indonesia. From a bare Rs. 81,00,000 during 1965-66, India's exports have increased to Rs. 5.9 crores during 1967-68.

R. East Pakistan Rifles Open Fire On Malda Sector: The East Pakistan Rifles (EPR) indulged in sporadic mortar firing across the West Bengal border in Malda sector on March 22 and 23, in an obvious attempt to divert public attention from the internal turmoil in Pakistan.

The incident was in violation of the cease-fire accord which was earlier agreed to by the Indian Border Security Force and EPR.

This was the second incident within a month, though the first one on the Cooch-Behar border was comparatively of a minor nature.

Three persons were injured in the firings. Casualties on the Pakistani side were not known.

The cease-fire was enforced on March 23 after the Indian Sector Commander, Mr. S. J. Phillips, had contacted his Pakistani counterpart. The two held an on-the-spot meeting on March 24.

S. Soviet Writer Accuses China For War With India: The Soviet historian, Mr. A. Stepanov, accused China on March 19 of having engineered the border conflict with India over six years ago (1962) and said that this conflict, "which took a toll of many lives on both sides, serves to this day as a source of acute tension in Chinese relations with one of Asia's largest countries."

The accusation was made in an article in the Soviet journal, Komsomolskaya Pravda.

Observers in Moscow noted that this was the first time since China's attack on India in 1962 that a Soviet writer had directly accused Peking of having engineered the border conflict with India. Till now, the expression used in Soviet publications to describe Chinese aggression on India was "the China-India border conflict" and, at times, "extension of the Sino-Indian conflict by China."

In a special commentary under the title "Geography, Peking style—Maoist bandit attacks on Ussuri River are no chance occurrences," Mr. Stepanov outlined Chinese territorial claims against India, the Soviet Union and other countries and said that they were totally false.

He said the "Chinese leaders found pretexts for turning friendly relations with almost all of China's neighbours along the country's perimeter into relations of hostility and mistrust. And it is Peking's territorial claims that played a major role in that."

T. Re-organization Of Naval HQ: On March 27, the Government of India approved the re-organization of Naval Headquarters to streamline the administration and rationalize the ranks.

One of the main features of this re-organization is the upgrading of the post of Vice-Chief of Naval Staff to the rank of Vice-Admiral from the present Rear-Admiral. (This will raise the number of Vice-Admirals to three).

Another feature is the creation of a post of Principal Staff Officer to be designated Chief of Logistics, to be held by a Rear-Admiral.

Rear-Admiral Nilkanta Krishnan, Vice-Chief of Naval Staff, was promoted Vice-Admiral.

Rear-Admiral Balwant Singh, an officer of the Supply and Secretariat Branch, was appointed Chief of Logistics.

U. S-E Asia Travel Commission's Decisions: The two-day Ministerial Conference of the South-East Asia Travel Commission (SATC) of the International Union of Official Travel Organizations (IUOTO) ended in New Delhi on March 15 after approving seven resolutions to forge regional co-operation in promoting tourism.

The countries—India, Afghanistan, Ceylon, Iran, Mongolia and Nepal—also decided to set up a permanent secretariat in India to follow up the decisions of the Conference.

Pakistan was the only member which could not participate.

The SATC members agreed to press for converting IUOTO from a non-governmental organization into an international body—world travel organization—which should be a United Nations organization. The transformation of IUOTO into an international organization would make it more effective, by making available the knowledge and experience in tourism to benefit developing countries.

The Conference was of the view that as air fares represented the largest component of tourist expenditure, low fares would help increase tourist traffic. Therefore, SATC countries were asked to adopt more liberal air charter policies to open new markets among middle-income tourists, especially the younger groups and for educational purposes.

It was resolved to relax tax, visa and Customs formalities to draw more tourists from within and outside the region.

It was agreed that the member-countries should co-ordinate efforts through their national airlines and diplomatic channels to persuade the International Air Transport Association to rationalize world air-fare structure.

V. Pondicherry Budget: The Chief Minister, Mr. Farook Maricar presented to the Pondicherry Assembly on March 24 the State's 1969-70 Budget showing a deficit of Rs. 2.46 crores on revenue account.

He estimated receipts at Rs. 3.52 crores, against an estimated expenditure of Rs. 5.98 crores.

Mr. Maricar expected a total loan of Rs. 143,03,000 from the Central Government after providing for the recovery of loans amounting to Rs. 15,65,000.

The estimated receipts included an increase of Rs. 49,00,000 in the Budget estimates for 1968-69.

The estimated expenditure of Rs. 5.98 crores allowed for an increase of nearly 12 per cent over the current year's Budget estimates.

W. Punjab Legislature—Governor's Address: Addressing the Budget session of the Punjab Legislature in Chandigarh on March 14, the State Governor, Dr. D. C. Pavate, said that immediate steps were proposed to be adopted to abolish the Punjab Legislative Council, as its continuance after the recent re-organization of the State was an unnecessary burden on the exchequer.

He also announced that it was the considered view of his Government that the panchayat raj system required modifications because the present arrangement had resulted in increasing factionalism and bitterness in villages. The Government would consult the people for a thorough examination of the existing system.

The Government, would take suitable action to abolish property tax and to examine the entire taxation structure to give relief wherever the burden was inequitable. Sales-tax law and procedure would be simplified.

He claimed that as a result of efforts to be made under the Fourth Plan, the rate of growth of economy of the State would be stepped up from 4.8 per cent per annum during the Third Plan period to 6.7 per cent.

Dr. Pavate did not commit the Government on the question of nationalization of road transport. He said that the agreement of 50-50 scheme of road mileage between the private and the public sector transport undertaking was due to end during the current year and the interests of the State would be kept in view while deciding the new policy.

He, however, added that the Government would work for progressive nationalization. With a view to modernizing the State transport fleet, 100 new vehicles would be added to it every year during the Fourth Plan period.

The Government would urge the Centre to include the Christian Scheduled Castes in the list of recognized Scheduled Castes and Tribes.

Unlike the West Bengal Governor, Mr. Dharma Vira, he agreed to criticize, condemn and denounce the actions of the Government during the last 15 months.

He said that after the fall of the United Front Ministry headed by Mr. Gurnam Singh in November, 1967, fundamental rights had been violated and trampled upon in Punjab.

X. Punjab Budget: The Budget estimates of the Punjab Government for the next financial year, presented by the Finance Minister, Mr. Krishan Lal, to the Legislative Assembly on March 25, showed a deficit of Rs. 10.94 crores.

This gap between income and expenditure would increase with the proposed abolition of property tax.

Mr. Krishan Lal, however, proposed no fresh taxes to cover the gap and hoped that part of the gap would be met by grants-in-aid and the devolution of funds to be recommended by the Fifth Finance Commission.

The revenue account showed a deficit of Rs. 2.7 crores, revenue and expenditure being estimated at Rs. 127.08 crores and Rs. 129,78 crores, respectively. Compared to the revised estimates for the current year, there was an increase of Rs. 1.07 crores in receipts and Rs. 14.40 crores in expenditure.

The capital account indicated a net expenditure of Rs. 28.76 crores comprising capital expenditure of Rs. 18.40 crores (net) and a debit of Rs. 10.36 crores under loans and advances. Compared to the revised estimates for the current year, there was an increase of Rs. 11.26 crores in capital expenditure and a drop of Rs. 11.94 crores under loans and advances.

Y. Rajasthan Assembly—Governor's Address: Addressing the Rajasthan Legislative Assembly in Jaipur on February 24, the State Governor, Sardar Hukam Singh, spoke at length on the famine situation and the steps being taken by the Government to tackle the problem which affected nearly 23,000 villages and over 13,000,000 people.

He spoke for 50 minutes, but his address was boycotted by 19 members of the Opposition consisting of Communist, BKD, SSP and a solitary Swatantra member.

Sardar Hukam Singh said that the State Government had set up a committee to solve the famine problem on a permanent basis, taking into consideration the financial position of the Government.

He referred to the "remarkable increase" in the per capita income in Rajasthan, but added that the trend was likely to have a set-back due to the famine.

According to him, in 1967-68, at the present price index, the income of the State Government had increased to Rs. 1,155 crores, as against Rs. 1,023 crores in 1966-67. This was an increase of 12.90 per cent.

Although the population of the State was increasing at the rate of 2.33 per cent, the increase in per capita income was 10.15 per cent —from Rs. 453 in 1966-67 to Rs. 499 in 1967-68.

Power Position:

He sounded an optimistic note in regard to the power position and said that in the next two or three years the State would not only wipe out its power shortage but would be in a position to feed new industries. At present, he said, Rajasthan produced 2.5 million units of power per day. This was likely to increase to 3.6 million units per day in 1969-70 and 4 million units in 1970-71.

There was a possibility of availability of increased power from the Rana Pratap Sagar and the Jawaharsagar dams by 1970-71. There was also the possibility of the commissioning of the first unit of the atomic power plant at Rana Pratap Sagar at the end of 1970, which would give 175 mw of power.

He said that there was a proposal to double the capacity of the zinc smelter in Udaipur and by the end of 1971 the copper smelter in Khetri might also be commissioned. A machine-tool factory was also being set up in Ajmer. There was also a possibility of establishing a factory for marble cutting and polishing in the State.

Z. Rajasthan Budget: The Rajasthan Budget estimates for 1969-70, presented in the State Assembly on March 8 by the Finance Minister, Mr. Mathuradas Mathur, revealed a deficit of Rs. 20.45 crores.

Revenue receipts were estimated at Rs. 144.53 crores, and expenditure at Rs. 174.34 crores.

Mr. Mathur said that the State Government expected a substantial increase in the devolution of the Central taxes and grant-in-aid under Article 275 of the Constitution when the recommendations of the Finance Commission were made.

He proposed to balance the Budget from the allocations proposed to be made by the Finance Commission.

In view of the increased expenditure on the Plan schemes, he announced a number of important measures to mobilize resources. The total of these measures was equal to the additional Plan outlay. He also announced some tax concessions.

He proposed revision in the rates of surcharge on land revenue and cess on commercial crops like sugarcane, cotton, chillies, zira, dhanta, groundnut, til and linseed. In the case of holdings above 30 standard acres, the rate of surcharge would be 150 per cent. Only rich farmers would be affected by the revision in the surcharge rates. The measure would bring Rs. 50,00,000. The realization from the cess on crops would be Rs. 75,00,000.

He also proposed to raise tax on beer from 12 to 15 per cent.

The sales-tax on other varieties of foreign and Indian liquors would be raised from 15 to 25 per cent. Country liquor, which had been exempted from the levy of sales tax, would now be taxable at the rate of 10 per cent. Tax on bhang would be 7 per cent. This would bring in an additional revenue of Rs. 80,00,000.

He also announced a proposal to levy a two per cent sales tax on sweets sold by "halwais" whose turn-over exceeded Rs. 30,000 a year.

He also proposed to levy a 10 per cent tax on pure silk fabrics and a uniform tax of 10 per cent on all explosives, tax of 10 per cent on palm oil, refined coconut oil, pure silk goods, furs, leather goods except footwear, articles of foam rubber, glazed tiles, laminated sheets, perambulators and picnic sets. Tax on imitation jewellery had been raised from 5 to 7 per cent. Tax on khandsari had been levied at the rate of 7 per cent.

Mr. Mathur made two important policy announcements. He said that part of the dearness allowance of Government employees with pay up to Rs. 499 would be treated as pay from December 1, 1968, for purposes of pension, gratuity, provident fund, house rent allowance, city allowance and other matters. Also, octroi levied by municipalities and some panchayats would be abolished.

INDONESIA

A. Relaxation Of Import Curbs: The Trade Ministry on February 17 lifted the ban on import of goods like limousines worth more than $2,000, radios, record changers and television sets.

The ban had been in force since January 29, 1968.

It was found that despite the ban the public still wished to import the goods privately or by mail paid for with their own foreign exchange accounts abroad. Many foreign businessmen also wished to import these goods. In addition, according to the Government, the lifting of the ban would draw foreign exchange accounts back to Indonesia. For these considerations the Trade Minister revoked the ban.

The decision also covered goods for which letters of credit had been opened or goods paid with foreign exchange accounts abroad which had arrived in Indonesian ports awaiting clearance.

Cars with prices exceeding $2,000 and television sets were now subjected to an additional import duty of 100 per cent.

The Chairman of the Exporters' Association (GPEI), Mr. Naafi, told Antara recently that "hot money" was flowing back because its origin was not under investigation and in addition, the prospects of profit were greater in Djakarta than if they had remained as savings account abroad.

He predicted that Indonesian exports could reach $900 million. The export target (with the exclusion of oil) this year was set at $595 million. In 1968, $565 was realized through exports including an over-price of about $100 million.

According to Mr. Naafi, if smuggling could be prevented and the intricate export procedures simplified, the export target of 1969 could be reached, or even surpassed.

B. Japanese Textile Factory To Be Set Up: A big Japanese business syndicate is planning to set up a large textile manufacturing venture in Indonesia.

The Nohon Keizai of Japan reported on February 13 that the syndicate would consist of nine firms centering around Toyo Rayon Co. the top Japanese chemical textile manufacturers, and including six major trading firms such as Mitsui and Mitsubishi.

According to the report, the syndicate plans to invest about $50 million, including $20 million from Toyo Rayon, to organize a comprehensive chemical and synthetic textile manufacturing project in Bandung, Java.

According to a tentative plan formulated by Toyo Rayon authorities, a factory, initially producing 10 tons each of nylon and polyester fibres, and another for manufacturing finished textiles, will be erected. At the very first stage of the project, dyeing, processing, spinning and weaving facilities will be set up with the aim of completing the entire factory complex in three years.

Indonesian textile interests are also expected to participate in the project, investing about $300,000.

IRAN

A. Relations With Lebanon Severed: A Foreign Ministry spokesman announced on April 2 that Iran had severed diplomatic relations with Lebanon.

The announcement was made 48 hours after reports from Beirut that the former head of Iranian Security, General Bakhtiar, who was wanted by Iran on criminal charges, had been released from a Beirut jail.

When General Bakhtiar was arrested in Beirut in 1968 on charges of smuggling arms, the Lebanese Government was reported to have promised Iran that he would be handed over.

After he had served a prison term on charges of smuggling arms, the Lebanese Government released him.

On April 6, Iran banned Lebanese aircraft from its territory and ordered Lebanese Airlines to close their offices in Tehran and repatriate their staff.

The Iran National Airlines also cancelled all its flights to Beirut.

ISRAEL

A. Mrs. Golda Meir Becomes Premier: Israel's new Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, won a confidence vote in the Knesset (Parliament) by 84 votes to 12 on March 17.

The former Prime Minister, Mr. David Ben-Gurion, abstained in the vote.

Mrs. Meir, a 70-year-old grandmother and for decades one of the country's leading political figures, was then sworn-in as Prime Minister—the first woman to hold the post in Israel's history.

In her policy statement to the House, Mrs. Meir said that the new Government would carry on the programme of Mr. Levi Eshkol's administration.

In her inaugural speech in the Knesset, she said that Israel had the right to defend herself against sabotage, irrespective of whether terrorist organizations or Arab regular armies perpetrated it. "Peace will only come when Arab States agree to conduct direct negotiations with us with a view to concluding peace treaties."

She blamed the Soviet Union for the aggressive preparations which brought about the six-day war in 1967 and France for imposing a "biased" embargo on arms sales to Israel.

Mrs. Meir is Israel's fourth Prime Minister since the establishment of the State nearly 21 years ago, a former Foreign Minister and later Labour Minister.

A. Agriculture Bank Bill Passed: Parliament passed on February 20 a Bill for setting up a bank which would provide credit facilities to farmers.

The Minister of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Haji Ghazali Jawi, introducing the Bill said that the proposed bank would advance loans directly or through co-operatives to those engaged in agriculture and fishing.

He said: "The bank would be in a central position to provide loans to other bodies active in the agricultural field. It would be a place for farmers, small-holders and other bodies to save money. It would cater for the farmers and small-holders and would extend its credit facilities to those with small incomes."

The Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, said on February 23 that the "master-plan" for this huge land development project was expected to be completed by next year.

He advised the rural people who had no land to be prepared to move to new development areas in order to make use of the opportunities provided by the Government to better their livelihood.

C. Federal Parliament Dissolved —Plans For General Election: The Federal Parliament was dissolved on March 20 preparatory to the third General Election since Independence. Polling is scheduled for May 10.

In 1964, the shadow of confrontation with Indonesia had loomed dark, but in fact the only big upset that followed was the ejection of Singapore. This time the air is again ringing with renewed Malaysian accusations of Philippines ill intent towards Sabah.

This will be the first time that Sabah has had direct voting in a federal election.

Sarawak is also taking part directly in federal elections for the first time. Again in Sarawak, it is the first time the people's wishes will be put to the test since the 1966 agreement with Indonesia ending confrontation.

An election at State level was part of that deal, and it is a further sign of Indonesia's understanding and moderation that there appears to have been no pressing for an earlier election.

For the bulk of the seats on the Malaya Peninsula, the general expectation is that the alliance of three communal governmental parties—United Malays' National Organization (UMNO), the Malay-Chinese Association and the Malaysian Indian Congress—will again be seen comfortably home, principally through solid Malay support for UMNO.

THAILAND

A. General Elections: In the first General Elections held in 11 years in the second week of February, the United Thai People's Party (UTPP) of the Prime Minister, F-M. Thanom Kittikachorn, won a commanding position.

When the ballots from all 71 provinces were counted, the UTPP had won 75 seats in the 219-member House of Representatives. It could also count on the backing of 72 Independents.

The Opposition Democratic Party won 56 seats. The other seats went to the candidates of five smaller parties.

Polling took place on February 10, but the counting process was slow because of the remoteness of some regions.

The members of the House and the 164 appointed members of the Senate are expected to be called into joint session by royal decree. It will be the first time in more than a decade that Thailand has had a working Parliament.

The immediate effect of the election was to give a civilian character to the military regime.

According to observers, another effect of the vote was consolidation of the already strong position of Gen. Praphas Charusathien, the Deputy Premier, Minister of Interior and Commander of the Army. Gen. Praphas is said to enjoy the personal allegiance of about half of the Government party members and most of the newly-elected Independents.

Seni Pramoj, the leader of the Democratic Party, said he was pleased by his party's success in the Bangkok area and "not surprised" by the Government's success elsewhere in the country. The Democrats swept all 21 seats in the Bangkok-Thonburi area.

The Government's strength lay in the rural areas where UTPP nominees or pro-Government candidates were successful.

Fears that guerrillas would disrupt polling wherever possible partly came true, but violence was limited. In the northern province of Nan, near the Laotian border, three children were among those who died when a grenade was thrown into a crowded booth. In the south, the police fought and killed two of a band of 60 guerrillas which had attacked another booth.

Details:

A total of 1,522 candidates contested the 219 seats. Twelve political parties fielded 653 candidates and the rest were Independents.

The election issue for all the parties was not so much about the Government but whether Thailand was to recognize communist countries and the communist way of life. Voting was fairly clear that the people were overwhelmingly anti-communist. The Independents were mostly of the strong anti-communist Free People League of Thailand. The Democrats were also opposed to communism as a threat to the Thai trinity—Nation, Religion and King.

The parties which suffered heavily were sympathetic to neutralism and China. The Economist United Front won only four seats in the eastern province of Khon Kean. Its Secretary-General lost the election. The party advocated recognition of China. The People's Party, which called for friendly relations with all countries, including China got only two seats. Among others, the Democratic Front got seven seats, the Joint Aid to the Farmer Party one and the Free Democratic Party one.

A highlight of the elections was that in the communist-infiltrated north-east, in only one of the 16 provinces the Economist United Front (EUF) won the seat. The Democratic Front candidate who opposed US forces in Udorn and his brother, who were both MPs, lost their seats. The elections showed a significant change in the attitude of the people of the north-east who were said to be socialist and neutralist. The Government's efforts to win over these provinces with economic development and cultural and educational opportunities had been successful in turning them away from communist sympathies. However, EUF, which campaigned for trade with China, was said to have had considerable financial and other support from Chinese merchants and Thais of Chinese origin in the urban areas.

Commenting on the elections, a Government spokesman said that since the Viet-Nam war had reached its critical and possibly final stage, the Government's first task was to fight the communists inside the country. "We do this by building up national economy, raising living standards and giving better education. The elections have brought in people's representatives to share in the administration of the country. This is a major political setback for the Communists. The first round has been won by us".

Mr. Seni Pramoi said the elections had given a change for the public to understand the meaning of democracy and the Democratic Party considered itself a buffer between the Government and the Communists.

The new Government elected under a new Constitution, according to a spokesman, will "do all it can to establish a stable political party system in Thailand and to provide for further progress along the road to democratic society by the time the next General Elections are held, four years from now."

Since the change-over from absolute to constitutional monarchy in 1932, Thailand has had 29 Governments under 11 Prime Ministers. There were nine General Elections, the last on December 15, 1957. Voters varied from 1.7 million to 5.6 million. In all the previous elections, the number of votes cast was less than half of the eligible votes.

B. Future Of American Troops: In an interview made public on February 13, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, said that the 48,000 US troops stationed in Thailand would have to leave after the Viet-Nam war "unless there is some compelling reason for them to stay."

Even if such a reason developed after the war, he said, a new Agreement would have to be drawn up between the two countries. "Our present Agreement is valid only for the duration of the Viet-Nam war." If after the fighting is over, there is no compelling reason for the troops to stay, then they will have to leave."

He added that a sufficiently compelling reason might be an external attack on Thailand, but he emphasized that his country intended to shoulder the main burden of its own defence. "It's our intention to assume full responsibility for our own security. We shall not ask for outside man-power as long as we can cope with the situation ourselves. We have no intention of having the youth of another country come and risk their lives for us."

Discussing the American soldiers stationed in his country, he said the people were "not too happy about the presence of foreign troops on Thai soil." He noted that the Opposition Democratic Party had raised the point during the election campaign.

BURMA

A. Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Visit: India's Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, paid a State visit to Burma from March 27 to 30.

The highlight of the visit was the talks she held with the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, in the holiday resort of Sandoway on problems of common interest and concern.

On March 27, speaking at a banquet given in honour of Mrs. Gandhi in Rangoon, Gen. Ne Win stressed "friendly relations that have long existed between India and Burma."

He referred to Burmese co-operation in operations against hostile Nagas and said his Government had taken "necessary measures against those nationals of India who seek to use our territory for hostile activities against India."

He added: "Needless to say, such action on our part serves not only our mutual interest but also the larger interest of peace and amity among the neighbours.

"We do not countenance the use of the territory of one State by nationals or organizations of another State as a base for hostile activities against their home State or against a third State."

He said that Burma had assiduously sought to avoid taking sides with one neighbour as against another since such conduct would not serve the interest of the region.

He suggested that the countries directly involved should make "every effort by themselves to resolve by peaceful means any difficulty that may arise between them. "We are confident that ultimately the countries of the region will come to some mutual understanding on the terms of co-existence, and that such a development will be greatly facilitated if each country steadily pursues its goal of economic and social progress, firmly maintains its political independence and territorial integrity."

Reception By All-Burma Indian Congress:

Speaking at a reception accorded to her in Rangoon on March 28 by the All-Burma Indian Congress, Mrs. Gandhi asked the Indian community to face the realities of the situation courageously and find solutions to their problems.

She said she realised the difficulties of Indians in Burma, but they had to consider their problems against the realities of today. They themselves had to answer the question how they could fit into this reality. She told them that they owned their loyalty to the country in which they lived.

She described as "baseless" reports in the foreign Press that India was disintegrating. She said that India had made progress and achieved greater strength. It was true that different parties had formed Governments in different States. But the Central Government headed by her had offered them all co-operation and she expected the same from them.

Earlier, Mr. G. N. Banerjee, President of the Congress, said Indians in Burma "are confronted with many problems and have to leave Burma. Many have already left and more will follow soon". He requested that Indian repatriates from Burma be properly rehabilitated.

Talks On Trade:

Meanwhile, the prospect of increased trade between India and Burma and the problems of Indian nationals and people of Indian origin in Burma figured prominently in a discussion between Foreign Ministry officials of the two countries in Rangoon on March 28.

The Indian team was led by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. T. N. Kaul, and the Burmese side by his counterpart, U Tun Sein.

As regards the problems of Indian nationals and people of Indian origin in Burma, the Burmese officials were understood to have given an assurance to expedite income-tax clearance for exit permits to intending repatriates.

The Burmese team had also agreed to look into cases of people of Indian origin who had applied for Burmese citizenship, but had yet to get nationality certificates.

On the question of expansion of Indo-Burma trade, India emphasized an increased volume of trade without considering the balance of trade aspect which had been traditionally in favour of Burma.

India showed interest in respect of setting up a textile mill in Burma and for supply of penstock pipes, trucks and electrical machinery.

Burmese officials were understood to have said that Burma at present had suspended all imports and was considering whether she could carry on with the present shortages or she should take on an increased burden of imports. The officials, however, reacted favourably to the principle of expansion of trade between the two countries.

Talks At Sandoway:

The same day (March 28), Mrs. Gandhi and Gen. Ne Win flew to Sandoway for talks which, according to reports, covered a wide range of issues, including Viet-Nam, West Asia, China's attitude, regional economic co-operation and bilateral relations.

Only for the last one hour of their talks they were joined by an official from either side.

The Prime Minister's Joint Secretary, Mr. S. Banerjee, and the Burmese Cabinet Secretary, Col. Ko Ko, joined at the final stage of talks.

According to reports, the Burmese side disclosed at the talks that a draft agreement for payment of compensation to Indian repatriates was being worked out.

Mrs. Gandhi thanked Gen. Ne Win for the help extended by the Burmese Government in curbing the activities of hostile Naga elements.

The two leaders discussed at length economic co-operation between the two countries in the context of problems of developing countries. They thought that speedy self-reliance could be achieved by under-developed countries on the basis of self-help mainly and by mutual co-operation to some extent.

The Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued on March 30 on Mrs. Gandhi's visit said in part: "The Chairman and the Prime Minister availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by the visit to hold talks on bilateral and international matters of common interest. These talks were held in an atmosphere of friendship, cordiality and mutual understanding.

"The Chairman and the Prime Minister were of the view that the maintenance of international peace and security would be greatly facilitated by all States respecting one another's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and refraining from interference in one another's internal affairs.

"The Chairman and the Prime Minister were of the view that the difficulties inherent in the processes of development of the developing countries are sometimes made the occasion for outside interference and pressure.

"They agreed that successful national efforts on the part of the developing countries themselves to promote their rapid socio-economic and political advancement, free from outside interference, would not only strengthen those countries but would also improve international relations.

"The Chairman and the Prime Minister expressed deep concern over the situation in West Asia and hoped that the efforts of United Nations and other parties concerned to avert a major conflict in the region and to work out a peaceful settlement will be continued and bear fruit.

"The Chairman and the Prime Minister re-iterated their belief in a peaceful political settlement of the Viet-Nam question and expressed the hope that the current expanded peace talks will result in an early settlement within the broad frame-work of the Geneva Agreements.

"The two leaders re-iterated their faith in the Charter of the United Nations and emphasized their strong belief that all countries should co-operate in the establishment of lasting peace in the world. They agreed that force or threat of force should not be used in the settlement of international disputes and that such disputes should be settled only through peaceful means.

"The two sides also discussed the various problems that have arisen concerning citizens of India in Burma and other people of Indian origin who have not yet become citizens of Burma, and exchanged views on ways and means of solving them. They agreed that these matters should be resolved early through further mutual discussions.

"Both leaders agreed that there was considerable scope for further expansion of trade between the two countries and expressed the firm desire of their Governments to expand mutual trade and commerce."

Statement In Indian Parliament:

Reporting on her visit, Mrs. Gandhi told Parliament in New Delhi on April 3 that Gen. Ne Win and his Government had agreed to look into the problems concerning Indian citizens in Burma and those of Indian origin awaiting registration as Burmese citizens "sympathetically and expeditiously."

In her statement, she said: "The relationship between India and Burma is closer than merely that of neighbours. Through the ages it has been sustained by the abiding values which have been cherished and shared by our two peoples. This long tradition of friendship was reinforced during our common struggle for freedom.

"Chairman Ne Win and I had occasion to review the world scene in the light of political and economic issues of importance to the world today and more especially to us in the developing countries. As the House is aware, Burma and India stand for the promotion of international peace and understanding, based on respect for the sovereignty and independence of all countries. Our two countries attach the highest importance to the principle of non-interference in one another's internal affairs. In our discussions, we agreed that the principal task of economic re-construction which confronts our respective countries could be expedited by economic co-operation among the developing countries and more specially between neighbouring countries.

"I took the opportunity to thank Chairman Ne Win and his Government for their vigilance along the Indo-Burmese border which, as the House is aware, has helped us to take more effective measures against some of the misguided elements on our eastern border. I hope that the House has noted the observations made by Chairman Ne Win, during the banquet he was good enough to hold in my honour, that his Government would not countenance the use of Burmese territory by nationals or organizations of another State as a base for hostile activity against their home State or against a third State. Chairman Ne Win went on to say that it was in conformity with this basic stand that Burma had taken necessary measures against those nationals of India who sought to use Burmese territory for hostile activities against India."

CEYLON

A. Federal Party Withdraws Support To Government: The annual convention of the Federal Party held at Uduvil in the first week of April decided to withdraw the support its parliamentary group had been extending to the Senanayake Government for the last four years.

[The Party has 12 members in Parliament. The Government would still have a majority as it could command the support of up to 90 members in the 157-member House of Representatives with the support of Independents and nominated members.]

A resolution passed by the convention charged the Government with practising "gross discrimination" in the establishment of industries and failing to provide appropriate means of communication in the Tamil-speaking areas.

It said there had been "total neglect and disregard" of the cultural and educational needs of Tamils and a "deliberate attempt to sever the cultural links between the Tamil-speaking people of Ceylon and South India."

It also noted that the Government's assurance on establishing a university in Trincomalee had not been fulfilled and that there had been inordinate delay in putting into effect the Tamil language regulations.

The convention felt that the Party could not serve the interests of the Tamil-speaking people by continuing support to the Government any longer.

It also adopted another resolution re-iterating the Party's demand for a federal form of government.

Earlier, in his Presidential address, Mr. Rasamanikkam said the Tamils had been completely disillusioned in their co-operation with the United National Party of Mr. Dudley Senanayake.

He recalled that a year ago at the last annual comference at Kaimunal, the Prime Minister also addressed it. Then they had confidence in the Government. Following the passage of the Tamil Language Special Provisions Regulations, they hoped the Government would take effective steps to meet the other demands of the Tamil-speaking people. But now all their earlier hopes had been shattered. The Tamils had come to the conclusion that the Government would do nothing to solve their problems.

He said that the miserable state of affairs of the Tamil people in this land was due to the fact that the unitary type of Constitution had made the majority community the rulers and the Tamils the ruled. Their leader, Mr. S. J. V. Chelvanayagam, foresaw what was in store for the Tamil people many years ago and had urged that the salvation of the Tamil people lay only in a federal type of Constitution.

He complained that all development projects launched with foreign aid were located only in the Sinhalese areas and not one in the Tamil provinces. While intensive efforts were being made in the field of agriculture, Tamil agriculturists were offered no assistance or inducements.

The recent decision to restrict the number of copies of South Indian Tamil films was a measure aimed at destroying the Tamils culturally. Their experience in the last 21 years had shown that any Government at the Centre would be a Government of the majority community and unless that position was altered, the Tamils could never hope to get justice and fair play at the hands of the Government. They had now come to the stage of launching a struggle to alter the structure of the Government.

B. Increase In British Loans: At the Aid Group meeting in Paris (see page 8871), Britain pledged a substantial increase in its loans to Ceylon for economic development.

Britain promised to make available £4,000,000 for Ceylon's import programme and a further £2,000,000 for specific development projects.

These, like other British loans to Ceylon since 1965, are interest-free and repayable over 25 years, including a three-year grace period.

Britain also promised to consider providing a further allocation of aid under the Rome Food Aid Convention. Britain recently made available £1,000,000 for the purchase of flour and other food under this Convention.

In 1968, British loans amounted to £2,000,000 for the purchase of commodities. This sum was recently increased by the offer of a further £500,000 for the purchase of commodities.

Maj-Gen. Wijekoon, who was 58, had earlier been High Commissioner in Pakistan. Before entering the diplomatic service, he was Commander of the Ceylon Army.

CHINA

A. Soviet Union Proposes Negotiations On Border Dispute: Russian newspapers on March 30 published a statement in which the Soviet Government called on China to hold talks on their border problems with a view to avoiding further conflict.

At the same time, it warned Peking that military threats "will be met with a firm rebuff."

The statement was sent to the Chinese Government through its Embassy in Moscow on March 29. It re-iterated that Russia's position on the border question was justified by history and held out no prospect that China's territorial demands would be met.

It said that the recent border clashes on the Ussuri River could only give satisfaction to "those who would like by any means to dig a chasm of hostility between the Soviet Union and the Chinese People's Republic." It had "nothing in common with the cardinal interests of the Soviet and Chinese people".

China was again blamed for the incidents in which Soviet frontier guards had been killed and others injured, and for refusing to recognize the validity of the borders as defined at present. Claims to various sections of territory on the ground that they had once been under Chinese influence or sovereignty were "alien to Leninist policy".

The statement recalled that the present border was fixed by treaties drawn up in 1858 and 1860 and that, according to a map agreed on by the Tsarist Government and the Chinese Empire in 1861, the border in the area of Damansky island passes along the Chinese bank of the Ussuri, thus placing the island in Russian territory.

Much of the Russian argument was given over to a refutation of China's attempts to link these border agreements with the unequal treaties of the 19th century, under which Russia obtained territorial concessions, railway rights, extra-territorial privileges, and other concessions from the Manchu Empire. The Soviet Government renounced the unequal treaties after the October Revolution, and was recognized to have done so by Sun Yat-sen and subsequently by Mr. Mao Tse-tung.

The statement said the recent Chinese policy linking the border issue with the unequal treaties was "a concoction from beginning to end", designed to sow hatred for the Russian people.

Peking was reminded that from the time of the Communist victory in China until the 1960's, relations in the border areas had always been harmonious, and Mr. Chou En-lai, the Prime Minister, had said in Nepal in 1960 that border disagreements between the two countries were "insignificant". The Russians also recalled their economic aid to China in the years before relations deteriorated.

In February, 1964, after China had begun to press territorial claims, talks on the border issue were held in Peking, but the Chinese used these discussions to question the validity of the historical treaties, and they were broken off and never resumed.

The Soviet Government believed it was now necessary "to take without delay practical steps to normalize the situation on the Soviet-Chinese frontier", and the statement urged the Chinese "to refrain from any actions on the frontier that may cause complication." It suggested that the 1964 consultations be resumed "in the nearest future".

However, the statement concluded with the warning that Moscow "resolutely rejects any encroachment by any one on Soviet land, and that any attempts to talk to the Soviet Union and the Soviet people in the language of weapons will meet with a firm rebuff".

Chinese Reaction:

On March 30, a Chinese Embassy spokesman described the Soviet appeal to negotiate a settlement of the Sino-Soviet frontier dispute as "a tissue of lies and slander."

The spokesman said that the Soviet statement proposing negotiations sent to China was "from beginning to end a tissue of lies and slander. The facts contained in the statement were a mixture of truths and lies."

But, he added that the statement was "without doubt" being studied in Peking, although he did not know what his Government's reaction would be.

Fortification Of Ussuri River Border:

Pravda reported on March 28 that Chinese troops were building up military fortifications on their side of the River Ussuri at the scene of the recent Sino-Soviet border fighting.

In an undated report on a visit to a Soviet frontier post, a Pravda correspondent, Col. Sergei Borzenko, said that one night the Chinese had shelled and machine-gunned the disputed Damansky (China calls the island Chen Pao) island. Chinese scouts had penetrated the island but had been driven off again by Soviet fire.

"Shots and explosions could be heard on Damansky", he wrote. "Chinese cannon and machine-guns were bombarding the deserted island." The next morning the Chinese shelled the island with mortars. "The Maoists got their deserts but they learnt nothing. They are trying to frighten us, but we are not afraid".

He said that at night Soviet guards could hear the sound of the preparation of earthworks coming from the Chinese side opposite Damansky's neighbour island of Kirkinsky, also claimed by China. "Deep explosions can be heard. They are digging fortifications, setting up a command post and establishing a communications net-work over there". He disclosed that Russian border guards were now regularly patrolling the frontier along the frozen River in armoured cars.

But the ice was already beginning to crack. "Just a few more sunny and windy days and it will be impossible to ride on the Ussuri, and then a little later it will be impossible to cross over to the islands on foot."

HONG KONG

A. Emergency Ordinances Repealed: The Government announced on March 28 the repeal of emergency Ordinances instituted during Communist-led rioting in 1967.

Among the laws repealed were two which gave authorities special powers "to detain ships, aircraft and vehicles as well as people on board."

In announcing the repeal of these two laws, the Government said: "They are no longer necessary as similar power exists in the Public Order Ordinance."

B. Harbour Tunnel Project: Hong Kong took a giant step towards the construction of a long-awaited $50 million cross-harbour tunnel on March 29 when the Government agreed to help finance the project.

The Government informed the Cross-Harbour Tunnel Co. Ltd. that it was prepared to subscribe 25 per cent of the company's share capital up to a maximum of $5 million. It also promised to give, with other shareholders, a counter-guarantee of its proportionate share of a British bank loan of $31 million to be guaranteed by the British Export Credit Guarantee Department.

The Government's agreement was conditional on the formal approval of the Legislative Council and on the final settlement of certain matters being negotiated between the tunnel company and the ECGD and Costak Consortium, the proposed contractor, and on the completion of the company's other financial arrangements.

Mr. Richard Brothers, spokesman for the company, said the question of guarantees had been a major stumbling block in the negotiation. "The Government's decision removes the main difficulty in the negotiations with ECGD.

"If a similar announcement comes quickly now from the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corp. on the 10 per cent holding it has offered and indicated it might take up, final talks with the necessary British interests will be rapidly concluded."

INDIA

SUMMARY: Nagas' Changed Attitude; Defence Plan; Bengal Strike & After; CPI And CPI(M) Resolutions; More State Budgets.

A. Kutch Border Demarcation Agreement: The last hitch in the demarcation of the Kutch border was removed on April 7 when Pakistan accepted India's claim to a rocky feature with "Control Pillar-6".

The agreement was reached after three days of discussions between officials of the two countries.

It was agreed that "the feature in respect of Control Pillar-6 was within Indian territory".

The meeting noted with satisfaction that 95 per cent of the demarcation work had been completed and expressed confidence that the remaining work would be over by the end of June, one month behind schedule.

B. Hostile Naga Leaders Disavow Independence Demand: The moderate revolutionary "underground Naga government," led by Mr. Kughato Sukhai, openly stated for the first time on April 11 that it would not hold to sovereignty which was unacceptable to the Government of India.

The "revolutionary Government President," Mr. Sukhai, and the "Prime Minister," Mr. Scato Swu, stated that they were willing to work out a settlement acceptable to the Government of India and the Naga people.

They also strongly urged the Central Government to open talks "for finding a permanent solution to the problem," according to Dr. M. Aram, a Convener of the Peace Observers' Team.

Dr. Aram returned to Kohima on April 11 after a week-long tour of the interior parts of the State including Zingti, headquarters of the "revolutionary underground government."

He said that the revolutionary leaders had agreed that efforts should be made as the first step for talks for gaining the concurrence of the State Government. Revolutionary leaders were prepared to work out some understanding with the State Government in this direction.

Khensa Group's Decision:

Next day (April 12), Mr. Imkomaren Jamir, leader of the "Khensa" group—another breakaway faction of the pro-Peking "underground" Nagas—in a statement expressed himself in favour of a "peaceful settlement of the vexed Naga problem with the Government of India".

The statement urged all Nagas to work unitedly in order to arrive at a "reasonable politiral solution" of the Naga problem with the Government of India. While the underground Nagas could not achieve their goal of Independence when they were united, he said, "it is very difficult for us to achieve it now when we are divided into small groups."

It was this self-styled Lt.-Col. Jamir and 22 other young Naga "underground" army-men who had spear-headed a revolt against the extremist pro-Peking faction of the federal set-up during March, 1969. They set up a new headquarters at the peace camp in Khensa in Mokokchung district, the second biggest administrative and military headquarters of the federal "underground Nagas" after Chedema. Chedema is now in the hands of the "Revolutionary Underground Government" led by Mr. Kughato Sukhai.

The statement by the Khensa group said: "For the last 14 years, the people of Nagaland have been striving collectively for Independence. With understanding and full co-operation, all the Nagas have tried their level best to achieve their goal.

"But during the cease-fire period, there arose disunity and suspicion among the Nagas. It was very tough to achieve our goal even when we all were united, but there is very little chance of it as we are divided into groups."

The leader of the group, Mr. Jamir added: "It is my personal view that at this juncture, it will be best for Nagas to be within the Indian Union and have a settlement politically.

"With this view, I, with members of the 27th Battalion of the federal army, declare to the world that we enter under this settlement. Also we should abide by the Cease-fire Agreement of 1964.

"Friends of Nagaland, if you want to stay in peace, let us all join together and urge the Government of India for a reasonable political settlement, and work for the progress of Nagaland so that no destruction may come to Nagaland."

C. Defence Plan For 1969-74—Ministry's Annual Report: According to the annual report of the Ministry of Defence for 1968-69, a new defence plan is being formulated to cover 1969-74 in view of the rephasing of the Fourth Plan over this period.

This takes into account "the continuing hostility of Pakistan and China" towards India, "their strategic and military capabilities and the possibility of their acting in concert" against India.

The report also outlined a defence expenditure of Rs. 1,110 crores for 1969-70, which works out to 3.46 per cent of the gross national product. This is against the defence expenditure of Rs. 1,051.38 crores for 1968-69 which was 3.44 per cent of the gross national product.

Notwithstanding these threats to India's security, the report said, there had been no increase in the overall strength of the Army, though the fire-power had been increased with the introduction of more modern and sophisticated weapons. By and large, the Army was now equipped with weapons of post-1969 design for infantry requirements.

In armour and artillery and in the communications field too, considerable progress had been made in "re-equipment with modern weapons and equipment". Steps to re-equip the units completely with post-1960 weapons were in progress.

As far as the Navy is concerned, efforts are being made to build up naval strength in regard to patrolling and anti-submarine capabilities. The submarine arm, started in 1967-68, is being strengthened. In addition, "a phased programme" to replace the ageing ships of the Navy is in hand and it is expected that "with effect from 1971 it would be possible to commission one frigate a year from our own production."

The total strength of the Air Force—properly balanced at 45 squadrons—is not being increased. However, the obsolete and obsolescent aircraft are being phased out and new aircraft are being inducted into the Air Force. Besides this, "surface-to-air guided weapon complexes have been installed in certain vital areas for the improvement of our defence against enemy air attacks." Measures for introducing a sophisticated and reliable air defence communication system are also under way.

A sound defence production base for the Armed Forces continues to be provided. Self-sufficiency in defence production and emphasis on indigenous manufacture continue to be the key-note of the defence production effort, which is progressing according to plan.

D. Bengal Bandh (Strike) And After: Calcutta was totally paralysed on April 10 by the 24-hour "Bangla Bandh" (stoppage of work) called by the United Front and its trade union wing, the Rashtriya Sangram Samiti, in protest against the action taken by the security staff of the Cossipore gun and shell factory on April 2 resulting in the death of five persons.

The strike was peaceful except for an incident near Kanchrapara railway storeyard, about 30 miles from Calcutta, in which the police fired two rounds. A body was picked up from the place of the incident, but the police could not say whether he died of bullet wounds.

It was said that two persons were killed and 22 others, including 15 policemen, were injured in connexion with clashes near the railway workshop at Kanchrapara. The police fired two rounds to disperse the violent mobs who set fire to a number of houses at the railway colony at Kanchrapara. There was no casualty by firing.

There have been about a dozen "bandhs" (hartals) in Calcutta in the last three years, but none had been as complete.

There was no attendance at State Government offices. The Secretariat was deserted and for the first time the private telephone exchange in the building did not operate. Only a skeleton staff worked at the State police headquarters in the Secretariat.

Banks, mercantile firms, educational institutions, markets, shops, and cinema houses remained closed. All examinations were cancelled, and the State Public Service Commission did not hold any interview.

Even in Central Government offices the strike was almost total. The Reserve Bank and the General Post Office did not open. Only a few employees were found at the counters of the Central Telegraph Office. The gun and shell factory at Cossipore remained closed. The entire Dalhousie Square area, the hub of the city, was deserted.

The Indian Airlines did not operate any flight to and from Dum Dum. An Air-India plane which was scheduled to land at Dum Dum in the evening overflew to Bombay. A Union of Burma Airlines plane in which U Nu, former Prime Minister of Burma, was scheduled to arrive at Dum Dum from Rangoon was cancelled. Some international airlines took their passengers to the airport the previous night for their early morning flights.

Four ships left Calcutta port before the strike began at 4 a.m. No ship arrived at the port from the Sandhead. There was no loading and unloading at the port.

All suburban locals on the South-Eastern Railway were cancelled, while the long-distance train service was seriously affected. Five long-distance trains and a local train, however, reached Howrah early in the morning. No long-distance trains of South-Eastern Railway left Howrah in the evening.

The massive success of the strike was interpreted by United Front circles as an expression of popular resentment against the Government of India's attitude towards the United Front Government. Mr. Jatin Chakravarty, Minister for Parliamentary Affairs and joint convener of the Rashtriya Sangram Samiti, said the success of the strike proved the depth of the resentment and protest of the people against the Centre's "machinations" towards the popular West Bengal Government.

"We still hope", he said, "that the Centre will take a lesson from this spontaneous demonstration of people's indignation and refrain from further conspiracy to embarrass the UF Government in future, and give a fair deal to our State by acceding to the demands of the West Bengal Government".

Inquiry Commission Appointed:

On April 11, the Government of India appointed a single-member Commission of Inquiry consisting of Mr. S. K. Das, a retired Judge of the Supreme Court, to inquire into the facts and circumstances relating to the firing by Defence Security Corps personnel at the Gun and Shell Factory, Cossipore, on April 8.

The decision to appoint the Commission of Inquiry by the Government of India was in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 3 of the Commission of Inquiry Act of 1952.

Mr. Y. B. Chavan's Statement:

In the Lok Sabha on April 11, the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan said that he looked upon the West Bengal Government's failure to take action under the law to prevent any obstruction of the functioning of Central Government agencies such as railways, posts and telegraphs and aviation services, as a serious issue which the Government of India proposed to discuss with the State Government at the highest level at an early date.

Mr. Chavan drew the West Bengal Government's attention to its constitutional obligations. The Government of India had, in November, 1967, requested the State Governments to take effective measures to prevent and deal with any interference in the working of various Central agencies on the occasion of "bandhs". In such agitations involving general stoppage of work, it was pointed out that if they refused to take or abstained from taking effective measures to prevent and deal with such interference, they would be failing in the discharge of their obligations under Articles 256 and 257 of the Constitution.

The whole basis of administrative structure envisaged by the Constitution would be seriously undermined if the State Government did not take action under the law to prevent any obstruction of the functioning of Central Government agencies such as railways, posts and telegraphs and aviation services. "It is unfortunate that in spite of the advice given in November, 1967 the West Bengal Government did not undertake to offer the necessary protection for the running of trains and the uninterrupted operation of international flights. It did not take steps to ensure that other Central Government agencies functioned smoothly."

Mr. Jyoti Basu's View:

But, the West Bengal Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu, told newsmen in Calcutta on April 12 that the Government had constituted the Commission of Inquiry into the Cossipore incident without consulting the State Government.

"It seems the Centre is no mood to co-operate with us," he remarked. "I have doubts whether they can go on with the inquiry as the State Government's court cases are continuing".

To the Centre's letter desiring the co-operation of the State Government in this matter, Mr. Basu said the West Bengal Government was not in agreement with the Centre's decision. He indicated that the State Government "may not co-operate".

Asked for his reaction to the Central Home Minister's statement in Parliament that the West Bengal Government had violated constitutional provisions, he said: "We do not think so. However, it seems he wants to discuss the matter with us. We also want to discuss the matter with him in Delhi".

Loss By Bengal Bandh:

Rough estimates, on the basis of the State's aggregate income minus that from agriculture, suggest that the one-day strike on April 10 in West Bengal has cost the nation anything from Rs. 6 to 7 crores.

The direct loss of non-agricultural income is reckoned at Rs. 3.5 to Rs. 4 crores. This does not reflect the wages of daily rate incomes, as income in the industrial sector is taken at value added basis. Strike-bound jute mills in the State have alone lost production worth Rs. 75,-00,000, most of which would have earned valuable foreign exchange.

To this has to be added the loss to the ports, airlines, railways and the Posts and Telegraphs Department, estimated at about Rs. 2 crores. There are also the losses suffered by the municipal and essential services. Street lights were kept burning the whole day in order to avoid a blackout in Calcutta city and adjoining towns on the night of the hartal.

E. Mr. Jyoti Basu's Threat To Central Government: Inaugurating the 44th session of All-Bengal Teachers' annual meeting in Calcutta on April 12, the West Bengal Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu, declared that in the eventuality of the Centre refusing to provide "adequate funds to meet our special problems, there would be an agitation in West Bengal."

He said: "We are shortly going to Delhi to place our demands before the Central Government. They have the powers to give us funds, but they are not giving us anything. If they refuse to give us funds we will have to face them.".

Then, he told the teachers: "We will need your help and co-operation in the event of an agitation against the Centre."

He congratulated the teachers, particularly secondary school teachers, for extending their "full support" to the United Front during the mid-term poll.

He said that the Congress Government at the Centre had "insulted" the people of West Bengal by dislodging the first United Front Government from power. They had endangered parliamentary democracy in the country. The West Bengal electorate avenged it by returning the United Front to power with an overwhelming majority. "But it seems the reactionary Government at the Centre had not learnt a lesson. If the Centre refused to co-operate with the State Government by providing more powers and resources, we do not know how far the UF Government will be able to ameliorate the sufferings of the people.

"But, in that eventuality, the people will realize where is the enemy and whom to isolate. We will keep the people informed of the developments. There is nothing to be kept hidden from the people as the people are our source of strength."

F. CPI National Council Resolutions On Left Unity And Other Issues: A vital step towards forging unity between the two Communist Parties including the Naxalites was taken in New Delhi on April 10 by the National Council of the CPI when it called for setting up a national co-ordination committee.

The Council, in a special resolution on Left unity, invited the Communist Party (Marxist) to join the CPI in having a joint Communist bloc in Parliament. The Central Secretariat of the party was authorised by the Council to have bilateral talks with the leadership of the CPI(M) on these proposals.

It pointed out that the unity of the CPI and CPI(M) would strengthen the national democratic forces and bridge the gulf between the Communist and non-Communist forces in the Left and democratic camp.

The Council appealed to the SSP and other Left and democratic parties to abandon anti-communism and such slogans as a non-Congress and non-communist front, because experience had proved the futility of such a front.

Reviewing the mid-term poll, it said experience had confirmed the supreme need for unity of action at all levels between the CPI and CPI (M). Relations between these two parties had improved and the existence of a common stand on major issues had become more evident. But these relations were still far from adequate to meet the demands of the present crisis.

The Council pointed out that the Congress in future would not be able to rule single-handed at the Centre. The search for allies had already begun. Some of the known extreme Rightist leaders were searching for a combination of extreme Right elements. The factional-cum-political struggle inside the Congress leadership was being intensified, leading to further disintegration of the organization.

The Council regretted that the Government had failed to play any effective role in the efforts to end US aggression in Viet-Nam.

In another resolution, it condemned the "Mao Tse-tung leadership for provoking an armed clash on the Sino-Soviet border" and welcomed the Russian offer to the Chinese to settle the border dispute by peaceful negotiations.

It also re-iterated the urgent need for unity and cohesion in the world Communist movement and of the anti-imperialist forces. In its view, the present events were a continuation of the "entire policy of narrow nationalism and chauvinism pursued by the Mao Tse-tung leadership" during the past several years under the cover of ultra-revolutionary slogans.

By fanning anti-Soviet "hysteria and chauvinistic frenzy" the Maoists were trying to "create an atmosphere to enable them to cover up the disastrous results of the Cultural Revolution and to eliminate their opponents inside the Chinese party".

The resolution also accused the Mao Tse-tung leadership of "furthering its disruptive activities" in the international Communist movement and of "sowing distrust" of the Soviet Union and the CPSU among fraternal parties and of hampering the successful convocation of the World Communist Conference.

[The World Communist Conference, the first since the 1960 conference of 81 parties, is scheduled to be held in Moscow from June 5. It will be preceded by the final meeting of the preparatory committee set up at Budapest early last year to approve the documents for the Conference. India is one of the eight members of the preparatory committee. The other seven are Communist Parties of Soviet Union, Hungary, USA, France, Italy, Sudan and Uruguay.]

G. CPI (M) Central Committee Against Communist Unity—Resolutions: At the end of a five-day session in Calcutta on April 19, the Central Committee of the Communist Party of India (Marxist) rejected all "talk of unprincipled communist unity" because the basic reasons and causes that led to the split in the once united Communist Party remained valid and operative.

It strongly criticised the CPI for being "highly disruptive in every move and action" and declared that the CPI(M) could not be "misled by the glib talk of communist unity" since what divided the two communist parties was the difference between Marxism-Leninism and revisionism.

It said the Right Communists in West Bengal, like their Kerala counterparts, were not missing one single opportunity to range against the CPI(M) in alliance with one or the other political force in the State and were "slandering" the CPI(M) and its policies. The CPI was projecting much more vociferously the slogans of Left unity and communist unity because of the pressure of its rank and file and mass following in the face of the fiasco of the its policies as reflected in the mid-term election reverses in Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and Punjab..

The Central Committee held that the different groups and factions in the Congress were feverishly attempting to give a policy-colouring to their inner party conflicts, while in reality none of them squarely stood for the reversal of the pro-landlord, pro-big bourgeois and pro-foreign monopoly policies of the Congress Party and for the adoption of alternative democratic policies.

Another resolution stated that all Concurrent List subjects should be transferred to the State List. All the Bills passed by the States in favour of the people in the present State and Concurrent Lists should be given assent to by the President.

It said the States should have more constitutional powers to augment their resources pending which 75 per cent of Central Revenues should be transferred to the States. All Centrally-managed agricultural, industrial and educational, social and welfare departments and enterprises should be handed over to the States for management.

It demanded that the Industrial Security Forces, Central Reserve Police and Border Security Forces should be handed over to the States, and it was for the States to keep law and order in all sectors and enterprises. It also wanted handing over of the present IAS, ICS and other All-India Services to the States. Their recruitment, service conditions and disciplinary proceedings should all be under State jurisdiction.

H. Tamil Nadu (Madras) Budget: Tamil Nadu's Budget for 1969-70, presented to the State Assembly in Madras on March 1 by the new Finance Minister, Mr. K. A. Mathiazhagan, showed a deficit of Rs. 16.71 crores.

This was left uncovered since it was due entirely to non-Plan commitments which, according to Mr. Mathiazhagan would be taken note of by the Fifth Finance Commission.

Mr. Mathiazhagan said that the total revenue deficit attributable to the non-Plan side was Rs. 20.11 crores and expressed the hope that following the practice of the earlier Finance Commissions, the Fifth Finance Commission would, through devolution of Central taxes and grants under Article 275 of the Constitution, make available additional resources for covering fully the non-Plan deficit. Provision of additional assistance for bridging the gap in the State Budget on non-Plan account should be the first charge on the Central resources.

He said: "The Budget estimates, taking into account the revenue capital loan and public account, also reveal an overall deficit of Rs. 19.52 crores. But this deficit is only a reflection of the substantial non-Plan revenue deficit which, as we have argued, should be fully met in the final award of the Finance Commission. We have, therefore, left the deficit uncovered."

Revenue estimates for the year would amount to Rs. 268.66 crores, including Rs. 5.60 crores to be mobilized by the State on the basis of the additional taxation target set by the Planning Commission for the Fourth Plan period. Expenditure on revenue account was estimated at Rs. 285.37 crores, revealing a deficit of Rs. 16.71 crores. This deficit had been left uncovered.

Some efforts at mobilization of resources for the Plan, he said, were necessary and the Government would place proposals for this purpose before the House "in due course."

He added: "It is hoped these resources could in part be secured through rural debentures—a new instrument for mobilization of savings in rural areas. To the extent they were able to raise some resources through rural debentures, the need for taxation would be less."

I. Uttar Pradesh Budget—(Vote On Account): The Uttar Pradesh Budget for 1969-70 shows a deficit of over Rs. 43 crores.

The Budget was presented to the State Assembly on March 24 by the Finance Minister, Mr. Laxmi Raman Acharya and in the Legislative Council by the Co-operation Minister, Mr. Laxmi Shanker Yadav.

Estimated revenue receipts were Rs. 360.43 crores and revenue expenditure Rs. 403.51 crores.

However, the net overall deficit would be Rs. 35.62 crores after withdrawal from the State's reserves.

Immediately after presenting the Budget, the Finance Minister brought forward a Vote on Account for 1969-70 demanding a sum of more than Rs. 257 crores to meet the gross expenditure to be incurred in the next five months.

In his Budget speech, Mr. Acharya assured the House that the State Government would ensure that in raising resources, "lesser burden" fell on the poorer sections.

He said that the State had appealed to the Government of India for increased devolution. He earnestly hoped that the final award of the Fifth Finance Commission would not only cover the non-Plan revenue deficit but also provide for adequate additional grant-in-aid to enable the State to pull itself out of its present backwardness.

J. West Bengal Legislature—Governor's Address: In his address to the joint session of the West Bengal Legislature in Calcutta on March 6, the Governor, Mr. Dharma Vira, omitted two paragraphs of the speech prepared by the United Front Cabinet which described the dismissal of the United Front Ministry in 1967 as "peremptory and unconstitutional."

As the Governor skipped these two paragraphs, the Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, pointed out to Mr. Dharma Vira that he was omitting certain passages from the speech prepared by the Council of Ministers. The Governor replied that he had already informed Mr. Mukherjee that he could not read those portions.

A large number of UF members immediately rose in their seats and shouted that the Governor must read those portions. They calmed down when the Chief Minister asked them not to "disturb" the Governor and to allow him to continue.

Despite a notice circulated by the Secretary of the Legislature reminding all members that they should stand when the Governor entered and left the Assembly Chamber, none of the United Front members did so.

The omission by the Governor of two paragraphs of the Address prepared by the Cabinet was later noted in the Motion of Thanks which were moved by the Government side when the two Houses met separately.

The Motion sought to thank the Governor for the Address, "though he has unlawfully omitted" that part of the speech approved by the Council of Ministers.

In the Assembly, the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Siddhartha Shankar Ray (Congress) maintained that the Motion was out of order as under the rules, the Motion of Thanks must be put in an absolute form without any qualification or condition. Moreover, he said, portions omitted by the Governor were unconstitutional and any Motion supporting those portions should also become unconstitutional.

The Speaker, Mr. Bijoy Kumar Banerjee, ruled that prima facie the Motion of Thanks was in order.

A similar objection was raised by the Congress Party in the Council also, but the Deputy Chairman, Mr. U. N. Burman, declared that the motion was prima facie in order.

In his Address, the Governor touched on an issue "which has of late assumed very great importance for all the States, particularly for States where Governments have been formed by political parties other than the ruling party at the Centre."

He said that in the changed circumstances of today, possibly not quite foreseen by the framers of the Constitution, the re-alignment of forces and conflicting political considerations had been imposing considerable strain on the Centre's relationship with the States. The States found themselves severely and unfairly handicapped in fulfilling their multifarious commitments to the people because of their frustratingly limited constitutional, legal and financial powers.

He said: "My new Government is most emphatically of the view that the new political, social and economic environment of the country immediately demands a more rational, realistic and equitable re-adjustment of powers between the Centre and the States in the interests of national integrity and of the maximum good to the people we serve."

Expressing concern at the climate of industrial relations and employment situation in the State, the Governor gave certain figures to show "to what extent the faulty economic and fiscal policies pursued for years together by the Centre had led to a serious deterioration in the field of industrial relations." The resulting tensions in management-labour relations were not at all difficult to understand.

The State Government was extremely unhappy with the "truncated" draft Fourth Plan proposed for the State by the Planning Commission with a total outlay of only Rs. 320 crores. "My Ministers intend to take up the question afresh with the Central Government authorities before the next meeting of the National Development Council finalizes the Plan allocations."

Mr. Dharma Vira's Statement:

The West Bengal Governor, Mr. Dharma Vira, told newsmen in Calcutta on March 7 that conventions were not broken by the omission of certain portions of his speech at the opening session of the West Bengal Legislature.

He added that if it was obligatory on his part to read the speech, the Council of Ministers also had an obligation not to introduce anything which was derogatory to him and made it impossible for him to read it in full. He had earlier written to the Chief Minister intimating him that he could not read two paragraphs of the speech. He was again requested by the Council of Ministers to read the speech in its entirety. "I thought over it once again and felt I could not read these portions. The cause of summoning the Legislature was to give an account of the progress and the policy of the Government. I have not changed even a comma or a full-stop from the speech except omitting these two paragraphs."

Mr. Dharma Vira referred to the judicial decision on the dismissal of the United Front Ministry in the past and wondered how he, as the head of the State as also of the judiciary, could say anything against it.

Election Of Speaker:

Mr. Bijoy Kumar Banerjee was earlier re-elected Speaker of the West Bengal Legislative Assembly without any contest on March 6.

The United Front nominee, Mr. Apurba Lal Mazumdar (Forward Block) was elected Deputy Speaker.

K. West Bengal Budget—(Vote On Account): Presenting the West Bengal Budget (Vote on Account) for 1969-70 to the State Assembly in Calcutta on March 10, the Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee (who also holds the Finance portfolio), said that while the United Front Government would carry out all the reforms possible within the limitations of the Constitution, it would "put pressure in a relentless manner" on the Central Government for modifications of the economic system and planning for alleviating the sufferings of the people.

The Budget revealed a deficit of Rs. 35.36 crores, including the negative opening balance of Rs. 22.64 crores. The revenue deficit was estimated at Rs. 19.78 crores, but as there would be a surplus of Rs. 7.06 crores outside the revenue account, the overall deficit would be reduced to Rs. 12.72 crores.

Revenue receipts for the year were placed at Rs. 234.77 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 254.56 crores. The total provision for capital expenditure was Rs. 28.99 crores as against Rs. 27.69 crores in the revised estimates.

The revised estimates for revenue receipts and expenditure were Rs. 222.93 crores and Rs. 257.63 crores, respectively.

The Budget did not contain any tax proposals. If the Government decided to impose any taxes, it would do so when the regular Budget was presented.

Mr. Mukherjee, however, said the scope for additional taxation in West Bengal was "very much limited" as it would be difficult to impose heavier tax burdens on the people, particularly when the per capita taxation in the State was already "near about the highest" in the country.

L. West Bengal Legislative Council Abolition: The West Bengal Assembly unanimously adopted a resolution on March 21 urging the abolition of the Legislative Council. The resolution was moved by the Minister for Parliamentary Affairs, Mr. Jatin Chakravarty.

Supporting the resolution in principle, the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Siddhartha Shankar Ray, threw a challenge to the Government that to prove their political integrity six of the Ministers, who were either members of the Council or were likely to become so, should immediately resign.

The Upper Chamber, according to Mr. Chakravarty, was "unnecessary and an expensive luxury", which a State such as West Bengal could not afford. From Rs. 1,13,000 in 1952-53 the expenditure on this account had risen to Rs. 5,43,600 in 1968-69. Whatever might have been the reasons for introducing the Upper Chamber, in practice it had only helped the Congress to serve its party interests.

M. More DA For West Bengal State Employees: The West Bengal Cabinet decided on March 27 to grant dearness allowance at current Central Government rates to about 2,00,000 State Government employees with effect from April 1.

It also decided to increase, correspondingly, the rates of dearness allowance to teachers and non-teaching staff of non-Government schools and colleges.

This will involve an additional expenditure of Rs. 9 crores annually.

N. New All-India Services Given Up: A Central Home Ministry document available on March 27 said that the Government of India had given up its plans to create two Central Services, covering agricultural experts and educationists.

This followed opposition from State Governments, particularly non-Congress administrations, because of their fear of Central intrusion in their spheres of authority.

A Home Ministry document summed up the position thus: "The State Governments had agreed to the creation of two more All-India Services, namely, the Indian Educational Service and the Indian Agricultural Service. The resolution under Article 312 (1) of the Constitution had also been adopted by the Rajya Sabha, but the Bill to amend the All-India Services Act, which was introduced in the third Lok Sabha, lapsed with its dissolution.

"After the 1967 General Elections, a few State Governments modified their stand on the formation of All-India Services in general and some State Governments, on further consideration, did not agree to participate in the Indian Educational Service. The formation of these two Services was, therefore, reviewed in the light of the changed situation. It has been decided that, for the present, the All-India Services Act need not be amended further. Accordingly, steps are not being taken for the creation of the Indian Agricultural and the Indian Education Service. Orders to constitute the Indian Medical and Health Services with effect from February 1, 1969 have been issued and the recruitment rules and other regulations have been finalised in consultation with the State Governments and the Union Public Service Commission."

O. Cases Pending In High Courts: According to the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan's statement in Rajya Sabha on February 26, more than 22,000 cases had accumulated in the various High Courts of India during the 12 months ended December 31, 1968, the total number of cases pending before these courts being 3,56,978.

At the end of 1967, 3,34,629 cases were pending before the High Courts in the country. At the end of 1968, the arrears had increased to 3,56,978, showing a further accumulation of 22,349 cases during 1968.

The number of cases pending before the Supreme Court was 5,387.

The largest number of pending cases was before the Allahabad High Court (62,461) with the Calcutta High Court coming next (61,541).

The number of cases pending before the other High Courts were: Andhra Pradesh—22,515, Assam and Nagaland—3,061, Bombay—32,785, Delhi—17,865, Gujarat—15,955, Jammu and Kashmir (as on July 1, 1968)—1,179, Kerala—29,563, Madhya Pradesh—12,739, Madras—34,157, Mysore—13,932, Orissa—7,978, Patna—11,100, Punjab and Haryana—20,749, and Rajasthan—9,328.

Mr. Chavan said that the authorities in the States had been advised to take the following measures:

(1) The strength of judges in each High Court should be increased in the extent considered necessary.

(2) Vacancies in the High Courts should be filled without delay.

(3) Whenever a serving judge was given other duties and he was not likely to come back to the High Court concerned within six months, an additional or ad hoc judge should be appointed in his place so that the work of the High Court did not suffer.

P. Drive To Eradicate Untouchability—Committee's Recommendations To Parliament: A number of suggestions for a concerted and co-ordinated drive by official and non-official agencies to eradicate untouchability were made by the Committee on "Untouchability and Economic and Educational Development of the Scheduled Castes" in its report presented to the Lok Sabha on April 10.

The Committee suggested that the existing law against untouchability should be made more stringent by providing for a mandatory minimum prison sentence.

There must also be a clear-cut policy enunciation for social reconstruction of Hindu society. A social policy resolution should be formulated and the frame-work of social institutions remoulded.

The Committee, appointed by the Government of India in 1965, was headed by Mr. I Elayaperumal, then a member of the Lok Sabha.

It suggested that, as a means to eradicating untouchability, hereditary priesthood in Hindu society should be abolished.

"It can be achieved even without legislation." It may be replaced by an ecclesiastical organization of men possessing the requisite educational qualifications and having received training in recognized institutions of priesthood. It should be open to anybody regardless of caste and creed to join this organization.

It suggested that the Government should stop financial aid and loans to those practising untouchability. There should also be a comprehensive scheme for encouraging inter-caste marriages.

It noted that no adequate action had been taken by the authorities at various levels to enforce the law against untouchability. Many Government officials interviewed by the Committee had no knowledge of the provisions of the Untouchability (Offences) Act, 1955, and its copies were not available at many district headquarters.

After giving numerous instances of how untouchability was still practised with impunity in various parts of the country, the Committee pointed out that Scheduled Castes people were greatly handicapped—due to their own social and economic backwardness as well as official apathy—in fighting against the social tyranny of the upper castes even though the law was in their (the Scheduled Castes') favour.

Dealing with economic development of the Scheduled Castes, the Committee recommended that Scheduled Castes should get the first preference in the allotment of Government wasteland, surplus land taken over by the Government as a result of enforcement of land ceiling enactments and Bhoodan land (the present policy, according to the report, gave the first preference to those whose land had been acquired for some public purpose).

All State Governments and Union Territory Administrations, the Committee recommended, should take legislative and exactive measures for conferring ownership rights on Scheduled Castes in respect of their homestead land.

Some other suggestions of the Committee were: There should be a Backward Classes Finance Corporation in every State and Union Territory to give a boost to cottage industries; forced or bonded labour should be declared a punishable offence; more funds should be allocated to the backward classes sector in the Fourth Plan; and benefits in the educational and economic fields, admissible to Scheduled Castes, should continue to be available to them even after conversion to some other religion.

In the part on education, the Committee called for liberal scholarships, hostel facilities and special coaching facilities for Scheduled Castes students.

It noted that the representation of the Scheduled Castes in various services was short of the numbers reserved for them. This position, it said, should be rectified.

Q. Jallianwala Bagh Massacre's 50th Anniversary: Ceremonies were held in various parts of the country on April 13 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Jallianwala Bagh massacre on April 13, 1919 which turned the tide of Indian history.

The main function was held near Amritsar at Jallianwala Bagh—the very spot where over 400 people lost their lives on that fateful day when Brig.-Gen. Sir Michael O'Dyer ordered his men to open fire.

Over 5,000 people, who had assembled at the spot, observed two minutes' silence in memory of the martyrs.

Addressing the gathering, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, appealed to the people to strengthen unity for preserving their hard-won freedom.

She said that by paying homage to the martyrs of Jallianwala Bagh "we are paying homage to people all over the world who sacrificed their lives for the maintenance of human values." The Jallianwala Bagh tragedy had awakened the nation and made it fearless. The massacre led to a wave of resentment all over the country. A young man, Udham Singh, had subsequently shot dead Sir Michael O'Dwyer, who was Lieut-Governor of Punjab during the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy.

Mrs. Gandhi honoured the seven survivors of the massacre, now in their seventies, with a shawl and a purse of Rs. 5,000 each. The survivors were Mr. Manak Chand, a retired district nazir, Pandit Daulat Ram Vashisht, manager of a bank, Mr. Asa Ram, Mr. Panna Lal, Mr. Deva Singh, Mr. Maharaj Kishen and Mr. Ghuggi Mal.

Mrs. Gandhi laid a wreath at the base of the 45-foot-high memorial. Wreaths were also laid on behalf of the President, Dr. Zakir Husain, and the Vice-President, Mr. V. V. Giri. Among others who laid wreaths were the Governor of Punjab, Dr. D. C. Pavate, the Governor of Rajasthan, Mr. Hukam Singh, the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, the Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, and the Central Minister for Communications, Mr. Satyanarain Sinha.

Mrs. Gandhi also formally released a commemorative stamp and inaugurated an exhibition of photographs, paintings and charts dealing with the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy and the freedom struggle.

A. New Land Ownership Law: A new law recently approved by Parliament and described as the "final blow to feudalism" will enable more than one million farmers to own the land they cultivate.

The new law converts 1,121,473 tenant farmers into owners. Taking into account the farmers' families, some six million people should benefit from the law throughout the country.

It is a major step forward in the land reform programme launched in 1962 by Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlevi. The programme intends to free peasants from centuries of serfdom under the domination of wealthy landlords.

These new owners must repay for the land in equal instalments over a 12-year period. Each instalment will be equal to the amount they have paid annually to the landlord for renting his land.

NEPAL

A. Mr. S. B. Thapa Resigns—New Ministry: The Prime Minister, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa, submitted his resignation to King Mahendra on April 2.

In an announcement over Radio Nepal, he said: "I am submitting my resignation to enable King Mahendra to constitute a new Cabinet. I have been in Government for long, and I am submitting my resignation so that there can be a change which is essential to promote democratic practices.

"We should always keep in view the circumstance and political changes in countries in our neighbourhood. If we do not note what all happens around us, we will be placed far off from democracy.

"To strengthen democracy and to give a chance to others, I am resigning from Prime Ministership. I am thankful to all my colleagues for their co-operation during my term in office."

Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa took over as Prime Minister in January, 1967. Prior to that, he was Chairman of the Council of Ministers for about 2½ years.

On April 7, King Mahendra installed in office a new Cabinet headed by Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht.

The 16-man Ministry, announced by the Palace Secretariat, comprised, seven Cabinet Ministers, four Ministers of State and five Assistant Ministers.

Mr. Surendra Bahadur Basnet, Minister for Finance, Industry and Commerce in the previous Cabinet, was dropped while other four Ministers were retained. Two Ministers of State in the last Ministry were promoted to Cabinet rank.

Mr. Khadga Bahadur Singh, No. 2 in the Cabinet who superseded the Defence Minister, Mr. G. P. Budhathoki, was dropped in Cabinet re-constitution of August, 1966. A staunch royalist, he was nominated by the King as a member of the Raj Sabha (Council of State).

Two Ministers of State in the outgoing Ministry—Mr. Navraj Subedi and Mr. Basudev Dhungana—were promoted to Cabinet rank.

The King dropped esven Ministers of State of the previous Ministry.

The four Ministers of State are new entrants. They are: Mr. Gunjeshwari Prasad Singh (who was dropped in the Cabinet re-constitution of September, 1968, Mr. Hom Bahadur Shrestha, a Kiratnagar landlord, Mr. Bindeshwari Prasad Singh and Mr. Lal Bahadur Kharawat.

The Assistant Ministers are also new faces. They are Mr. K. B. Gurung, Mr. H. C. Mahat, Mr. D.S. Rai, Mr. B. M. Dewan and Mr. Dip Bahadur Khadka.

Mr. Bisht, who succeeded Mr. Thapa, was a Minister with Cabinet rank in different Ministries which occupied office between April, 1963 and September, 1968.

He was dropped by Mr. Thapa in the Cabinet re-constitution ordered by the King in the last week of September, 1968. At that time, Mr. Bisht was away at the UN leading Nepal's delegation to the General Assembly session.

As conceded by Mr. Thapa, there have been two views in the National Panchayat over the question of release of detenus. Mr. Bisht and Mr. Devkota, former Agriculture Minister, had come to be associated in public mind with the school opposed to liberalization. (Both, however, have said that they welcomed the release of detenus).

Mr. Bisht was Minister-in-waiting during the three months when King Mahendra was convalescing in West Nepal Terai after a heart attack last Summer. He was considered to have won the confidence of the King after his stay in the convalescence camp.

Dropped from the Ministry during his absence, Mr. Bisht returned home last Autumn and continued to serve as a member of the National Panchayat.

On November 17, 1968, Mr. Bisht and Mr. Devkota issued a joint statement which set forth for the first time their differences with Mr. Thapa. They ridiculed Mr. Thapa's claim to introduction of liberalist trends in official policy.

The statement said that there was no scope for differences arising under a party-less system working under the guidance of the King. They were obviously referring to the Prime Minister's statement that two schools of thought had emerged in the National Panchayat.

They blamed Mr. Thapa for showing scant regard to ideals of the panchayat system resulting in lack of enthusiasm and confusion in Nepalese society.

The statement did not give Mr. Thapa credit for releasing political detenus in October, 1968 and described the release as a routine administrative job.

As Foreign Minister, Mr. Bisht has paid two visits to Peking in recent years. His statement in China early in 1968 praising the working of Chinese communes produced widespread astonishment at home.

The new Prime Minister is closely related to the family of the Royal Priest of Nepal. He was initiated into politics by Mr. D. R. Regmi, Nepali National Congress Leader.

The portfolios of the Ministers are:

Mr. K. N. Bisht (Prime Minister): Finance, General Administration and Palace Affairs.

Mr. Khadga Bahadur Singh: Home, Panchayat, Land Reforms, Food and Agriculture.

Mr. G. P. Budhathoki: Defence and Forests.

Mr. G. B. Rajbhandari: Foreign Affairs, Information and Broadcasting.

Mr. Rudraprasad Giri: Transport, Communication, Water Resources and Power.

Mr. Navraj Subedi: Commerce and Industry.

Mr. Basudev Dhungana: Education, Law and Justice.

Mr. Gunjeshwari Prasad Singh: Health, Information and Broadcasting,

Mr. Hom Bahadur Shreshta: Transport and Communication.

Mr. Bindeshwari Prasad Singh: General Administration.

Mr. Lal Bahadur Kharayat: Land Reforms, Agriculture and Food.

Assistant Ministers:

Mr. Khadga Bahadur Gurung: Land Reforms.

Mr. Harishchandra Mahat: Food and Agriculture.

Mr. Dillise Rai: Home and Panchayat.

Mr. Bhaktiman Dewan: Land Reforms.

Mr. Dip Bahadur Khadka: Law and Justice.

Mr. K. Bisht On His Policies:

In a broadcast to the nation on April 9, the Prime Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, said that special efforts would be made by his Ministry to promote friendly relations with neighbouring countries and declared: "This friendship has helped us gain international prestige."

He outlined the political, economic and social programmes which his Ministry proposed to implement and said that the Government would ever remain alert against elements trying to disturb peace and security.

Speaking of the Ministry's economic plans, he said that the Government would strive for effective utilization of man-power as it felt that the nation's natural resources should be harnessed in full measure. Implementation of land reforms programme would be given high priority.

About foreign policy, he said: "We cannot visualize any policy other than that of co-existence which is most useful for world peace in a world divided by different political and economic systems."

TURKEY

A. Earthquake: At least 53 people were killed in an earthquake in Alasehir area of Western Turkey on March 28.

Two thousand houses collapsed and the Red Crescent—Muslim equivalent of the Red Cross— rushed in 2,000 tents, 10 tons of food and a mobile hospital.

In August, 1968, more than 200 people were killed in a series of earthquakes in Adapazari, northwest Turkey, and in Tunceil, in the eastern part of the country.

Alasehir, founded in the first millennium B.C., has a long history of earthquake destruction, notably in 17 A.D. when it was completely destroyed and rebuilt by the Emperor Tiberius. In classical times it was known as Philadelphia.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Issue—More Fighting: In West Asia, sporadic fighting continued between Israeli forces on the one side and Egyptian, Jordanian, Syrian and El Fatah guerrillas, some minor and some serious.

According to reports from Cairo, Egyptian and Israeli forces fought machine-gun and small arms duels across the Suez Canal on March 6 in the latest of a series of incidents on the cease-fire line.

An Egyptian military communique said that the Israelis began the firing which continued intermittently for hours.

The Egyptian report of firing across the blocked Canal was the fifth in the past ten days.

According to Tel Aviv sources, Egyptian troops opened a heavy artillery barrage against Israeli positions across the Suez Canal along a wide front from El Kantara in the north to Suez town in the south, on March 8.

According to Cairo Radio, Israeli artillery opened fire on the Egyptian town of Ismailia on the Suez Canal.

Earlier (on March 8), four UAR MIG-21s flew over Israeli air-space over the Sinai desert and were intercepted by Israeli fighters.

The artillery battle between Israel and UAR raged along the entire length of the Suez Canal.

Israeli forces also shelled petroleum installations in Suez.

A UAR military communique said that one UAR fighter plane was lost in the dog-fight, but claimed that one Israeli plane was shot down.

Firing broke out again for the second consecutive day on March 9 along the length of the Suez Canal, an Israeli military announcement said.

The fighting, which raged in the same area for five hours on March 8, was resumed ater a lull of some 13 hours following a cease-fire negotiated by the UN military observers.

An Israeli military spokesman accused the UAR forces of starting the duel.

Though the Suez Canal zone was quiet, smoke was still rising from two parts of Suez refinery which was hit by Israeli bombers. Two oil refineries were damaged and three reservoirs destroyed during the previous day's five-hour Suez Canal zone artillery barrage. Three thousand tons of oil blazed and two other reservoirs were hit during the duel. Damage was estimated at hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The Israeli Government sent a letter to the UN Security Council President protesting against the "new Egyptian aggression" in the Suez Canal area. Each side accused the other of starting the firing.

The Chief of Staff of the UAR Armed Forces, Lt-Gen Abdul Moneim Riad, was killed in the artillery duel with Israel across the Suez Canal on March 9.

The Middle East News Agency, quoting a statement from the Presidency of the Republic, said that General Riad was killed by "an enemy artillery shell."

The appointment of Maj.-Gen. Ahmed Ismail Aly as the new Egyptian armed forces Chief of Staff was announced on March 13.

Fighting broke out between Israeli and UAR forces across the Suez Canal in the region of Port Tewfik on March 11 and again on March 13.

Israelis and Egyptians used rockets, artillery, mortars and light weapons.

An Israeli army spokesman said the Egyptians opened fire all along the Canal.

An Amman report said that two Jordanian civilians were killed and nine others wounded, five seriously, in an Israeli air attack on Jordanian positions on March 14.

Four Israeli Mystere fighters raided some areas, which included Al-Zamaliya, Northern Shuneh and Waggas, and straffed them with rockets.

In addition to those killed or wounded, two civilian cars were destroyed. Five other cars, a tractor and some plantations were also damaged.

Northern Shuneh is about seven miles, Waggas about six miles, and Al-Zamaliya about 7½ miles south of the Sea of Galilee.

A Tel Aviv report said that Israeli planes bombed and strafed positions of the El Fatah groups in Jordan territory on March 14. The bombings were directed at Arab commando positions opposite the area south of the Beisan Valley.

Israel's Permanent Representative to UN, Mr. Yosef Tekoah, informed the President of the Security Council that UAR forces had launched a major attack against Israel in the Suez Canal sector "in flagrant violation of the cease-fire."

Jordan also lodged a complaint with United Nations.

On March 16, Israeli war planes struck at Jordan again, killing three civilians in rocket, napalm and machine-gun attacks on Amman and two other places. Seven people, including two Jordanian soldiers, were wounded.

The area hardest hit appeared to be near Jerash, 30 miles north of Amman, where two civilians were reported killed and six people wounded, including two soldiers.

Next day (March 17), Israeli jet planes struck at suspected Arab guerrilla posts in Jordan for the second successive day. A Jordanian military spokesman said in Amman that four planes took part in the raids, attacking with rockets, napalm bombs and machine-guns.

A UAR Army communique said that fresh fighting flared up along the Suez Canal on March 18 when Israeli soldiers in mobile tanks opened fire on the ports of Tewfik and Suez at the Red Sea end of the Suez Canal.

An Israeli report, however, said that Egyptian guns had shelled Israeli positions across the Suez Canal, slightly wounding one soldier. The Israelis returned the fire in an attempt to silence the Egyptian positions.

Israeli aircraft bombed positions held by Palestinian commandos on March 19 after a mortar attack from Jordanian territory against Kibbutzs in the Beisan Valley area.

Bazooka shells were fired on an Israeli police border patrol from Jordanian territory early on March 20.

On March 21, Jordanian forces shot down one of the two Israeli Mystere fighters which raided parts of Jordan. The pilot of the plane was also killed. The planes were raiding the south Jordan valley.

On March 24, Egyptian forces claimed that they destroyed nine Israeli tanks in an artillery duel across the Suez Canal.

An earlier military communique said Israeli forces on the eastern bank of the Suez Canal opened fire twice on Egyptian positions from a moving tank, but there was no damage to the Egyptian side.

Also on March 24, Jordanian and Israeli forces exchanged sporadic medium machine-gun fire for more than an hour in the northern Jordan Valley.

On March 26, about 18 civilians died and 25 were injured when Israeli jets raided a locality near the town of Salt in the Jordan valley.

Four Israeli jets raided the area of Ain Nizzir, west of Amman. They used bombs and rockets.

Cairo Radio claimed on April 4 that UAR forces had shot down an Israeli helicopter in the fighting which flared up along the Suez Canal. (Israel, however, refuted the claim).

An Egyptian army communique said that many Israelis were killed and wounded and six observation posts and two artillery positions destroyed in the gun battle. An administrative centre was also destroyed.

Meanwhile, in Tel Aviv, Israeli military sources claimed that Egyptian frontline positions were badly hit during a two-hour artillery duel in the southern sector of the Suez Canal on April 4.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that mortar fire was opened on an Israeli settlement from across the cease-fire line with Jordan on April 7.

He said that a number of mortar bombs were fired from the Jordanian side in the Maoz Haim region in the Beth Shean valley. The Israeli forces returned the fire. One member of the Maoz Haim settlement was slightly wounded.

On April 8, Egyptian and Israeli forces exchanged heavy fire across the Suez Canal for the second time in four days and Israeli jets strafed Jordan's only port of Aqaba for the first time since the war.

An Egyptian military communique said that the fighting started near Port Tewfik.

More significant than the Suez Canal exchanges were the commando rocket attacks on the Israeli port of Eilat and the Israeli reprisal in starting a raid on Aqaba—ports within three miles of each other—on April 3.

Aqaba is Jordan's only outlet to the sea and is being developed as a vast holiday resort. Ninety per cent of Israel's oil supplies come from Iran through Eilat.

Several rockets crashed into Eilath—which lies about five miles from Aqaba at the head of the Gulf—at intervals of five to 10 minutes. Most of the rockets, however, exploded in open ground, according to reports reaching Tel Aviv from Eilat. Eight civilians, including a woman and four children, were killed and nine others wounded in the raid.

Israel warned Jordan on April 9 that it could easily blockade its vital Red Sea port of Aqaba in retaliation for the rocket attack on the Israeli port of Eilat on April 8.

Maj-Gen. H. Herzog said that Aqaba was Jordan's only out-let to the sea through which the Arab nation received much of its new military equipment.

He said that the rocket attack on Eilat, which Israeli officials said was launched from Aqaba, shattered a 20-year-old unofficial truce between the two twin cities at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba.

There had been no fighting along the border between the two ports in the June, 1967 six-day war.

President Nasser On Threat Of War: President G. A. Nasser, in an interview published in The New York Times on March 3, predicted that unless Israel abandoned every inch of soil occupied during the six-day war of June, 1967 there would be a conflict again in West Asia.

He added that Israel must take the hanging of nine Jews in Iraq on back into her territory those refugees who had left since the State was formed in 1948 and who wished to return. "This is the main problem—the right of the Palestinians in their own land. They lived there for thousands of years and now they are expelled. Without fulfilment of such claims, this problem will continue for tens of years."

He estimated that there were more than one million Palestinian Arab refugees—Muslims and Christians.

Mr. C. L. Sulzberger, who interviewed President Nasser, reported that he gave the impression that he did not expect Israel to accept a political solution on the terms he suggested and that, therefore, a solution must be found by other means. "One could not accept occupation of his country by aggressive armed force. One has to fight."

Mr. Nasser expressed readiness to resume diplomatic relations with the United States—which he severed in June, 1967—but made it clear that serious difficulties existed, since the United States was selling Phantom jet fighters to Israel while her forces occupied conquered Egyptian territory.

'This means," he said, "the United States encourages Israel to continue to occupy our territory."

Mr. Nasser said he did not think that Israel had any atomic weapons. But, he warned: "As long as they (the Israelis) don't sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, there is danger. We have signed it. If they tried to build nuclear weapons, we would try to have our own. We have the capacity but what we need is the investment money required for production."

He insisted that Jews in UAR were treated as Egyptians with "all rights" and were free to emigrate if they wished—a statement that is contested by foreign observers.

He reckoned that there were about 5,000 Jews in Egypt, of whom about 100 were under arrest "because they are Zionists and are in contact with Israel." He insisted that in the Gaza Strip—a segment of former Egyptian-held territory in southern Palestine now held by Israel—600 Arabs were in prison for security reasons.

He thought it "silly" to talk of anti-Semitism in the Arab world, because "the Jews are our cousins. Moses was born in Egypt. Don't stress this. Don't want it to be an Israeli claim. They say we are anti-Semitic, which is nonsense. We are Semites ourselves."

He criticized Western reaction to January 27. "It was not hanging of Jews. It was hanging of spies. Some were Moslems, some Arab, some Christian."

Although Soviet naval vessels often visit Egyptian ports, there were none at the moment (March, 1969) and no military bases on his territory had been granted to any foreign country. He asserted that there were probably fewer than 1,000 Russian technicians and training personnel in Egypt—a figure far smaller than that mentioned by some Cairo diplomats—and added: "But I am asking for more."

He said that while USSR had sent in large arms shipments to make up for losses in 1967, UAR had not at this date exceeded its pre-war weapons strength. "That is why we are particularly worried about statements in Western countries that they want to ban arms entering this area. The meaning of an arms ban would be that Israel will have superiority . . . in both Army and Air Force, while we won't get the opportunity to replace what we lost ... this would put Israel in a superior position and encourage it to continue occupation of Arab territories."

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, described President Nasser's interview with Mr. C. L. Sulzberger as a startling rejection of political truth and human values.

Mr. Eban, in a formal reply circulated by the Foreign Ministry, said: "Nasser's interview confirms all the most negative interpretations of UAR (United Arab Republic) policy. Nasser's policy is no peace, no estab- cognition, no negotiation, no estab- lishment of secure and recognized boundaries, no acknowledgment of Israel's sovereignty, no freedom of Israeli navigation in the Suez Canal, no agreement on arms limitation. The entire interview is startling in its rejection of political truth and of human values".

Soviet Plan For West Asia:

The Times (London) published on February 28 the Soviet plan for West Asia which Russian officials had put to the Western Powers early in January, 1969.

It outlined the steps by which the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 could be put into effect.

The version of the Soviet proposals which reached The Times is as follows:

"Israel and Israel's Arab neighbour-countries who will be ready to take part in the implementation of such a plan shall confirm their agreement with the resolution of the Security Council of November 22, 1967, and shall state their readiness to implement all of its provisions.

"In doing so they agree that by means of contacts through Dr. Jarring a time schedule and procedure for the withdrawal of Israel troops from the territories occupied during the conflict in 1967 will be established, and at the same time an agreed plan or the fulfilment by the parties of the other provisions of the Security Council resolution will be outlined, bearing in mind the establishment of a just and lasting peace in West Asia with which each State in this area can live in security.

"The purpose of these contacts could be agreement upon concrete measures for implementing the said Security Council resolution.

"(1) Agreement shall be reached in simultaneous statements by the Government of Israel and the Governments of Israel's Arab neighbour-countries, who will take part in the implementation of this plan; on their readiness to proceed to a cessation of the state of war between them and to achieve a peaceful settlement after withdrawal of Israel troops from the occupied Arab territories.

"In this connexion, Israel shall state its willingness to start the withdrawal of its troops from the Arab territories occupied as a result of the conflict during the Summer of 1967 on the date specified.

"(2) On the day the withdrawal of Israeli troops begins, carried out by stages under the supervision of UN representatives, the said Arab countries as well as Israel shall deposit with UN the appropriate documents concerning the cessation of the state of war, respect and recognition of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of each State in this area and their right to live in peace, within secure and recognized boundaries, that is in accordance with the said resolution of the Security Council.

"In accordance with the understanding which shall be reached through Dr. Gunnar Jarring, provisions shall also be agreed upon which concern secure and recognized boundaries (with corresponding maps attached), the safeguarding of freedom of navigation in the international waterways in this area, just settlement of the refugee problem, safeguarding of the teritorial inviobility and political independence of each State in this area (possibly with the aid of measures which include the establishment of demilitarized zones).

"It is intended that this understanding be regarded in accordance with the Security Council resolution as one whole entity, pertaining to all aspects of the settlement in the whole area of the Middle East, as a 'package'.

"(3) During the course of the succeeding month (or as agreed) Israeli troops shall withdraw from a part of the Arab territories to certain intermediate lines on the Sinai peninsula, on the west bank of the Jordan River (as well as from Syrian territory, from the El Kuneitra area).

"On the day when Israeli troops reach the intermediate lines in the peninsula agreed to in advance (for example, 30 to 40 km. from the Suez Canal) the Government of the United Arab Republic will bring troops into the Suez Canal area and zegin the clean-up of the Canal for resumption of navigation.

"(4) During the course of the second month (or as agreed) the Israeli troops shall withdraw to the line they held prior to June 5, 1967, after which the administration of the corresponding Arab country shall be completely restored in the vacated territories and its troops and police forces be introduced.

"On the day when the second stage of Israeli troop withdrawal begins, the United Arab Republic and Israel (or the United Arab Republic only, in the event that its Government agrees) shall state their consent to the stationing of United Nations troops near the line prior to June 5, 1967, on the Sinai peninsula, at Sharm-Al-Shaikh and in the Gaza Strip; that is, the situation in this area which existed in May, 1967, shall be restored.

"The Security Council shall adopt a decision on sending United Nations troops in accordance with the United Nations Charter and affirm the principle of freedom of navigation through the Strait of Tiran and in the Gulf of Aqaba for the vessels of all countries.

"(5) After completion of the Israeli troops withdrawal to the lines of inter-State demarcation, either through the mediation or the signing of a multilateral document, the documents of the Arab States and Israel deposited earlier shall finally enter into effect.

"The Security Council, basing itself upon provisions of the United Nations Charter, shall adopt a decision on guarantees for the Arab-Israel boundaries (the possibility of guarantees by the four Powers—permanent Security Council members—is also not to be excluded)"

USA Urged To Stop Arms Supply To Israel:

At a news conference in Cairo on January 15, the UAR Deputy Minister of National Guidance, Dr. H. Zayyat, re-iterated that Egypt wanted peace in West Asia but that the United States was not helping by continuing to supply arms to Israel.

He said: "We want peace. We need it. It is not something to be ashamed of trying to get. But when we speak of peace we are not speaking of surrender."

UAR felt, he said, that President de Gaulle's decision not to supply Israel with further arms was a logical one in present circumstances. But the Americans had agreed to supply Israel with Phantom jet aircraft. This could not be described as an even-handed policy.

On the question of resuming diplomatic relations with USA, Dr. Zayyat said: "We must have some demonstration that it is not going to go on supplying Israel and helping her to occupy us. We are asking simply for normality. We are not asking for exceptional privileges from America, nor should we be asked to pay a special price. We are prepared to believe that Israel attacked us on June 5, 1967 against Washington's wishes. But the United States should have stopped encouraging the aggression."

Speaking of Israel's apparent opposition to the Soviet proposals for ending the West Asian conflict, Dr. Zayyat said that Israel wanted the Arab States to agree to her wish "to impose herself as a dominant State, as the area's police State".

He went on: "Israel will accept nothing less than direct negotiations and the signature of a peace treaty in order to impose her conditions upon us and become our master.

"But the Israeli rejection of the Soviet memorandum is not important. What interests the Soviet Union is the response of the countries to which the memorandum was addressed—that is, the Powers which have the power of veto in the United Nations Security Council."

Israel Rejects "Big Four" Peace Talks:

On March 30, Israel officially rejected the four-Power talks on West Asia.

An official announcement issued after a meeting of the Israeli Cabinet said that the talks were liable to aid parties to the conflict in evading responsibility to make their own peace. "Israel opposes any settlement and any procedure which is not agreed upon by the Governments concerned. Israel is not and will not become the object of Power politics or intra-Power politics and will not accede to any recommendation which conflicts with her vital interests, her rights and her security."

The statement came after two Cabinet meetings to discuss the Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban's talks in Washington with President R. Nixon and his Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers.

It followed increasing signs that ambassadors of the Big Four Powers were about to meet at UN to discuss West Asia.

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On "Big Four" Talks:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan, told a students' meeting on April 6 that acceptance of the Big Four Powers' terms for a West Asia settlement would mean Israel's suicide.

He declared: "We must say 'No' to the Powers."

The UAR forces were unable to move Israel from the Suez Canal. "They will be powerless to do so in the coming Summer, in the Fall or any other time." They were "warming up" along the Suez Canal to back up President Nixon's contention that West Asia was a powder keg likely to go off and that the intervention of the Big Powers was therefore urgently required. This was sure fiction, he said. West Asia was not burning. The Arab countries could not set it ablaze and there was no danger of a confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union. "It is Suez which is burning Egyptian oil installations and the Canal towns."

There was no danger of an Arab-Israeli war because the Arabs knew they could not win. The Arab countries were seeking through the Big Powers an Israeli withdrawal without a peace settlement, he said. The four Powers wanted Israel to act in accordance with the interests of the Soviet Union, France, USA and Britain. He bluntly stated that Israel would reply with a curt "No."

Gen. Dayan accused the Big Four Powers of trying to gain advantages for the Arabs which the Arab States had been unable to secure for themselves.

Mr. Abba Eban On Essentials Of Peace:

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, re-affirmed in Washington on March 16 Israel's determination not to go back to pre-war frontiers.

"The map of peace," he emphasized in a television interview, "will be different from the armistice map."

He made it clear that no settlement would be acceptable to Israel without the Arab signatures.

Ruling out a peace imposed by the Big Powers, he said peace was the business and responsibility of sovereign Governments of the area. The Arab Governments had two prospects before them—either to accept the present situation or change it by real peace.

He accused France and the Soviet Union of trying to reconstruct "the debris of the past situation which was shattered by belligerency and by war in 1967."

He was satisfied that USA and UK "want to go forward to a new kind of relations."

Mr. Y. Allon's Warning:

The acting Israeli Prime Minister, Mr. Y. Allon, warned UAR on March 11 of "new" Israeli measures against her "if she continues the artillery attacks across the Suez Canal".

In a radio interview, Mr. Allon said: "We will take effective measures, such measures which the enemy knows already, and such which would be new to him."

He added that Israeli counter-attacks were the only way to answer each "aggression".

"Israel's situation would be grave", he said, "if we would not hit back in force. If we would not react against aggressions, we would already be involved in a large-scale war, although the Arabs cannot beat us".

Chinese Aid To Arabs:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan, said in Tel Aviv that Israel had definite proof that UAR intelligence initiated, organized and deployed squads of saboteurs in the Sinai area.

There had been, he said, 41 cease-fire violations and terrorist incidents in Sinai and the Gaza Strip in the last three months.

The total value of Soviet supplies to the Arab States since the 1967 fighting was estimated at more than $2,000 million.

Asked about reports that Arab terrorist groups had asked for official French support, he said concrete evidence, available to date, pointed only to aid from China. Sabotage groups were receiving training in the country. In some cases, Chinese-made weapons had been found on captured saboteurs.

UN Security Council Condemns Israel:

In a vote that split the Big Four Powers almost on the eve of West Asian peace talks, the Security Council condemned Israel on April 1 for an air attack on a Jordanian village.

The Soviet Union and France voted for the condemnation resolution, which was approved by 11 to nil with four abstentions. The United States and Britain, objecting that the resolution was one-sided, were among the abstainers.

The resolution, sponsored by Pakistan, Senegal and Zambia, condemned "the recent premeditated air attacks launched by Israel on Jordanian villages and populated areas in flagrant violation of the UN Charter and cease-fire resolutions."

The resolution also warned that if Israel repeated the attacks, the Council would have to consider further steps envisaged under the UN Charter—a reference to possible sanctions and even use of military force.

Jordan made the initial request for an urgent session of the Council after the attack on a village near Salt on March 26. Jordan claimed that 18 civilians were killed, Israel said that the raid was against a base of El Fatah, the Arab guerrilla organization.

More Israeli Settlements Urged:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, said in Tel Aviv on March 8 that more Israeli settlements should be established in the Israeli-occupied territories so that the lives of the Arabs there could be bound more closely with the Israeli economy.

It was absurd, he said, that 20 months after the six-day June, 1967 war, Egyptian and Jordanian legal systems were being used to administer the occupied territories.

Referring to Arab terrorists, he said, the danger they posed lay not in their actions of sabotage but in the fact that they pushed Arab Governments towards extremism.

B. Earthquake: A series of earthquake shocks shook the capitals of UAR and Israel as well as other West Asian towns on March 31, about 48 hours after 23 people were killed and 160 hurt when a mud-walled Ethiopian town was flattened by a tremor.

In Cairo, hotels, apartments and office buildings swayed slightly as a 15-second shock hit the city. One house collapsed, three were damaged and five people were taken to hospital with injuries.

The quake shock in Israel was reported to be particularly strong at Bet Shemesh, near Jerusalem, and was felt as far away as the Red Sea port of Eilat, some 130 miles south of the Holy City.

In Sicily, people ran from villages and farms on the eastern slopes of Mount Etna or drove to the coast when a tremor shook the area.

Officials of the seismographic department said the epicentre of the tremor was in the desert region, 140 miles south-east of Cairo.

C. Government Report On Arab Guerrillas: A Government report published in Tel Aviv on March 21 said that pressure and intimidation by Arab commando groups was one of the basic causes of continuing strikes, demonstrations and disorder in Israel-occupied Arab territory.

The report, issued by the Defence Ministry, also mentioned frustration, a growing feeling among the Arab population that the prospects of a settlement and an end of Israel occupation were distant and the waning authority of Arab leaders.

The Arab population of Jerusalem called a general strike the same day (March 21) to mark the anniversary of the Israeli bombing of Arab commando emplacements in the Jordan town of Karameh.

Police Quell Arab Demonstration:

Police with riot shields broke up a procession of Arab women inside the Damascus Gate in Jerusalem on March 28. The women were carrying wreaths to the grave of a Jerusalem Arab who had died in custody a week earlier.

Just before they reached the Damascus Gate, the police discharged a water cannon from the ramparts on them, drenching them in pink-coloured water. The police then charged to disperse the women, but as far as could be seen no one was hurt.

Meanwhile, four lorry drivers who lived on the west bank of the Jordan were killed in the Israeli air strike on March 26 on El Fatah forces, just south of Es-Salt, on the road between Amman and Allenby Bridge. Permission for the bodies to be brought back for burial by the families of the men was granted by Gen. Dayan, the Minister of Defence. Two of the men lived in Nablus, one in Ramallah and one in Bethlehem.

The Israeli announcement added that the military governors of the towns "express regret to the families, explaining that the targets of the Air Force aircraft were bases of saboteurs, where these four men found themselves by chance".

The air strike on the El Fatah camp, according to the Israeli authorities, was made because the camp was serving as an operations and supply base for both El Fatah and the Palestine Liberation Front. Its importance had increased since the destruction of camps by Israeli air strikes in the vicinity last August. The camp was said to be relatively isolated, with no permanent civilian population. It was thought to be used by the Arab organizations because it lies on a principal approach road to the Israeli border.

D. Mr. Abba Khoushi Dead: Mr. Abba Khoushi, Mayor of Haifa and top Labour Party leader, died on March 24. He was 70.

A powerful personality, he ran his city of 22,000 with a firm hand. At the same time he was influential in affairs on the national level as one of the top leaders of the ruling Labour Party. He repeatedly declined Cabinet posts and served only briefly and inconspicuously as a member of the Knesset before he became Mayor of Haifa in 1951.

Born in Galicia (Poland), he came to Palestine in 1920. Like the typical Zionist pioneers of that period, he joined a Kibbutz, worked on road construction and swamp drainage. He later worked as a stevedore in Haifa port and became secretary of the Port Workers' Union.

Haifa was the cleanest and best run in the country and had the most parks and playgrounds, but it hurt Mr. Khoushi's pride that it was dependent on Jerusalem and Tel Aviv for culture. Accordingly, he established a municipal orchestra, a city theatre and the nucleus of a university, and offered houses at giveaway terms to men of letters.

JAPAN

A. Production Of Uranium-235 Achieved: Scientists announced at the annual meeting of the Japan Atomic Energy Society in Tokyo on March 31 that as a result of their own independent research, they had achieved success in test-producing enriched uranium-235.

Ability to produce enriched uranium means at least theoretically that Japan is now capable of making its own atom bombs.

Results of the tests carried out by the Radio-isotope Research Laboratory of the Physical and Chemical Research Institute in Tokyo were made public at the meeting. This success was rated highly because the nuclear Powers had kept this production technology in great secrecy since enriched uranium served as the base material for making nuclear weapons.

Japanese scientists used gaseous diffusion method for producing enriched uranium. This was the same method industrialized by the five nuclear Powers—the USA the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China.

The announcement was not likely to immediately alter Japan's avowed opposition to acquiring or possessing nuclear arms or to allow any other form of its military application because it was wedded to the policy of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes only. Nevertheless, the fact that it had become technically possible to produce the key material for nuclear bombs would no doubt strengthen Japan's diplomatic bargaining position. Japan's economic and industrial power now was such that it was not a big problem for it to find the necessary resources should it decide to produce atom bombs.

Although the Japanese Government had already signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, it had of late been none too enthusiastic to rush its ratification. As a matter of fact, the Government had given evidence that it was dragging its feet on this question because obviously it wanted to use it as a lever to obtain guarantees for its own rights, especially in the matter of future developments in peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Observers believed that the new announcement would bolster Japan's hands in future international negotiations on this subject.

B. FTC Conditions For Steel Merger: The Fair Trade Commission (FTC) on February 24 notified the Yawata and Fuji iron and steel companies that it would approve their proposed merger on condition that they take appropriate steps to reduce their dominant market control on three minor items.

The three disputed items were rails, tin plate and foundry iron.

The Commission's final approval depends on whether it accepts as satisfactory the corrective steps proposed by the two steel companies.

FTC's decision on the merger application by the two steel firms was conveyed to their representatives, after it was finally adopted at a meeting attended by all the five FTC members.

Mr. Seiichi Yamada, FTC chairman, said there were suspicions that the two steel firms, when combined, would have an excessive strength in sheet piles, in addition to the three problematical items.

Speaking at a news conference on February 24, Mr. Yamada said the important thing was for the two firms to absolve their merger project completely of difficulties in relation with the Anti-Monopoly Law.

He was asked to comment on fears that the new merged firm might feel tempted to use its strength to control steel prices or act as "a price leader" for the rest of the steel industry.

Mr. Yamada replied that the conception of administered prices or that of price leadership were both ambiguous. The Commission had tried exclusively to find out whether the planned merger would constitute a substantial restraint on competition in a specific product line.

Yawata and Fuji have a combined crude steel output of 22,734,000 tons. When they merge, the integrated firm will become the world's second biggest steelmaker only after the US Steel Corp. of USA.

Yawata and Fuji plan to sign a contract on the merger and apply to the FTC for registration of the merger. The new firm is to be named Shin Nippon Seitetsu.

Yawata and Fuji are the splinter firms of the former Nihon Iron and Steel Co. which was compulsorily divided in 1950 by the occupation forces.

Yawata is Japan's top, and the world's fourth, steel-maker with annual sales in 1967 of 436,700 million yen and a payroll of 47,000 workers.

Fuji is Japan's No. 2, and the world's fifth, steelmaker whose 1967 sales ran up to 372,200 million yen with a payroll of 35,000.

Yawata is capitalized at 127,360 million yen and Fuji at 102,000 million yen.

C. Revision Of Immigration Law: The Justice Ministry has completed a broadly defined Bill for a new immigration law calling for, among other things, simplified entry procedures for short-term foreign travellers.

The present immigration law, enacted 18 years ago, brought about various problems in its application. It also requires such complicated entry procedures that it could not deal effectively with the increasing number of foreign tourists to Japan.

Another notable point of revision is that the Justice Ministry will be able to impose certain restrictions on foreigners travelling in Japan. This revision is designed to curb political activities by visitors from abroad.

However, the proposal for creating a new provision for granting political asylum to foreigners has been shelved. This provision had been proposed by the Japan Socialist Party.

Under the present law, political asylum is granted at the discretion of the Justice Minister on a case-by-case basis. This principle will be incorporated in the new law.

D. Aid Plans For Argentina: A plan for economic co-operation between Japan and Argentina, with massive Japanese investment, 'was submitted to the Argentine Government by its Ambassador in Tokyo, Mr. Juan Martin.

Japan would purchase 1½ million tons of Argentine farm produce annually in addition to minerals, and in return Japanese industry would play a big part in development of Argentina's transport systems—civilian aviation, runways, and city underground travel—as well as in mining, the fishing industry and nuclear energy.

Farm exports would include 500,000 tons each of corn and sorghum, 300,000 tons of wheat, 25,000 tons of meat, 10,000 tons of leather, wool and vegetable oils, and 2,000 tons of dairy produce.

Japanese participation in the project would be financed by banks and groups already involved in Latin America.

Four firms—Mitsubishi, Mitsui, Sumitomo and Kawasaki—would exploit untapped copper deposits at Paramillo, in the central Andes province of Mendoza.

Operation of the Sierra Grande iron-ore mines in Patagonia would include construction of a large steel plant with an annual production capacity of two million tons.

A high sea port would be built at Puerto Madry to handle the giant freighters envisaged for heavy Japan-Argentina traffic, and at Futateufu, in Patagonia, a hydro-electric plant is foreseen.

Major industrial development would include an electronics plant in Rosario, Argentina's second city, and an aluminium factory at Futateufu. Joint construction of nuclear power plants is also envisaged.

Japan would give technical assistance for modernization of the country's railroads and for construction in Rosario of 8.75 miles of underground railway.

Japanese firms want to equip Aroline as Argentinas with short-range twin-jet craft to replace the British Avro aircraft now used.

E. Ambassador Asked To Resign: A senior Ambassador was asked by the Government on March 28 to resign as a consequence of the publication of a book which contained possibly the most severe criticisms of his country ever written by a Japanese official.

Mr. Ichiro Kawasaki, Ambassador to Argentina, is the author of Japan Unmasked, published in Tokyo several weeks ago. The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kiichi Aichi, announced that Mr. Kawasaki would be asked to resign for his "highly deplorable remarks".

The book contained crushing references to the supposed physical inferiority of the Japanese race, corrupt politicians, and the "immaturity" of Japanese diplomacy. "Of all races of the world, the Japanese are perhaps physically the least attractive, with the exception of pygmies and Hottentots", Mr. Kawasaki wrote. He said that in China the Japanese have been referred to as "dwarfs" from time immemorial.

"This physical inferiority, coupled with the fact that the Japanese belong to the yellow race, has destined the Japanese to be the outcasts, so to speak, of the world." The Japanese as individuals were described as "feeble creatures."

While asserting that political corruption was less bad in Japan than elsewhere in the Far East, Mr. Kawasaki noted that "there are cases of flagrant and large-scale corruption. Japanese politicians were given a free hand to consolidate their positions with a mixture of bribes and threats."

Mr. Kawasaki also attacked his own policy planners. Japan "has no new ideas now—not even a commonplace slogan such as 'Asia for the Asiatic' to advocate." Instead, she was "fumbling and groping to find her own identity."

Mr. Kawasaki (59) is a career diplomat who previously served as Ambassador in Poland and Iraq.

LAOS

A. Pathet Lao Currency: The New York Times in a despatch quoting diplomatic sources in Vientiane on March 30 said that the Pathet Lao forces had begun to circulate their own currency, bearing illustrations of Pathet Lao soldiers and patriotic inscriptions.

The sources said travellers from Pathet Lao-controlled sections of Xieng Khouang province, in north-east Laos, carried with them Pathet Lao notes of 100, 200 and 500-kip denominations.

The notes, apparently printed in North Viet-Nam or China, all bear the inscriptions "Pathet Lao," which means "Laos State," and "Central Committee of the Laotian Patriotic Front." They also bear—in the Lao language—the Pathet Lao mottoes, "Peace, independence, neutrality, democracy, integrity, prosperity."

The 500-kip note bears an illustration of an anti-aircraft battery, and the 200-kip note shows Pathet Lao soldiers working in a rice field.

The anti-aircraft battery is an apparent reference to the Pathet Lao claim that during the last five years they have downed more than 1,000 American aircraft bombing Laos.

The 100-kip note depicts a fishing scene, which the inscription describes as an example of co-operation between ethnic Laotians and non-Laotian minority groups.

Significant is the depiction of support for minority groups. Recent Pathet Lao policy statements had emphasized minority rights, and a Pathet Lao manifesto issued last November promised special assistance to non-Laotian ethnic groups.

Recent Pathet Lao attempts to enlarge the area they control in south Laos have been interpreted as an effort to consolidate the Pathet Lao position as spokesman for minority and tribal groups. Such minority groups comprise more than 40 per cent of the Laos population.

A. Consultative Committee Set Up: A Palace communique issued on April 13 said that King Mahendra had constituted a special four-member Consultative Committee.

The Committee consists of Dr. Tulsi Giri, former Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa, former Prime Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, present Prime Minister, and Mr. Vishwa Bandhu Thapa, a former Vice-Chairman in the Government.

B. Suspension Of Realization Of Savings: Realization of compulsory savings from peasants for implementation of the Government's land reforms programme was suspended all over the country on April 10 for the second time since 1966.

Announcing the suspension, the Land Reforms Ministry said that accounts of the savings collected so far would be systematized. The collection was being suspended pending preparation of accurate accounts.

A week earlier, two villages in Kapilvastu district in Western Nepal Terai had witnessed violent peasant-police clashes as the former were opposed to the realization of compulsory savings.

During the last two sessions of the National Panchayat, members had complained of misappropriation of the collections made under compulsory savings.

The Government had consistently maintained that the people were welcoming land reforms. If there was defalcation of funds it was small compared to the amount collected.

The Government had also stated that irregularities would be investigated.

PAKISTAN

A. Gen. Yahya Khan's Further Orders: President Yahya Khan dashed hopes of a civilian Cabinet on April 3 by appointing a Council consisting of the three military leaders who had been assisting him in enforcing Martial Law, imposed on March 25.

The Council of Administration, which he himself will head, includes his three Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrators—Lt-Gen. Abdul Hamid Khan, Vice-Admiral S. M. Ahsan and Air Marshal Noor Khan.

There had been reports that Gen. Yahya Khan was working on the formation of a civilian Cabinet and that it might include members of the former Presidential Cabinet of Mr. Ayub Khan.

Provisional Constitution Order:

President Yahya Khan took on April 4 what appeared to be the first step towards restoring a constitutional Government by issuing a Provincial Constitution Order restoring several provisions of the 1962 Constitution with immediate effect.

The Order said: "Notwithstanding the abrogation of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan brought into force on June 8, 1962, by the Proclamation and subject to any regulation or order made from time to time by the Chief Martial Law Administrator, the State of Pakistan shall, except as otherwise provided in this Order, be governed as nearly as may be in accordance with the 1962 Constitution.

"The Chief Martial Law Administrator shall be the President of Pakistan. He shall perform all functions assigned to the President by or under the 1962 Constitution or by or under any law."

The Order, however, laid down that some paragraphs of the fundamental rights set out in the Constitution shall stand abrogated.

Martial Law Aides Appointed As "Governors":

On April 8, President Yahya Khan followed up the Provisional Constitution Order by appointing his top Martial Law aides in West and East Pakistan to perform the functions of Governors of the Provinces.

Lt-Gen. Atiqur Rahman and Maj-Gen. Muzaffaruddin, Martial Law Administrators of the two Wings, would "discharge all those functions and exercise all those rights which were vested in the Provincial Governors under the 1962 Constitution."

Radio Pakistan said that according to a Presidential Order issued in Rawalpindi on April 8, the appointments would take effect from March 25, when Gen. Yahya Khan took over from President Ayub Khan and imposed Martial Law in the country.

The Chief Martial Law Administrator (President Yahya Khan) also issued an order empowering his officers to permit the withdrawal of licensed fire-arms by persons who had deposited them with police stations in terms of an earlier order. The new Order, however, provided that the arms and ammunition could be confiscated if deemed expedient.

President Yahya Khan would keep command of the Army while he ruled the country.

A notice in the Gazette of Pakistan announced that his term as Army Commander-in-Chief had been extended for two years after September 18, 1970.

Observers thought that the announcement indicated that Gen. Yahya Khan would not relinquish the Army command while he remained President and Chief Martial Law Administrator. He assumed the Presidency on March 31 (or March 25.)

President's Policies—News Conference:

The President, Gen. Yahya Khan, said on April 10 that his Government would give the utmost importance to peaceful, equitable and honourable solution of all outstanding problems between India and Pakistan including that of Jammu and Kashmir and Farakka Barrage issue.

Addressing his first ever news conference at Rawalpindi after he took over power from Mr. Ayub Khan, Gen. Yahya Khan said he was "anxious to see that peace prevails in this region." His Government was keen on maintaining good relations with Big Powers but would not takes sides in their quarrels. His Government would also work for closer relations with Turkey and Iran, Pakistan's allies in CENTO, and for peace all over the world.

Reporting brief excerpts of the news conference, Radio Pakistan quoted Gen. Yahya Khan as having said that he was taking immediate steps for the movement of large supplies of rice to East Pakistan from West. His Government attached great importance to economic development and this would go according to plan. But economic progress would have to be coupled with social justice. Steps would be taken to bring down prices of essential goods to reasonable levels and attempts made to reduce disparities in the income of people.

He said he had directed the despatch of large quantities of rice and other foodgrains to East Pakistan every month. This movement would continue till December, 1969.

He said he would take steps to "take us forward in the appointed direction, namely, the election of the representatives of the people on the basis of adult franchise." He said, however, that it would take time to restore a "normal" situation in which such elections could be held.

He said that "normal administration of the country has to be run by the normal functionaries" before power could be transferred to the elected representatives of the people. He was considering the possibility of civilian participation in the policy-making of his administration at a later stage.

He said: "It will be for the representatives of the people to give the country a workable Constitution. I have no doubt that a Constitution worked out in this manner will enjoy the support of the people and will have the acceptability and sanctity which a Constitution must have."

He said he was happy that respect for law and order had rapidly improved following the imposition of Martial Law.

Recalling the events which led to Martial Law, he said: "Until the very last, my colleagues and I in the armed forces were hoping that the country might be saved without recourse to Martial Law. But when the call to duty came we could not afford to hesitate."

Asked about an election date, he said: "It will not be in days, but it will not be in years."

He said his Martial Law aimed at introducing reforms to meet the immediate needs of students, peasants and workers, and to clean up the country's sprawling civil bureaucracy—measures that would precede establishment of "constructive political life in the country so that power is transferred to the elected representatives of the people."

Measures To Check Corruption:

On April 9, Gen. Yahya Khan directed his colleagues in authority in both Wings of Pakistan to take measures against favouritism and nepotism in official dealings.

According to Radio Pakistan, he issued the directive to members of the Administrative Council, Administrators of Martial Law in East and West Pakistan, all central secretaries and chief secretaries of the two Provinces.

He said that among the major problems facing his administration was the evil of favouritism and nepotism in which persons connected with highly placed officials had been found to have obtained contracts, special permits and other preferential treatment.

He directed officials not to be influenced in favour of any individual and that every case must be decided exclusively on merits.

In his directive, he mentioned that some industrial and other highly placed persons had been receiving undue advantages.

Mr. A. Gauhar Loses Post:

One of the key aides of F-M Ayub Khan, Mr. Altaf Gauhar, lost his post on April 12 as head of the Information Ministry.

He had been regarded as one of the former President's closest advisers and one of the top figures in Pakistan's powerful bureaucracy.

Mr. Gauhar handed over his responsibilities in the Information Ministry to his deputy, the Director-General of Public Relations, Mr. Abdul Majid Mufti.

B. Sweden Stops Arms Supplies: On April 2, Sweden banned all exports of arms and ammunition to Pakistan, halting at least one major deal with the Bofors armaments firm.

According to the Trade Minister, Mr. Gunnar Lange, the ban was imposed because developments inside Pakistan were causing concern in Sweden.

The embargo halted a multi-million kronor deal between Pakistan and Bofors.

Bofors declined to say how large a sum was involved, but admitted that it was considerable. Deliveries of Swedish arms to Pakistan had been made for more than a year and were intended to continue during 1969.

The last shipment, consisting of four railway truckloads of fuses for shells, left Sweden some days earlier. It was loaded into a ship which sailed from the Norwegian port of Drammen for Karachi.

Mr. Lange said that in 1965, Sweden had halted deliveries of arms to both Pakistan and India during the fighting over the Rann of Kutch.

SYRIA

A. New National Leadership: Syria's ruling Ba'ath Party elected on March 31 a new national leadership, including President Nureddin Al-Atassi and the Defence Minister, Major-General Hafez Al-Assad.

The extraordinary Congress of the party named the new 16-man national leadership, Syria's highest legislative body which included three new members. It succeeded a team of 16 which resigned on March 30 to allow settlement of differences that had split the party.

Two men dropped were the Foreign Minister, Mr. Mohammed Eid Ashawy, and Mr. Adel Nuaisseh. One vacancy was left by the recent death of Colonel Abdel Karim Al-Jundi, the former Security Chief who committed suicide earlier.

Dr. Atassi said that the extraordinary Congress had been convened at a very critical stage of the nation and the party.

Party sources said earlier that the Congress had approved a recommendation to draw up a provisional Constitution for Syria within a month.

THAILAND

A. Ministerial Conference For Economic Development: . The fourth South-East Asian Ministerial Conference for Economic Development was held in Bangkok in the first week of April.

Economic Affairs and Finance Ministers from Japan, the Philippines, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Thailand, Singapore and South Viet-Nam attended the Conference, which ended on April 5 on a hopeful note for the region's progress.

In a communique, they noted significant progress in the region's agriculture, industry, transport and communications in spite of the shaky international monetary and economic conditions.

They discussed prospects of socio-economic co-operation in the region when peace eventually comes to war-torn Viet-Nam.

They agreed to set up a council of experts that will study the South-East Asian situation in the next 10 years. The Council will be set up in Thailand which proposed it and announced a donation of $1 million for its upkeep. The Asian Development Bank will provide the experts.

The communique said the Japanese Government was considering measures aimed at helping South Viet-Nam and its neighbours in reconstruction and development after the war ends. Japan also agreed to set up a working group that will study the establishment of an acqua-culture research and training centre in the Philippines for fresh and brackish water fisheries.

The Conference also agreed to establish a centre that would be charged with the promotion of trade, tourism and foreign investments. Representatives of participating countries will meet in Tokyo later to discuss the projected centre.

It also expressed appreciation of Malaysia's co-ordinated transport and communications project.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. President Thieu's Six-Point Programme For National Reconciliation: In his annual state-of-the nation address to the opening session of the National Assembly, President Nguyen Van Thieu on April 7 outlined a six-point programme which he described as a "reasonable and solid basis for the restoration of peace in Viet-Nam."

[The programme has since been rejected by the National Liberation Front.]

He listed the following six points:

(1) "Communist aggression should stop.

(2) "Communist North Viet-Nam and auxiliary troops and cadres should be completely withdrawn from South Viet-Nam.

(3) "The territories of the neighbouring countries of the Republic (a reference to Cambodia and Laos) should not be violated and used by Communist North Viet-Nam as bases and staging areas for aggression against the Republic.

(4) "South Viet-Nam should adopt a policy of national reconciliation.

(5) "The re-unification of the two Viet-Nams is to be decided by the free choice of the entire population of Viet-Nam through democratic processes.

(6) "There must be an effective system of international control and reliable guarantees against the resumption of Communist aggression."

He also announced that he would soon assume personal leadership of a new political party and would permit others to organize an opposition group.

In exchange for the withdrawal of North Viet-Namese troops from South Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia, Mr. Thieu proposed a policy of "national reconciliation" under which members of the Viet-Cong would be permitted to enjoy "full political rights...under the Constitution." By this he was understood to have meant that members of the National Liberation Front, the political arm of the Viet-Cong, could participate in elections as long as they did not identify themselves as Communists.

He had made essentially the same offer at a conference with representatives of the foreign Press at the Presidential Palace two weeks earlier.

In addition to the prospect of elections, Mr. Thieu held out the possibility of "peaceful co-existence" with North Viet-Nam, including "economic and cultural exchanges" between the two countries after a cease-fire.

He said: "There is now an urgent need for political mobilization in this regard. I have come to the decision that I must immediately and personally do that work. That is why I have decided to assume personal leadership of a political alliance.

"I don't have any other ambition than to work to save this country from Communism. I only have the ambition to lead the way; other people will succeed me."

He said that "whoever supports and approves my policies and methods" would be invited to join the new organization. Others would be invited to form "an organized opposition."

"I am neither a hawk nor a dove," he said. "I only want to work to protect South Viet-Nam from the hands of the Communists and build a strong, viable democratic government.

"Those now fighting against us, who renounce violence, respect the laws and faithfully abide by the democratic processes will be welcomed as full members of the national community." That would include "full political rights."

New Ministers:

Earlier in the week, the President's Office announced that in accordance with the recommendation of the Prime Minister, Mr. Tran Van Huong, President Nguyen Van Thieu had appointed the following new members of the Cabinet:

Gen. Tran Thien Khiem—Deputy Prime Minister in charge of Pacification-Reconstruction and concurrently Interior Minister;

Mr. Le Minh Lien—Education and Youth Minister;

Mr. Cao Van Than—Agriculture and Land Reform Minister (in replacement of Mr. Truong Thai Ton);

Mr. Nguyen Van Vang—Revolutionary Development Minister (Prime Minister Tran Van Huong had so far cumulated this post);

Mr. Nguyen Thach Van—Secretary of State for Veteran Affairs (the Veteran Affairs installations had been so far incorporated with the Defence Ministry);

Mr. Vo Huu Thu—Secretary of State in charge of liaison with the National Assembly;

Mr. Nguyen Anh Tuan—Finance Vice-Minister.

In addition, the Minister of State, Mr. Vu Quoc Thuc became Minister of State in charge of Post-War Project, and Mr. Nguyen Ngoc An assumed the post of Information and Open-Arms Minister.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Possibilities Of Chinese Invasion—US Expert's View: An American military expert, Dr. Chester Cooper, stated in New York on March 20 that at points closer to its borders, China could probably seize sizable areas rather quickly, despite India's claims that it had increased its "border defences."

Dr. Cooper, Director of the Institute of Defence Analysis, was speaking at what was described as the National Convocation on United States-China Relations organized by a national committee of prestigious American experts on China.

Dr. Cooper, however, said there were significant limitations on China's capacity to mount an attack of major proportions below the mountain areas and if, as current events suggested, China's real problems lay along the borders of the Soviet Union, "we might feel reasonably sure that the Chinese will not behave aggressively in other areas."

The convocation, attended by 1,000 delegates, heard a number of experts arguing among themselves and with participants from the floor questioning their assumption and views.

The experts came to the broad conclusion that China was in no position now or in the forseeable future to mount any major military operation outside its borders, but there might be continuing problems on its borders with the Soviet Union and India.

In two sessions, experts discussed China and world security and political trends in China.

Despite the impressive array of expertise, observers found the total outcome as a somewhat bizarre combination of two fables—six blind men and the elephant and the emperor's clothes. More than one expert confessed no one knew really what was going on inside China, perhaps not even Mr. Mao Tse-tung, and that there were really no China experts.

Views ranged across the entire spectrum of extreme left to extreme right. But while differing on interpretation and implications of the Chinese Cultural Revolution and its aftermath, exponents appeared to be near unanimous in the view that things were pretty uncertain now with Mr. Mao and after Mr. Mao's death, even though non-experts might conclude the same without too much discussion.

Political Trends In China:

On the political trends in China now and in the next decade, the following views emerged:

Prof. Richard Walker: "China clearly is in disarray after the Cultural Revolution, with the top leadership fractured and party apparatus shattered and Mao's fellow leaders having lost faith in him. After Mao's death, it might be impossible for any of his chosen heirs or any one else to weld together, to institutionalize and carry on Mao's work."

Mr. David Oancia (former Globe and Mail correspondent in Peking): "The People's Liberation Army (PLA) has emerged as the most cohesive force and is running the administration at various levels, running factories etc. While the Communist Party apparatus has been shattered by the Cultural Revolution, the PLA is more or less intact."

Prof. Pfeffer (exponent of radical Left philosophies among American experts): "The Cultural Revolution has shown the supreme power of ideology. Mao has been picking up the moral core of Marxism as against the technical core preserved in the Soviet Union. It is difficult to say whether Mao could succeed in institutionalizing the Revolution."

Mr. Roderick Macfarquhar: "Power and administration is now effectively in the hands of regional commanders who are loyal to Mao. It is difficult to speculate what would happen after his death soon. A bonapartist military regime could well emerge."

Mr. Paul Kreisberg (State Department aide participating in the Warsaw talks): "China has yet to determine whether it wants to pursue international revolution or a policy based on national interests, and until a decision is made China would not be interested in relations with other countries. Till then communication with China is also difficult."

Mr. Louis Fischer: "Relations and dealings with a China following national policies would be more difficult, particularly for neighbours, than with a China seeking international revolution as now."

On the question of China and world security, Gen. Samuel Griffith said: "Chinese strategy would be based on developing nuclear capacity and promoting people's wars, The conventional forces were stretched now on innumerable domestic activities. While Chinese nuclear capacity could not really be a danger or threat to the United States, it could pose some limited capability on the periphery."

B. Change In US Nuclear Policy: The United States, in a major policy shift, on April 8 proposed that nuclear weapon States should cut off their production of fissile material—the essential ingredient for a nuclear bomb—and open their plants to international inspection.

Earlier, US, cut-off proposals had involved substantial mutual inspection but the American Ambassador, Mr. Adrian S. Fisher suggested to the Disarmament Committee that this should be carried out by the 101-nation International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in Vienna. "This last element represents a change in the previous position of the United States."

Mr. Fisher said that a cut-off was "the one agreement that would be thoroughly effective in preventing the growth of the stockpiles of nuclear weapons."

The essential elements of the agreement would be:

(1) From an agreed date, nuclear weapons States would halt all production of fissile material for use in nuclear weapons;

(2) The production of fissile material would be permitted to continue for purposes other than use in nuclear weapons—power and propulsion reactors and nuclear explosives for peaceful uses.

(3) The IAEA would be asked to check the nuclear material in each country's peaceful nuclear activities and make sure facilities for the production of fissile material remained closed.

A US spokesman said later that the change from mutual to neutral—IAEA—policing was a "major shift in US inspection policy."

It also meant that nuclear Powers would be subjected to the same kind of inspection as that proposed for the non-nuclear Powers in last year's Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

C. Revised US Budget: Declaring that the United States had "taken the reins firmly in hand in battling inflation," President Nixon announced in Washington on April 12 revised US Budget figures envisioning a surplus of $5,800 million in the coming year—the biggest surplus proposed since 1951.

Mr. Nixon issued a special statement detailing broad results of an intensive Budget review which produced significant reductions in planned spending for both US military and domestic programmes in the 1970 fiscal year that begins on July 1.

He did not alter Mr. Johnson's January estimate of $198,700 million in Federal revenues for the coming book-keeping this year. To produce the planned $5,800 million surplus, however, he cut the spending estimate to $192,900 million.

He said that whereas Mr. Johnson estimated spending at $195,300 million, Government experts believed this was too low and the Budget submitted by the previous Administration actually would have resulted in spending $196,900 million. That would have cut the fiscal 1970 surplus under the Johnson blueprint to $1,800 million. Thus, he said, he was proposing a total slash of $4,000 million in outlays, of which $1,100 million will come out of the defence budget.

In addition, he announced he was asking Congress to cut requests for appropriations and spending authority by $55,000 million, which, he said, would result in significant reductions in future Federal spending.

D. "Apollo-9" Launched By USA: USA launched on March 3 a manned spacecraft—Apollo-9—with three astronauts on board as a first step towards a manned Moon landing.

The astronauts were James A. McDivitt, David R. Scott and Russell L. Schweikart.

Apollo-9 was the 17th manned American space flight, not including the two ballistic flights of astronauts Alan Shepard and Virgil Grissom. Forty-seven astronauts had so far blasted into space—30 American and 17 Russians.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration rated Apollo-9 the most complex man-in-space flight yet, even more difficult to carry out than the Apollo-8 Moon orbit journey.

Space experts predicted that US chances were now better for beating the Soviet Union to the Moon. "I believe our chances of landing on the Moon first are now substantially better," Dr. Wernher von Braun, Director of the Marshall Space Flight Centre, said.

President Nixon acclaimed the launching as "another milestone of the journey of man into space."

A White House statement said: "We are proud of this American adventure, but this is more than an American adventure. It is an adventure of man, bringing the accumulated wisdom of his past to the task of shaping the future."

On March 5, astronaut Russell Schweikart climbed from the Apollo spacecraft into the Moon landing vehicle.

Schweikart was first into the spider-legged landing vehicle, followed an hour later by Col. James McDivitt. They met unexpected difficulties before they could crawl through the tunnel in the spaceships nose to the aluminium-skinned "bug"—designed to ferry astronauts from their orbiting mother ship to the Moon's surface and back.

First into the "bug" as it passed high over the Canary Islands was "rusty" Schweikart. He was 58 minutes behind schedule as he floated head first in his pressure suit through the 47-inch tunnel, only 32 inches in diameter. Col. McDivitt crawled through after him about an hour later.

Spacecraft pilot David Scott then sealed off the tunnel between the other ship and the lunar bug and told his colleagues: "Have a nice time. I'll have dinner waiting."

Schweikart was not the first spaceman to transfer from one ship to another in orbit. Two space-walking Russian cosmonauts had transferred from Soyuz-5 to Soyuz-4 while the two vehicles were linked in space in January.

On March 6, Russell Schweikart slipped ontside his orbiting Mooncraft to perform America's first spacewalk in more than two years.

He stepped onto a platform outside the Lem hatch which the astronauts call the "front porch." He floated carefully and clumsily out in his bulky suit and positioned his boots into a pair of "golden slippers", attached to the platform. The slippers, which look like Dutch shoes, held him fast and kept him from drifting away, enabling him to free his hands.

On March 7, Apollo-9 fired its main descent engine to start it on a journey 95 nautical miles away from the command module.

The mother-ship and the spider-like landing vehicle (Lem) had been placed about three miles apart by a short firing of the command module's engine 45 minutes earlier.

The effect of the 25-second lunar module engine burn was to place the craft in an orbit ranging from 11 to 12 nautical miles above and below the orbit of the command module. The engine was fired again after an hour to adjust orbit.

Immediately after the separation, the two vehicles flew circles around each other in an orbital ballet as Scott snapped pictures and the Lem pilots checked the condition of their spindly-legged machine.

The same day, the spaceship successfully achieved rendezvous in orbit with the command module after six hours of separate flight and successfully docked with its command module.

Spacecraft Returns To Earth:

Climaxing a ten-day space flight that qualified Apollo-9 space craft for voyages to the Moon, the astronauts blazed back to Earth on March 13 and parachuted to a pinpoint landing in the Atlantic Ocean within sight of the recovery ship, Guadal Canal.

James A. McDivitt, David R. Scott and Russell L. Schweikart rode their half-ton space-ship to a splashdown in gentle seas, just three miles from the helicopter carrier, Guadal Canal, stationed 300 miles north of Puerto Rico.

During the first five days of the flight, the pilots had proved the flight worthiness of the lunar module, including a tricky rendezvous and a space walk by Schweikart.

The last five days were leisurely as McDivitt, Scott and Schweikart stayed aloft to prove the durability of the command ship.

Apollo-9 was the last manned Earth orbit flight planned by USA until late 1971, when a small three-man space station might be launched.

E. US Administration's Attitude To Viet-Nam And Other Issues: The US Secretary of State, Mr. William P. Rogers, on April 7 hoped for mutual withdrawal of American and North Viet-Namese troops beginning some time this year, but made it clear that there was no immediate prospect for a unilateral pull-out of US forces.

In a discussion on troop withdrawals at his first news conference in Washington, Mr. Rogers firmly called for a mutual withdrawal with the scheduling to be negotiated at the Paris peace conference.

He characterized as "most constructive" and very helpful" President Thieu's six-point programme for peace (see page 8927). But, he went on to indicate what was widely held administration view that the Saigon Government would have to offer considerably more it there was to be a negotiated peace with the National Liberation Front. "Now, obviously, if there are discussions about the political aspects of a peace settlement, they will have to be negotiated. There are lots of points that will have to be negotiated."

On other topics, Mr. Rogers said the Administration was "willing to do what we can to have more friendly relations with China." He said the United States did not believe it wise now to attempt to exploit conflicts between the Soviet Union and China, since it would like better relations with both.

The Nixon Administration hoped, in talks with the Japanese after this year, to work out some mutually satisfactory compromise regarding Okinawa, which the United States had promised to return to Japan if and when the situation in the Far East ever became stabilized.

Cambodia had been used by the North Viet-Namese "and is being used by (them) now" as a sanctuary in the war.

On the troops withdrawal issue, highly sensitive both in terms of American public opinion and in relation to the Paris negotiation, Mr. Rogers tried to leave open the Nixon Administration's option to act in co-ordination with the North Viet-Namese, if they are willing, or unilaterally if they are not. He added that the demand for unconditional American troops withdrawal "just means they don't want to negotiate. They just want us to leave."

F. Senator E. Kennedy Favours Recognition Of China: Senator Edward Kennedy told the National Committee for United States-China Relations in New York that USA must reverse its policy on the question of China's admission to UN at the earliest.

He said: "Surely in the entire history of American foreign policy there has been no friction more palpably absurd than our official position that China does not exist. Valid as it might have been 50 years ago, the American policy is now outdated."

The first step, he said, would be to admit China to the UN General Assembly and Security Council in place of Taiwan. Next, Washington should open negotiations on the establishment of consular and then diplomatic relations with Peking. Finally, the United States unilaterally should announce the raising of restrictions on exports to China.

He hoped that the Warsaw talks between representatives of China and the United States could be resumed and that in future they could take place on a direct basis and not under the auspices of the Polish Government. (The talks were later unilaterally cancelled by China).

He also warned against the possible effect on China of the establishment of the controversial nation-wide anti-ballistic missile system.

He suggested that the UN move in calling for a new US policy towards China including abandonment of the "unyielding policy of military containment and diplomatic isolation."

Recommending a UN seat for China, he said efforts should also be made at the world Organization to continue to provide representation for Formosa (Taiwan).

[China has said repeatedly it would not be interested in UN membership unless Taiwan was expelled.]

A. Trade Pact (Unofficial) With Japan: A visiting Japanese delegation and Chinese trading authorities signed an unofficial one-year Trade Agreement in Peking on April 6 covering exports and imports in 1969.

No details of the Agreement were made public, but a correspondent of the Japanese Kyodo news agency said it was assumed that the Trade Pact provided for exchange of goods worth $70 million, exports and imports combined. This was approximately 30 per cent below the actual volume of trade between Japan and China through this channel in 1968.

The decline was due to suspension of Japan's rice imports from China this year and failure of the two parties to agree on a formula to open Japanese imports of Chinese meat.

The Communique:

China, in a communique issued on April 4 on the conclusion of private-level trade talks with Japan, sharply denounced Japan and USA as pursuing a hostile policy against China and creating obstacles in Sino-Japanese relations.

The communique said that the Japanese negotiators, led by Mr. Yoshimi Furui of the Liberal-Democratic Party, had "admitted frankly that all the responsibility for straining the Sino-Japanese ties rested with the Japanese Government".

It said that the Japan-US Security Treaty represented an aggressive military alliance directed against China and the peoples of Asia.

The communique, signed by Mr. Furui and Mr. Liu Hsi-wen, Chinese Deputy Vice-Minister for Foreign Trade, stated that the Japanese delegation had agreed to promote the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations and oppose any plots to create "two Chinas," recognizing that the Peking Government was the sole legitimate Government of China.

It also said the Japanese team had acknowledged that the province of Taiwan was an inseparable part of China.

Representatives of Japan and China also confirmed that "the three political principles" should serve as the basis for the Japan-China relations.

The three points were that Japan refrains from taking a hostile policy against China, from taking part in schemes to create "two Chinas" and from interfering in attempts to normalize Japan-China relations.

Japanese Reaction:

In Tokyo, the Chief Cabinet Secretary, Mr. Shigeru Hori, said it was "a good thing" that the trade link between the two countries had remained intact, although the trade volume had been reduced.

Mr. Hori declined to elaborate on the communique, but he attached significance to a part of the communique stating that expediting the normalization of relations between the two nations would help to preserve peace in Asia and in the world.

The Liberal Democratic Party, in a statement issued by the Secretary-General, Mr. Kakuei Tanaka welcomed the continuation of the trade accord and expressed hope that private interchange would be promoted on the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of the other.

The Japan Socialist Party said that the Government had "political and moral responsibility" for implementing the "joint platform" contained in the communique calling for normalization of relations between Japan and China.

The Democratic Socialist Party said it could not accept those parts of the communique which opposed the Japan-US Security Treaty and disapproved of the Taipeh regime.

Komeito welcomed the joint communique "in principle" on the ground that the document contained "much that is basically agreeable" to the party's declared policy of working for the restoration of relations between the two countries.

Meanwhile, Mr. Hideji Kawasaki, a moderate Liberal Democratic member of the Diet, quoted Mr. Yoshimi Furui, chief Japanese delegate to the Peking trade talks, as saying that the present relationship between Japan and China was the worst ever.

B. NPC Vice-Chairman Dead: Mr. Chang Chih-Chung, a Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and the Defence Council Committee, died in Peking on April 6. He was 79.

In 1949, he was chief Kuomintang delegate to the peace talks with the Chinese Communist Party. He defected to the communists when the talks broke down. In the same year he was elected a member of the National Committee of the first Chinese People's Political Consultative Council.

SUMMARY: Missile Manufacture; New Army Appointments; ARC On Strike By Government Servants; Mrs. I. Gandhi's Proposals On Telengana Issue; Industrial Licensing Policy; Wheat Zone Re-constituted; Vice-Chancellors' Conference.

A. Missile Manufacture Being Considered—Other Defence Measures: The Minister of Defence Production, Mr. L. N. Mishra, disclosed in the Lok Sabha on April 21 that a proposal to establish a new public sector undertaking to manufacture missiles was being considered by the Government.

An offer from a foreign firm had been received and if an agreement with the firm was reached, production of missiles would be taken up.

Mr. Mishra was intervening in the debate on demands for grants for the Defence Ministry.

The Defence Ministry, he said, was venturing "in a concerted way" into the field of sophisticated weaponry, having achieved a measure of self-reliance in regard to the traditionally and relatively simpler items.

He disclosed that a new field gun had been developed which would go into production soon. In the range of medium artillery weapons, the traditional weapons were being progressively replaced by modern ones. The country was already self-reliant in light artillery weapons and their ammunition.

The production of Vijayanta tanks was progressing satisfactorily, both in numbers and in the percentage of indigenous content. The Services were being supplied larger numbers of Shaktiman and Nissan vehicles.

He said that a new factory would be set up to produce sophisticated radars and micro-wave equipment. Bharat Electronics had successfully undertaken the manufacture of a whole new group of electronic equipment for the Services.

He said in the first Indian frigate, INS Nilgiri launched in October and to be commissioned in 1971, indigenous production of 263 items had been established contributing a value of Rs. 1.16 crores. It was expected that for the second frigate, this would go up to Rs. 5.11 crores, covering important items like propulsion machinery and radar system.

He listed some of the fields in which research had made progress as follows:

(1) Mountain gun and its ammunition; (2) a rocket for use by aircraft with high explosive warhead; (3) various types of escape aid and power jettisoning cartridge for the Air Force; (4) signal cartridge and drill mines for the Navy; (5) various types of propellants and explosives; (6) large number of instruments which are used in conjunction with weapons; (7) semi-automatic rifle; (8) anti-tank grenade; (9) anti-tank mine; (10) an air burst anti-personnel mine; and (11) a mine clearing device.

In addition to these, he disclosed that the Research and Development Organization had also developed propellant charges to meet the requirements of the equatorial rocket launching station at Thumba.

In the field of electronics, the important contributions were: field artillery radar and its simulator, a local warning radar system, an improved version of trans-receiver for field communication, a repeater field telephone and a channel doubling unit.

B. Army Appointments: In a series of Army appointments announced in New Delhi on April 23, three of the four Army Commands in the country—Eastern, Southern and Western—were given new commanders in the course of the next six months.

The Government appointed Lt-Gen. G. G. Bewoor, Deputy Chief of the Army Staff at Army Headquarters to be General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Southern Command, from July 8 in place of Lt-Gen. Moti Sagar who was retiring.

Lt-Gen. K. P. Candeth, General Officer Commanding 15 Corps, was appointed General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Command, from October 1 in place of Lt-Gen. Harbaksh Singh who would also retire from the Army.

Lt-Gen. J. S. Aurora, General Officer Commanding 33 Corps was appointed General Officer Commanding-in-Chief of the Eastern Command with effect from June 8, when Lt-Gen. S. H. F. J. Manekshaw takes over as Chief of the Army Staff.

Three other consequential appointments in this chain were also announced:

Major-Gen. M. L. Thapar, Director of Military Training at Army Headquarters was appointed General Officer Commanding 33 Corps (in the acting rank of Lt.-Gen.) in place of Lt-Gen. Aurora.

Major-Gen Sartaj Singh, Director of Military Operations at Army Headquarters was appointed General Officer Commanding 15 Corps (in the acting rank of Lt-Gen.) in place of Lt-Gen. Candeth.

Major-Gen. R. S. Noronha, General Officer Commanding, 26 Infantry Division, was appointed Deputy Chief of the Army Staff at Army Headquarters (in the acting rank of Lt-Gen.) in place of Lt-Gen. Bewoor.

C. Ban On Strikes By Government Servants—ARC Recommendations On Personnel Administration: In a letter forwarding the Administrative Reforms Commission's (ARC) report on personnel administration to the Prime Minister, the ARC recommended that Government servants should have no right to strike.

The Chairman of the Commission, Mr. K. Hanumanthaiya, said in the letter: "For the past few years, organized civil servants have become very much self-oriented, pre-occupied with their prospects and emoluments and have taken to militant methods such as violent demonstrations and strikes for the acceptance of their demands. Discipline and morale have deteriorated."

The ARC had, therefore, supported the principle underlying the Essential Services Maintenance Act, 1968, and suggested that it should be adopted by the State Governments also.

Every new entrant to Government service should sign a pledge that he would in no circumstances resort to strike.

The Commission, however, underlined the importance of "adequate" machinery for redress of employees' grievances and recommended strengthening of the joint consultative machinery and appointment of civil service tribunals to function as final appellate authorities on orders inflicting major punishments of dismissal, removal from service and reduction in rank.

Some of the Commission's other reforms were:

There need not be a holiday on Independence Day.

Restricted religious holidays may be dispensed with by adding two more days to the present 12 days of casual leave.

If a temporary employee has continued in Government service without a break for 10 years or more, all such services, whether followed by confirmation or not, should count for pension and gratuity on the same scale as admissible to permanent Government employees.

The quantum of pension may be raised to 3/6ths (instead of the existing 3/8ths) of the average emoluments of the last three years of service. The present ceiling should also be raised to Rs. 1,000 per mensem.

The existing medical re-imbursement scheme should be abolished. Instead the Contributory Health Scheme should be extended to all Government servants and meanwhile suitable monetary ceiling fixed for re-imbursement of medical expenses.

The upper age limit for entrance to the competitive examinations may be raised to 26.

At least one of the members of a State Public Service Commission should belong to a different State.

One of the new recommendations was that legislation might be passed declaring demonstrations inside public offices, leading to disruption of orderly and peaceful work, as an offence for which punishment could be imposed as on acts of public nuisance.

The recommendation drew a note of dissent by a member, Mr. H. V. Kamath. Mr. Kamath did not agree wholly with the recommendation on strikes and demonstrations, holding that such a ban would be justified only if a pre-condition was met, that is, provision of an expeditious and efficient machinery for timely redressal of legitimate grievances.

The Commission also proposed that no employee should ordinarily be kept under suspension for a period of more than three months, except in cases pending in courts.

A new measure sought to replace the present system of "confidential reports" by "performance reports" under which every Government servant would be given an opportunity to give a resume of his performance during the year and get his merits properly assessed for the purpose of promotion.

D. Finance Commission Not To Re-imburse Loss Of Revenues By States: It was made known in New Delhi on April 17 that the Finance Commission had decided not to make good any losses in the States' revenues caused by concessions given on political considerations.

In the Commission's view, such losses should be made good by the State concerned by "alternative" resource-raising measures.

This policy decision was taken by the Commission in view of the huge budgetary deficits shown by the States this year in an obvious attempt to press for a higher share in the divisible pool of Central taxes.

Thus, the revenue losses incurred by the States on account of abolition of land revenue or abolition of other "accepted norms of raising resources" would not receive cognizance at the hands of the Commission in estimating the States' budgetary imbalances.

Similarly, the subsidy on rice given by the Tamil Nadu Government under its "rupee a measure" scheme may not be given any special weightage in the State's normal revenue expenditure.

The total uncovered gap in the States' Budgets was about Rs. 400 crores. The States were at present incurring a net loss of about Rs. 75 crores per year on commercial irrigation works. The recommendations of the Nijalingappa Committee to wipe out these losses and improve the returns from irrigation projects still remained to be implemented.

It was estimated that if the current losses on irrigation were eliminated, additional resources of the order of Rs. 400 crores should be available to the States over the Fourth Plan period.

E. Kerala Extremist Communists Accept Chinese Leadership: A conference of extremist Communists of Kerala, which met for two days in Cannanore on April 21, adopted a resolution accepting the "leadership of the great Chinese Communist Party" and appreciating relentless struggle waged by the Communist Party of China against the revisionism and social imperialism of Soviet leadership and American imperialism.

The resolution pledged to build up a real revolutionary communist movement in Kerala.

In another resolution, it said that "the revolutionaries would cut off all connexions with bourgeois democracy such as Parliament, State Assemblies, panchayats, etc."

A 12-member Kerala Communist Revolutionary Committee set up by the conference would decide how this resolution should be implemented. It would also finalize "people's programmes" for implementation.

F. Telengana Issue—Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Proposals: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, had a meeting with some of the Andhra Pradesh (including Telengana) leaders in New Delhi on April 10 and 11 to discuss the Telengana safeguards and evolve a solution.

She also had discussions with the Opposition leaders in Parliament on the issue.

On April 11, she gave out her proposals, and announced in the Lok Sabha the Government's decision to appoint a high-power Committee with a sitting or a retired Supreme Court Judge as chairman to go into the varying estimates and representations and determine the surplus revenues relatable to Telengana which was expected to have been spent on the development of the Telengana region.

The Committee will report to the Government of India by the end of May, 1969. It will have an eminent economist with knowledge of State finances and a senior representative of the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India as members.

In a detailed statement embodying the decisions taken at the high-level conference convened by her to resolve the Telengana deadlock, Mrs. Gandhi said that the possibility of providing appropriate constitutional safeguards in the matter of public employment in favour of the Telengana people would be examined by the Central Government in consultation with a committee of jurists.

In an earnest bid to remove the fears and misgivings in the minds of the Telengana people, who had been agitating for a separate State for some weeks, she also announced the appointment of various other committees at the Central and State levels to ensure effective implementation of Telengana safeguards and speedy development of the region.

She also said that the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, had indicated to her his desire to make appropriate political arrangements to promote the objectives in view. This was interpreted to mean that the post of Deputy Chief Minister from the Telengana region would soon be revived.

She appealed to the Telengana people to end the present agitation and give full co-operation in the fulfilment of various positive measures evolved as a result of these discussions. She proposed to continue further the process of discussions with the widest possible section of public opinion in Andhra Pradesh. She assured them that their genuine problems would receive continuous and sympathetic attention of the State.

She stressed the need for maintaining and strengthening the unity and integrity of Andhra Pradesh. The overall aim was to ensure that the pace of development and expansion of employment opportunites in Telengana was accelerated and conditions were created for the balanced development of all parts of Andhra.

She said that discussions would start immediately among the representatives of the Central Finance and Home Ministries, the Planning Commission and the State Government regarding the manner in which the requisite financial resources could be found to make good the surpluses relatable to Telengana.

A high-power Telengana Development Committee would be set up immediately to indentify the programmes and schemes relatable to the Telengana region and to review from time to time the actual implementation of these programmes. It will consist of the Chief Minister as Chairman, a member of the Planning Commission, Andhra Ministers belonging to the Telengana region and the Chairman of the Telengana Regional Committee, as members. There would also be a Plan Implementation Committee at the official level, presided over by an Adviser of the Planning Commission, to review periodically the implementation of the Plan programmes relating to the accelerated development of Telengana.

It had been further agreed that in order to ensure continuous attention of the Central Government towards the problems of the Telengana region, the Prime Minister would hold review meetings every six months with the Chief Minister and his colleagues in the Telengana Development Committee. The Deputy Prime Minister, the Home Minister and the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission would be among others to be associated with these meetings. This suggestion had been made by the Chief Minister himself.

Another important announcement was that the high-power Central Advisory Committee set up under the States Re-organization Act would visit Hyderabad shortly to examine the grievances of public servants of various categories and make appropriate recommendations to the Central Home Ministry. The Committee would be headed by the Chairman of the UPSC.

The Central Home Ministry would also devise an urgent programme within a definite time-schedule with the object of deciding any outstanding cases relating to the integration of Services.

Jurists' Committee To Report On Safeguards Implementation:

The Government of India appointed on April 19 a Committee of Jurists headed by a former Chief Justice of India, Mr. K. N. Wanchoo, to advise it on steps to implement the Telengana safeguards.

This was in pursuance of the announcement made by the Prime Minister in the Lok Sabha. The former Attorney-General, Mr. M. C. Setalvad, MP, and the present Attorney-General, Mr. Niren De, will be the other two members of the Committee.

The Committee will consider the implications of the recent judgment of the Supreme Court holding Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act 1967 insofar as it relates to the Telengana area of Andhra Pradesh ultra vires of the Constitution (see page 8899).

The Committee, according to a Home Ministry announcement, will make its recommendations as soon as practicable and suggest legislative and other measures necessary for effective implementation of the Telengana safeguards relating to employment or appointment in public services under the State Government and under local and other authorities.

The measures, possible as well as necessary, will be in keeping with the spirit of the assurances contained in the Agreement reached between the Andhra and Telengana leaders in 1956 and the recent all-party accord reached at Hyderabad. The Committee will review the various laws and rules pertaining to requirements as to residence which have been in force from time to time in regard to recruitment to public services and report on the possibility of continuing the same or similar provisions.

It will also report on other incidental and consequential matters.

Committee On Surplus Revenue Appointed:

On April 23, the Government of India appointed a high-power Committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Vasishtha Bhargava, a Judge of the Supreme Court, "to determine the surplus relatable to Telengana which was expected to have been spent on the development of Telengana region".

This was one of the specific steps taken by the Government for "accelerating the pace of development and expansion of employment opportunities in Telengana region and creating conditions for balanced economic development of the State of Andhra Pradesh as a whole."

Other members of the Committee are: Mr. Mukut Behari Mathur, Director of Asian Institute of Education, Planning and Administration, and Mr. Hari Bhushan Bhar, Additional Deputy Controller and Auditor-General. Mr. T. N. Krishnaswami will be Secretary of the Committee.

According to a resolution issued by the Home Ministry on April 23, the Committee will take into account the agreements reached between the representatives of Andhra and Telengana regions regarding the utilization of the surpluses from Telengana region for expenditure on development of that region.

It will examine the varying estimates made of such surpluses during the period November 1, 1956 to March 31, 1968, and of the unspent portion of such surpluses and also any representations made against these estimates. It will also determine the amount which ought to have been spent on the development of Telengana region in accordance with the agreements but remained unspent on March 31, 1968.

The Committee will also evolve and recommend principles on which the surpluses from Telengana region should be determined in future.

The Committee would report to the Government by May 31, 1969.

State Telengana Development & Plan Implementation Committees:

The Andhra Government decided on April 17 to set up a high-power Telengana Development Committee and a Plan Implementation Committee in pursuance of the announcement made by Mrs. Indira Gandhi in her statement on Telengana on April 11 in the Lok Sabha.

The Development Committee will be headed by the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, and will include a member of the Planning Commission, State Ministers belonging to Telengana and the Chairman of the Telengana Regional Committee.

The main functions of the Committee, as outlined by Mrs. Gandhi in her statement, will be to identify within the overall frame-work of the Five-Year Plan the programmes and schemes relatable to the Telengana region with reference to the physical as well as financial targets to be achieved, to review from time to time the actual implementation and working of these programmes and schemes and to advise the State Government on appropriate decisions that may be considered necessary.

The Plan Implementation Committee will be presided over by an Adviser of the Planning Commission and composed of representatives of the Central Finance and Home Ministries.

Telengana MLAs Support Mrs. Gandhi's Proposals:

Forty-one Congress members of the Andhra Pradesh Assembly from Telengana signed a statement on April 15 welcoming the Prime Minister's eight-point plan for the region.

The meeting, which was presided over by the Revenue Minister, Mr. V. B. Raju, was attended by 73 Congress members from the region. Telengana has 105 members in the State Assembly.

The statement appealed to the Prime Minister and the Central Government to take immediate legal and constitutional steps to get over the situation created by the Supreme Court's judgment striking down Mulki (domicile) rules (see page 8899).

CPI (M) On Telengana Disturbances:

In a statement on April 6, the Politburo of the Communist Party of India (Marxist) strongly opposed any dismemberment of Andhra Pradesh and creation of a separate Telengana State.

Expressing its serious concern at the "disturbing developments" in Andhra Pradesh in the last two months, the Politburo declared that the CPI (M) was "determinedly opposed" to this separatist agitation from either region of Andhra Pradesh, Telengana or Circar districts of Andhra.

It warned the workers, peasants and other democratic forces in that State as also those in the entire country against the grave danger inherent in these "extremely reactionary moves" of the counter-revolutionary landlord politicians and their political lobbies.

It appealed to all democratic forces to rise in time and beat back this offensive on the unity of the democratic revolutionary movement in the country and, in the final analysis, on the very unity of the country.

It alleged that the big landlord-dominated Telengana wing of the Congress was making a determined bid to carve out a separate Telengana State for its exclusive domination and exploitation, while a powerful section of the landlords in Circar districts of Andhra was equally eager to get rid of the Telengana region so that its narrow sectional hegemony was ensured in the residuary State. The aggressive demand for a separate Telengana State was only a first grave warning of the shape of things to come under "Congress misrule."

CPI Resolution:

The National Council of the CPI which met in New Delhi from April 5 to 12, in a resolution released on April 21, blamed the Congress for the widespread separatist movements in many States.

It attributed the uneven development of the economy to the rapid growth of monopolies. People of the under-developed regions felt a sense of neglect and gross injustice.

Discussing the problem of regionalism in the context of the demand for a separate Telengana, it expressed the view that such trends were a distortion of popular anger and discontent. They diverted people's attention from the basic inequalities. It felt, however, that the demand for tribal autonomy stood on a different footing and deserved support.

It directed the State units to fight regional discrimination, but at the same time to oppose disruptive forces. It warned against regional considerations in employment and said that this would divide the working class.

G. Industrial Licensing Policy: According to the Government's new industrial licensing policy for 1969-70, beer, calcium carbide, domestic refrigerators, electric bulbs and midget electrodes have been taken off the list of "banned items" for industrial licensing in the current financial year.

Even though the policy did not contain many changes as in the past, it indicated a liberal approach to industries in which the production capacity was still below demand and a restrictive approach to those on which there was already an excess of installed capacity.

In freeing certain industries from restrictions imposed in the previous years, the Government took into account the shortages that had developed in them as a result of larger demand and also a few licensed units not going into production as per schedule.

Under the new policy, only a few items like air gas compressors in the engineering group and methanol in the non-engineering group were added to the list of "banned items". While soap was still under ban, toilet soap had been exempted.

In pursuance of its policy of encouraging the small-scale sector, the Government reserved three more items exclusively for development in this sector and no industrial licences would be issued to the corporate sector in respect of any one of 42 industries contained in the list.

The new items reserved for the small-scale sector were full PVC footwear (chappals, sandals and shoes), except for export by predominantly export-oriented units, electrical wiring accessories and electrical light fittings (such as chokes, starters and reflectors) and hand-stapling machines.

The Government also released an illustrative list of 50 industries in which licences for new units might be issued "on merit." Some of the items added to this list were bulbs of different types, cash registers, both manual and power-operated, mercury vapour bulbs, motor car headlights and telephone switchboard bulbs.

In the group of non-engineering industries, caustic soda and soda ash were added to the list of items for consideration for licensing on merits. In the engineering group, typewriters which figured in the merit list last year were left out in the new policy.

H. Eight States Brought Under Single Wheat Zone: The Central Government decided on April 22 to bring more than half the country, covering eight States and three Union Territories, under a single wheat zone. It also decided to increase by Rs. 8 per quintal the issue price of cheaper wheat.

The new zone includes West Bengal, Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan, Haryana, Punjab and Jammu and Kashmir and the Union Territories of Delhi, Himachal Pradesh and Chandigarh. In West Bengal, the statutorily rationed area of Calcutta is excluded from this zone. The present northern zone comprises Jammu and Kashmir, Punjab, Chandigarh, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh and Delhi.

The procurement price of wheat in 1969-70 would remain the same as last year—Rs 76 per quintal. It would be reduced as suggested by the Agricultural Prices Commission.

The procurement price of wheat for the 1968-69 marketing season had been fixed for all the States at Rs. 76 per quintal—the same as this year—for the common white variety and all Mexican varieties. The only difference was that the latest announcement provided no special price for the superior varieties for which the price of Rs. 81 per quintal was fixed last year.

The Government made a significant departure from last year in the issue price of wheat which has now been fixed at Rs. 78 per quintal for all varieties. Last year three prices—Rs. 70, Rs. 90 and Rs. 95—were fixed for the different varieties.

This would mean that the retail price of the cheaper varieties consumed by the poorer sections would go up by Rs. 8 per quintal while that of the better varieties would come down by Rs. 12 to Rs. 17 per quintal.

The outstanding feature of the announcement, however, was the enlargement of the northern wheat zone to nearly ten times its present size in terms of population. This bold departure from past practice had been made possible by the bumper wheat crop, expected to be around 18 million tonnes this year.

Punjab's Protest:

On April 17, the Punjab Government lodged a protest with the Central Government against its decision to enlarge the northern food zone and fix the purchase price of varieties of wheat, other than indigenous red, at Rs. 76 per quintal.

In a letter to the Central Food Minister, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, the State Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, said that the decision had come as a great disappointment to the Punjab Government. It was grossly unfair to farmers. The purchase price was not adequate to cover the increased cost of agricultural production.

I. Price Control Over Cement Lifted: The Minister for Industrial Development and Company Affairs, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, announced in Lok Sabha on April 14 that the Government had decided to remove all control over the price and distribution of cement with effect from January 1, 1970.

He also announced that the existing arrangements relating to freight pooling would be discontinued as from that date. These decisions had been taken "in view of the fact that the supply position of cement is at present comparatively easy and is expected to be so for the next few years."

He also announced that the Government had decided that the additional capacity to be set up in the public sector by the Cement Corporation of India should henceforth be only in the deficit areas.

The Government had decided, after discussions with the industry, to fix a ceiling price for cement at Rs. 100 per tonne ex-works with effect from April 16, 1969, generally. However, in the cases of Assam Cements (Cherrapunji), J and K Minerals (Wuyan) and Travancore Cements (Kottayam), the prices would have to be fixed separately, taking into account their special circumstances. According to the Minister, these were sub-standard units.

J. Bhakra Hydro-electric Complex Completed: The giant Bhakra hydro-electric complex was completed with the formal inauguration of the Bhakra right bank power station by the Vice-President, Mr. V. V. Giri, at Nangal on April 17.

Speaking on the occasion, Mr. Giri called for proper utilization of the water resources of inter-State rivers for the benefit of the nation.

He expressed the hope that Bhakra-Nangal would become a symbol of international collaboration, national integration and inter-State co-operation, and serve as a source of eternal inspiration.

He thanked the Soviet Union and the United States for the assistance given by them for the Bhakra-Nangal project and complimented the human endeavour involved in its execution.

The Irrigation and Power Minister, Dr. K. L. Rao, hailed the completion of the Rs. 235-crore project as a mighty achievement. He said the new power station, built with Soviet assistance, was a standing monument to Indo-Soviet friendship.

Mr. R. K. Kurhanov, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Soviet Republic of Uzbekistan, who was present, also underlined the traditional friendship between India and the Soviet Union.

The total installed capacity of this power plant is 6,00,000 kw. There are five hydro-units of equal capacity. The estimated cost of the right bank power project alone is about Rs. 59.7 crores.

Soviet credit for the project totalled Rs. 10.4 crores.

With the commissioning of the Bhakra right bank power house, the fifth unit of the Bhakra-Nangal project, the total installed capacity has reached 1,050 mw, making this the largest single power station in the country.

The bulk of the power requirements of Punjab, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh and Delhi is met by the station.

K. Labour Relations During 1968-69—Ministry's Annual Report: The annual report of the Central Ministry of Labour and Employment for 1968-69, released in New Delhi on April 15, stated that with labour relations remaining "disturbed" in the country during 1968, 13.83 million man-days were lost on account of strikes and lock-outs during the year.

Of this, 1.53 million man-days were lost in the Central sphere undertakings and 12.20 million in the State sphere undertakings.

However, the man-days lost during the year were less than in the previous year, 1967, which had a record of 17.14 million compared to those from 1963 onwards.

Labour-management relations in the Central sphere undertakings remained disturbed during the year with strikes in banking, insurance, port and docks, railways, defence, posts and telegraphs, newspapers, Central undertakings and coal-mines. Certain sections of employees in the various Central Government offices including railways, posts and telegraphs and defence also went on a day's token strike in September, in support of their demand for need-based minimum wages.

In industries in the Central sphere, other than mines and oil-fields, there were 172 strikes and four lock-outs resulting in more than 13,00,000 man-days lost. The loss to workers in terms of wages was estimated at Rs. 26,00,000.

Among the States, Maharashtra, West Bengal, Tamil Nadu, Uttar Pradesh and Kerala topped the list with more strikes and larger number of man-days lost. West Bengal lost about 60,00,000 man-days, Tamil Nadu over 23,00,000, Maharashtra over 16,00,000, Kerala about 5,00,000 and UP about 4,60,000.

Although employment in public sector continued to increase, the growth rate during the year was lower than in the previous year. In absolute terms, employment increased from 9.63 million in March, 1967 to 9.80 million in March, 1968.

A tentative provision of Rs. 11.7 crores for the Fourth Plan period and of Rs. 1.90 crores for 1969-70 had been approved for the department.

L. Industrially Backward Areas Identified: A working group of the Planning Commission has identified Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Orissa, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh as industrially backward areas eligible for special treatment by way of incentives for industrial development.

Assam, Nagaland and Jammu and Kashmir were earlier chosen by the committee of the National Development Council for first priority in the matter of Central assistance in view of their special problems and backwardness.

The working group, set up at the instance of the NDC committee last September, selected the six States for special treatment on the basis of a six-point criteria.

The criteria were: total per capita income, per capita income from industry and mining, number of workers in registered factories, per capita annual consumption of electricity, length of surfaced roads and and railway mileage.

M. Vice-Chancellors' Conference: The Vice-Chancellors' Conference, which ended in New Delhi on April 23, refrained from taking a decision on the controversial question of students' participation in university administration and decided to refer it, in view of the complexities involved, to a working group to be set up by the University Grants Commission.

It was, however, unanimously agreed that in all non-curricular activities, which did not involve direct participation in statutory bodies of the universities, students would be allowed to play an active role. Joint committees of teachers and students would be set up in universities for this purpose.

Winding up the Conference, the Vice-Chancellor of Bombay University, Dr. P. B. Gajendragadkar said that permission to students to participate in statutory bodies would be dangerous in view of the unstable political situation in the country.

The Conference was unanimous in deciding to go ahead with the proposal of instruction in the regional media, but resolved at the same time to provide necessary safeguards to prevent deterioration in teaching standards. The caution was necessary in view of the dearth of books in regional languages.

The Central Education Minister, Dr. V. K. R. V. Rao, announced that the Government was engaged in implementing the Rs. 15-crore programme for bringing out books in all Indian languages. The books, he added, would be tailored to the requirements of the universities and the examination syllabi in particular.

But, he asserted that if the country wanted to keep abreast of the latest in the field of knowledge, the continuance of English was essential. He stressed the need for shedding emotional antipathy, if any, against English. He added that the method of teaching English would undergo a change.

Another important decision taken by the Conference related to the position of Urdu in education. In his opening speech at the Conference, Dr. Rao pointed out that Urdu was not a regional language. It was an inter-State language and one of the important national languages of India. The Education Ministry was willing to make available Rs. 1 crore for its development.

It was decided that a Central Board for the production of books in Urdu would be set up.

Central Institute Of Languages:

Dr. V. K. R. V. Rao announced at the Conference that the Government had decided to set up a Central Institute of Languages to develop regional languages.

He said that the Government had approved the financial allocation for the Institute, which would help develop all major languages, including Urdu, even if they were not regional or State languages.

He also announced that the Government would allocate Rs. 1 crore to produce books in Urdu for use in universities. The amount would be outside the Rs. 18-crore programme of production of books at the university level in regional languages, under which each State had been assured assistance of Rs. 1 crore during the Plan period for producing textbooks in regional languages. Urdu was excluded from the scheme since it was not a regional language.

English As Medium Of Education—Policy Statement:

Making a major policy statement on the controversial question of university medium, Dr. V. K. R. V. Rao, declared at the Vice-Chancellors' Conference on April 21 that changing the medium of education from English to the regional languages could not, and should not, mean the abolition of English from the universities.

He said that far from abolishing English, students would, in future, have to acquire an adequate command over English to read and understand English books in their chosen subjects and use English as their library language.

Cautioning the Vice-Chancellors against a hasty switch-over to the regional languages without adequate preparation, he said: "We have to do this carefully in a phased manner, and with due regard to exceptions for local circumstances, special requirements of specified academic disciplines and the need for mobility among scholars in the post-graduate and research stages of education.

"Above all, we must see that in effecting this change, academic standards do not suffer the slightest degree of erosion."

Before the medium was changed for any subject at the under-graduate stage, at least one good text-book for each paper in the course should be made available.

He advocated a radical change in the methods of teaching English.

He also outlined an eight-point programme to be developed in the coming years:

(1) The book development programme. The Central had provided Rs. 1 crore each to every State to produce books in regional languages. Dr. Rao appealed to the Vice-Chancellors to woo outstanding teachers to write text-books.

(2) Introduction of games and sports and the National Social Service (NSS) as alternatives to the National Cadet Corps during the first two years of under-graduate instruction. The Ministry proposed to start with 60,000 participants in the NSS during the first year and reach a total of 200,000 by the fifth year.

Introducing social services as part of academic instruction was a grand new experiment, the success of which could have far-reaching implications for India's social development.

(3) Student participation in the academic process. This included building of text-book libraries, day centres of study near the residences of students, and guidance and counselling services for students.

The participation of students in the academic process had now been accepted in principle. A private Bill introduced in Parliament for giving statutory recognition to the principle of student participation and setting out the institutional requirements for it was being circulated for public opinion and to the universities.

(4) The composition of governing bodies of colleges was unsatisfactory, their actions often arbitrary. Teachers suffered from a sense of insecurity and injustice. The Government was therefore thinking of appointing a committee to study the working of affiliated colleges.

(5) The development of teacher education.

(6) To prepare alternative courses oriented to employment.

(7) To have a proper liaison between the national laboratories and the universities.

(8) Schemes to promote national integration. One such scheme could be to modify academic courses in such a manner as to make it possible for a student studying at one university to undertake a part of his course in some other university.

P. Plane Crash: An Indian Airlines Fokker Friendship plane with 44 people on board crashed in flames at Dumaria, near Khulna in East Pakistan on April 21. There was no survivor.

The plane was on its way from Silchar to Calcutta via Agartala. The crash victims consisted of 40 passengers, including a baby, a pilot, a co-pilot, a steward and an air hostess.

The bodies of the victims were brought to Calcutta by road. The authorities announced that relatives to the victims could fly to Calcutta free of cost to identify the bodies.

The plane crash occurred at Beelpagla, 11 km from Khulna, where the aircraft plunged into a marsh.

Later, a message from Pakistan International Airways reached Dum Dum saying that a Fokker Friendship plane had crashed at a place between Khulna and Daulatpur at about 8-25 p.m. An aircraft had been seen in flames somewhere between Khulna and Daulatpur earlier.

[The last IAC plane crash in the eastern region was 13 years ago, in a tea estate in Hailakandi in Assam. The owner of that tea garden, Mr. R. S. Baulka, was among the victims of the latest tragedy. He had boarded the plane at Silchar.]

Q. Population Forecast: India's population in 2000 AD will be 870 million, if the tempo of family planning programmes is fully sustained.

This is on the assumption that population growth will be brought down to 1.7 per cent by 1980-81 to an average of 1.2 per cent in the subsequent 20 years.

If the present rate of growth continues unchecked, the country's population will be nearly 1,170 million by 2000 AD.

During the Fourth Plan, population growth is expected to be at the rate of around 2.5 per cent.

ISRAEL

A. King Hussein's Six-Point Peace Plan For West Asia: King Hussein of Jordan proposed on April 10 in Washington a six-point peace plan for West Asia, which, he said, had the support of President G. A. Nasser, specifically guaranteeing Israel freedom of navigation through the Suez Canal and the Gulf of Aqaba and respect for Israel's territorial integrity and sovereignty.

The plan, which was unfolded in a speech prepared for delivery to the National Press Club, also emphasized Jordan's support for the current efforts by the Big Four Powers to find a solution to the West Asia dispute.

He said: "It is probably true that a major war is not imminent, but it is equally true that if events continue on their present course, without a settlement, a war is unquestionably inevitable."

King Hussein said that as recently as three weeks ago he had been given President Nasser's personal authority to speak on his behalf.

Most of the six-point plan followed the lines of the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967. But it included "guaranteeing for all the freedom of navigation through the Gulf of Aqaba and the Suez Canal."

[The UN Council resolution had spoken only of freedom of navigation through "international waterways", leaving open a possible claim by UAR and other Arab nations that the Canal and the narrow Gulf were not international.]

The six-point plan, in accordance with the UN resolution, also called for an end to all belligerency, respect for and acknowledgment of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the area, and recognition of the right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats and acts of war.

He said that a peace programme should include guaranteeing the territorial inviolability of all States in the area through whatever measures necessary, including establishment of demilitarized zones and a just settlement of the refugee problem.

In return, he said, "our sole demand upon Israel is the withdrawal of its armed forces from all territories occupied in the June, 1967 war and the implementation of all the other provisions of the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967. "Israel might either have peace in West Asia or territory, but it can never have both."

He appealed to Americans to be ""even-handed in your support of the two sides and to be even-minded in your thinking of the problems that confront us." Neither the Arab States, nor Israel, wanted a peace imposed upon the area by the Great Powers. "However, I continue to be suspicious of Israel's objection to their getting together to discuss the problem."

Israel Rejects Plan:

Next day (April 11), Israel rejected at least unofficially King Hussein's six-point proposal, viewing it as a mere "propaganda manoeuvre."

Well-informed sources said that Israel did not see in it any genuine desire on the Arabs' part to achieve peace with Israel.

The Foreign Ministry declined to comment on it.

The Israeli Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, accused King Hussein of not seeking a "real peace but a return to the situation prevailing in the region before the last war."

She said in a statement on the King's six-point peace plan that she was "astonished that there are politicians in the world naive enough to believe that the Arab leaders have a genuine will for peace."

She was again pessimistic about the prospects of the Big Four talks on West Asia because of the division of interests—Britain and USA for Israel and France and the Soviet Union for the Arabs.

On April 13, the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, offered to negotiate with King Hussein to reach agreement on secure and recognized boundaries between the two countries.

Answering questions relating to the six-point peace plan outlined by the King in Washington, he said: "You cannot get peace by resorting to the position which led to war".

Mr. A. Eban's Call For King Hussein's Clarification:

Israel called on Jordan on April 13 to open direct negotiations on King Hussein's proposals for peace.

But, King Hussein said he was not prepared to talk so long as Israel insisted on negotiating from the frontiers it conquered in the June, 1967 war.

The Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, at a news conference in Jerusalem on April 13 called on King Hussein to submit his peace proposals to "our criticism and our inquiry."

Referring to the six-point peace plan outlined by King Hussein in Washington, Mr. Eban said: "If, having decided to make war in June, 1967, you have now decided to make peace, then come to the negotiating table." But he warned that peace could not be dictated and that Israel had no intention of going back to the pre-1967 Armistice lines.

King Hussein, interviewed on American television in New York, said, however, on April 13 that if Israel had accepted the November, 1967 UN resolution on West Asia, as Israel said it had, then it should not have rejected his peace plan.

He said his plan was based on the principles of the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 which demanded, among other things, withdrawal of Israeli forces from all territories occupied in the six-day war. "If the Israelis continue to say they will hang on to this and that part of the occupied area and Jerusalem and everything else, then what is there to talk about?"

Asked if he would be willing to hold direct talks with Israel if the Israelis withdrew from the occupied areas, he said: "I believe that even before Israeli withdrawal, if the Security Council resolution of November, 1967 was accepted, there would be talks on implementation."

"Direct talks with Israel?"

"I suppose yes, but through the UN and through UN Ambassador (Gunnar) Jarring...

"Not direct talks?"

"Well, I don't know exactly."

President G. A. Nasser Rejects Direct Talks:

President G. A. Nasser of UAR rejected any direct Arab talks with Israel on April 21, but instead called on the Jewish State to accept the package peace deal proposed by King Hussein.

Should Israel accept the package six-point peace plan outlined by King Hussein, she would be granted freedom of navigation through the Suez Canal.

He said in an interview taped in Cairo and televised in USA that peace in West Asia could only come through UN and only after Israel had given up her expansionist demands.

Rejecting the idea of face-to-face negotiations between the Arab States and Israel, he called such an arrangement a ""table of capitulation".

More Fighting:

In the continued fighting in West Asia, according to a Tel Aviv Army announcement, Israeli and UAR gunners exchanged heavy artillery and tank fire across the Suez Canal on April 10.

UAR gunners opened fire on Israeli troops near Ismailia in the north and near port Taufiq at the southern end of the nearly 165 kilometre-long waterway, triggering an exchange of fire. About a dozen shells had been lobbed from Egypt at Israeli troops two hours earlier, but the Israelis did not return the fire.

Israeli and Jordanian forces exchanged fire for 45 minutes in the northern Jordan Valley on April 10.

Arab guerrillas attacked an Israeli army patrol with bazooka fire near the Sea of Galilee early on April 10.

On April 11, UAR guns bombarded Israeli fortifications across the Suez Canal in a two-hour battle along a 20-mile front between Ismailia and Qantara.

The fighting, with artillery and tank guns, was along one of the narrowest stretches of the Canal, where the opposing armies are only a few hundred yards apart.

The UAR claimed it had destroyed three tanks, two armoured vehicles and six trucks in their bombardment of Israeli positions east of the waterway.

It was the fourth clash in as many days and came while all forces on the UAR side were in a state of maximum alert.

An army communique said the Israelis suffered large numbers of killed or wounded and that fires were started among their positions in east Qantara. The town was split in two by the Israeli advance to the Canal in June, 1967.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli military spokesman accused UAR of starting the shelling. He claimed that Israeli forces suffered no casualties.

An Amman spokesman said on April 12 that Israeli troops suffered eight casualties in a three-hour battle in the northern Jordan valley. There were no Jordanian casualties.

On April 14, Israeli and UAR jet-fighters fought a fierce duel above Suez and Port Said shortly before a tank and artillery battle along the Suez Canal. Both sides claimed to have shot down at least one plane.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli military spokesman said that the Israeli jets had hit an Egyptian MIG-21, which fell on the Egyptian side of the Canal in the region of Suez town. All Israeli planes had returned safely to their bases.

But in Cairo, a UAR Army statement said that one Israeli Mirage jet had been shot down near Suez. One of their own planes made an emergency desert landing, but the pilot escaped safely.

Observers in Cairo said it was the first air battle over Port Said, at the northern entrance to the Canal, since shortly after the 1967 June war.

A UAR-Israeli artillery duel that broke out on April 15 across the Suez Canal ended some three hours later following the intervention of UN Observers, according to a military communique broadcast by Cairo Radio.

The communique said that the duel extended along the whole of the Canal and that the Israelis had suffered heavy losses in men and equipment.

In Tel Aviv, an Army spokesman said that Israel and UAR, for the eighth day running, fought an artillery duel across the Suez Canal on April 15 and UN Observers were finding it hard to arrange a cease-fire.

Again, on April 16, a heavy artillery and tank battle roared across the Jordan River cease-fire line after Israeli jets swept into Jordan to strafe and bomb suspected Arab guerrilla positions.

An Israeli Army spokesman accused Jordanian forces of unleashing their cannon at 10-30 a.m. on Israeli positions on Abdullah Bridge, 4.8 km north of the Dead Sea. "We returned the fire in order to silence the sources of the Jordanian fire."

Earlier, on April 16, two Israeli jets staged a 10-minute assault on guerrilla outposts in the Manshiveh region after the Arabs were accused of firing on Israeli troops in the Beisan Valley.

A Jordanian military spokesman reported that Jordanian forces destroyed five Israeli tanks during a three-hour clash in the southern Jordan Valley on April 16.

A UAR military spokesman claimed that a special commando unit attacked an Israeli position opposite Ismailia on April 19 and killed and wounded at least 30 Israeli soldiers.

He said that the unit also destroyed armoured cars and ammunition depots in an action in which Israeli tanks took part.

A military spokesman in Tel Aviv described as "pure fantasy" the Cairo report which claimed that 30 Israeli soldiers were killed or wounded in this clash and that Israeli armoured cars were destroyed.

He said that only one Israeli soldier was slightly wounded during the engagement and a military car was damaged.

On April 22, Israeli fighter-bombers knocked out UAR's early warning radar defence system in southern Jordan, according to an Israeli military spokesman. One Israeli plane was shot down and the pilot killed.

The raid, 28 miles inside Jordan, destroyed two radar stations which UAR had been using to pin-point air traffic over southern Israel and the Israeli-UAR border. They replaced radar points which UAR had lost in the Sinai desert during the June, 1967 war.

Military sources in Jerusalem said that the raid was in retaliation for UAR violations of the Cease-Fire Agreement along the Suez Canal.

Amman Radio said it was Israel's heaviest air attack in more than a year.

A senior member of the Israeli General Staff said: "There are still a lot of options open to us, and I think we will make use of them in due time."

Israeli fighter planes attacked a number of areas in Jordan early on April 22 in two strikes two hours apart, a military spokesman announced in Amman.

In the Al-Mazaar area, four soldiers were killed and 16 others wounded. Three civilians were killed and six people, including a soldier, were wounded in the Irbid and Ashtafina areas.

Cairo Radio said that UAR troops again crossed the Suez Canal on the night of April 21, clashing with Israeli defence positions and fighting their way out of Israeli ambushes.

Israeli and UAR forces exchanged artillery and tank fire across the Canal on a 20-mile front from Qantara to Ras el-Esh, south of Port Said, on April 23.

Earlier, an Egyptian commando force killed six Israeli soldiers and captured one during a reconnaissance mission on the Suez Canal's east bank.

U Thant on "Grave Situation":

The UN Secretary-General, U Thant urgently drew the attention of the Security Council on April 22 to the grave situation along the Suez Canal and warned that "a virtual state of active war exists there".

In the wake of daily clashes between Israeli and UAR forces, U Thant took the unusual step of issuing a special report that the cease-fire "has become almost totally ineffective in the Suez sector".

U Thant's statement said that in clashes on 12 successive days, a wide range of weapons were used, including rockets, tank fire and heavy artillery. "The UN military Observers, who are now operating under great danger and difficulty, in each instance exert every effort to bring a quick end to the firing, with varying degrees of success, but no later than the following day firing erupts again. Several UN observation posts had been damaged during recent firings and it was a miracle that nobody (from UN) had yet been killed.

He said that "in the circumstances, it seems to me that the only conclusion to be drawn is that the Security Council cease-fire has become almost totally ineffective in the Suez Canal sector and that a virtual state of active war now exists there."

UN diplomats interpreted the warning by U Thant as a clear call to the "Big Four Powers" to speed up their current efforts to find a peace solution.

U Thant's statement was issued amid new flare-ups between Israeli and Arab forces.

Almost simultaneously, the US State Department called on Israel and the Arab States to halt the rash of clashes on the Suez Canal and elsewhere in the area.

A few hours later, President Richard Nixon himself said he was deeply disturbed and saddened at the growing violence along the Canal.

For several months now, U Thant has been stressing the special responsibility of the Big Four in seeking a settlement of the West Asian question.

UAR Repudiates 1967 Cease-Fire:

On April 23, UAR officially repudiated the UN cease-fire of 1967 and declared it no longer binding on her in view of the Israeli fortifications along the Suez Canal's east bank.

A Government spokesman, Mr. Mohammed Hassan el Zayyat, told a news conference in Cairo that the world "cannot expect us to observe the cease-fire in the face of such fortifications."

He made the statement in a comment on the state of active warfare along the Canal and on a US appeal to all sides to obey the cease-fire.

[The UN cease-fire of 1967 failed to mention anything about withdrawal, but had been adopted under emergency conditions "pending something else".]

He said that UAR was prepared to observe a cease-fire for a month or two but not for "99 years".

British Anxiety:

In London, Britain expressed anxiety that the worsening of the situation in the Suez Canal region and in the Jordan valley might hinder the "Big Four" attempts to settle the conflict.

Commenting on the UN Secretary-General's report to the Security Council, in which he had said the Canal zone situation had virtually reached a state of active war, the British Foreign Office said in a communique that it shared U Thant's anxieties.

The communique added: "We very much hope that all concerned will take steps to ensure that violation of the cease-fire in these two sectors will now cease. We hope, too, that they will recognize the fact that violation of the cease-fire cannot help, and may positively hinder, the international efforts to bring about a peaceful settlement in the Middle East."

Israel & Jordan Send Letters To Security Council:

On April 21, Israel sent a letter of protest to the UN Security Council against "great violations of the cease-fire" by both regular and irregular Jordanian forces within the previous 24 hours.

An Israeli delegation spokesman said, however, that Israel was not going to complain about the raid by the UAR forces across the Suez Canal on April 21 which, he said, was not as important as UAR would have it believe.

The Israeli Ambassador, Mr. Yosef Tekoah, told the Security Council President, Mr. Padma B. Khatri, of Nepal, that Jordanian artillery had attacked Israeli settlements in the Jordan and Beisan valleys. At least two groups of Jordanian "saboteurs" were intercepted and four of them were killed in one engagement and one in another.

The letter reported ten incidents of alleged Jordanian aggression in the 24-hour period in all, including the battles with saboteurs and the artillery attacks. Israeli casualties were one soldier killed and two wounded.

Jordan dispatched two letters for circulation among members of the UN Security Council on what its Ambassador, Mr. Muhammad El-Farra, described as a "grave and deteriorating situation". He made no request for a Council meeting.

In the second letter, Mr. El-Farra told the Security Council President that the Israelis did not hesitate once again to use most of the destructive weapons in their arsenal. Napalm was used to destroy life and property. Shelling, rocketing, bombing and strafing were indiscriminately used against civilians and their means of livelihood.

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On Possible UAR Offensive:

Israel's Defence Minister, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, said on television on April 10 that Egypt might this Summer fight its way across the Suez Canal and invade the Sinai Peninsula.

He said that Egypt's possible attempt across the Canal might result either from political considerations, mistaken military appraisals, or from submission to a wave of political emotions sweeping the Arab world.

Mr. M. H. Heikal's Call:

A portent of the coming battle was a call by the close confidante of President G. A. Nasser, Mr. M. H. Heikal, Editor of Al Ahram, for a limited war which he said the Arabs must wage in the near future to dislodge Israeli troops—even by a few kilometres—from occupied territory.

Mr. Heikal did not set any date for this battle, although he said it should come some time around June, 1969 which would mark the second anniversary of the June, 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Writing in his weekly editorial, he portrayed the battle he had in mind as one in which the Arab armies "would kill between 10,000 and 20,000 Israeli soldiers, wreck three battalions and force a withdrawal from presently occupied positions to even a few kilometres behind."

JORDAN

A. Trade Protocol With India: Jordan and India signed in Amman on April 13 a Protocol organizing trade exchange between the two countries for the current year in the context of a Trade Agreement signed in 1961.

The Protocol was signed on behalf of the Indian Government by Mr. S. K. Singh, Director of Foreign Trade. Mr. Ismail al-Armouti, head of the Foreign Trade section in the Economy Ministry, signed for Jordan.

KUWAIT

A. French Military Assistance: The Lebanese newspaper, Al Nihar, reported on January 24 that agreement had been reached during a recent visit of the French Defence Minister, Mr. Pierre Messmer, under which France would construct a maritime fleet for Kuwait, the first unit of which would arrive by 1970.

The fleet would comprise up-to-date marine units suited to operation in Arabian Gulf waters.

According to the newspaper, the Kuwait authorities had informed Mr. Messmer that co-operation in the sphere of petroleum between the two countries would receive due attention and that the concessions would be granted to French petroleum companies some time this year.

Another daily, Al Kifah, reported negotiations to be underway between the French Government and several Arab States, particularly Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Kuwait, Jordan and Lebanon, for the supply of French planes and defensive weapons.

Mr. Messmer himself returned to Paris on January 23 after his tour of the Middle East which emphasized France's growing rapprochement with the Arab world.

Mr. Messmer's talks with Arab leaders were believed to have centred on French military aid. Saudi Arabia has bought 200 Panhard AML-90 light armoured cars and several hundred light machine-guns from France.

Kuwait was not known to have made any arms deal with France, but it had shown interest, as had Saudi Arabia, in French aircraft and missile-launching motor boats.

The discussions, coming only days after President de Gaulle's total embargo on arms deliveries to Israel, threw light on the growing shift in France's relations with Middle East countries.

MALAYSIA

A. Muslim Scholars' Conference: A national conference of Muslim scholars was held in Kuala Lumpur from March 4 to 7.

The opening conference was attended by more than 400 people including Cabinet Ministers, members of the diplomatic corps and others.

Speaking at the opening session, the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, called on Muslims to "keep abreast with the changing times" and take an active part in economic development. "Economic development is a vital weapon for the progress of this nation and its people".

There were, he said, some Muslim scholars (Ulemas) who discouraged Muslims from taking an active part in economic development as they regarded the seeking of worldly wealth as against the teaching of Islam. Such thinking should be erased from the minds of all Muslims.

He urged Muslims to seek more knowledge in science and technology.

He made it clear that it was not the policy of the Government to hold this conference for political ends

Decisions:

The plenary session confirmed 38 decisions, some of which would be presented to the International Conference of Muslim Nations. One of the decisions was that Muslims could receive eye and heart transplants but would be forbidden to donate the organs for such transplants.

Another decision was that an Islamic Research Centre should be set up to carry out detailed research on the teachings and practices of the religion.

A third decision was that a committee should be formed to study the properties subject to the payment of tithes, and that tithes should be made deductible from income-tax.

The Conference, however, had no definite decision on how the dates for the beginning of the fasting month, Hari Raya Puasa and Hari Raya Haji should be fixed in future. Instead, the plenary session decided that all three opinions expressed by the various State Representatives on the issue be referred to the International Conference of Muslim Nations.

B. Promotion Of Agricultural Research—Bill Passed: Parliament passed on February 7 a Government Bill seeking to establish an institution called the Malaysian Agricultural Research and Development Institute (Mardi).

Introducing the Bill, the Minister of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Haji Ghazali Jawi said that a centre like Mardi was very important for the development of the country's economy.

The Institute would carry out research in farming, animal husbandry and fishing industries.

Experimental stations and posts would be established at State levels to provide training.

The Institute would have a board of governors comprising 11 members drawn from the Government and professional people. Scientists and professional people from the agricultural sector would give advice on technical 'know-how.'

Mardi would also work closely with bodies representing farmers and fishermen.

SINGAPORE

A. "Watch-man Council" For Bills: The Government introduced in Parliament in the second week of April legislation providing for appointment of a Council which would be authorized to report adversely to the Speaker on Bills and subsidiary legislation if it thought they either differentiated between racial or religious communities or contained provisions "inconsistent with the fundamental liberties of their subject."

The Council, made up of 21 members, will be appointed by the President on the advice of the Cabinet.

The effect of this would be to interpose an examining body between Parliament and Presidential assent. Exercising its functions, the Council could delay the passage of legislation for 30 days and induce amendments unless Parliament confirmed its original version by an affirmative vote of not less than two thirds of its membership.

The Council's interposition would not apply to money Bills nor, significantly, to Bills certified by the Prime Minister to be so urgent that it was not in the public interest to delay enactment.

In the latter case, the Council's examination followed Presidential assent, and no provision was made for adverse opinion beyond simple presentation to Parliament.

According to observers, the new Council would certainly be an improvement on the present situation, where Presidential assent follows directly upon passage in Parliament. To that extent the Government has surrendered something of its power. However, possessing, as it does, all 58 seats in Parliament, it is unlikely ever to fail to gain the two-thirds vote needed, if it so desired, to brush aside any adverse opinion from the Council.

But close reading of the Bill reveals the Council to be something less than a "watch-dog". It is more akin to a watch-man who might raise a muffled alarm.

The Bill prescribes the Council's particular function as "to draw attention. to" any potentially adverse legislation. Beyond drawing attention in its reports, however, the Council is powerless. It does not, in spite of its name, advise the President—except to present to him an annual report of its activities.

Its members are sworn to secrecy. It is not entitled to hear objectors or examine witnesses in regard to any Bill it is considering. Yet any Minister may be authorized by the Prime Minister to take part in the Council's proceedings as a member, but without the right to vote.

The Council may "examine" any written law in force and report an adverse opinion to Parliament. The Bill makes no provision, however, for action such as in the case of new Bills.

Provisions "inconsistent with the fundamental liberties of the subject," upon which the Council may give an opinion are defined in the Bill as those contained in part two of the Constitution of Malaysia as applicable in Singapore. This ought to bring the Council, when constituted, to prompt examination of the new Bill which provides that a person acquitted of a capital charge may be tried a second time.

Specific protection against repeated trials is prescribed in the relevant part of the Malaysian Constitution.

BURMA

A. Rift In Burmese Communist Party: The Burmese and Chinese Communist Parties confirmed on March 21—five months after the event—that the Chairman of the Burmese Party, Thakin Than Tun, had been murdered by one of his lieutenants in a guerrilla camp in central Burma.

Simultaneously, it was announced from Peking that Thakin Zin, one of the two Vice-Chairmen of the Burmese Communist Party (BCP), had succeeded Thakin Than Tun.

The other Vice-Chairman, Thakin Ba Thein Tin, who had long been in Peking as the leader of the "delegation" of the Central Committee of BCP, expressed his support for the "election" of Thakin Zin as Chairman.

This, according to reports, goes to show that the Chinese leaders had to do a good deal of patchwork before Thakin Zin's appointment as Chairman was accepted by Thakin Ba Thein Tin, who continues as Vice-Chairman.

Thakin Ba Thein Tin said that the "election of Thakin Zin as party Chairman was dictated by the situation and was correct." He added that "Thakin Zin and a Vice-Chairman shall take over the responsibility of leading an armed revolution."

Similarly, in a condolence message sent to the Central Committee of the BCP, the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party called upon the members of the Burmese Party and the Burmese people's army "to closely rally round the Central Committee of the Burmese Communist Party under the leadership of Comrades Thakin Zin and Thakin Ba Thein Tin."

The man who murdered Thakin Than Tun was Mr. Maung Mya. In September, 1968 he had fled after this to the nearby army camp at Kywebwe and surrendered to the authorities.

A few weeks before the assassination there had been reports in Rangoon of defections from the Communist leadership. One week before Mr. Maung Mya killed Thakin Than Tun, the Army had claimed that it had attacked the jungle quarters of the Communists. In this attack three leaders were killed and apart from arms and ammunition, diaries of Thakin Than Tun for 1966, 1967 and 1968 were recovered. On the basis of all the seized documents, the Press then published accounts of mutual killing among the Communist leaders. The picture that emerged from these reports substantially accorded with the account later given by Mr. Maung Mya.

The statement, issued by BCP on March 21, confirmed the Army's claim that it had destroyed the Communist headquarters.

CEYLON

A. Spurt In Economic Growth Rate: The annual report for 1968 of the Central Bank of Ceylon, released in the third week of April, stated that the Island had achieved a record rate of economic growth in 1968. The increase in real output amounted to 8.3 per cent. In per capita terms, the growth rate was 6.1 per cent.

Real output in agriculture rose by 6.9 per cent. The growth was more marked in construction and manufacturing where the value of real output rose by 27.1 and 7.7 per cent, respectively.

The high growth rate was partly the outcome of stimuli provided by the Government in recent years. The gains in agriculture were, in addition, due to favourable weather conditions.

In agriculture, the output of rice increased to 64.6 million bushels (900,000 long tons) last year from 55.1 million bushels in 1967—an increase of 17.2 per cent. The real value of output of other crops and fishing increased by 4.9 per cent.

In export agriculture, the output of tea, rubber, coconut and other crops rose last year. Tea production, which had declined from 490 million lbs in 1966 to 487 million lbs in 1967, increased to 496 million lbs in 1968. The output of rubber was 328 million lbs—an increase of 12 million lbs over 1967. This was mainly attributed to an increased replanted acreage coming into bearing. At the end of 1968, the total acreage under rubber was worth 572,909 acres, of which 46 per cent had been replanted. The average yield per acre in 1968 was 664 lbs—17 lbs highest than the figure for 1967.

The output of coconut also increased. The net equivalent of exports and domestic consumption increased from 2,416 million in 1967 to 2,601 million in 1968—an increase of 7.7 per cent. Coconut production in 1968 was unaffected by bad weather.

In the manufacturing sector, one of the principal factors which had inhibited growth in the years prior to 1968, seems to have been the inadequacy of imported raw materials due to import restrictions. On account of these restrictions many establishments had been working below full capacity. The raw material situation was considerably eased in May, 1968, with the introduction of the FEEC Scheme under which a large amount of raw materials imports was placed under Open General Licence. The introduction of this scheme led almost immediately to an activization of existing stocks of raw materials, in view of the removal of uncertainty regarding availability of raw materials.

B. West German Aid: It was officially announced in Colombo in the third week of April that West Germany would make capital aid valued at DM25 million ($6.25 million) available to Ceylon in 1969.

Of this amount, DM10 million will be in commodity aid and DM15 million in project aid.

In addition, West Germany will deliver 15,000 tons of wheat valued at DM3.7 million in 1969 within the frame-work of the EEC food aid programme.

CHINA

A. Ninth Party Congress Opens: The long-delayed Ninth Congress of the Chinese Communist Party opened in Peking on April 1. According to the New China News Agency (NCNA) 1,512 delegates attended the Congress.

A communique made public on April 14 said that the Congress approved a political report submitted by the Vice-Chairman and Defence Minister, Marshal Lin Piao.

It also unanimously elected Mr. Mao Tse-tung as Chairman of the Presidium, approved Marshal Lin Piao as his chosen successor and named Mr. Chou En-lai the Congress Secretary-General.

NCNA reported that 400 million Chinese celebrated the Congress opening, 10 million of them in Shanghai alone. Messages of congratulations were reportedly received from all parts of the world.

The Ninth Congress, only the second held since the Communists won control of China, was at least eight years overdue (the Party constitution calls for a convention every five years.)

Leadership Line-up:

The leadership line-up as announced in the opening communique was basically unchanged since last Fall. Among the top 14 were most of the Maoist Cultural Revolution leaders, including the wives of both Mr. Mao Tse-tung and Marshal Lin Piao.

Of the 176 announced Presidium members, approximately one-third were from the military—an increase from the 20 per cent represented at the last Congress. Eleven of 13 military region commanders were listed on the Presidium.

Not present were the leading targets of the Cultural Revolution—former Chief of State Liu Shao-ch'i, Peking's Ex-Mayor Peng Chen, former General Secretary of the Central Committee Teng Hsiao-p'ing and purged Army Chief of Staff Lo Jui-ch'ing—plus various provincial Maoist "enemies."

However, among the participants were a number of Party veterans who were criticized during the Cultural Revolution. They included the Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi and Marshal Nieh Jung-chen, Chairman of the State Scientific and Technological Commission and manager of China's nuclear programme.

Among the ten "leading comrades" who reportedly mounted the rostrum with Mr. Mao and Marshal Lin Piao were Marshal Chu Teh and Mr. Tung Pi-wu. Mr. Tung is one of the three surviving founders of the Chinese Communist Party. The other two are Mr. Mao and Mr. Chang Kuo-t'ao. Mr. Chang broke with Mr. Mao in 1935, lived in Hong Kong for many years and moved to Canada late in 1968.

Previous Congresses:

Whereas the 1956 Congress was noteworthy for the widespread formal election of delegates from lower Party units, this time the delegates were "chosen through full democratic consultation by Party organizations at various levels and after extensively seeking the opinion of the broad masses."

But much happened in China during the 13 years between the Eighth and Ninth Congresses — particularly the Cultural Revolution which was apparently launched, among other reasons, to bring down his opponents.

The Eighth Congress (September, 1956) was attended by 1,021 delegates chosen on a geographic basis weighed in favour of urban areas. It expunged Mr. Mao's "thought" from the Party constitution which had been adopted 11 years earlier at the Seventh Congress.

Mr. Liu Shao-chi's speech to the Eighth Congress had significantly avoided all references to Mao-thought, indicated that Mr. Mao's guerrilla warfare ideas were outmoded and unnecessary, and emphasized that China's economy should be built on a gradual basis. His approach to domestic issues was the antithesis of Mr. Mao's drastic Great Leap Forward campaign.

The then Party General Secretary, Mr. Teng Hsiao-p'ing — one of many subsequent Cultural Revolution victims — had dwelt at length on the dangers of the personality cult, already an indulgence of the Maoists.

The Eighth Congress had concluded that the early period of the Chinese revolution and mass struggle had ended and that a new period of more orderly and regular procedures should begin. All of this was vigorously undone during the Cultural Revolution.

Mr. Mao's control of the Party was first legalized by the Seventh National Congress which met in Yenan from April 23 to June 11, 1945. It heard his report "On Coalition Government" in which he pointed out that the only way out of the Communists' problems at that time was a coalition government with the Nationalist Government. Negotiations towards that end later failed.

There were reportedly 547 delegates and 208 alternate delegates at the Seventh Congress in Yenan. They elected Mr. Mao Party Chairman; his domination of the Seventh Congress had been insured by a "Party rectification" campaign carried out between 1942 and 1944. A Central Committee of 44 regular and 33 alternate members was elected. A Party line was formulated and the Party constitution was revised "to follow Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thought as well as Marxism, for guidance in all work for the Chinese Communist Party."

The first six Party Congresses were all held prior to 1929 and before Mr. Mao had gained a dominant position.

The First Congress opened in Shanghai on July 1, 1921 and lasted five days. The 12 delegates, representing 57 Party members, were forced to adjourn to a hired boat on South Lake in Chekiang Province for security reasons. Representatives of the Communist International attended this Congress which elected Mr. Ch'en Tu-hsiu—in absentia—as Chairman. This Congress formally established the Party and discussed tasks, organization and structure. It stipulated that the Chinese Communist Party must become a disciplined fighting force on the lines of the Bolshevik Party of USSR.

The Second Congress, also held in Shanghai in July, 1922, was attended by between 12 and 20 delegates (available sources disagree) representing 123 Party members. That Congress discussed such matters as the Chinese revolution, anti-warlordism, labour reform and decided to join the Communist International. Mr. Ch'en Tu-hsiu was elected Politburo Chairman.

The Third Congress, in June, 1923, saw the election of Mr. Mao to the Central Executive Committee. Mr. Ch'en Tu-hsiu, as Politburo Chairman, remained the top man. Some 30 delegates reportedly attended the Congress in Canton.

The Fourth Congress met in Shanghai on January 22, 1925, reportedly attended by 70 delegates representing some 1,000 Party members. Mr. Mao did not attend. The Congress discussed the role of the working class in national revolution, amended the Party constitution and adopted resolutions concerning labour, peasants, women's rights and youth movements.

The Fifth Congress met in Hankow from April until May of 1927, 15 days after the Communists had been sharply suppressed in Shanghai and other cities by the KMT leader, Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. Some 100 delegates reportedly attended, representing about 60,000 Party members. Mr. Mao was there but, reportedly because of opposition from the Party leader, Mr. Ch'en Tu-hsiu, did not speak nor vote.

Mr. Ch'en was elected Secretary-General of the Central Committee. (Mr. Ch'en was replaced three months later, was expelled from the Party in 1929 and died near Chungkiang on May 28, 1942). Mr. Chou En-lai emerged at this 1927 Congress as a Central Committee and Politburo member and secretary of the Revolutionary Military Committee.

The Sixth Congress was held in Moscow between July and September, 1928 with 100 delegates attending. Although Mr. Mao was re-elected to the Central Committee, he was absent, leading guerrillas in the mountainous region between Hunan and Kiangsi provinces. Mr. Hsiang Chung-fa was elected Secretary-General. Mr. Chou En-lai attended and became head of the Organization Bureau. Mr. Liu Shao-ch'i, who was absent, was named head of the Labour Bureau.

The Communique:

The communique on the Ninth Congress, made public on April 14, was the first public announcement on the Congress since it began.

Peking Radio gave a few details of Mr. Mao's unpublished speech at the opening of the Congress. He was quoted as saying that "we hope this Congress will be one of unity and victory. After this Congress we hope we shall win still greater victories."

The NCNA said that the unanimous votes on the Party constitution and on Marshal Lin Piao's report were greeted by loud ovations and shouts of "Long live the great proletarian Cultural Revolution", "Long live the Communist Party of China", "Long live the invincible thought of Mao Tse-tung" and "Ten thousand lives to Chairman Mao".

During the debates, delegates said that the Ninth Congress had emerged as a great victory after 48 years of heroic struggles. This great victory had exposed the complete failure of the Right-wing and Left-wing opportunism of Mr. Chen Tu-hsiu, Mr. Wang Ming, and others who had greatly harmed the Chinese revolution. They said that the Party was more united than ever after overthrowing the bourgeois headquarters led by Mr. Liu Shao-chi.

The Congress instructed the secretariat of the Presidium to publish the texts of Marshal Lin Piao's report and of the Party statutes after incorporating amendments to these texts. NCNA said that the party statutes would provide "a brilliant demonstration of democratic centralism and the mass line of the Party."

Top Men Of Presidium:

Meanwhile, the following are the top 24 names of the 176-member Presidium of the Ninth Party Congress as announced by Peking:

Marshal Yeh Chien-ying—Member of Politburo; member of Military Commission.

Soviet Criticism:

Meanwhile, a commentary by Mr. Boris Kuznetsov broadcast by Moscow Radio said that the Ninth Party Congress in Peking was the secret funeral of the Chinese Communist Party.

The commentary said that Mr. Mao Tse-tung was keeping a stubborn silence over what was going on at the Congress which was "probably now taking place behind the deaf walls of the forbidden city (palace). All this bears witness to the fact that Maoists have staged a parody of a Congress and are genuinely afraid of publicity."

He said that some Peking shop windows were decorated with two dates—1921 and 1969—the years of convocation of the First and Ninth Congresses of the Chinese Communist Party, and added: "In Peking, they are saying ironically that these dates denote the period of existence of the Chinese Communist Party, since after the present so-called Congress it will cease its activity. The current Maoist rally is by its nature the secret funeral of the Chinese Communist Party."

Mr. Kuznetsov continued: ". . . . The recent period (in China) has been one of liquidation of the Chinese Communist Party as a Marxist-Leninist party."

He charged that Mr. Mao Tse-tung's group had subordinated all its actions to this aim: "to create a new organization which would include only those who have proved their blind faith in Mao and their dog-like devotion to his adventurist policy."

B. Hungarian Newsman Expelled: Mr. Karoly Patak, Peking correspondent of the Hungarian news agency MTI, was on April 21 ordered to leave China within three days.

Mr. Patak said he had been told by the Foreign Ministry Press Bureau that his work permit would not be renewed and that he was being asked to leave China because of disparaging references to the country in his despatches.

He was accused of having attacked the Ninth Congress of the Communist Party, Mr. Mao Tse-tung, Marshal Lin Piao, and other leaders.

Mr. Patak (38) had been in China since April, 1968, and worked as correspondent for the Hungarian daily Nepszabadsag as well as MTI.

A. Fourth Five-Year Plan Draft: The much delayed draft of the Fourth Five-Year Plan (1969-74) was placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on April 21.

The 350-page document, on which the Planning Commission had worked for over a year, spells out the approach, policy and outline of the Fourth Plan which, incidentally, was supposed to have gone into operation on April 1, 1969.

The outlays, according to the Commission, are "modest" but even with these outlays, it is hoped that the tempo of economic activity will be stepped up significantly in the initial years of the Plan. If the performance is better, the Plan outlays in later years could be larger than provided for now.

Thus, the Commission has not abandoned the idea of a bigger Plan, which has been the demand of a section of the Cabinet and the ruling party for achieving a higher rate of growth than that of 5.5 per cent envisaged in the draft document.

The prospect (of a bigger Plan) depends essentially on the extent of internal effort made in saving and investment and on the operational efficiency and economic discipline displayed by official and non-official agencies and establishments. In this context, the Commission has laid special emphasis on toning up the public sector.

With the existing constraints, the draft Plan says, only limited increase in public sector industrial activity has been proposed. The resources position has not improved; increasing the efficiency and profitability of public enterprises becomes thus an urgent necessity.

Of the total outlay of Rs. 24,398 crores envisaged for the Fourth Plan, the public sector outlay will amount to Rs. 14,398 crores, while the investment in the private sector is anticipated to be Rs. 10,000 crores. In the public sector, Rs. 12,252 crores has been provided for investment and Rs. 2,146 crores for current outlay. The total investment for the creation of productive assets will thus aggregate to Rs. 22,252 crores.

Of the total public sector outlay, Rs. 7,207 crores will be the outlay on Central schemes, Rs. 727 crores for Centrally-sponsored schemes, Rs. 6,066 crores in the States and Rs. 398 crores in the Union Territories.

The main aim of the Fourth Plan is to "accelerate the tempo of development in conditions of stability and reduced uncertainties." It is proposed to introduce safeguards against the fluctuations of agricultural production as well as uncertainties of foreign aid in the Plan period.

Together with programmes for increased agricultural production, the draft Plan provides for the building of sizeable buffer stocks to even out the supplies of foodgrains and other measures to stabilize foodgrain prices and the price level in general.

In regard to financing of the Plan, emphasis is being placed on additional mobilization of internal resources in a manner which will not give rise to inflationary pressures. The outlays on the Plan are proposed to be closely related to the possibility of raising resources in a non-inflationary way.

National self-reliance and growth with stability can be attended only if an additional effort is made at every level. Dependence on foreign aid will be greatly reduced in the course of the Plan. It is planned to do away with PL 480 imports at the end of the next two years. Foreign aid, minus debt charges and interest, will be reduced to about half by the end of the Plan compared to the current level.

Planned increases in production of foodgrains, raw materials and manufactured goods are calculated to make it possible to limit the growth of other imports to "manageable proportions." A sustained increase of exports by about seven per cent a year is another essential element of the Plan strategy to secure a balance on foreign account and approach speedily towards the goal of self-reliance. The idea is to maintain this rate of increase in exports in the Fifth Plan as well as to totally eliminate dependence on foreign aid by 1980-81.

The document lists the series of difficulties faced by the economy from the middle of the Third Plan onwards, but also enumerates the failures of Plan implementation in the past and their consequences.

Despite larger outlays, it points out, actual developments have fallen short of targets. In many key sectors, delays in construction, revision of cost estimates and the failure to utilize capacity fully have added to the difficulties.

Many of the projects undertaken in the public sector represent new and complex ventures and to an extent, initial difficulties are to be expected. But, even after allowing for this, the fact remains that the concern for speed, economy and efficiency has not been as pervasive as it ought to be. The public sector has the responsibility to set much higher standards of performance and it has yet to fulfil its role of generating adequate surpluses for investment.

As regards the organized private sector, there is an admission of a dilemma in the minds of the planners. The Plan document concedes that the largest corporate groups are the most advantageously placed to seek and obtain foreign collaboration and to expand or initiate a number of large and new activities. Therefore, acting through them may appear the "easiest and quickest way of industrial development." But, in the process, there is inevitably an increase in concentration of economic power.

The draft, therefore, says that it is clearly necessary to formulate and define firmly a policy in this matter which will seek "a reconciliation" between immediate gains and the declared long-term social objective of State policy of reducing social inequalities. While large corporate enterprises would have ample scope for taking up new ventures in technologically challenging fields, there is no reason to think that deliberate encouragement of wide dispersal of entrepreneurship and resources would have a retarding effect on development in the long term.

The draft makes it clear that a major part of the public outlays will have to be directed not towards welfare activity but towards strengthening the economic base of the weaker units; and more finance must be made available for this purpose in the Plan.

In the field of education, it merely proposes to make an attempt to fulfil the constitutional directive regarding the provision of free and compulsory education up to the age of 14 to the extent the resources of the States permit.

Prime Minister's Note:

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, tabled the draft along with a Note giving a brief resume of what transpired at the National Development Council.

She said that it was the Government's "earnest hope that the draft Plan will be discussed, in all its aspects, both in Parliament and in the country. The trend of the ensuing debate will be carefully noted by the Planning Commission and the Government."

The Note referred to the "general agreement" at the National Development Council that the outlay for the State sector should be enlarged and said that the Planning Commission would make "a re-assessment of resources on the basis of the report of the Finance Commission. After this report, the re-scheduling or rationalization of the liability of the States for re-payment of debts during the Plan period will also be considered.

"The Planning Commission will make the necessary recommendations regarding the adjustments that might be necessary, after further discussions with the State Governments and the Central Ministries.

"It is hoped that the Planning Commission will be able to report again to the National Development Council some time later this year."

The Note added that the draft Plan was approved by a majority in the National Development Council. It did not specify who expressed dissent, although it was known that Kerala and West Bengal did so.

It recalled the decision taken in December, 1967 by NDC to start the Fourth Plan from April 1, 1969 and said that after detailed discussions by the Planning Commission with the State Governments, Central Ministries and others, the draft Plan, as it emerged, was placed before the NDC meeting held in New Delhi on April 19 and 20.

Approach To Plan:

It says that the objective of national planning in India is not only to raise the national income or the per capita income but also to ensure that the benefit is evenly distributed, that disparities in income and living are not widened but in fact narrowed, and that the process of economic development does not lead to social tensions endangering the fabric of the democratic society.

This is the conclusive observation made in an exposition of the approach and policy to the Fourth Five-Year Plan for 1969-74.

These objectives can be achieved in part by seeing that, in the implementation of the programmes, the weakest are looked after first, and the benefits of development are made to flow by planned investment in the under-developed regions and among the more backward sections of the community. In part, this will be the result of purposeful policy decisions effectively pursued. Fiscal and other policies should prevent concentration of wealth, check ostentatious consumption and promote savings.

The programmes and policies of public financial and other institutions should ensure wider dispersal of benefits. Reforms in the educational system should help the growth of initiative and enterprise, make for horizontal and vertical mobility, open up wider opportunities for employment and enable the lowering of caste, class and regional barriers so that a purposeful change towards an egalitarian society can be brought about. In the last analysis, planned economic development should result in a more even distribution of benefits, a fuller life for an increasingly large number of people, and the building up of a strong integrated democratic nation.

Rapid economic development which is oriented towards establishing social justice must involve re-fashioning of socio-economic institutions. In part, the social objectives will be the end result of economic development, but, in a large measure, their realization will depend on how the course of development is charted and to what extent an appropriate structure of socio-economic institutions is evolved and operated.

The strengthening of democracy in its social and economic aspect has to be attained through this re-fashioning. It means that major economic decisions and decisions regarding socio-economic relationships will be made by agencies informed with social purpose, that there will be a devolution of functions and that were will be scope for experimentation. Democratic values are given effect to by encouraging the growth of a feeling of participation on the part of the small man, the promotion of enterprise among the disadvantaged classes and the creation of a sense of involvement in the transformation of society among all sections of the community.

The broad objectives of planning could thus be defined as rapid economic development accompanied by continuous progress towards equality and social justice and the establishment of a social and economic democracy.

The Plan document states that the process of development might lead, in the absence of purposive intervention by the State, to greater concentration of wealth and income, overgrowth of metropolitan centres and uneven regional development, technological unemployment and rural under-employment. Therefore, the attainment of objectives of equality and social justice requires more comprehensive planning and greater command of the Government over resources than has been attempted so far. Preventing increase in concentration of economic power is a part of this problem.

PLAN OUTLAYS:

Estimates Of Imports & Exports:

The projected value of imports in 1980-81 will be Rs. 2,809 crores, as compared with Rs. 2,550 crores in 1978-79 and Rs. 2,030 crores in 1973-74. The value of imports in 1967-68 was Rs. 2,059 crores.

The annual growth rate of export earnings in 1968-69 to 1980-81 will be of the order of seven per cent. The corresponding growth rates for the group of commodities during this period will be:

Group of commodities	Annual rate of growth (%) 1968-69 to 1980-81
Agriculture and allied products	6.6
Tea	2.5
All other products	8.5
Minerals	7.7
Iron-ore	9.4
Manufactures	7.3
Cotton textiles and jute manufactures	2.8
All other manufactures	9.5
Other exports—unspecified	5.6
Total exports	7.0

An analysis of exports and imports in the years 1978-79 to 1980-81 shows that the unfavourable balance of trade in 1968-69 will be reduced to nominal level in 1973-74, while in 1978-79 and in 1980-81 there will be a small favourable balance.

PUBLIC & PRIVATE SECTORS:

A total outlay of Rs. 24,398 crores is envisaged for the Fourth Plan. Of this, the public sector outlay will amount to Rs. 14,398 crores; while the investment in the private sector is anticipated to be Rs. 10,000 crores. In the public sector, Rs. 12,252 crores has been provided for investment and Rs. 2,146 crores for current outlay. The total investment for the creation of productive assets aggregates to Rs. 22,252 crores.

The total public sector outlay of Rs. 14,398 crores in the Fourth Plan includes Rs. 7,207 crores as outlay on Central schemes, Rs. 727 crores for the Centrally-sponsored schemes, Rs. 6,066 crores for the States and Rs. 398 crores for Union Territories.

The distribution of public sector outlays under major heads of development is as follows: (Rs. crores) agriculture and allied sectors (2217.5); power (2084.5); industry and minerals (3089.9); transport and communications (3165.1).

The following is a table showing outlay and investment in the Plan:

Industrial Development:

The industrial programmes and and policies for the Plan have been conceived keeping in view the need to correct imbalances in the industrial structure and to bring about conditions within which the maximum utilization of capacity already built up is achieved.

At the same time, conditions have to be brought about for a vigorous growth in industrial output and capacity without any undue burden on balance of payments.

According to it, the objectives of investments in the industrial fields are: (1) completing investment in relation to which commitments have already been made; (2) increasing existing capacities to levels required for present or future developments, in particular, providing for more adequate internal supplies of essentials in increasing demand or needed by import substitution or for export promotion; and (3) taking advantage of internal developments or availabilities to build new industries or new bases for industries. Policy in making these investments and otherwise, will be directed towards canalization of capital and personnel resources in such a way as to achieve as widespread an industrialization of the country as possible and to encourage the emergence of new entrepreneurship and greater dispersal in the ownership and control of industries.

The Industrial Policy Resolution of 1956 will continue to govern industrial development. This policy provides for a flexible approach in the development of industries within the public, private and co-operative sectors. The programmes in the public sector are related to high-priority fields to fill the gaps in the industrial structure. Expensive industries in which required development could be ordinarily expected to take place in the co-operative or private sector is not envisaged in the public sectors.

Both from the point of view of accelerating industrial development and improving administrative efficiency, the existing system of controls would need a review. The primary purpose of control is to ensure proper allocation of scarce resources. Regulation of industrial development has to be considered primarily in relation to the allocation of foreign exchange. Thus, import control and control on commodities in short supply would have to continue.

The Industrial Licensing Policy during the Fourth Plan is envisaged as follows:- (1) All basic and strategic industries involving significant investments or foreign exchange should be carefully planned and subjected to industrial licensing; (2) Industries requiring only marginal assistance by way of foreign exchange for capital equipment may be exempted from the need to secure industrial licences; for this purpose, the foreign exchange ceiling may be stipulated at about ten per cent of the total value of the capital equipment; and (3) Industries which do not call for foreign exchange for import of capital equipment or raw materials should be exempted from the requirements of industrial licensing.

It says that the Fourth Plan envisages an investment of approximately Rs. 5,200 crores in organized industry and mining—Rs. 2,800 crores in the public sector and Rs. 2,400 crores in the private and co-operative sectors. The outlay in the public sector would be Rs. 3,090 crores, since it includes a sum of Rs. 250 crores for transfer to private and co-operative sectors through financial institutions and an amount of Rs. 40 crores for supporting plantation programmes which have a bearing on export earnings and for State Industrial Development Corporations.

Of the total outlay of Rs. 3,090 crores in the public sector, Rs. 2,910 crores will be in the Central sector and Rs. 180 crores in States and Union Territories.

The major proportion of the outlay in the public sector is intended for the completion of projects already under implementation and projects on which investment decisions have been taken. New projects are envisaged in high-priority fields like fertilizers, . pesticides, petro-chemicals, non-ferrous metals, and development of iron-ore, pyrites and rock-phosphate resources. New investment in the engineering industries is limited to a few comparatively small projects for filling critical gaps.

Transport:

Transport has a crucial role in economic development.

A number of regional transport surveys and commodity studies were undertaken to make projects of transport requirements.

The total outlay on transport and communications in the public sector during the Fourth Plan is reckoned at Rs. 3,173 crores, including Rs. 2,650 crores in the Central sector and Rs. 523 crores in the Plans of States and Union Territories.

The distribution of the outlay between different programmes is as follows:

Resources:

The estimates of resources for the Fourth Plan, given in the draft Plan, show that aggregate resources of the Centre and the States will be Rs. 11,832 crores and Rs. 2,566 crores respectively, bringing the total resources to Rs. 14,393 crores. At 1968-69 rates of taxation, fare and freights and other services charges, the total budgetary resources of the Centre are estimated at Rs. 9,382 crores and of the States at Rs. 1,457 crores. The additional resource mobilization will be Rs. 1,600 crores at the Centre, net of States' share, and Rs. 1,109 crores in the States.

External assistance for the Fourth Plan, net of debt servicing (inclusion of interest payment), is estimated at Rs. 1,750 crores.

The scale of resources mobilization envisaged in financing the Plan will materialize only if appropriate policy decisions are taken well in time and various development programmes effectively implemented to secure the overall and sectoral rates of growth.

A summary of estimates of resources for the Fourth Plan is given below:

(Rs. Crores)

* The budgetary receipts are net of loan repayment only, interests payment having been allowed for in calculating the balance from current revenues.

Additional resources for the Fourth Plan are estimated at Rs. 2,700 crores. Of this, the State Governments have indicated their intention to raise about Rs. 1,100 crores. Rs. 1,600 crores are to be mobilized by the Central Government. This figure is net of the States' share of additional taxation ,at the Centre which may amount to Rs. 200 crores. The exact amount will depend upon the type and quantum of fresh taxes levied by the Centre from year to year. No credit has been taken for this amount in the States' resources as it is not clear at this stage if it will constitute a net addition to resources for the State Plans.

Firm estimates of private savings are not available. On a rough calculation, the private sector is expected to generate savings amounting to Rs. 13,900 crores during the Fourth Plan. The household and co-operative sectors will contribute Rs. 12,040 crores and the balance of Rs. 1,860 crores will be contributed by the corporate sector.

The Central and State Governments will draw on this pool of private saving, as much as Rs. 3,930 crores for the public sector Plan. Private savings thus available for private investment would amount to Rs. 9,960 crores. Adding to it the net amount of foreign funds directly flowing to the private sector, the total resources available for private investment would aggregate to Rs. 10,000 crores. The break-up of this total is:

Item	Fourth Plan investment (Rs. crores)
Private savings	13980
Corporate savings	1880
Household and co-operative savings	12040
Central and State Governments draft on private savings	3930
Private savings available for private investment (1-4)	9970
Gross loans and investment from abroad	300
Repayment of foreign loans	300
Total resources available for private investment (5-8)	10000

* Net of loan repayment only. Interest payments have been taken into account under item. . .5.

During the Fourth Five-Year Plan the economy will require total imports valued at about Rs. 9,630 crores. Of this Rs. 7,830 crores will be maintenance imports or imports of raw materials and components required for stepping up the rate of growth of industrial and agricultural production. These include imports of fertilizers, pesticides, crude oil, chemicals, non-ferrous metals, special varieties of steel and component and spare parts of machinery. Another Rs. 1,300 crores will be required to finance project imports or imports of plant and machinery for expansion or creation of additional capacity in selected lines which cannot be met from domestic sources of supply. The balance of Rs. 500 crores would be the cost of food imports during the first two years of the Plan. The estimate of project imports has been built on the assumption that the capital goods requirements for industrial expansion in the public and private sectors will be met by and large out of domestic production and only plants and machinery of more sophisticated kinds, not yet produced within the country, will be imported. With a diversified engineering capacity already built up in the country, it does not appear difficult to realize this objective.

Long-term Perspective:

The draft Plan says that one of the major purposes of having a long-term view of the country's economic development is to quantify the nature and magnitude of the tasks employed in the specified overall objectives.

On the basis of production targets for various sectors, judged after a careful examination to be feasible, the economy can achieve an average annual increase of about 5.5 per cent in total production during the Fourth Plan. However, aggregate income, and even more the per capita income likely to be achieved by 1973-74, will be below that visualized for that year in the long-term projections of the Third Five-Year Plan.

The set-backs of the recent past and the relatively slower growth likely in the next five years necessitate a re-assessment of the long-term growth as well. The objective should be, of course, to secure as rapid a development as is possible within the means available. However, the growth out-puts in the Fifth Plan is, to a considerable degree, determined by investments and the preparation for larger investment in the future undertaken between now and 1973-74. A steady acceleration of the growth rate must be aimed at, but it would be unrealistic to postulate a growth rate far in excess of what will be realized in the Fourth Plan.

Furthermore, the goal set for the period beyond 1973-74 must be of a magnitude which can be sustained with reasonable price stability and on the basis of progressive self-reliance. The long-term projections have to be based on a careful assessment of demographic prospects, the feasible growth in agricultural production, mobilization of internal savings, efficiency of investment, growth of exports and imports substitution. Taking all these considerations into account, a reasonable target of growth for the Fifth Plan and up to 1980-81 would be around 6 per cent per annum.

On the above basis, net domestic product (valued at 1967-68 prices) would reach Rs. 582 billion by 1980-81—that is, very nearly double the level attained in 1967-68. Since population would, in the meantime, have risen by about a third, per capita income in 1980-81 would be about 55 per cent higher than in 1967-68. With the revised perspective of long-term growth, the Third Plan targets of real income for 1975-76 will be reached only three to four years later.

It points out that the assumption of population growth is an important variable determining the rate of improvement in per capita income, and calls for some explanation. According to the Registrar-General's projections which form the basis of the calculations, total population would increase at the rate of around 2.5 per cent during the Fourth Plan; this rate would fall thereafter, reaching 1.7 per cent a year by 1980-81.

If population growth is brought down to 1.7 per cent by 1980-81 and averages 1.2 per cent in the subsequent 20 years, the population in 2000 A.D. (estimated at 870 million) will be 300 million less than what it would be if the present rate of growth continued unchecked.

National Income Projections From 1950-51 To 1980-81:

The long-term projections of growth of national income between 1969-70 and 1980-81 have been adjusted to the estimates of actual growth of national income in the First, Second and Third Five-Year Plans and in the three years of 1966-69.

Thus, in 1980-81, the adjusted projection of national income as shown in the Fourth Five-Year Plan Draft 1969-74 will be Rs. 342,200 crores. For 1973-74, the estimates are Rs. 225,700 crores and in 1967-68 Rs. 165,600 crores.

These adjusted figures are calculated on the basis of revised estimates of actual national income in the base year of each Plan, all reduced to the 1960-61 prices base and applying growth rates implied in projection of the corresponding Plans.

The movement of national income and out-put of agriculture and organized industry during the last eight years show that per capita real income in 1965-66 was about the same as it was in 1960-61, as results of the meagre growth rate of national income have been almost completely neutralized by the 2.5 per cent of growth in population.

In 1966-67, following a severe drought, national income registered only a nominal increase of 1.1 per cent. However, the record harvest of 1967-68, making a significant increase in agricultural output, was instrumental in raising national income by nine per cent that year. The estimated national income in 1968-69 has been put provisionally at three per cent higher than in the previous year, the rise in industrial production of six per cent making a contribution to it.

Plan Details:

It consists of 350 pages, with comprehensive tables of contents and indices, spread over 16 pages, for easy reference.

The number of tables in the document is 126. It contains 17 diagrams which visually present data on economic developments since 1960-61 as well as projections for 1973-74, 1978-79 and 1980-81.

It also includes a review of economic progress in the Third Five-Year Plan 1961-66 and in the Annual Plans, 1966-69.

It has 22 chapters. Of these, five on general topics are on approach and policy, long-term perspective, Plan in outline, financing the Plan and implementation.

The remaining chapters are on main heads of development, namely, agriculture, animal husbandry, fisheries and forests, co-operation and community development, food and nutrition, irrigation and flood control, power, village and small industries, industry and minerals, transport and communications, education and man-power, scientific research, health and family planning, regional development, housing and water supply, social welfare, welfare and development of backward classes, labour and employment, and other programmes.

In September, 1967, the Planning Commission was re-constituted. Its present composition is: Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Prime Minister, Chairman; Prof. D.R. Gadgil, Deputy Chairman; and Mr. Morarji R. Desai, Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister; Mr. R. Venkataraman, Mr. B. Venkatappiah, Mr. Pitambar Pant and Dr. B.D. Nag Choudhri as Members. Mr. B.D. Pande is Secretary to the Planning Commission.

Dr. D. R. Gadgil's Clarification:

The Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Dr. D. R. Gadgil, told newsmen on April 21 that the Government of India's interpretation of the NDC's directive on the re-assessment of Central and States' Plan was that any changes would have to be only marginal in nature. The respective quantum "may be changed a little here and there—no more".

He said that once the Finance Commission's report was available, the position regarding increases in the States' share of the Central taxes and the re-scheduling of their debts would become clear.

The Planning Commission and the Central Government would then be able to take a total view of the financial resources and make adjustments. The finalized Plan would be published before the end of the year. The States themselves would take a look at their resources at this stage to prepare themselves for the dialogue with the Commission.

On the question of the degree of commitment of various agencies to the basic policies and approach of the Plan draft, he said, the majority approval of the document at the NDC session implied that the Central Government, the Planning Commission and the majority of Chief Ministers had given their approval.

Asked how the majority support for the document was arrived at in the NDC, he said that when it was suggested that the draft be remitted to Parliament, some Chief Ministers said it would have to be done by majority. To his knowledge, only three members of the Council took up this stand.

With regard to the demand for the devolution of certain functions and outlays from the Centre to the States, he said, the actual suggestion was that the Centre need not have large Ministries in fields like agriculture, health and education, the main part of the work being passed on to the States. The Planning Commission was hardly the body to undertake this, but any saving accruing would come to it for allocation.

Asked what were the departures in approach in the Plan draft, he mentioned three: (1) more emphasis on economic stability, typified by the decision to build up buffer-stocks and a closer attention to food management in general; (2) a clear decision to end dependence on foreign aid as a planning goal; and (3) schemes for ending regional imbalances.

One of the important objectives built into the Plan was how to ameliorate the lot of the poor man. Apart from the anti-monopolies legislation pending in Parliament for checking concentration of wealth and restrictive trade practices, the National Credit Council had been asked to pay special attention to the needs of small entrepreneurs in industry and agriculture.

NDC Meeting On Plan:

The National Development Council decided on April 20 that the Draft Fourth Five-Year Plan (1969-74) should be placed before Parliament and the country. While there was some disagreement on the approach to the Plan, there was general agreement that the Planning Commission should re-assess the resources and examine the respective Plans of the Centre and the States to see if Central assistance to the States could be augmented.

It was agreed that the Planning Commission should complete this assessment by September-October, 1969 after the Award of the Finance Commission, when a view would also be possible on the re-scheduling of States' debts to the Centre.

B. Indian National Congress—72nd Annual Session: Addressing the 72nd session of the Indian National Congress in Faridabad (near Delhi) on April 27, its President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, accused the West Bengal and Kerala Governments of magnifying the Centre-State relations issue beyond all proportions in an attempt to divert public attention from the "real problem facing the people" and said that the demand of the States for increased financial assistance from the Centre could be settled across the table.

Mr. Nijalingappa admitted that the hopes of Congressmen about regaining the party's strength after the mid-term poll had been belied. He, however, rejected suggestions made in certain quarters that the Congress should think of coalition with other parties after the 1972 General Elections.

He said that the trend of success seen in Haryana after the Congress reverses in the 1967 General Elections had not been maintained in the recent mid-term polls in four States. "The idea that the people felt disgusted with the preformance of the United Fronts and would inevitably turn to the Congress has proved fallacious." If the Congress was to re-establish its former image, "there must be a shake-up at the organizational as well as administrative levels."

He deplored linguistic rivalries, communal passions and parochial tendencies in the country and called for a re-dedication, in this Gandhi Centenary Year, to the service of the people. "For the nation's interest is supreme. It must stand above personal or party interest."

He referred to the agitation in Telengana and said that the re-organization of States was done to bring about greater unity and cohesion among the people. "But language has not proved an effective binding force. I have often felt that linguistic States cannot lead to national integration and actually encourage disintegration. We should do away with these linguistic States and re-organize the country on an essentially economic basis."

He referred to the measures proposed by the Central Government to ensure justice to the people of Telengana and said: "I appeal to Congressmen and others in Telengana to realize the dangers of demanding separate Statehood for Telengana. Similar demands would be made all over the country and its unity and integrity would be threatened."

He deprecated communal riots in certain parts of the country last year and said that the National Integration Council had made certain proposals to inspire confidence among the minorities. His own suggestion in this respect was that the composition of the police force in big cosmopolitan areas should fully reflect the composition of the population. This step should be taken so that "the minorities would not feel helpless before the majority community in an emergency."

He expressed "deep pain and consternation at the recent atrocities committed by the Shiv Sena in Bombay." There were heartening events, too. Parliament's decision to grant greater autonomy to the hill districts of Assam brought to an end the long-drawn agitation there. Naga extremists had been isolated and the moderate section was showing readiness to consider a solution to the problem within the frame-work of the Indian Union.

He told the delegates that in the 16 months since his address to them at Hyderabad, many developments had taken place that "cause concern not only to our party but also to the country." He referred to speculation about the situation in the country after the 1972 General Elections if the present anti-Congress trend was not reversed. There would be confusion if the Congress did not secure a majority at the Centre, particularly when there was no other party to take its place, and there would be political adjustments leading to instability. It was the responsibility of Congressmen to avert such a situation.

He deprecated the impression sought to be created by "interested parties" that the Congress was disintegrating and that it should think of coalition with other parties after the 1972 elections. He did not appreciate the approach. If coalitions became inevitable, they could be considered at the appropriate time. The difficulty, however, was to determine the "likeminded parties" with which the Congress could form coalition. The results of the mid-term poll had shown that "while other parties which believe in democracy are not gaining any strength, the Congress has not only retained its strength, but even added to it because of the hard work Congress workers have done among the masses."

He regretted the weakening of discipline in the party as was seen by the levelling of charges against leaders publicly and in Parliament. He felt that when allegations were made against a Congressman by high or low, every attempt should be made by the organization to find out the truth.

Though there was much to be remedied within the Congress, he said, the record of administration by "non-democratic parties" which headed Governments in Kerala and West Bengal was dismal. "There is widespread feeling that people's properties and lives have not been safe in those States." The Kerala and West Bengal Governments had greatly exaggerated the issue of Centre-State relations. The United Front Governments functioning in Tamil Nadu, Orissa and Punjab, and those that had existed before the mid-term poll in UP., Bihar and Madhya Pradesh, had never raised a hue and cry about the issue. What did the Kerala and West Bengal Governments want to do which the Constitution prohibited and which the Central Government impeded? Since they enjoyed comfortable majorities in the State Assemblies they could pass any legislative measure to implement their election pledges. "Why don't they adopt this straightforward course? Or do they fear that extremist policies, if sought to be implemented, would strain the unity of the United Front and create tensions within? So, they resort to extra-constitutional methods, bypassing the administration and ignoring the existing laws of the land. It is this adventure into lawlessness that brings the State Government into clash with the Centre. The Central Government cannot abdicate its responsibility for the preservation of the unity of the country. Subversion to suit foreign interests of any description cannot be tolerated."

The Central Government, he said, should continue to be strong. "A weak Centre would mean disintegration of the country."

Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Views On Public Sector:

A conflicting approach by Mr. S. Nijalingappa and the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi on the role of the public sector was the highlight of the session on April 27.

In his address, Mr. Nijalingappa had deplored the losses in the public sector and their "bad management" and said that "there is a case for reviewing this public sector attempt at establishing large-scale industries."

He had added: "Simply because an industry is in the public sector, it does not mean that we should be saddled with losses and be content with whatever is produced."

Mrs. Gandhi's speech, made within a few minutes of Mr. Nijalingappa's address, was a sharp retort to the observations made by him.

Mrs. Gandhi said that heavy industries had to be set up in the public sector not only because private entrepreneurs were not interested in projects of long gestation periods but also because such large undertakings should not be entrusted to individuals.

In a challenging mood, she asked whether a probe into the affairs of the private sector, which enjoyed immunity from any accountability to the public or Parliament, would lead to flattering conclusions.

She defended the heavy outlays made for the building up of the public sector including defence industries after the Chinese invasion with a view to achieving maximum self-reliance and said that the validity of this decision had been amply demonstrated by the glorious performance of armed forces during the conflict with Pakistan. Without the development of heavy industry, it was not possible for a country like India to make an economic breakthrough.

She also rejected the arguments that heavy industrial units could have been entrusted to the private sector and the resources of the Government deployed in other schemes.

Mr. S. Nijalingappa's Clarification:

Next day (April 28), in his concluding remarks to the session, Mr. Nijalingappa sought to dispel the impression that he was going against the basic policies of the Congress. "'I am a socialist to the core'", he said firmly, "but I am an Indian socialist, not of any other brand".

He denied that he favoured perpetuation of monopolies or the private sector and cited as an example his request for a licence to manufacture cars when he was Chief Minister of Mysore. This was meant to break the monopoly of the car manufacturers and he was certain a car could have been made in his State at the cost of Rs. 8,000 or so. "But I was not given the opportunity".

He also said he had no particular love for the private sector. If the private sector did not behave, the Government could always nationalize industries. But, at the same time, he did not think that large units should be started in the public sector merely to suit Socialist slogans. If they were not profitable or needed—many were working below capacity, he pointed out—they should not be put up.

Motion On Political Situation:

The session ended on April 28 after adopting the only motion placed before it—the report of the panel on the political situation which ruled out coalitions, expressed itself against any amendment of the Constitution for a re-distribution of power between the Centre and the States and rejected suggestions for a polarization of the party on the basis of "right" and "left."

The panel's report had summed up the opinion in the panel thus: "The defeatist talk of the Congress losing its absolute majority at the Centre was deplored". Mr. C. Subramaniam wanted the word "deplored" to be substituted by "criticized."

On the other hand, the committee members, without exception, re-inforced their disapproval of such counsels of despair.

It based its confidence on its optimistic assessment of the Congress performance in the mid-term polls—it agreed with the panel consensus that "the results cannot be interpreted as rejection of the Congress policies and programmes". Similarly, the panel view that attempts to pull the party either to the "right" or "left" would disrupt the party found ready acceptance.

Defections and Centre-State relations were the other important points listed in the report. While endorsing the panel's plea for early implementation of the Defection Committee's report, it sought to commit the Congress to a unilateral resolve not to be soft towards defectors.

On Centre-State relations, the view to encourage a dialogue between the Centre and States in order to further general welfare was endorsed and so was the qualification in the division of powers and functions incorporated in the Constitution. The Constitution, as it is, is flexible enough to provide a wide scope for such adjustments as may become necessary from time to time.

But such changes, it cautioned, should not be allowed to weaken the Central authority which was essential for the integration, defence and development of the nation. A dialogue with the States, however, should be encouraged, in order to meet the requirements of their economic development and the removal of regional imbalances.

It coined a new phrase—"the politics of commitment"—to reiterate the urgent necessity of implementing the 10-point programme and the land legislation. "It is only by an active implementation of our policies that the Congress party will succeed in strengthening its mass base and spearheading the urges and aspirations of our people."

It referred to the talk of coalition and polarization thus: "The panel took note of the views expressed regarding polarization within the Congress and in the country and the possibility of coalitions. It was of the firm view that the Congress ideology of democratic socialism was the only way in which the nation could make rapid progress, and that any attempt at polarization and splitting the party on the basis of extreme Right or Left ideologies would be a disruptive process and this would not only weaken the party but also hinder the political and economic development of the country. In this context the defeatist talk of the Congress losing its absolute majority at the Centre in 1972 was deplored, and it was felt that the party should make a determined effort to implement its declared policy and programme so that, by strengthening its mass base, it can in fact emerge even stronger after the next General Election."

Reports On Ten-Point Programme: In their reports presented to the Congress Working Committee on April 24, various Central Ministers claimed that they had taken effective steps to implement the Ten-Point Programme—Mr. Morarji Desai in regard to the social control of banks, Mr. B. R. Bhagat about the gradual take-over of the export trade, Mr. Jagjivan Ram about the State trading in grain and tenancy reforms, Mr. Y. B. Chavan on Privy Purses and Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed on monopolies.

Mr. Desai justified his preference for social control over insurance companies instead of nationalization as recommended in the Ten-Point Programme.

In his report, Mr. Y. B. Chavan did not make any such claim about the abolition of privy purses and privileges, but, he said that the Government had under consideration proposals for legislation and also a scheme for payment of transitional allowances in lieu of the privy purses and abolition of most of the privileges. A decision would be taken after conclusion of the talks with the Princes which were being conducted "by him and the Deputy Prime Minister."

Mr. Morarji Desai outlined the steps he had taken so far to bring the banks under social control—including the formation of the National Credit Council, amendments to the Banking Regulation Act to eliminate "the dominant position, authority and influence" of the big business and industrial groups. It was clear, he said, that "effective steps have been taken for the implementation of the social control policy. The measures which are in various stages of implementation will lead to a more effective budgeting and planning of credit which in the ultimate analysis is the fundamental of the social control policy".

As regards general insurance, Mr. Desai explained why the Government preferred social control to nationalization (as envisaged in the Ten-Point Programme). The Government examination showed, he said, that "contrary to the general belief, nationalization would not help in gathering any significant resources for the Plans."

Mr. Desai referred to the mistaken belief that life and general insurance were similar. Actually, general insurance funds were small, a mere Rs. 37 crores against a life fund of Rs. 1,224 crores of the LIC, the annual accretion being respectively Rs. 6 crores and Rs. 146 crores. Nor did general insurance funds give rise to concentration of economic power. They were not credit institutions and, in fact, general insurance companies were seekers of patronage. The examination also revealed that nationalization, apart from having no significant advantages, was likely to bring in its wake a host of problems.

Explaining why the Government did not decide in favour of nationalization of banks, he said: "The objective of the social control scheme is to secure a better alignment of the credit policy of the commercial banking system to the varied credit needs of the economy in accordance with the relative Plan priorities. The essential idea was that a co-ordinated view should be taken of the credit requirements of the economy and concerted measures put through for a more purposive and equitable distribution of available credit and for a more effective mobilization of savings through the banking system.

The Note submitted by Mr. B. R. Bhagat gave details of the commodity-wise progress in State trading in imports and exports. The main technique followed to facilitate the role of the public sector in foreign trade, he said, would be to give a monopoly to such agencies as the State Trading Corporation and the Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation. A committee had been appointed to review the trading technique and organization structure of STC.

On the progress of implementation of tenancy reforms, Mr Jagjivan Ram explained the lack of any significant advance in these words: "Land reforms being a State subject, the main responsibilities for enactment of legislation and its implementation lies with the State Governments. The Government of India can only advise and assist the States in formulating their programmes and in carrying them out. The proposals set out in the successive Plans which are in the nature of a broad common approach are to be adopted and pursued by each State with due regard to local conditions and in response to local needs. Due to various reasons, the progress made in the implementation of land policy has not been uniform".

On State trading in foodgrains, he said: "State trading with an elaborate machinery for procurement and an elaborate system of public distribution, to ensure equitable distribution of available supplies of grain has been in force for many years. The Food Corporation of India was set up to secure a commanding position in the grain trade by an Act of Parliament on January 1, 1965. Ever since the setting up of the Food Corporation of India, State trading in grain has been intensified both in terms of internal procurement and public distribution system."

Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Central Minister for Industrial Development, in his Note on regulated resources of monopolies said that the Government was "quite vigilant" to check the growth of monopolies in the country and outlined the various steps taken by the Government to check monopolistic tendencies.

The Note said that with the rapid pace of industrial development in India since Independence, the question had been frequently asked whether this progress had led to the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. "In fact this question was posed before Parliament by India's first Prime Minister, Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru, as early as in 1960." It had been the policy of the Government to ensure, through fiscal as also various other measures, that there was no concentration of economic power to the common detriment and that monopolies were regulated in public interest.

General Secretaries' Report:

In their report to the Congress, the General Secretaries urged the party's leaders to give serious thought to the question of coalition Governments.

There had been much fresh thinking on the "advisability, necessity, even the inevitability" of more coalition Governments, and the Congress had not yet given adequate thought to the subject.

The aim of the party was the preservation and continuation of democracy and "if, in the process, it is inevitable that coalitions will be a growing feature of our political life we should be ready to face up to its implications."

The report referred to the results of the recent mid-term polls and said that they "have not been satisfactory or in conformity with our legitimate expectations." Particularly in West Bengal, "the results when announced were a surprise to us.'"

In analysing the results and the causes of the Congress debacle, it pointed to the increase in the percentage of votes won by the party and the surprising fall in the actual number of seats won by it. One of the main reasons for this, as in the case of Kerala, was the effective combination of the non-Congress parties. "The mid-term poll in West Bengal made it clear that by and large people voted either for the candidates of the Front or the Congress. The parties which sought to establish a third force were just wiped out."

Calling for a close analysis of the working of the programmes and policies of the party, it asked the Congress to address itself to the problems of the whole generation of new voters, young men and women, "their aspirations and anxieties, their sceptical frame of mind and their uneasy search for the meaning of life". The need for such a close analysis had been heightened by the results of the General Elections and mid-term polls.

It reviewed the working of the coalitions and the minority Governments and said this was unsatisfactory because these consisted of elements with different outlooks and programmes. The minority Governments in Bihar and Punjab had been particularly big failures; they had developed irresponsible attitudes and administrative standards had fallen. "Such uneasy and precarious arrangements cannot last long. This is one important lesson the Congress has learnt from the functioning of minority Ministries."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Increase In Soviet Offensive Missile Capability: The US President, Mr. Richard Nixon, said in Washington on April 18 that Soviet offensive missile capability was estimated to be 60 per cent higher than what it was two years ago.

Soviet submarine missile strength was also 60 per cent greater than then.

He gave these figures to justify his decision to deploy a limited anti-ballistic missile system—a decision which had been strongly criticized in Congress and elsewhere.

The new intelligence estimate of Soviet offensive capability, he said, had been made since President Johnson decided in 1967 to deploy a "thin" anti-ballistic missile system. The Johnson Administration decision was reviewed earlier this year by President Nixon who ordered a new but more limited deployment, known as the safeguard system.

Mr. Nixon declared that this decision was essential for national security and to avoid USA becoming a second class Power or inferior to the Soviet Union in missile strength.

He said he was puzzled as to why the Soviet Union was heavily building up its arsenal of offensive weapons. He said that if USA did not take counter-measures, the Soviet Union in a few years would be "substantially ahead of the USA in overall capacity. We cannot allow that to happen."

The USA no longer had the weapons superiority over the Russians it once had, and there was no longer any necessity for it. But USA must be able to negotiate from strength and the President's bargaining position must be maintained.

B. Rice Surplus: According to FAO reports, most of rice-growing Asia, after experiencing crop failures and critical shortages in 1966 and 1967, has either attained self-sufficiency or is enjoying surpluses.

FAO reported a record production of 183 million tons of rice in 1968 and attributed the bumper harvests to improved farming techniques, including the widespread cultivation of high-yielding varieties in Asia.

The Philippines, for instance, transformed itself from an importer to an exporter of rice in 1968. Two perennial importers, Indonesia and Viet-Nam, reported increased harvests and may be heading towards self-sufficiency in the next few years.

Upward rice production was reported in Pakistan, Ceylon, Malaysia and India despite adverse weather conditions. The main rice-exporting nations of Burma, Cambodia, Formosa and Thailand remained the primary rice bowls of Asia.

China,though beset by internal turmoil, was reported to have maintained its 1968 production to the level of the big 1967 harvest.

Mr. Teofilo Azada, executive director of the Rice and Corn Production Co-ordinating Council and chairman of an FAO study group on rice which met in Manila in the last week of March, summed up the situation: "Sudden abundance, however, spawns a new set of problems and I do not only mean the multiplied problem of inadequate facilities for grain storage, processing and marketing. Countries aiming only at self-sufficiency in the beginning find that their unexpected surpluses mean an inevitable entry into the sensitive field of international rice trade just to be able to market such surpluses."

INDIA

A. Finance Bill Passed—Excise Duty Concessions: Introducing the Finance Bill in the Lok Sabha on April 29, the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, announced excise duty concessions totalling Rs. 5.09 crores.

The proposed duty on power-driven pumps was dropped completely "in the interests of the small agriculturists", but the duty on fertilizers would stay.

Mr. Desai announced concessions covering certain cheaper varieties of cotton fabrics, rayon and cement. He also allowed exemption from the proposed Agricultural Wealth Tax for agricultural land valued up to Rs. 1,50,000.

There was approval when he announced his intention to reduce the postage charges for newspapers weighing up to 60 grammes from five paise to two paise. There were shouts of disapproval when in the next breath he announced an increase in the registration fees for postal articles from 70 paise to 75 paise.

He said that the proposal to include in the net wealth of individuals and Hindu undivided families the value of agricultural tax for subjecting it to Wealth Tax at current rates had been carefully examined in the light of criticism and suggestions made by members. He had considered various alternative proposals for exempting "genuine agriculturists" and had also gone into the constitutional validity of the proposed tax. Finally he had decided to provide separate examption for agricultural lands up to a value of Rs. 1,50,000. The exemption would be in addition to the existing general exemption from Wealth Tax on the first Rs. 1,00,000 for individuals and Rs. 2,00,000 for Hindu undivided families. Thus a farmer who owned agricultural land worth Rs. 2,50,000 and did not have any non-agricultural investment or property would be outside the scope of the levy. For Hindu undivided families, Wealth Tax would not be payable unless the wealth exceeded Rs. 3,50,000. The exemption limit for agricultural land would be reduced to the extent exemption was given for urban residential houses.

He announced relief for cottage and small industries engaged in prepared and preserved food products. These would cover units with an annual production of the value of Rs. 50,000.

The Bill was later passed.

Attorney- General's Opinion On Agricultural Wealth Tax Levy:

The Attorney-General of India, Mr. Niren De, was called to the Lok Sabha to give his views on the Agricultural Wealth Tax Levy and he explained that under the residuary powers conferred on Parliament by the Constitution, it had the power to levy wealth tax on agricultural land.

He made a distinction between "tax on agricultural land" and "tax on capital value of agricultural land" and said that this distinction was a "vital" one.

Citing examples, he said a tax on goods was not the same thing as tax on the sale of goods, nor was a tax on a profession the same thing as tax on income from the profession.

After making this distinction, he pointed out that Entry 86 in the Union List specifically prohibited Parliament from levying a tax on the capital value of agricultural land. Entry 49 in the State List mentioned only "taxes on land and buildings", and it was arguable whether this included taxes on capital value of land. If the distinction he made earlier was accepted, then it followed that the States also could not levy a tax on the capital value of land, since the list mentioned only "tax on land".

Thus, if under Entry 86, Parliament could not levy wealth tax on agricultural land and it also did not come in the State sphere, then the power to legislate on the proposed measure could not hang in the air. This power had to be found in the Constitution itself.

Federal Constitutions such as India's always included a provision regarding residuary powers to cover matters not specially provided for. This power was contained in Article 248 of the Constitution, which the Attorney-General read out.

[The Article regarding residuary powers reads: "Parliament has exclusive power to make any law with respect to any matter not enumerated in the Concurrent List or State List. Such power shall include the power of making any law imposing a tax not mentioned in either of those Lists".]

Mr. De explained that the purpose of Article 248 was to provide a "safety valve" to meet a situation where the subject matter of legislation did not occur in any of the Lists.

B. Gold Control Act Sections Declared Unconstitutional By Supreme Court: The Supreme Court on April 30 declared unconstitutional some Sections of the Gold Control Act and directed the Union of India not to implement them. It held, however, that Parliament was competent to pass the Act.

The Sections declared unconstitutional were 5(2)b, 27(6), 27(2)d, 32, 46, 88 and 100.

The main findings of the Court, on petitions filed by Mr. Harakchand Ratanchand Banthia and others, were:

The power of regulation conferred on the Administrator appointed under the Act under Section 5(2)b suffered from excessive delegation of legislative power. The provision was, therefore, unconstitutional.

Section 27 (2)d, which empowered the Administrator to impose different conditions on different classes of dealers must be struck down as it placed an unreasonable restriction on the right to carry on business as guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution.

The limits regarding the amount of gold which could be held by artisans as provided in Sections 32 and 46 were rendered meaningless by the other provisions of the Act and, therefore, constituted an unreasonable restriction on the right to carry on trade. They violated Article 19 (1) and were unconstitutional.

Section 88 of the Act, which imposed a liability on the dealer for the acts of his employees, was unreasonable and was, therefore, invalid.

The provisions of Section 100 requiring a dealer to satisfy himself as to the identity of the person from whom he purchased gold imposed an unreasonable restriction and must be struck down.

The provisions of the Act on licensing of dealers and certification of goldsmiths were not discriminatory or violative of the equal protection of law guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution and Sections 27 and 30 could not be assailed on this ground.

The Court observed that the provisions of the Act which were struck down could not affect the validity of the Act as a whole. The provisions held to be invalid were not inextricably bound with the remaining provisions which could stand by themselves.

[The Gold Control Act was passed by Parliament in 1968. Its aim was to provide for the control of the production, manufacture, supply, distribution, use and possession of and business in gold ornaments and articles of gold. The reason for its enactment was that large quantities of gold were being smuggled into India, causing a loss of over Rs. 100 crores annually by way of Customs duty, etc. To limit these clandestine operations, the Government felt it was necessary to reduce the internal demand and take other measures].

C. Fall In Value Of Rupee: The value of the rupee fell by 33 per cent within four years, according to figures released in New Delhi on April 25 by the Central Statistical Organization.

Thus, in spite of the sharp increase during 1967-68, per capita income at 1960-61 prices came down from Rs. 333 in 1964-65—the highest point reached so far—to Rs. 321 per annum in 1967-68.

At current prices, however, per capita income continued to make impressive gains from year to year.

According to the study, per capita income at 1960-61 prices was almost the same (Rs. 320) in 1963-64 and 1967-68. But, at current prices it rose by about 50 per cent from Rs. 367 in 1963-64 to Rs. 543 in 1967-68.

Per capita income increased by 6.2 per cent and national income by 8.9 per cent during 1967-68.

The figures, which were still provisional, showed, however, that there was a decline of 1.6 per cent and 7.9 per cent respectively in per capita income in the two preceding years.

D. International Airports Committee's Report: The setting up of a commercially-oriented autonomous corporation for management of the four international airports in Delhi, Calcutta, Bombay and Madras has been recommended by the International Airports Committee headed by Mr. J.R.D. Tata.

The report of the Committee was placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on April 24 by the Minister for Tourism and Civil Aviation, Dr. Karan Singh.

In the opinion of the Committee, such a corporation should be created under the Indian Companies' Act and all the assets of the four international airports placed under its ownership and management.

Aeronautical communication and air traffic facilities and weather forecasting services should, however, continue to be provided by the Director-General of Civil Aviation and Director-General of Observatories, respectively.

The Committee felt that only a commercially-oriented organization, with sufficient autonomy in financial matters, and unfettered by Government procedures, could provide the special expertise and speed for the efficient management and development of the four international airports.

The Committee's recommendations for development and modification of the four airports would involve an expenditure of Rs. 106 crores, phased over a period of 15 years.

The expenditure was phased over three five-year periods corresponding to the Five-Year Plan periods. The first phase to be completed by 1974 involved an expenditure of Rs. 63.56 crores. The second phase would be completed by 1979 with an expenditure of Rs. 35.54 crores and the balance of Rs. 7.02 crores would spill over to the third phase going beyond 1979.

The phased programme covered development of runways, taxi-ways, apron and allied services at a cost of Rs. 61.96 crores and construction of terminal buildings and buildings for ancillary services involving an expenditure of Rs. 30.66 crores.

The balance of Rs. 14.10 crores was for improvement of navigational facilities such as instrument landing system, surveillance radars, point-to-point, ground-to-air and air-to-ground communication etc. up to 1974.

In the matter of terminal buildings, the Committee envisaged the development of an entirely new terminal complex for both domestic and international passengers at Palam and a similar complex at Madras.

A new terminal complex for international passengers would be developed at Santa Cruz on the basis that when international operations move to the new wing, the existing terminal building be used exclusively for domestic operations.

At Dum Dum, a domestic block would be constructed alongside the international block now under completion.

The Committee recommended higher priorities for works at Santa Cruz and Palam where the traffic growth had been very high.

E. Chinese Ultimatum Across Nathu La: The Chinese troops across Nathu La gave ultimatum twice in the third week of April to the Indian security forces stationed there asking the latter to vacate the area.

On April 23, the Chinese troops told their Indian counterparts through loudspeakers that they should quit the area by noon the next day. Otherwise, the Chinese said they would open fire.

According to a Defence Ministry spokesman, the warning was repeated on April 24. But Indian security forces continued their vigil as usual and advised the Chinese not to resort to any rash action.

As soon as the Government received the report from Nathu La about the ultimatum, the Chinese Charge d'Affaires in New Delhi was summoned to the External Affairs Ministry and was sternly warned that if the Chinese troops did anything, the Indian jawans would not keep quiet. The Charge d'Affaires was reported to have said that the Chinese troops had strict instructions not to open fire unless provoked.

Although the ultimatum expired at noon on April 24, the Chinese did not do anything. The situation at Nathu La continued to remain normal.

This incident came 16 months after the clash in September, 1967 when Indians and the Chinese exchanged artillery and mortar fire for four days, resulting in casualties on both sides. There was a clash on October 1, 1967 at Cho La. Earlier, in September, 1965 during the Indo-Pak operations, the Chinese had given an ultimatum to India to demolish certain Indian structures at Nathu La, alleging that they were on the Chinese side of the border.

F. Assam Hill Districts—Constitution Amendment Bill Passed: On April 15, the Lok Sabha adopted the Constitution (22nd Amendment Bill 1969) which will enable Parliament to adopt legislation to confer the status of an autonomous State on the hill districts of Assam within that State.

As many as 369 members belonging to the Congress and the Opposition voted for the Bill, while 28 Jana Sangh members and some Independents voted against it.

On April 30, the Rajya Sabha passed the Bill by 181 votes in favour and 7 against.

Now, the Bill will have to be ratified by at least nine State Legislatures before the Government brings up in Parliament another Bill for constituting the autonomous State.

I. Rise In National Income: An official in New Delhi on April 25 stated that an increase of 8.9 per cent in the national income in 1967-68 over the previous year at the 1960-61 price level had been registered.

The increase, according to the Department of Statistics, Cabinet Secretariat, was mainly attributable to the recovery in agriculture from the setback during the years of drought.

The income from agriculture showed an increase of 19 per cent over 1966-67, but the income in the industrial group showed only a marginal rise as a result of the recession.

The "camp commandant" was flown to Delhi for interrogation.

L. Rise In Literacy: According to the Central Education Ministry on April 21, some 34.9 crores of Indians were illiterate even though literacy had increased from 17 per cent in 1951 to 33 per cent in 1968-69.

The widening of the gulf between literates and illiterates was attributed to increase in population.

The position in regard to literacy among women and in rural areas, it said, was depressing. It felt that any postponement of the date of liquidation of illiteracy beyond the period of 10 to 15 years may aggravate the problem.

Universities and colleges, it said, had to play an important role in mobilizing the resources of the educated people in this national task of eradication of illiteracy. Unless this fundamental social responsibility was recognized, accepted and given effect to, there was no hope of eradicating adult illiteracy in the near future. It should be now possible for educational institutions to take up the programme of initial literacy through the national service programme.

M. Jana Sangh's Annual Session: The 15th annual session of Bharatiya Jana Sangh was held in Bombay for three days on April 26, 27 and 28.

In his Presidential address, Mr. Atal Behari Vajpayee demanded that the President of India should seek the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Governor's discretionary powers in order to put the Centre-State relations on an even keel.

He also suggested that a Parliamentary Committee should spell out guidelines on how a Governor should conduct himself in situations "not strictly governed by the law."

He pleaded for the setting up of an Inter-State Council to provide a forum for objective assessment of issues arising between the Centre and States. This alone would help in the long run to strengthen national unity.

Mr. Vajpayee re-iterated the suggestion made by his predecessor, Mr. Deendayal Upadhyaya (in Calicut) that Governors should be selected in the order of priority from a list of retired Supreme Court judges. Perhaps, the choice might be extended beyond the judiciary. The essence of the suggestion was that arbitrariness and partisanship in the matter of nominations to this office should be eliminated.

In a comprehensive review of the political and economic situation in the country, Mr. Vajpayee said that the three Five-Year Plans, far from removing regional disparities, had actually accentuated them. Regions relatively better off had become more prosperous, while backward ones were sinking into poverty. If the situation was not remedied early, the consequences would be serious.

He declared that the results of the recent mid-term elections had proved that the party's contact with the people had become feebler. He wanted his partymen to realize that the main reason for the setback was organizational. The decline of the Congress and the failure of any other national party to emerge as a clear alternative had created a climate of instability and uncertainty.

Emphasizing the need for a strong Centre, he said that the Constitution was federal in structure, but unitary in substance. While his party would be happy if the structure was also made unitary and the nomenclature of "Union" and "State" changed to "State" and "Province", it was imperative that the Constitution's unitary content should be zealously safeguarded. For this reason, the Jana Sangh was opposed to the augmentation of political autonomy now enjoyed by States.

Turning to the economic situation in the country, he stressed the urgent need to achieve self-sufficiency in food. Otherwise, it would not be possible to realize the aim of balanced growth. Installation of an additional pump in each village and bringing 181.3 million hectares of uncultivated arable land under plough were some of the measures he suggested to increase production.

Resolutions:

On April 27, the session adopted a resolution on internal situation modified by the party's Working Committee in deference to the feelings expressed by members.

A major change in the resolution was that the demand for the appointment of a second States Re-organization Commission was given up and in its place a high-power Experts Commission was proposed to inquire into regional imbalances.

The amendment also suggested that the proposed Commission should review the Constitution so as to make it unitary not only in content but in structure as well.

In another resolution, it called for the re-orientation of the Government's labour policy to ensure smooth and healthy industrial relations and "a fair deal to the toiling masses."

Of particular interest was the demand for the extension of the Minimum Wages Act to all agricultural workers and strict adherence to the principle of "no retrenchment without alternative employment before conceiving any schemes for rationalization, mechanization or automation and guarantee of job security."

In a third resolution, it rejected the policy of non-alignment in foreign affairs as totally irrelevant to the fast-changing world situation and advocated an independent foreign policy to subserve wider national interests with emphasis on bilateral relations on the basis of reciprocity and mutuality of interests. In its view, India should make increasing efforts to find reliable friends and allies against China and Pakistan which threatened the territorial integrity and security of India.

General Secretary's Report:

The General Secretary of Jana Sangh, Mr. S. S. Bhandari, in his annual report said that the Government of India, by conceding the demand for the creation of a hill State within the State of Assam, had made a beginning towards the Balkanization of India and the country's integrity was in danger.

He said that with the amendment of the Constitution for the formation of an autonomous sub-State in Assam, Christian missionaries in the Adivasi areas of other States had also started propaganda for the creation of more sub-States. The proposals to create a Muslim majority district and Christian majority district in Kerala were glaring examples of appeasement of communal demands. His party had decided to launch a country-wide agitation against the creation of such districts.

He expressed concern over the growing forces of disruption and separatism and said that violence and destruction of property by Shiv Sena in February, 1969 in Bombay over the Maharashtra-Mysore boundary dispute and the inability of the police and the administration to prevent these riots was a glaring example.

Telengana Issue:

Referring to the Telengana agitation, he said special efforts should be made for the development of backward areas of Telengana by fulfilling the assurances given to the people of that area.

He expressed his sorrow at the treatment meted out to the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes in the country and said that in spite of loud proclamation about the developmental and welfare activities for the uplift of Harijans and Adivasis, no serious effort had been made so far to make these two communities self-reliant.

INDONESIA

A. Banking Agreement With Malaysia: At the close of week-long talks in Kuala Lumpur on March 28, representatives of Indonesia and Malaysia reached agreement on establishing direct bank-to-bank credit facilities to boost trade between the two countries.

The leader of the Indonesian team to the talks, Dr. Arifin Harahap, told newsmen later that businessmen in both countries had not been able to do much trade so far due to lack of credit facilities. The two Governments had agreed to eliminate all obstacles to the free flow of trade. The establishment of banking and foreign exchange arrangements would promote direct trading.

The two sides also agreed to establish direct tele-communications links between the major rubber trading centres in both Indonesia and Malaysia to provide quick information on price and market fluctuations to traders.

A central rubber marketing system in which Thailand, Singapore and even Ceylon had shown interest would be set up. Dr. Harahap said that further discussions would be held with the representatives of the other countries. Such a regional market system would mean that rubber could be offered where the highest price prevailed on a particular day "and not at different" rates at trading centres in Djakarta, Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, Bangkok and Colombo.

B. Nuclear Agreement With France: An Agreement providing for co-operation between Indonesia and France on development of nuclear energy for peaceful uses was signed in Djakarta in the last week of March.

Following this Agreement, co-operation between Indonesia's BATAN and the French "Commissariat al' Energie Atomique", which started last year in the form of exchanges of information and trainees, would be intensified.

Both countries will exchange scientific information, latest equipment, chemical analysis, utilization of radio-isotope and radiation and protection against radio-activity. Under the Agreement, the two countries will exchange commercial and technical documentation relating to production, installation and maintenance of technical equipment either industrially manufacturned or resulting from laboratory experiments.

The French Atomic Energy Commission Commissariat al' Energie Atomique will search for uranium deposits in West Kalimantan.

If radio-active minerals are found, a separate Agreement will be signed for their exploitation.

Indonesian scientists will work in the nuclear field in France in exchange for French nuclear experts who will be sent to Indonesia.

IRAN

A. Boundary Dispute With Iraq–Troop Concentrations: Iranian troop concentrations were reported along the disputed Shatt-al-Arab river border region between Iraq and Iran on April 19 and Iranian armed forces were alerted.

The Deputy Foreign Minister of Iran, Mr. Khosrow Afshar, told the Senate that Iraq was claiming the waterway, where the Tigris and Euphrates run out into the Persian Gulf, as Iraqi territory. Iraq had threatened to prevent Iranian ships from passing through the Shatt-al-Arab and said that she would use force if Iranian Navy vessels, with troops aboard, passed through.

In this tense situation, Iran formally declared null and void the 1937 Iraqi-Iranian Agreement on navigation rights along the Shatt—which forms the southern border between the two countries.

On April 20, however, Iraq announced that it considered the 1937 Border Agreement with Iran on navigation rights along the Shatt-al-Arab river still valid and binding to both countries.

The dispute was seen in Baghdad and nearly Arab countries as heralding a wider struggle for power and influence in the Persian Gulf from which British forces are scheduled to withdraw in 1971.

On April 25, Iran continued to build up its forces along the Shatt-al-Arab river border with Iraq as Phantom jet fighters and warships stood ready to escort an Iranian freighter down the disputed waterway.

A report from Damascus said on April 27 the Iraq had vowed to stand fast against Iran's "provocations" in the Shatt-al-Arab waterway.

The Iraqi Agriculture Minister, Mr. Jassem Kazem Azzawi, in a speech on behalf of President Ahmed Hassan Albar at a peasants' conference in Baghdad, said that the Persian Gulf area was a "matter of life or death to us".

The Statesman's correspondent in Beirut said on April 23 that the dispute between Iraq and Iran over their boundary on the Shatt-al-Arab river had little to do with the muddy waters of that estuary and much to do with Bahrain and the Golan Heights.

He went on: "This dispute is a hardy perennial which is an expression, rather than a cause, of passing bouts of ill-will between the two countries. Consequently, the 1937 Treaty covering the boundary between the two countries must be just about the most denounced Treaty in history—each country has denounced it several times in recent years.

"There is no doubt that Iran has a very good case on this boundary question. Instead of being drawn straight down the middle of the river, as is the normal international practice, the line zig-zags erratically. If discussed rationally this line could easily be re-drawn to suit both Iraq and Iran; but, as now, it is only discussed with bad temper.

"The initial reaction of the Iraqi Government to Iran's denunciation was one of surprise: it was unaware that it had imposed restrictions on Iranian shipping in the Shatt-al-Arab river as Iran alleged it had done in a private discussion with the Iranian Ambassador in Baghdad, and of which no news was given by Iraq. This story is improbable for reasons both general and particular.

"It might have been expected that when the doctrinaire Baath Party Socialists took over in Iraq last Summer they would be hostile to the ostentatiously flamboyant monarchy in Iran. The contrary is what happened."

IRAQ

A. Directive To Palestine Guerrilla Organizations: According to a Beirut despatch published in The Times (London) on April 19, the Government has served notice on the Palestine guerrilla organizations that it objects to their presence on its soil and has laid down stiff conditions which it requires them to observe if they want to stay.

The Note was published in Al Nida, the Beirut communist daily newspaper, on April 18 but this by no means presupposed communist sympathy for the guerrillas.

The Note, delivered to the principal guerrilla group, called on them to bring all their activities in Iraq under the control of the country's intelligence organization, remove their training camps from urban areas, stop uniformed guerrillas entering cities, and co-ordinate their activities with the recently created Iraq guerrilla group—the Arab Liberation Front.

The Note suggested that the training camps could be set up at Al Rutbah, which is close to the Jordan border. The guerrillas should not be allowed outside the battleground, "and must concentrate in Jordan." "There is no reason for them to be in Iraq."

As the extreme Baathist regime in Iraq was one of the most vociferous supporters of the Palestine guerrilla organizations, the new Baghdad move was a severe blow.

Bearing the signature of Mr. Chafic al Daraji, Secretary to the Revolutionary Command Council, the country's highest authority, the Note claimed that the guerrilla organizations had ignored earlier instructions on their behaviour in the country and had, as a result, created security problems. Kurdish rebels and communist extremists had, for example, undertaken subversive acts against the Government while masquerading as Palestine guerrillas.

The Note also asserted that certain guerrilla organizations had made contact with opposition political parties in Iraq, held rallies and collected funds without permission.

In future, all funds must be channelled through a special "donations committee" set up by the regime.

As well as informing Iraq intelligence of their movements inside Iraq, the guerrilla organizations were ordered to appoint an official to keep in touch with the authorities on questions of arms, money, transport, radio programmes, printing and distribution of propaganda, statements to the Press and accommodation.

B. Troops In Syrian Territory: Iraq circulated to the United Nations Security Council on April 2 a statement that its troops were stationed in Syrian territory, at the request of the Syrian Government, in accordance with a joint defence pact.

The letter, signed by Mr. Adnan Raouf, acting permanent delegate, said that, in view of Israel's expressed intention to extend its borders "from the Euphrates to the Nile", Syria and Iraq had "the supreme right and duty of joining efforts to prevent such an eventuality".

[Israel had complained to the Council that the presence of Iraqi troops near its borders aggravated the West Asian situation. ISRAEL

A. No Return To 1967 Borders: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, on April 18 stated at a Press Club luncheon in Tel Aviv that Israel would never repeat what happened in 1957.

She said that another withdrawal without a contractual peace, such as that which had followed the Sinai campaign, was "utterly inacceptable to the Government of Israel."

She was asked what lessons Israel could learn for 1969 from 1957, when she was Foreign Minister. She warned that many people throughout the world would not applaud Israel's firm stand, "and we may find ourselves confronted with very strong pressures, but we will have to stand up to them, because we have no alternative."

She declared that Israel was in a stronger position today than in 1957 to face up to pressure: "...We will not agree to accept 'promises', or proposals for demilitarized zones, but only plans that will radically alter the situation, whether four or 40 meet.'"

Asked whether the Americans had indeed exerted pressure on Israel to accept less than contractual peace, she replied: "For the moment, we are exerting pressure on the Americans. Their turn will come..."

She objected to demands that Israel outline her final position on the borders, declaring that this would wait for the peace conference table. "The 1967 borders are out of the question, just as the 1947 partition lines died in the War of Independence. The Arabs always yearn for the previous borders they lost by their own fault."

Negotiations Offer To King Hussein:

Earlier, addressing a news conference in Jerusalem on April 13, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, offered to negotiate with King Hussein of Jordan to reach agreement on secure and recognized boundaries between Israel and Jordan.

Answering questions relating to the six-point peace plan outlined by King Hussein in Washigton, Mr. Eban said: "You cannot get peace by restoring the position which led to war. There is no precedent in the history of peace without negotiations and agreement."

He added that agreement should be sought on secure and recognized boundaries instead of trying to revive the old armistice demarcation lines. King Hussein was fully aware that if his Government wanted a genuine peace with Israel there would be no difficulty in achieving it.

He added that King Hussein could not speak in one breath about peace and his support of Arab terrorists.

King Hussein's View:

The same day (April 13) in New York, the King said in a television interview that if Israel accepted the Security Council resolution of 1967, even without a withdrawal of Israeli forces, there could be talks through Dr. Jarring. He also believed that a majority of the 2½ million Palestine Arabs would agree, although their organizations had not so far accepted the resolution.

"I believe the escalation of the resistance is a direct result of the continuance of the occupation." He said: "What has been lacking is an alternative.... Palestine leaders recognize that they can never regain territory as such (the lands lost in 1948). I believe they are logical people.

"I believe the difficulties of the occupation have driven some of them beyond reason just now. But given an alternative they would look to it."

He was sure that the United Arab Republic was with Jordan in accepting all of the Security Council, principles, including the right of navigation of all States through Suez. As for Syria's refusal to accept the resolution or deal with Dr. Jarring, he said that Arab Heads of State had accepted since the Khartoum Conference in 1967 that a political solution must be found which the countries immediately involved agreed to, and that meant UAR and Jordan.

The King did not believe peace possible if Israel maintained control of Jerusalem. "We cannot bargain about our sovereignty in the Arab part of Jerusalem, but once it is recognized we will do what is necessary to make it a city of peace for all time."

Asked what would happen if Israel refused, he said: "We would then have to do whatever is necessary to secure our rights, but I hope to God that situation does not arise."

JAPAN

A. Record Balance Of Payments Surplus: According to the Finance Ministry, Japan's overall balance of payments reached a record surplus of $1,630 million in fiscal 1968.

The country had run into a deficit of $535 million in fiscal 1967.

The previous record was in fiscal 1965 when the surplus totalled $428 million.

According to the Ministry, the basic balance of payments and trade balance for fiscal 1968 rose by $1,430 million and $3,020 million, respectively, both new records.

Exports were valued at $13,470 million and imports at $10,450 million.

The Ministry attributed the recovery in the balance of payments to the fact that Japan's exports increased by 27 per cent over fiscal 1967 centering mainly on exports to the United States, while imports rose by only 11 per cent.

The increase in the rate of exports over the previous year was the second highest after 28.7 per cent registered in the 1964 fiscal year.

As a result, Japan's trade balance in fiscal 1968 showed an increase in surplus by about $1,900 million over the previous year.

The favourable over-all balance of payments in fiscal 1968 was also attributed to a considerably small deficit in the long-term capital transactions of $90 million.

The small deficit in long-term capital transactions was due to a large inflow of foreign capital into Japan through impact loans, active foreign investments in stocks and bond flotations overseas.

The invisible trade balance in 1968 registered a deficit of $1,330 million and the transfer account a deficit of $170 million.

As a result, the balance of current accounts showed a surplus of $1,520 million.

KOREA (North)

A. American Spy Plane Shot Down: Pyongyang Radio reported on April 15 that the Air Force had "scored a brilliant military achievement by immediately intercepting and shooting down with one stroke a reconnaissance plane of the United States imperialist aggressor troops at a high altitude".

[The North Korean Air Force is equipped with Soviet MIG-21 fighters armed with two 30-mm. cannon.]

The broadcast said that the aircraft was shot down "after intruding deep into the territorial air of the north half of the Republic", but it did not say whether it was hit by ground fire or aircraft.

In Washington, a Pentagon spokesman said the aircraft was about 90 miles out to sea when last heard from. The aircraft, which carried a crew of 30 Navy men and one Marine, was a four-engined EC-121, a military version of the Constellation equipped for long-range high-altitude reconnaisance.

The United States immediately requested the Soviet Union to join in the search for the aircraft.

The American position till then was that the cause of the aircraft's disappearance was unknown. The official mood in USA was not to see the incident as a grave international crisis.

Russian Co-operation In Search:

The US Pentagon announced on April 16 that a Russian ship in the Sea of Japan had picked up what appeared to be pieces of the missing American reconnaissance aircraft which North Korea had claimed to have shot down.

The statement said: "Direct communication has been established between one of the Soviet destroyer-type ships in the search area and a United States aircraft from Korea. The Soviet ship said in response to questions that it had not recovered or seen any survivors, but that it had picked up what it reported to be aircraft parts."

An American aircraft flew over the ship and photographed the wreckage. It appeared to be a wheel and a ladder, but there was no certainty that they belonged to the missing aircraft.

The debris was first sighted by an American aircraft, and the Russian ships were directed to the area. A radio was parachuted to one of them, and smoke markers were dropped near the wreckage. A Russian-speaking American was then flown to the scene from Japan.

The Russians, operating under an American fighter cover, were joined by two American destroyers. the Tucker and the Dale. This joint search, especially for a spy aircraft lost some 75 miles from Soviet and Chinese territory, was unprecedented. It was viewed by Western observers as one favourable development in an otherwise dangerous and miserable affair.

Later in the day, the Pentagon said that a variety of sources had confirmed that the aircraft had been at all times outside North Korean air-space.

The second statement said that there was nothing unusual about the aircraft's mission. "In recent years, these missions have been approved by high Government authorities in the State and Defence Departments, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the White House. Each of these missions constitutes a lawful use of international air-space."

On April 17, the bodies of two men believed to have been crew members of the reconnaissance aircraft were picked up off the North Korean coast by the Tucker.

The same day, the North Korean Defence Minister, Gen. Choi Hyun, said: "War might break out at any moment." He protested against the "provocative act of brigandage" by the Americans, claiming again that the reconnaissance aircraft had violated North Korean air-space.

In South Korea, the Government called for "prompt and effective reprisals" against North Korean "puppets".

In Moscow, Izvestia said on April 17 that "extremists" in the United States Congress were trying to whip up tension over the shooting down by North Korea of an American spy aircraft.

The newspaper described the affair as "a second Pueblo" and "a new scandalous incident".

It added: "Some American politicians are asking reasonably if the United States has not gone too far in its espionage activities."

President R. Nixon's Statement:

In Washington on April 18, President R. Nixon announced at a news conference that US reconnaissance flights over international waters off the North Korean coast would be protected and would be resumed immediately.

The shooting down of the unarmed EC-121 reconnaissance aircraft, he said, was "unprovoked, deliberate and without warning". The aircraft was in international air-space 90 miles off the North Korean coast when it was fired upon. His decision to order protection for future flights was not a threat but "a statement of fact".

The North Koreans must realize, he said, that aircraft of the United States, engaged in intelligence-gathering in international air-space, "are not fair game."

He declined to specify what "protection" would be given to American reconnaissance aircraft, which remain on patrol for periods of up to 200 hours, but he emphasized that the intelligence flights were essential to the security of the 56,600 US troops in South Korea. "As Commander-in-Chief", he said, "I cannot and will not ask our men to serve without armed protection."

The attack on the Constellation aircraft, he said, was completely unexpected by both the United States and the Soviet Union. The intelligence-gathering flights had been continuing without incident for the past 20 years and 190 flights had been made this year alone.

North Korean Accusation:

On April 23, North Korea accused the United States of taking measures that could lead to another full-scale Korean War.

The accusation was made in an official statement on the shooting down of the US reconnaissance plane.

Quoting from the statement, the official Korean Central News Agency, said that American "maneuvering to provoke a new war in Korea has now reached a very dangerous stage."

The statement added: "If the reconnaissance planes of US imperialists intrude into the territorial air of our country, we will not sit with folded arms, but will take resolute measures for safeguarding our sovereignty as ever.

"Then US imperialists will use this as a pretext to commit a full-scale armed attack against us, which may only lead to another total war in Korea in the end."

The statement took special issue with President Nixon's announcement at the news conference that USA would henceforth assure protection for continuing reconnaissance flights.

The statement described what he had claimed as "another intolerable insult to our Republic and the Korean people. It is, in fact, an open declaration that he is taking a step further to the brink of war."

It attacked the decision to continue the reconnaissance flights near North Korea and called the new US protection "a very dangerous playing with fire."

The statement followed by a few hours a disclosure by the State Department in Washington that Russia had expressed concern to the United States over the American build-up in the Sea of Japan.

The statement re-iterated that the downed reconnaissance plane had intruded into North Korean air-space, despite Mr. Nixon's assertion that the aircraft was 90 miles from the North Korean coast when it was shot down.

US Task Force In Sea Of Japan:

The United States on April 20 began moving a 23-ship task force into the Sea of Japan, over which the plane was downed, to protect reconnaissance missions. The force included four aircraft carriers and a total of 350 planes.

The special task force sailed on April 26 into the Yellow Sea off the western coasts of North and South Korea.

The US Defence Department announced that Task Force 71—a fleet put officially at 29 vessels and unofficially but authoritatively at close to 40—was "proceeding south of Korea through the Tsushima Straits to the Yellow Sea where fleet operations will continue."

It also said that the battleship New Jersey, which had been diverted to Pacific waters while on the way to the United States, was now on its way home again and was expected to reach Long Beach, California.

A Department spokesman refused to say why the task force, which was sent to the Sea of Japan after North Korean jets shot down the EC-121 electronic intelligence plane, was moving out of waters east of Korea and into waters to the west.

Soviet Complaints:

But there was speculation in diplomatic quarters that the shift was influenced by Soviet complaints over the naval build-up.

Tokyo reports said Russians strongly resented the presence of so large an American force so close to the vital Soviet port of Vladivostok on the Sea of Japan. The shift to the Yellow Sea enabled the United States to placate the Russians and still protect flights off North Korea.

The Defence Department would not say how long the task force, which included three attack aircraft carriers, one anti-submarine carrier, three cruisers, 22 destroyers and at least five submarines, would remain in the Yellow Sea. The Department also refused to comment on reports out of Tokyo that USA had "accomplished its objectives" in the Sea of Japan.

The Japanese, like the Russians, had been uneasy over the US reaction to the plane incident. The Japanese Premier, Mr. Eisaku Sato, said that his Government had appealed to USA to be prudent in the matter. The shift of the task force to the Yellow Sea took it farther away from Japan.

In any event, reports said that the task force would not be sustained as a long-range project in the Yellow Sea.

On April 25, Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told a special House investigating committee in Washington that the task force was what the Navy called a "surge operation," one that could be maintained only "for a limited period of time." Gen. Wheeler said that the task force was "inordinately expensive," although he could not give any cost figures.

KOREA (South)

A. ADB Loan For Fishery Development: The Asian Development Bank (ADB) has agreed to provide a $7 million loan to help South Korea in its overall effort to improve its fishing industries.

The loan was being made directly to the Korean Cold Storage Company to finance the foreign exchange cost of providing freezing, cold storage, ice-making and ice storage facilities in Seoul, Pusan, Mokpo and Mukho. It would also cover fish processing equipment, market requirements, and fish transportation units.

The total amount needed for these installations was put at $15.3 million. Half of the expenditure plus the working capital funds of $2.9 million would be met by the South Korean Government.

Five commercial banks were participating in the loan to the extent of $500,000. They were: the Bank of Tokyo, Trust Company, New York, the Daiichi Bank, Tokyo, the Fiji Bank, Tokyo, and the Mitsubishi Bank, Tokyo.

The loan resulted from a technical assistance mission carried out by the ADB at the request of the Government of South Korea. The main objective of the mission was to provide assistance to the Agriculture and Fishery Development Corporation (AFDC) in identifying priority projects concerned with the storing and processing of agricultural, livestock and fishery projects.

The need for adequate refrigeration, cold storage and other facilities for handling fish products was pinpointed by the mission as the most important single project requiring immediate financing.

The operation of Korea's fishing fleet as a whole is also under scrutiny and measures are being taken to accelerate a development process which includes the gradual infiltration of more modern vessels manned by fishermen well-trained in modern techniques.

LEBANON

A. Clashes With Pro-Commando Rioters—Emergency Declared & Cabinet Resigns: A State of Emergency was declared on April 23 following clashes between security forces and pro-commando (El Fatah) demonstrators.

The clashes came as security forces fired on Palestinian refugees demonstrating at Ein al-Helweh refugee camp near Sidon.

About 11 people died and 82 were wounded in the clashes.

The country's 15,000-strong army kept a tight grip on internal security. Steel-helmeted troops patrolled the streets, guarding key installations.

On April 24, the Premier, Mr. Rashid Karame, announced his Government's resignation.

[Mr. Karame (47) who formed his seventh Government three months ago in the wake of the Israeli helicopter-borne raid on Beirut airport, told Parliament at the end of a long debate on the clashes: "There are two sides in Lebanon—one saying that commando action should be carried out from Lebanon whatever the consequences and another opposing this view. That is why no Government can take either view without splitting the country."]

Announcing his decision to resign in Parliament, Mr. Karame frankly admitted that the country, with roughly equal strength of the Christian and Muslim communities, could be split wide open on the issue.

But Mr. Karame, a Muslim, declared that he himself favoured commando action.

Meanwhile, the Palestinian resistance organization, El Fatah, warned the Lebanese authorities on April 25 that it would crush any hostile action against the movement. A communique issued by its Algiers office asked the Lebanese authorities to "take their hands off the revolutionary masses in Lebanon."

NEPAL

A. Collection Of Compulsory Savings—Protest Riots: According to Home Ministry sources, four persons died when the police fired on a mob of farmers at Ajugara village in Kapilvastu district on April 21.

Local Press reports, however, placed the death roll at seven.

The trouble started early in the month in western Terai district of Kapilvastu and Rupadelhi when Land Reforms Department staff tried to realise with the help of the police compulsory savings for the land reform programme.

Farmers opposed it and there were violent clashes. The Government subsequently suspended the savings collection drive (see page 8925).

The Government recalled the zonal commissioner of Lumbini and posted another official.

There was recrudescence of trouble in Kapilvastu when a sizable number of peasants assembled at Ajugara to hold a meeting in protest against the police firings early in this month.

According to the official news agency, a mob attacked the police with stones and lathis as the latter tried to prevent the meeting from being held. Official reports said that some in the mob tried to make speeches and indulge in slogan-shouting against the Government.

Again on April 27, thirteen persons were killed and 10 others were injured in a police firing at Ajugara, Kapilvastu district, while agitating against land revenue.

Unofficial reports, however, put the death roll in the firing at 30.

The situation in Ajugara and Rupadelhi was later described as "quiet".

B. US Loan: It was announced in Khatmandu on April 26 that the US Agency for International Development would provide Rs. 16,50,000 to Nepal's Industrial Corporation for exploring the possibility of establishing a stock exchange in the Kingdom and develop management consulting agencies with co-operation from foreign specialists.

Nepal's Industrial Development Corporation is a State-owned body.

An Agreement to this effect was signed two weeks earlier between representatives of the Government and the US Agency.

PAKISTAN

A. Gen. Yahya Khan Meets Political Leaders: President Yahya Khan paid a five-day visit to East Pakistan from April 24 to 29.

During informal talks in Dacca with East Pakistan editors on April 25, he said: "Fundamentals of political conduct and behaviour should be agreed upon before political activity can be resumed."

He expressed the hope that the Press and especially the intelligentsia would help restore a proper climate in the country. Once the climate for resumption of political activity was created he would go ahead with the task of setting the election machinery in motion.

He said that political parties had not been banned, but only political activity remained suspended till tempers cooled down. He had no desire to impose on others his personal views relating to constitutional problems.

He later held a series of meetings with political leaders in Dacca on April 27.

The leaders were: Maulana Abdul Rahim, Mr. Abdus Salam Khan, Mr. Wahiduz Zaman, Qazi Abdul Qadir, Pir Mosimuddin, Maulvi Farid Ahmed, Khwaja Hasan Askari, Shakeel Abdul Manan, Mr. Abu Qasim, Mr. Asaduj Zaman, Mr. Justice S. M. Mursheed and the Pir Sarsina.

On April 29, President Yahya Khan said on arrival in Karachi that it should not be difficult to frame a new Constitution for the country if political parties observed certain fundamentals of conduct and behaviour.

After his talks on national matters with leaders of political parties in East Pakistan, he said he found that "a vast majority of opinion" agreed with him on the need for ensuring the fundamentals of political conduct and behaviour. "I am gratified that politicians also believe in these principles."

Earlier, on April 23, he met political leaders in Lahore for the first time since he took over the administration. Radio Pakistan said he spent more than four hours with seven political leaders.

Mr. Mohammed Ali, Mr. Nasrullah Khan and Mr. Mohammed Kasim had separate meetings with Gen. Yahya Khan, while Maulana Maudoodi and Mr. Tufail Mohammed met him together.

Mr. Mumtaz Daultana and Mr.

Shaukat Hayat Khan also conferred with the President jointly.

B. Corruption In Administration —Inquiry Committee Set Up: The Council of Administration decided in the third week of April to set up a permanent high-power committee to inquire into cases of corruption at the higher levels of administration.

An announcement in Rawalpindi by the Principal Staff Officer to the President and Chief Martial Law Administrator said that the the committee would consist of a serving or a retired judge of a High Court or of the Supreme Court and two or three more members, one of whom would be from Defence Services not below the rank of brigadier or his equivalent.

All members of the administration from the President down to the joint secretaries would file declarations of moveable and immovable assets held by them or members of their families or held by them in the name of any other person at the time of assumption or relinquishing charge of their respective offices.

Declaration Of Foreign Assets—Two Regulations Promulgated:

On April 17, Pakistanis were ordered to declare their assets in foreign countries and to declare or surrender unlawfully held or acquired foreign exchange.

Two Martial Law regulations said those who failed to do so would face a maximum of 14 years' imprisonment and the confiscation of all or part of their property.

One regulation said that assets in foreign countries—except foreign exchange—must be declared by June 16. The other said that foreign exchange unlawfully held or acquired must be declared or surrendered to the State Bank of Pakistan by May 15.

The Martial Law authorities also announced strict expenditure controls for public administration and State enterprises. Inspectors' corps had been set up specially to enforce them.

The former East Pakistan Governor, Mr. Moneim Khan, had been asked to submit a detailed list of his properties and wealth.

The Martial Law administration in East Pakistan had set up an inquiry committee to assess the properties of all former Ministers and members of National and Provincial Assemblies.

Many industrialists and businessmen had also been asked to submit by May 28 lists of their properties at home and abroad.

Two Government Officials Retired From Service:

The Health, Labour and Social Welfare Secretary, Mr. W. A. Sheikh, was on April 18 retired from service with immediate effect.

He was the second official of the Government who had been retired in the last two days. The Home and Kashmir Affairs Secretary, Mr. A. B. Kawan was retired earlier.

Mr. A. Gauhar's Appointment As Envoy To UK Cancelled:

On April 14, President Yahya Khan cancelled the nomination of Mr. Altaf Gauhar as Pakistan's new High Commissioner in London.

Mr. Gauhar, Secretary of the Information Ministry had been named for the post by F-M Ayub Khan following the resignation of the present High Commissioner, Mr. Mahmoud Haroon, who wanted to return to politics.

President Yahya Khan's decision was interpreted by a columnist in The Times as clearly designed to dissociate his regime from personalities closely linked with the former President.

Mr. Gauhar was believed to be mainly responsible for inflating F-M Ayub's image in recent years. He was also understood to have ghosted F-M Ayub's autobiography, Friends Not Masters.

C. Exchange Of Messages With President Of India: Replying to a message from the Indian President, Dr. Zakir Husain congratulating him on his assumption of the Presidency, Gen. Yahya Khan said on April 26 that Pakistan "will be only too happy to co-operate in any effort directed towards normalization of relations between our two countries through a peaceful settlement of outstanding disputes on an honourable and equitable basis."

Dr. Husain had expressed the hope that "our two countries will be able to normalize their relations through peaceful bilateral discussions."

President Yahya Khan said that the solutions to the problems should be honourable and based on justice so that there could be normalization of relations between the two countries. He expressed hope that the two countries would succeed in settling the problems through mutual negotiations.

He also thanked the Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi for her message of sympathy for the victims of the recent cyclones which had hit East Pakistan.

D. RCD Project: The Chairman of the Security Papers Corporation, Mr. Said Ahmed, said recently that a $6.3 million RCD project for the manufacture of bank note papers and other security documents had started working in Karachi.

He told newsmen that the project, completed in three years with the assistance of well-known British manfacturers, would meet the entire domestic requirements of bank note papers and security documents and help save $1.05 million in foreign exchange annually.

An encouraging factor of the project was that over 90 per cent of the necessary raw materials was available in Pakistan. Only 10 per cent, including security thread and some chemicals, would be imported.

He added that at present only one machine with a capacity of producing 1,440 tons of rag water-marked bank note paper had been installed. The project had been designed to accommodate another machine "as and when we find it necessary to expand production."

He said that 40 per cent of the paid-up share capital belonged to Pakistan Security Papers Corporation, while Iran and Turkey had contributed 10 per cent each. The remaining 40 per cent was spread over a large number of investors in Pakistan. The project was the first RCD project to be completed and to start production.

E. Justice Party's Manifesto: A leading campaigner against former President Ayub Khan, Air Marshal Asghar Khan, recommended on April 18 Pakistan's withdrawal from S-EATO and CENTO, removal of all foreign military bases from Pakistan, nationalization of key industries, and land reform.

The proposals were contained in a 17-page draft manifesto of his newly-formed Justice Party.

The manifesto's most striking omissions is that it fails to mention constitutional issues. It does not suggest any particular form of government, and does not take any stand on the burning issue of provincial autonomy.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan recommended that the Provinces should be self-contained in defence, which should be based on conscription. He called for "self-determination" for Kashmir.

Banks, insurance, iron and steel, heavy engineering, motors, fertilizers, textiles, sugar and tea should be key sectors of the economy in which large units should be nationalized.

The manifesto suggested that private capital should still have a place in the nationalized sector, provided that the Government holds majority shares.

[Prev. ref. 8894:PAK:A]

F. Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's New Book: The former Foreign Minister, Mr. Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, has said in a book entitled "The Myth of Independence" published in London on April 23 that the sooner the Commonwealth was dissolved, the better it would be for all concerned, including Britain.

He said that after the West Asian conflict it was doubtful whether Britain would ever again be able to assert itself east of Suez. "The Commonwealth has passed the point of mutual benefit. It has become a vestigial institution and the sooner it is decently and voluntarily dissolved, the better it will be for Britain and for the Asian-African nations of the Commonwealth."

He accused the Soviet Union of taking a wavering position on the Arab-Israeli war of June, 1967—as it did in the Indo-Pakistani war of 1966—and, in the final analysis, of collaborating with USA in both cases.

China, he said, had now emerged as the undisputed champion of oppressed people and their just causes.

He described France as "by far the most important country in Western Europe" from Pakistan's point of view.

G. Tornado Hits East Wing: A 25-minute tornado which struck Dacca and Comilla districts of East Pakistan on April 14 left 1,000 killed and 7,000 wounded.

Although the official casualty figure stood at 518 dead and 2,700 injured, unofficial estimates indicated that the final toll may be more than double.

Delayed reports from Homna in Comilla mentioned 300 dead, but the official figure still stood at 192.

The death-roll in Demra, the worst hit area, rose to 600. Only a mosque and one other building were still standing in Demra after the tornado passed. The bazaar was demolished, and telegraph poles were badly twisted.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Land Reclamation Project: A sum of 244,925,000 riyals has been earmarked for implementation of the Al-Hasa irrigation and drainage project designed to reclaim a vast territory of lands in 48 villages and two towns in the eastern province.

About 21 per cent of this project was completed in October, 1968 and work was proceeding according to schedule.

Work on this major scheme started on April 11, 1967. It is designed to reform 20,000 hectares of the Al-Hasa area and to improve the irrigation and drainage system. The remaining 16,000 hectares in the area will be irrigated by 330 fountains and artesian wells.

Water will be pumped from these resources by electric power with a capacity of 60,000 kw. Four huge tanks will be constructed to store water which will feed the area.

The Ministry of Agriculture signed a contract with the German firm, Philip Holzman, early in December, 1966 for the execution of the project at a cost of 208 million riyals.

Compensation for expropriation of lands needed by this project has been estimated at 25 million riyals.

SINGAPORE

A. Abolition Of Trial By Jury: New legislation, published on April 9, abolishes trial by jury and provides that a person acquitted of a charge carrying the death penalty may be tried a second time.

Under the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill, three judges of the High Court are constituted for a jury in trials of capital offences—hitherto the last remaining preserve of the jury system in Singapore. Their decisions may be arrived at unanimously or by majority. Presumably those acquitted under such decisions would not be liable for re-trial.

However, liability for re-trial, in spite of acquittal, arises where the three judges are unable to reach a decision. In such an event, the relevant section reads: "The Court may acquit the accused or charge him, such discharge not amounting to an acquittal. In either case the accused may be tried before another court consisting of three judges of the High Court other than those who had tried him previously".

(The Times, London)

B. Future Of Gorkha Troops: The Commander-in-Chief of British Forces in the Far East, Admiral Sir Peter Hill, told newsmen in Singapore on April 11 that all Gorkha troops now serving with the British Far East Command would be deployed in Hong Kong by 1971.

There were now 11,000 Gorkhas serving with the British forces in the Far East, mostly in Brunei and a battalion in Singapore. But their number was going to be cut down. By 1971 there would be only 6,000 Gorkha troops with the British forces in the Far East and all of them would be deployed in Hong Kong.

Sir Peter, who was talking about his task of conducting withdrawal of the British forces from South-East Asia by 1971, said that though no British troops would be posted in the area either on a permanent or rotational basis, units, however, would visit it to train forces of countries from which the British were withdrawing. Britain at present maintains a jungle warfare school which, after the withdrawal, British units would still visit to carry on training.

He added that a sensible defence arrangement had to be made for the area before the British withdrawal and the five Powers—Malaysia, Singapore, Australia, New Zealand and Britain—were evolving such arrangements.

SYRIA

A. Land Reclamation Plan: The 180,000-acre Gharb Valley is being transformed into a fertile, highly productive plain.

This massive undertaking is being engaged in by the Government with the assistance of the FAO and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Under a two-phase project which when completed will have cost the Government the equivalent of $2 million and the UNDP over $1.8 million, plans are being made for the integrated development of this important area which lies south of the major city of Aleppo between the parallel mountain ranges of Amsarieh and Zawiyeh. Investment needed for initial development schemes is estimated in the region of $100 million. The Government has already produced almost half of this amount.

The prospect of opening up this valley became a reality when soil experts discovered in 1949 that the stretch of water was not a true lake but formed as a result of a landslide which blocked the northern end of the valley. In 1956, under contract to the Syrian Government, a Dutch company blasted out the barrier of rocks and earth and restarted the normal flow through the valley of the River Orontes. Regulations of the river by two big dams, one at Mahardeh and another at Asharneh, resulted in the total disappearance of the "lake" and the emergence of large tracts of cultivable land.

The second phase project, now started, is moving out from the pilot area to carry out a larger scale development scheme which will be later duplicated in other parts of the region.

The scheme calls for the permanent settlement of 5,000 hectares. Villages will be planned; farm holdings marked out and allocated; improved farm layouts as well as more productive agricultural and livestock practices will be introduced; a system of field irrigation works plans will be installed and private holdings re-distributed to fit new irrigation patterns; and special attention will be given to training a team of Syrian engineers and technicians including land settlement officers, agricultural and irrigation engineers, agricultural economists, surveyors, extension experts and co-operative officers. A functional adult literacy training component will also form an integral part of the project.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Arrest Of Newspaper Chief: Mr. Nguyen Lau, manager of the Saigon Daily News, one of the capital's three English-language newspapers, was arrested on April 13 "for activities beneficial to the communists".

A Government spokesman, who announced the arrest, would not give any details about Mr. Lau's alleged activities or say whether any other people connected with the newspaper had been arrested.

Asked whether Mr. Lau had been an agent of the National Liberation Front or North Viet-Nam, the spokesman said: "He worked for a communist organization. We don't make any difference—the NLF and the Hanoi agents are communists."

The newspaper was published as usual, but the spokesman said it was up to the Government to decide whether it should be suspended after an inquiry.

Mr. Lau was the second newspaper executive to be arrested in Saigon in four months. Mr. Pham Van Nhon, of Viet-Nam Nouveau, Saigon's only French-language daily, was arrested on similar charges in December, 1968 and is to stand trial soon.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. World Youth Problems—UN Study: The UN has made its first detailed study of youth problems throughout the world and concluded that anti-social behaviour is an inevitable consequence of developing society.

An 80-page report formed the basis for discussions by the 31-nation UN Social Development Commission between February 17 and March 5. Various UN agencies helped in preparing the report.

It recognized that young people would continue to demand a more active role in national affairs as their country's affluence increased. "The demand to participate is manifest at all levels. University students are prepared to disrupt university life if they do not agree with decisions of the administration.

"Young people of all walks of life are prepared to march, to demonstrate and to riot if necessary in support of views which may not be those of the electorate, nor of the majority nor yet those of the Government."

The report noted that in 1968 there were reports of student demonstrations in 50 countries. "This clamour for attention, this assertion of the right to be heard is a movement which may be expected to continue as the demand for more education extends and as young people begin to realise their strength in national affairs." In both developed and developing countries, the increasing influence of young people on community affairs and their natural impatience and restlessness had had both good and ill effects.

"It is certainly true that a range of behaviour, which is normally understood to be anti-social, ranging from alcoholism to juvenile delinquency and organized criminality is a feature of the progressive urbanization of young people in nearly all countries of the world.".

There were many influences at work. Some could be explained away in psychological terms such as diminishing supervision or control of young people and the pressure of mass living which generated a sense of anonymity.

But other factors were more subtle. "Ethical standards are rapidly changing and the second, if not third, generation affected by the uncertainty about concepts of right and wrong is now in existence."

The report stressed the need for long-term youth programmes within the frame-work of national development. It stressed that, particularly in developing countries, youth and national development were inextricably related.

A. Increase In Tea And Rubber Production: Production of tea and rubber reached new highs in 1968. Official estimates placed tea output at 495.6 million lbs. This was 8.9 million lbs more than in 1967.

Exports in 1968 amounted to 460 million lbs—3.6 per cent more than in 1967. The exports did not reach the expected levels because of a strike in Colombo in the early part of the year. The average f.o.b. price for tea rose by 30 cents a lb. in 1968 (rupee prices for exports rising after devaluation of the Ceylon rupee). Export earnings from tea increased by Rs. 10.1 crores to reach Rs. 116.1 crores in 1968.

Rubber output continued its upward trend in 1968 when it totalled 328 million lbs.—an increase of 12.2 million lbs over 1967. The higher output reflected better yields from re-planted acreages.

The output of rubber had been rising steadily over the last several years. Last year's crop of 328 million lbs showed an increase of nearly 100 million lbs over that of 1963.

B. Food Aid From Britain: An Agreement was signed in Colombo on March 28 under which Britain would give Ceylon about £1,000,000 for buying wheat during 1969. Ceylon will pay shipping and other costs.

A Press release issued by the British High Commission in Colombo stated that the aid "fulfils part of the obligation which the UK has accepted under the terms of the Rome Food Aid Convention to provide 225,000 metric tons of grain, or the cash equivalent, each year for three years as aid to developing countries. It is also part of the aid which Britain pledged at the Ceylon Aid Group meeting in March, 1968 (but was subject to the subsequent ratification of the Rome Food Aid Convention)."

Britain also increased to £2,500,000 the interest-free loan for £2,000,000 commodity aid signed in Colombo on October 7, 1968. The additional money will be spent on fertilizers, buses, trucks, motor cycles, and machinery for the State Engineering Corporation.

The £1,000,000 gift of food aid raised the total of new British aid to Ceylon for the past year to £3,500,000 and the total of aid which Britain had provided as a member of the World Bank's Ceylon Aid Group since 1965 to £14,210,000.

C. UN Aid For Water Supply Scheme: A Plan of Operation was signed in Colombo on March 27 by Ceylon, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Health Organization (WHO).

It will cover the development, engineering, organization and training aspects of the programme for public water supply, drainage and sewerage for the south-west coastal area. This project will extend over the next two years.

Earlier, UNDP had authorized a one-year preliminary operations project in which similar assistance was provided for several high priority areas, with WHO as the executing agency. Final engineering designs for two of these areas in Galle and towns north of Colombo will be incorporated in the two-year full-scale project.

The UNDP Special Fund allocation for the project is $1,462,400 and the counterpart contribution in kind by the Government of Ceylon is $1,008,700.

D. Trade With India: According to Customs returns, Ceylon exported to India Rs. 2.3 crores worth of goods in 1968. During the previous year, the exports to India were valued at Rs. 1.6 crores.

Imports from India also increased in 1968 from Rs. 12.3 crores to Rs. 15.3 crores.

India was the fourth largest supplier to Ceylon in 1968 after Britain, China and the United States.

CHINA

A. Party Congress Adopts Constitution And Political Reports: The Ninth Congress of the Communist Party concluded its session in Peking on April 24 after electing a 170-member Central Committee of the Communist Party of China.

The Chairman, Mr. Mao Tse-tung and the Vice-Chairman, Marshal Lin Piao were re-elected to their respective offices.

The Congress also elected 109 alternate members of the Central Committee.

A Press communique issued by the Secretariat of the Congress Presidium made public a list of 279 members and alternate members of the ninth Central Committee of the Communist Party.

The communique said that among those elected to the Central Committee were proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation and the new proletarian fighters who had come forth in the great proletarian Cultural Revolution, leading cadres from the various fronts of the Party Government and Army, outstanding Party members working at production posts in factories and rural areas, combat heroes of the People's Liberation Army, Communists engaged in cultural and scientific work and outstanding Communist men and women fighters of various nationalities.

The communique was a lengthy document setting out the general domestic and external policy aims of the Party and listing the new Central Committee members.

The General Secretary was not mentioned in the draft constitution circulated last October and there was no reference to the post in the communique.

The communique emphasized the supremacy of Mr. Mao's thoughts and the need to carry through to the end the revolution in the superstructure including every sphere of culture such as education, literature and art, the Press and health.

It noted in passing "the unevenness in the development of the movement". The accent now was strongly on unity. The Congress underlined the need to "win over and unite all people that can be united".

It stressed the need for a methodical and logical approach to solving problems.

Leading comrades were urged to do their work in a deep-going and meticulous way and overcome the tendency of "falling into generalities".

It said: "The Congress holds that it is essential to further unfold a great mass movement for the living study and application of Mao Tse-tung's thought throughout the country, to study conscientiously the extremely important speeches made by Chairman Mao on several occasions at the Congress, the political report made by Vice-Chairman Lin and the constitution of the Communist Party of China, and to study the historical experience of the struggle between the two lines within the Party over the past 48 years, particularly since the beginning of the period of the Socialist Revolution.

"Through such study a clear understanding of the situation, tasks and policies should be acquired, Liu-Shao-chi's counter-revolutionary revisionist line further criticised and its pernicious influence eliminated, so that unity in thinking, policy, plan, command and action will be achieved under the great red banner of Mao Tse-tung thought by the whole Party, the whole Army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country.

"This is the fundamental guarantee for the realization of the various tasks set forth by the Congress and for the achievement of still greater victories.

"The revolutionary cause of the people the world over will definitely triumph. We are fully aware there will still be difficulties and twists and turns on our way forward, and the reactionaries at home and abroad will still put up a last ditch struggle. But all this cannot stop the victorious advance of our great cause of Socialism. Armed with Mao Tse-tung thought, the Chinese people and the Chinese People's Liberation Army are invincible. We are determined to liberate Taiwan; we are determined to defend the sacred territory and sovereignty of our great Motherland.

"Ours is an era in which imperialism is heading for total collapse and Socialism is advancing to world-wide victory, a great era in which Marxism-Leninism-Mao Tsetung thought triumphs all over the world. Let us closely follow the great leader Chairman Mao and advance valiantly to win new and greater victories".

Party Constitution:

Earlier, on April 14, the Congress unanimously adopted the political report presented by Marshal Lin Piao, and the Party constitution.

The new constitution was published on April 28. It put the thoughts of Mr. Mao firmly on the same level as Marxism-Leninism as the cornerstone of the party's ideology. It dropped the hyphen from Mr. Mao's name and the new constitution referred simply to Marxism-Leninism-Mao Tsetung thought.

The Constitution declared: "The Communist Party of China takes Marxism - Leninism-Mao Tsetung thought as the theoretical basis guiding its thinking.

"Mao Tsetung thought is Marxism-Leninism of the way in which imperialism is heading for total collapse and socialism is advancing to world-wide victory."

The new constitution, much shorter and less detailed than the 1945 and 1956 constitutions, consists of a general programme and 12 articles divided into six chapters. It followed fairly closely the draft constitution circulated at the eighth Central Committee's meeting in October, 1968 which later came into the hands of diplomats in Hong Kong.

But there have been some changes of emphasis and in procedure in the final, approved version.

Suggestions in the original draft that it was necessary for the party to carry out constant purging of its ranks have been dropped, and the new constitution presents a picture of a "correct" consolidated party, tempered by long years of struggle.

The new constitution states: "The Communist Party of China with comrade Mao Tse-tung as its leader is a great, glorious and correct party and is the core of leadership of the Chinese people.

"The party has been tempered through long years of class struggle for the seizure and consolidation of State power by armed forces. It has strengthened itself and grown in the course of the struggle against both Right and Left opportunist lines, and it is valiantly advancing with supreme confidence along the road of socialist revolution and socialist construction."

It specifically refers to Marshal Lin Piao and names him as Mr. Mao's successor.

The October draft gave party members the right to present criticism and proposals to the party organizations and to party leaders at each level. If the member did not agree with party decisions or directives he was given the right to pass over his superiors and report directly to the Central Committee and the Chairman of the Central Committee (Mao).

This has been dropped in the final version and instead the member is given the right to "bypass the immediate leadership and report directly to higher levels, up to and including the Central Committee and the Chairman of the Central Committee.

The constitution states: "It is essential to create a political situation in which there are both discipline and freedom, both unity of will and personal ease of mind and liveliness".

If a party member becomes politically apathetic and does not change "despite education", he should be "persuaded to withdraw from the party." Members who violate party discipline can be warned, removed from party posts, put on probation for up to two years, or expelled from the party.

It says: "Proven renegades, enemy agents, absolutely unrepentant persons in power taking the capitalist road, degenerates and alien class elements must be cleared out of the party and not be re-admitted".

Any Chinese worker, poor or lower-middle peasant, revolutionary soldier or any other revolutionary who has turned 18 can join the party. A member must be recommended by two party members and accepted by the local party.

The 1956 constitution stated that the national Party congress should hold office for five years.

The new constitution provides only that it should be convened every five years, but can be convened before the due date or postponed in special circumstances.

On foreign policy, the constitution declared the party's determination to work for the overthrow of imperialism headed by the United States, modern revisionism with the Soviet revisionist clique as its centre and the reactionaries of all countries.

Political Report:

The political report by Marshal Lin Piao contains Peking's basic directives for domestic and foreign policy.

The report was delivered on April 1 at the opening session of the Congress and was officially approved on April 14 after having undergone group discussions by the Congress delegates.

It began with the "great victory" in the two-year Cultural Revolution. It said that during the Revolution the capitalist headquarters "headed by ex-President Liu Shao-chi had been completely smashed and the handful of traitors and capitalist roaders" within the party eradicated.

The first part of the report traced in detail the origins of the Cultural Revolution which it said was "absolutely necessary and in time" to prevent a capitalist restoration in China, to establish proletarian dictatorship and to promote Socialist construction in the country.

The report detailed the struggle between the two lines in China and told the nation that Mr. Liu Shao-chi had opposed Mr. Mao's proletarian policy from the very first.

In the second part, the report said that the Cultural Revolution was led personally by Mr. Mao and all its policies had been decided by Mr. Mao himself. It was a Revolution within the superstructure and directed at "a handful of capitalist roaders within the Party."

The Cultural Revolution first emerged from literature and art circles. The report then in chronological order described the setting up of the Peking Cultural Group, the convening of the 8th Congress' 11th plenary session by Mr. Mao which officially directed the movement into a political struggle, the appearance of Red Guards, and the flourishing of wall posters.

Referring to the new Party constitution, the report said that since November, 1961, the Central Committee had received several thousand drafts. The final draft was drawn up by the 12th plenary session of the Central Committee in October, 1968 and submitted for new discussions by the party and revolutionary masses.

One section concerned China's relations with foreign countries. It quoted Mr. Mao as saying: "The enemy rots with every passing day, while for us things are getting better daily."

"On the one hand, the revolutionary movement of the proletariat of the world and the people's of various countries is vigorously surging forward. The armed struggle of the people of South Viet-Nam, Laos, Thailand, Burma, Malaya, India, Palestine and other countries and regions in Asia, Africa and Latin America is growing in strength."

The report said that "an unprecedented gigantic revolutionary mass movement has broken out in Japan, Western Europe and North America".

Describing the United States as "a paper tiger", the report said that President Richard Nixon had to play "counter-revolutionary dual tactics, ostensibly assuming a peace-loving appearance while in fact engaging in arms expansion and war preparations on a still larger scale".

The report noted: "'We must on no account ignore the danger of US imperialism and Soviet revisionism launching a larger-scale war of aggression. We must make full preparations, preparations against their launching a big war and against their launching a conventional war and against their launching a large-scale nuclear war".

Sino-Soviet Border Issue:

The report made a lengthy review of the Sino-Soviet border dispute.

It said: "Like boundary questions between China and some of her other neighbouring countries, the Sino-Soviet boundary question is also one left over by history. As regards these questions, our party and Government have consistently stood for negotiation through diplomatic channels to reach a fair and reasonable settlement. Pending a settlement, the status quo of the boundary should be maintained in order to avoid conflicts. Proceeding from this stand, China has satisfactorily and successively settled the boundary question with her neighbouring countries such as Burma, Nepal, Pakistan, the People's Republic of Mongolia and Afghanistan. Only the boundary questions between the Soviet Union and China and between India and China remain unsettled to this day.

"The Chinese Government held repeated negotiations with the Indian Government on the Sino-Indian boundary question. As the reactionary Indian Government had taken over the British imperialist policy of aggression, it insisted that we recognize the illegal McMahon Line which even the reactionary Governments of different periods in old China had not recognized and moreover, it vainly attempted to further occupy the Aksaichin area, which has always been under Chinese restriction, thereby disrupting the Sino-Indian boundary negotiations. This is known to all.

"The foreign policy of our party and Government is consistent. It is: to develop relations of friendship, mutual assistance and co-operation with socialist countries on the principle of proletarian internationalism, to support and assist the revolutionary struggles of all oppressed people and nations, to work for peaceful co-existence with countries of different social systems on the basis of the five principles of mutual respect for territorial integrity and sovereignty mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful co-existence and to oppose the imperialist policies of aggression and war. Our proletarian foreign policy is not based on expediency, it is a policy in which we have long persisted. This is what we did in the past and we will persist in doing the same in the future."

The report said the United States and the Soviet Union were always trying to isolate China. "Their rabid opposition to China cannot do us the slightest harm; on the contrary, it serves to further arouse our people's determination to maintain independence and keep initiative in our own hands, rely on our own efforts and work hard to make our country prosperous and powerful. It serves to prove to the whole world that China has drawn a clear line between herself on the one hand and US imperialism and Soviet revisionism on the other."

Marshal Lin Piao said China firmly supported the Albanian people in their struggle against imperialism and revisionism, the Viet-Namese people in their war against USA and the revolutionary struggle of the people of Laos, Thailand, Burma, Malaya, India, Palestine and other countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The report added that the Chinese people and army were determined to liberate Taiwan and "resolutely, thoroughly, wholly and completely wipe out all aggressors who dare to come".

First Plenary Meeting Of Central Committee:

The first plenary meeting of the new 279-man Central Committee was held in Peking on April 28.

The plenary meeting, chaired by Mr. Mao Tse-tung who "made an extremely important speech", also elected a new Politburo of 21 full members and four alternate members.

Also elected at the meeting was a five-man Politburo Standing Committee comprising Mr. Mao, Marshal Lin Piao, Mr. Chou En-lai and top Cultural Revolution Bureau officials, Mr. Chen Po-ta and Mr. Kang Sheng.

B. Trade Agreement With Finland: China and Finland signed in Helsinki on April 22 an Agreement on the exchange of goods this year.

The value of the exchange was estimated at 62 million marks (some £6.2 million sterling).

The main Finnish export item to China is fertilizers totalling 30,000 tons. Among other export items is 30,000 tons of paper cellulose.

Other Finnish export items are paper products, copper products and products of the metal, machinery and shipbuilding industry.

China sells to Finland traditional goods, including 35,000 tons of soyabeans.

China also exports rice, textiles, tin, fruits, canned fruits, chemicals and medicines.

The value of this year's trade is approximately the same as in 1968.

A. Late Dr. R. M. Lohia's Election To Lok Sabha Declared Void: Mr. Justice Ramabhadran of the Allahabad High Court declared void on May 14 the election of the late Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia to the Lok Sabha from the Kannauj constituency in the last General Election and pronounced Mr. S. N. Mishra (Congress), a senior advocate of Allahabad, as elected in place of Dr. Lohia.

Mr. Justice Ramabhadran passed these orders while allowing a petition filed by Mr. Mishra against the election of Dr. Lohia.

According to the result declared after the election, Mr. Mishra was defeated by 472 votes. On a re-scrutiny and re-counting of votes conducted by the Additional Registrar of the Allahabad High Court on the orders of Mr. Justice Ramabhadran, it was found that Mr. Mishra had polled 1,008 votes more than the late Dr. Lohia. There were 464 disputed votes.

Mr. Justice Ramabhadran said that even if all the disputed ballot papers were held to be valid and cast in favour of Dr. Lohia, even then Mr. Mishra received 94,308 votes and the late Dr. Lohia 93,754.

In other words, Mr. Mishra secured 554 votes more than Dr. Lohia.

D. Andhra Naxalites' Secret Plans For Revolution: A despatch on May 10 stated that Andhra Naxalites, who had so far stayed out of the newly-formed all-India party, had produced a secret blueprint for revolution and the formation of yet another Maoist Party wedded to the concept of overthrowing the established Government of the country.

The blue-print, circulated among top-ranking functionaries of the extremist group led by the expelled Marxist leader, Mr. T. Nagi Reddy, follows faithfully the Maoist strategy of starting a revolution in the mountains, gradually coming down to the plains and ending with the encircling of major towns and their capture.

In fact, Mr. Nagi Reddy and his followers appear to have evolved a revolutionary strategy in no way different from that of the all-India Naxalite Party, formed recently in Calcutta (see page 8769). The first in priority is forcible capture of the lands of big landlords for distribution to the landless. This is to start in the forested mountains and in the contiguous areas. As the so-called people's revolt gathers momentum the party is to extend its activities to the plains and then to the towns, leading to the ultimate overthrow of what the document calls the "big bourgeois landlord rule."

The document spells out what should be done immediately and where. To begin with, the Girijan tribal revolt, now being sustained by the Calcutta Naxalite group in the Srikakulam area, is to be fully supported. There are other pockets in Andhra and adjoining areas—in the dense forests of Warangal, in Khammam, East Godavari and Visakhapatnam, Karimnagar, Adilabad, as also in Bastar where, in the opinion of the Nagi Reddy group, conditions are ideal for launching revolutionary activities.

A start is to be made in usurping the lands of the bourgeoisie and of the Government during this year's Monsoon season. To counter possible punitive moves by the Government, a volunteer corps armed with locally available weapons, including spears, arrows and axes is to be formed after due training in self-defence technique.

E. New Naxalite Party Manifesto: The newly-formed party of the Naxalites — the Communist Party of India (Marxist-Leninist) —in a draft manifesto released on May 7 committed itself to the task of "liberating rural areas through revolutionary armed agrarian revolution."

As a first step towards this goal, it says, the party wanted the youth —more advanced in the theory and practice of Maoism—to go to villages and work among peasants to carry out "revolutionary political propaganda."

The working class and other sections of the "toiling masses" were, however, not being ignored. The party's task among them was to "build up class struggles and organize democratic movements."

But the aid of the movements among the working class, it said, was only to help the "agrarian revolution" which is the "principal task of people's democratic revolution under the banner of the thoughts of Chairman Mao."

It branded the two other communist parties as "counter-revolutionaries" and said: "We must reject the hoax of parliamentarianism and accomplish the people's democratic revolution through revolutionary people's war by uniting the fighting masses in a revolutionary way under the leadership of the Communist Party and the working class and on the firm basis of workers-peasants alliance."

F. CPI (M-L) Draft Political Resolution: The newly formed CPI (M-L), in its draft political resolution circulated to members in Calcutta in May 15 in the context of the party's first congress in October, emphasized the need to internationalize the national liberation movements in different countries under the leadership of Mr. Mao Tse-tung.

The draft resolution said that world history had entered a new epoch—and that this was the era of Maoism. The task of all revolutionaries in this era was to take "the pledge of uniting with the great people of China, establishing unity with the liberation movements in different countries to develop a revolutionary united front, and destroying imperialism and its main collaborator, modern revisionism."

In the Indian national context, the draft resolution stated that "an excellent revolutionary situation" existed because all the fundamental contradictions between the toiling people and the exploiting classes had considerably increased and also because the ruling classes were now facing a more intense political and economic crisis than at any time before.

Substantiating the contentions in the draft resolution by quoting long passages from Mr. Mao's writings, the new party's leadership explained that the national task today was to advance on the basis of a united front of all revolutionary classes, mainly of the peasants and the working class, for an armed seizure of power. The main strategy would be a peasants' guerrilla war led by the working class.

According to the thesis, the big feudal lords and the collaborationist bureaucratic bourgeosie wielded the real power in the Indian State. It enumerated four enemies of the Indian people—American imperialism, Soviet social-imperialism, feudalism and collaborationist bureaucratic capital.

In an analysis of the Communist movement in India during the last 40 years, the draft resolution said that the leadership had all the time been betraying the cause of the revolution. One reason why the movement had suffered from both Right and Left deviations was that the Communist Party as the party of the working class had never seriously taken into account the role of the peasantry in the agrarian revolution.

G. "Muslim Sena" Formed In Delhi: The Minister of State for Home Affairs, Mr. Vidyacharan Shukla, said in the Rajya Sabha on May 14 that a "Muslim Sena" had been formed in Delhi.

In a written statement, he said: "According to information furnished by the Delhi Administration, Dr. Z. Abbas Malik, municipal councillor, Delhi, announced at a public meeting on February 25, 1969 that he proposed to set up a volunteer corps to provide protection to the religious places of Muslims and to safeguard generally the community's interests in Delhi.

"On April 19, 1969, Dr. Malik said that the organization would be a 'Muslim Sena.' About 20 to 22 volunteers are reported to have appeared in public for the first time on the evening of April 24, 1969, when a public meeting was held in Urdu Bazar.

H. Bus-Train Collision: Twenty-one persons were killed and 35 injured when a private bus collided with the Agra-Bareilly Passenger train at a level crossing between Manzoorgarhi and Aligarh railway stations of Northern Railway on May 12. The gate of the level crossing was open.

Fifteen persons died on the spot, four died on their way to hospital and two succumbed to their injuries in hospital at Aligarh.

The ill-fated bus was carrying a marriage party of 57 persons from Chidhera village in Bulandshahr district to Udhera village in Mathura district. The bridegroom, Mr. Karan Pal, had a providential escape but his father, Mr. Ram Lal, was killed on the spot.

As a result of the collision, the bus was sliced into two. The front portion fell into a ditch and caught fire. The driver and four other passengers were burnt to death. The rear portion of the bus got entangled in the train, and was dragged along for about a furlong where the train stopped. The bodies lay strewn all along the rail track.

I. Kashmir Plateau Sinking: A Srinagar despatch on May 11 stated that an area of three square miles of a plateau in Chadura block, south-east Kashmir, was sinking at a fast pace, threatening five villages with a total population of 5,000 people.

Mud was moving towards the adjacent Lulipura village (population 1,000) which was facing an immediate threat.

About 53 villages along a 35-mile stretch in the Srinagar and Baramulla districts were in hazard as they lay on a sliding belt of land over an unstable rock formation.

The tableland had at various points sunk 10 to 40 feet, burying trees and standing crops.

A team of geologists was said to be examining the soil structure of the area, which was devastated by an earthquake in 1963.

According to villagers, the plateau began to sink with a rumbling sound. But rain on May 9 had accelerated the pace of subsidence of the plateau. A stream that passes through Lulipura had become wider and deeper during the last few days of heavy rain. Some 60 peasants have had all their fruit trees and agricultural crops submerged under the moving earth. Many new streams had started flowing in this area which till the other day was a high and dry plateau.

INDONESIA

A. Trouble In West Irian: Radio Australia reported on May 6 that trouble had started in West Irian ten days before with tribesmen revolting against the Indonesian Government.

The report was confirmed by Indonesian officials in Djakarta who said that the revolting tribesmen had blockaded five airfields.

They said three problems had caused the flare-up:

(1) A district chief in the regency, Wan Mafma, refused to be transferred to another area by the Government. "He was not a good district head."

(2) Some tribesmen wanted the town of Enaratoli to become the capital of the Paniai regency instead of the less central coastal town of Nabira.

(3) Police salaries had not been raised as had civilian salaries. "Some policemen were, therefore, easly influenced by the rebels."

The officials believed the leaders of the movement were mixed up with the so-called "free Papua movement" which wants an independent West Irian.

The Government, meanwhile, denied an Australian broadcast report that rockets had been used in Enaratoli.

On May 7, officials claimed that crack para-commandos were seeking out rebel tribesmen who had been forced to retreat into mountain jungles from the towns.

They said the operations against the rebels had restored Government rule in the mountain towns of Enaratoli and Waghete.

Mr. A. Malik's Statement:

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Adam Malik, told newsmen on May 7 that he expected more trouble in West Irian before the Act of Free Choice, to decide the former Dutch territory's future, was completed in August.

He said that the current trouble in the central western highlands of West Irian, where primitive tribesmen were defying Indonesian rule, was confined to a small number of people. "The situation there is now under control."

The trouble had involved "only several people" who had been incited by a local district chief, Wan Mafma, who refused to be transferred to another place. "You cannot call it a rebellion," he said. Such incidents had happened often in West Irian.

He said that he was planning to visit West Irian, "if possible before August and take some foreign Ambassadors with me."

He declared that the Act of Free Choice in West Irian would go on as scheduled despite trouble with rebel bands in several parts of the territory.

In an interview with Antara, he said: "The Indonesian Government is resolved to conduct the Act of Free Choice in West Irian within the next three months. The Government plans are to complete the Act to decide the territory's future before August 17, Indonesia's National Day."

He said his Government did not mind anti-Indonesian West Irianese pursuing their opposition in a democratic way. "These will be tolerated. But once they pursue these aims by fomenting trouble, they will be arrested."

Background:

In July and August of this year, the people of West Irian, formerly Dutch New Guinea, will be called on to decide their political future. Under the Act of Free Choice, secured for them by United Nations, they will vote in a mini-referendum which will lead to independence or to final integration with Indonesia.

Free choice is a somewhat euphemistic term, partly because most of the region is still at a stone-age level of development, with only rudimentary communications and partly because the poll will not be held on a "one-man one-vote" basis. Instead, an assembly of 1,000 representatives is to be elected which will resolve the issue.

Since 1962, when the Dutch were forced out after a long struggle that showed them to have no reliable friends in or outside the Island, the new masters have worked hard to gain local support, but with only limited success. In name Indonesia is merely a temporary trustee, but it has not acted on this assumption. In fact it is far from certain that Dr. Sukarno, when he agreed to an eventual plebiscite, had the genuine article in mind. At that time any proposal to save the face of the Dutch and oust their rule cheaply found him a willing taker.

Dr. Sukarno might have expected that seven years would suffice to gain the unquestioning allegiance of what he called "true Indonesians of Papuan stock". But he could not keep the promises he made them because "confrontation" with Malaysia left him short of funds. In less than three years he had squandered much goodwill even among the small number of educated locals who had favoured unity with Indonesia on the ground that it would give them a greater say in the running of affairs. Governor Boney, of native blood and originally an enthusiast for Indonesia, was arrested for unco-operative behaviour, and another pro-Sukarno man, L. Mandatjan, an important tribal leader, started to organize armed resistance and denounced the coming referendum as a fraud.

There was dissatisfaction over best jobs going to Javanese. Road construction—West Irian's most urgent need—was neglected while prestige buildings went up in Jayapura (then Sukarnopura and formerly Hollandia). Village reforms were largely shelved.

When Indonesia returned to United Nations, Mr. Malik promised that the referendum would be held in accord with the 1962 terms. The world Organization then freed $30 million frozen when Indonesia left UN and appointed a special commission to watch over its spending. Gen. Sarwo Edhie, popular for his leadership of the liberation campaign, was made commander and head of public security.

Under the 1962 agreement Indonesia has the right to determine the actual terms of the referendum. In 1968 another UN commission was sent out to supervise it, but so far it seems to have kept strictly in the background. No one yet knows for certain how the question to be voted on will be worded.

For the Indonesians themselves, the legalised acquisition of West Irian will be a mixed blessing. The country is too poor to add to the Republic's export earnings. For a long time yet it will be a drain on its revenue and on administrative talent. With unrest still widespread in certain parts of Indonesia, the Government cannot afford to cut down on funds earmarked for the new territory, lest discontent there should flare into open revolt.

Yet West Irian need not be a dead loss for ever. It is now thought that the country is far richer in minerals than was previously believed. If in the next few years the Australian-held parts continue to make economic progress at the present rate, demands in West Irian to follow the example are likely to become vociferous. In the end it is a question of capital and investment.

Indonesia has nothing to spare, but it is inviting Japanese, German and even Dutch consortia to take a hand. Once the main island starts moving again towards prosperity—a realistic prospect in view of Indonesia's natural wealth—the outlook for West Irian will become brighter. Indonesia began its drive for West Irian under nationalist and socialist slogans. It may discover that to turn loss into gain it might have to throw the country open to penetration from abroad in a manner never foreseen when the old colonialists were evicted.

B. President Suharto Defends Action Against Communists: President Suharto said on April 26 that the purge of Communists did not signify hostility towards Communist countries.

In a speech at the Presidential Palace in Djakarta, he said: "In line with our independent and active foreign policy, the elimination of Communist remnants and elements of the coup (1965 abortive communist coup) does not signify that Indonesia is hostile to countries following communism."

He was speaking at a ceremony installing Dr. Arifin Harahap, former Trade Minister, as the new Indonesian Ambassador to Algeria.

He said: "We shall not interfere in the internal affairs of countries which follow the Communist line because Communism may suit the identity of those countries and may have become the will of their peoples."

This speech followed his decision to postpone a planned State visit to Yugoslavia.

He said Indonesia respected the rights of other nations to adapt their outlook to conditions in their countries. "But certainly the attitude of friendship will not come from one side. The other side needs to show a reciprocal attitude."

He said the ban of the Indonesian Communist Party had principal reasons—the party had conducted revolts twice against the State.

He said Indonesia would co-operate and be friendly to every country in the world "disregarding the country's political and social system", and "we only want the country to reciprocate our attitude."

JAPAN

A. Okinawa Day Rallies: Protest rallies were held throughout Japan on April 28 marking the 17th anniversary of occupation of Okinawa and separation of the island from Japan under the San Francisco Treaty.

Violence erupted in central Tokyo in which large forces of police armed with water cannon and tear gas held most of the initiative, preventing attacks on the United States Embassy and the office of the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato. About 6,000 students were arrested and more than 50 people were reported injured in the riots.

A crowd of about 100 students attacked the Prime Minister's private residence when Mr. Sato was at home, in conference with the Foreign Minister, Mr. Kiichi Aiichi. Slight damage was done, but the students were driven off.

There were about 250 "Okinawa Day" rallies throughout Japan in which about 100,000 people took part. Most of them were peaceful, as was the huge joint rally of 40,000 socialists and communists in Tokyo itself—the first such joint rally for many years. It is Socialist and Communist Party policy not to engage in violence.

Most of the serious violence in Tokyo occurred at railway stations. A few carriages were burnt and one police box destroyed. Train services were brought to a halt.

Altogether about 5,000 students took part in the riots, wearing helmets and carrying staves. However, they were unable to concentrate their forces and made little progress towards their main targets—the US Embassy and the Prime Minister's office.

However, the student demonstrations misfired and few workers joined the students in battle, although there were many onlookers. It was the first time the students fell far short of their professed aim. One reason was the overwhelming strength of the police which had about 12,500 men on duty in Tokyo. Another reason was stated to be that rioters now face stiffer legal penalties. Under the anti-riot provisions of the penal code, rioters may in future go to prison for two to three years.

A further explanation of the students' lack of success was that the public had grown a little weary of them. They were no longer the novelty they were two years ago. Several hundred of their leaders had been held in prison for months already.

In all 965 people were arrested,—a record since the War.

The Japan Socialist Party said that violence by extreme Left-wing students only gave the Government an excuse to implement suppressive policies. The riots had done nothing to further their stated objective—the return of Okinawa to Japan by the United States.

The Democratic Socialist Party pointed out that the radical Zengakuren students who rioted had revolution as their aim and were not to be confused with the normal student movements.

The Communist Party dismissed the student extremists as "Trotskyite gangs" and the Buddhist Komeito Party was also severely critical of their behaviour.

One fear of all Opposition parties was that student violence might play into the hands of the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party at the next elections, expected later this year or in early 1970.

Final police reports showed that damage estimated at 225 million yen (£260,000) was caused to buildings, much of it round Tokyo station and the Ginza shopping area. The police collected a tally of 627 staves, 222 iron pipes and 16 petrol bombs.

B. Harbour Development Plan: The Port and Harbour Council, in a report to the Transport Minister, Mr. Ken Harada, has recommended that 400 ports and harbours in the country should be expanded and modernized in the next five years to ease congestion and to facilitate full-scale operation of container ships.

The Council is the advisory body of the Minister. It had been discussing the five-year plan drafted by the Transport Ministry in accordance with Cabinet policy.

The recommendations said the following steps were necessary, among others, to bring the Japanese ports and harbours to a level fully matching the trend for vessels to become larger in size and faster in speed:

(1) Construction of 78 berths for liner use at nine foreign trade ports, such as Tokyo, Nagoya and Shimonoseki, as well as 17 container ship berths at the ports of Tokyo, Osaka and Kobe.

(2) Development of port-harbour facilities at 12 ports, such as Niigata and Kashma, to accelerate industrial progress in such regions.

(3) Building of large and deep berths for domestic marine transportation at 313 ports.

About 800,000 million yen ($2,220 million) should be allocated for these construction and development works, according to the Council. If the project works successfully, the present congestion of the six biggest ports will be eased to a large extent with the ratio of anchoring ships to total incoming and outgoing vesssels dropping below 10 per cent in fiscal 1972 from the 12..9 per cent recorded in 1967.

MALAYSIA

A. Islamic Conference: Representatives of 23 nations participated in an International Islamic Conference held in Kuala Lumpur from April 21 to 27.

Delegates and observers from Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, Libya, Sudan, Somalia, United Arab Republic, Turkey, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, South Yemen, Iran, Afghanistan, Pakistan, India, Ceylon, Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore and the Philippines attended.

The Conference urged Muslim nations to discuss the issue of Jerusalem and Israeli aggression and take steps for recovery of the Holy City and usurped territories of Islamic nations.

A resolution to this effect was sponsored jointly by Pakistan and Tunisia and was supported by India, Malaysia, Jordan and Lebanon.

The resolution condemned Israel for having usurped Arab territories, in particular Jerusalem. It called upon all Muslim nations to support Palestinians in their efforts to recover Jerusalem and other territories.

The resolution also called upon Islamic nations to aid Palestinian people, who had become the victims of Israeli aggression, with all possible succour and aid.

A three-man delegation from the Palestine Liberation Organization, El Fatah, which was barred from the Conference when it arrived two days earlier, was allowed on April 26 to hear the debate. The three members, who said earlier that they wanted the Conference to call for a Jehad (holy war) supported by all Muslim nations, declined to comment on the resolution.

Their leader and publicity chief, Mr. Abu Hisham, was also invited to meet the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman.

The Conference, the first of its kind, also recommended reduction in trade competition between Muslim nations in order to increase the volume of their trade.

It stressed the necessity to start joint ventures by Muslim countries, exchange of technical experts, trade displays and closer co-ordination between Muslim Chambers of Commerce.

Among other decisions were the acceptance of transplanting of the cornea and the hearts between Muslims and non-Muslims and the practice of family planning.

The Conference recommended that Malaysia, the host country, should be the co-ordinating authority among the Muslim countries until the next international conference was held.

It also recommended the setting up of an Islamic news agency to facilitate the exchange of factual news among Muslims.

A resolution on the "propagation of Islamic teachings" adopted at its plenary session called for co-operation between news agencies in Islamic countries as a first step towards the establishment of the proposed Islamic news agency.

The Conference also decided that: insurance based on interest was forbidden but may be practised on a co-operative basis, and experts should get together to try to produce a uniform Muslim calendar fixing the fasting and festival periods for Muslims.

The Conference reached no agreement on whether present methods of banking and interest-earning were permissible and this was put off for further study.

At the closing ceremony on April 27, the Tengku warned that there was a real danger of the West Asian conflict escalating into a religious war.

Referring to a report on the West Asian situation given by the Arab delegation at the Conference, he said: "There can be no doubt about the seriousness of the situation.

"There is obvious sympathy for our brother Muslims and unless settlement with the Arabs is reached, there is a real danger of the conflict escalating into a religious war.

"It is my hope and prayer that the Big Powers in this world will use their best efforts to try to settle this explosive issue as quickly as possible".

He added: "The religion of Islam is not a dead religion as others want to believe. It is very much alive and Governments of Muslims countries should realise this and give it encouragement and incentive, which it so richly deserves".

B. Penang-Kelantan Road Project: Malaysia is planning a new road spanning the far north of the country that could revive the economy of the north-west island State of Penang and bring prosperity to Kelantan in the north-east.

The 185-mile road from Butterworth—in Penang State but on the mainland—to Kota Bahru in Kelantan would cut to five or six hours and by about 400 miles a road journey that now takes two days.

The road would cost about £20 million and take five years to build and now the United States, Canada, Japan and Denmark have all offered to carry out a feasibility study which would cost about £400,000 with Malaysia paying only local minor costs.

The planned highway had been in the melting pot for about 10 years, but earlier this year the Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, indicated the matter was getting greater priority, and the Transport Minister, Haji Sardon Zubir, said work had started on aligning existing roads along the port.

The greatest supporters of the project are the people of Penang with its docks at Butterworth and on the island itself. They believe the road will help revive an economy which has not recovered from the fall-off in trade caused by Indonesia's confrontation with Malaysia from 1963 to 1966. They are supported by the Malaysian International Chamber of Commerce.

A. Pro-Panchayat Campaign In Villages: According to a Palace communique issued in Khatmandu on May 9, King Mahendra had entrusted to Mr. Vishwabandhu Thapa, former Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ministers and now a member of the King's special advisory council, the conduct of the "go to the village" national campaign in an organized manner. Mr. Thapa will head a 17-member managing committee.

This campaign was launched in December, 1967 after Nepal's National Panchayat had given a mandate in September, 1967 that only non-party panchayat system was suitable for Nepal.

B. Susta Border To Be Re-located: A joint survey to "re-locate" the border in the Susta region was agreed on during a meeting between Indian and Nepalese Foreign Ministers in New Delhi on May 6.

At the talks, agreement on a fresh survey was reached. This symbolized the large measure of agreement on ways to remove various irritants between the two countries.

Talks on the Susta border, where pillars had either been washed away because of the change in the course of the Gandak or had crumbled had ended inconclusively at Balmikinagar, Nepal.

C. American Mountaineers Killed: Seven members of the American expedition to Dhaulagiri were killed in the last week of April by an avalanche as they advanced further from their base camp.

The accident was described in climber circles as the worst in the mountaineering history of Nepal.

The expedition consisted of 10 Americans and four sherpas.

The American Ambassador in Nepal, Mrs. Carol C. Laise, confirming the tragedy gave the name of those killed. They were Boyd Everett, leader, Paul A. Gerhard, John Vincent, Hoeman, David Siedman and Dr. William Ross. The two sherpas killed were Tenzing and Pem Putra.

The American team had left Khatmandu on April 1 to conquer the 26,975-feet-high Dhaulagiri peak without the help of oxygen. Detailed information was lacking. Attempts made by a helicopter to contact the party ended in failure because of bad weather. The party was reported to be near Jomosom in West Nepal, a little ahead of Pokhra.

D. "Tukuche" Peak Climbed: The Foreign Ministry announced on May 13 that a five-member Swiss expedition had scaled the 22,682-feet Tukuche Peak on May 10.

The expedition, led by Dr. G. G. Hartmann, reached the summit in 24 days. The expedition had been held up for five days by heavy snow at Dambas Pass at a height of 15,000 feet.

Tukuche in Western Nepal was a virgin peak. It was never attempted before.

A. Economic Relations With Indonesia: A 22-member mission led by the Finance Minister, Dr. Goh Keng Swee, returned on March 30 from Indonesia after a ten-day visit during which it got approval in principle from the Indonesian Foreign Investment Committee for investment of nearly $20 million in Indonesia by Singapore businessmen.

The mission was the first Singapore had sent abroad for investment. All the earlier missions to Africa, Europe, the United States, Japan and other countries were for either greater trade or soliciting foreign investment in Singapore.

Summing up, Dr. Goh said his mission had made a "real breakthrough" in relations between Singapore and Indonesia, which had been constantly plagued by suspicions of Indonesia about Singapore in that Singapore businessmen thrived on smuggled goods from Indonesia and that Singapore Chinese operated closely with Indonesian Chinese in illegal practices.

Dr. Goh said that in his talks with President Suharto smuggling was mentioned, but he had assured Indonesia that Singapore would do its best to cut out smuggling.

B. World Bank Loan: A loan of $20.5 million by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) to assist the Public Utilities Board of Singapore in financing the continued expansion of its electric power distribution system has been officially announced.

Four previous World Bank loans, totalling $53.7 million, assisted in financing earlier PUB projects for electric power generation and distribution and water supply.

THAILAND

A. IFC Assistance For Construction Materials Industry: The International Finance Corporation (IFC), a World Bank affiliate for investment in private business, has decided to help finance a $60 million expansion of the construction materials industry, a key factor in Thailand's economic growth.

The investment drew record backing by ten major private financial institutions in the United States and in Europe. IFC is committing $22.1 million to help finance expansion of Thailand's biggest building materials producer, the Siam Cement Group of companies.

Private financial institutions bought for their own portfolios $14.1 million, or 64 per cent, of the IFC commitment. This exceeded considerably participation in any previous IFC investment.

IFC's transaction with the six-company Siam Cement Group involves financing five separate but inter-related companies which are carrying out four capital expansion programmes. A financing plan was worked out for the project to serve the dual purpose of providing funds as needed to the four expansion programmes, and to make possible extensive participation by private foreign investors.

The Siam Cement Group industries being financed include a cement plant, a 150,0000-ton steel rolling mill, an asbestos cement sheet plant and a concrete pipe plant. Siam Cement Group companies produce and sell most of the cement and other building materials used in Thailand. The Group is one of the largest cement manufacturers in Asia.

IFC's commitment in the form of an $18 million loan, and equity investments totalling approximately $ 4.1 million.

B. Mishandling Of Meo Trouble: In a speech delivered recently before university students in Bangkok, King Bhumibol Adulyadej rebuked his Government for mishandling a tribal revolt that had grown into a jungle war.

The King warned that the conflict foreshadowed incessant trouble unless the authorities succeeded in undoing their mistakes.

He spoke of a lack of co-ordination between the police and the Army. He also suggested the need for a change of attitude on the part of officials engaged in resettling the dissidents, predominantly Meo hill peoples who were being pressed into settlements in the plains.

[The resettlement programme, begun two years ago, has the effect of checking the movements of the nomadic Meo, who originate in Yunnan, in China. But the measure is ostensibly designed to end the Meos' dependence on the illegal opium trade, and it is resistance to this loss that the communists have sought to exploit, apparently fairly successfully. Meo attacks on police outposts are reported almost each day in provinces within 480 km of Bangkok, skirting the Laos border.]

The King said: "There are very few Meo people who are communists, but if we make mistakes, the whole Meo tribe will turn communist."

Privately, he told the new Cabinet that he was greatly concerned about the tribal situation.

Background:

Nomadic, speaking little-known languages, following esoteric customs, hill tribes live in the border regions of Thailand. They include the Karens, Meos, Lahu, Akha and Lisu. One tribe called "the Spirits of the Falling Leaves" is so scarce and fugitive that some experts doubt if it still exists. But the Meos are neither scarce nor retiring. There are about 50,000 of them in northern Thailand. As in neighbouring Laos, their warlike qualities are exploited by Communists and anti-Communists. The North Viet-Namese and Pathet Lao have organized the Laotian Meos into guerrilla bands which fight pro-Government Meos led by the redoubtable Col. Vang Pao. The Meo rebellion in Thailand is closely linked with the tribal vendetta in Laos.

The Ministry of the Interior insists that the cadre leaders and some of the rank-and-file of the Meo rebels are infiltrators from Laos and southern China. Since tribal people move across frontiers without passports and usually without any idea that there are frontiers, it is difficult to prove or refute the official version.

Trouble flared up in November, 1968 when heavily armed Meos attacked a village in Phitsanuloke province in north-central Thailand. The revolt spread rapidly to the neighbouring provinces of Loei and Petchaboon. In desultory fighting, about 40 Border Police and soldiers were killed and an undisclosed number wounded. Meo casualties were estimated at between 200 and 300.

The Government used napalm in air raids on villages held by the insurgents. Officials declared that the villagers were warned to move out before the raids; but some foreign anthropologists working among the tribes claim that this was not so, and that some innocent Meos were the victims of napalm.

According to Press reports, privately some Thai officials admit that it was a grave psychological blunder—one of those which the King had in mind when he made his views public. But at the time, leaders of the Government felt that the Meos needed shock treatment. The Deputy Defence Minister, Air Marshal Dawee Chullasapya, remarked on the napalm raids: "They (the Meo rebels) must be got rid of, once and for all."

Politics is only a part of the Meo problem. The traditional Meo way of living is a constant source of annoyance to bureaucrats. In the past their method of shifting cultivation ("slash-and-burn") and their reliance on the opium poppy were tolerated (especially since many officials took a lucrative "cut" from the opium trade). But in the last decade Thailand has moved swiftly into the modern world. Forest conservation is now as fashionable as in the West; and under gentle pressure from United Nations, Thailand has outlawed the opium traffic. Increasingly the Meos have found themselves at odds with the new order.

Attempts to move them to permanent settlements and to wean them from the poppy cult have largely failed. The effort has merely caused more friction between them and the Thais.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. British Budget: Britain's new Budget proposals presented to the House of Commons in London on April 15 showed no increase in duty on butter or cigarettes, nor on beer, spirits and tobacco. However, the prices of wines and sherry will go up.

Petrol prices will increase too, but there will be no change in the tax on cars. Clothing, furniture, soft drinks and even fur coats were left untouched. But a purchase tax will be levied for the first time on potato crisps and paper handkerchiefs.

Gamblers, punters and casino operators will be hit hard So will be entertainers like the Beatles. But painters and authors will get some relief.

Pensions will go up. There will be no change in the rate of income-tax or surtax. On the contrary, over one million persons will benefit from income-tax concessions.

The Chancellor, Mr. Roy Jenkins, announced a new contractual savings scheme.

He did not have a good word for the trade unions which were on the war path against the Government's proposal for union reform.

In a sharp attack on strikers, he said that Britain's competitive position had been damaged by irresponsible industrial action and further corrective measures were necessary. He announced that the Government would go ahead with some of the important provisions in the White Paper, "In Place of Strife," during the present session of Parliament.

This constituted a sharp rebuff to the trade union leaders whose opposition had caused a rift in the Labour Party unprecedented in its recent history.

Mr. Jenkins told Parliament that "irresponsible industrial action" had damaged Britain's competitive position. But, he could report that Britain had achieved some progress in the changes in the structure of its economy, and his Budget was not so stringent as last year. His Budget a year ago—four months after devaluation—took £923 million out of the economy, mainly by increased taxation.

The new Budget was said to mark the start "of a major effort by this administration to redirect the course of the Federal Government in domestic affairs."

Two departments with heavy responsibilities in dealing with social ills—Health, Education and Welfare and Housing and Urban Development—shared in the Budget cuts.

Atomic energy and space programmes were reduced by $140 million. The budget for veterans showed a drop of $245 million—mostly reflecting planned sales of assets—and about $185 million was dropped from international programmes.

B. Mr. A. Dubcek Replaced As Communist Party Chief In Czechoslovakia: The reformist Communist leader, Mr. Alexander Dubcek, was replaced at the Czechoslovak Communist Party Central Committee's plenary meeting in Warsaw on April 17 by Mr. Gustav Husak.

Mr. Husak is the head of the Slovak wing of the Czechoslovak Communist Party. He was appointed Czechoslovak Communist Party chief.

Mr. Dubcek remained a member of a new 11-member Presidium.

New Presidium:

On April 18, the Czechoslovak Communist Party announced its new 11-man Presidium under the leadership of Dr. Gustav Husak.

Prague Radio, in reporting the change in the party leadership, which dropped leading progressives like Mr. Josef Smrkovsky and Mr. Josef Spacek from the Presidium, also announced that the progressive editor of the party newspaper Rudo Pravo, Mr. Jiri Sekera, had resigned.

President Ludvik Svoboda and the Federal Prime Minister, Mr. Oldrich Cernik also remained in the Presidium, but several other known liberals were removed. They were Mr. Bohumil Simon (Head of the Prague City party net-work), Mr. Josef Spacek (the Moravian party leader), Mr. Vladimir Kabrna and Mr. Libuse Hrddinova.

However, Mr. Karel Polacek, the Czechoslovak trade union leader who joined the new Presidium, is regarded as a man of pronounced progressive views. His inclusion in the new party leadership was presumably an acknowledgement of the political strength of the trade union movement. In the past few months the Czechoslovak trade union movement had become an independent political force in the country for the first time, generally backing the reformist line.

These signals were still a mystery to scientists.

The four 228.6-metre tubular antennae of Explorer-38, which extend to an overall length of 475 metres, were designed to monitor low frequency radio signals below 10 megahert—a region of spectrum frequency which includes the standard of radio bands—that cannot penetrate the ionosphere to be heard on Earth.

E. 104th Chemical Element Created: Nuclear scientists in Berkeley (California) claimed on April 15 that they had created a new chemical element, the 104th known to man.

University of California scientists said they had identified two forms—or isotopes of a new metallic substance.

Their claim could lead to a dispute with Soviet scientists who had reported in 1964 that they had created an isotope of element 104.

The Berkeley research team—which included the Finnish physicist, Dr. Matti Nurmia of the University of Helsinki, and his two Finnish students, Karl and Pirkko Eskola—said that element 104 would appear lead grey in colour if a visible amount of it could be collected.

F. Structure Of Immunity Molecule Unravelled: Scientists have unravelled the master molecule of immunity, the body's main defence against disease.

Determination of the complete chemical structure of the immunoglobulin (better known as gamma globulin) molecule was announced on April 14 by a Rockefeller University biochemist, Dr. Gerald Edelman, at a meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

The immunoglobulin elucidated, among the largest protein molecules ever analysed, contains 1,320 amino acid building blocks in a looping chain with a trefoil pattern. Each leaf is slightly different from the others, but the left side of each leaf is a mirror image of the right.

The long looping three-dimension chain of the molecule is made up of 19,996 atoms.

The achievement has far-reaching implications in the future for improving human health: in manipulating the body's disease-fighting machinery to do a better job, in overcoming rejection in heart and other organ transplants, and perhaps even in cancer control.

G. New West German President: The 69-year-old Social Democrat candidate, Mr. Gustav Heinemann, was elected President of West Germany in West Berlin on March 5.

In two previous ballots, neither candidate secured the absolute majority required. To gain the nod on a third or subsequent voting round, only a simple majority was needed.

Communists continued their "harassment" of traffic on West Berlin's road-links as the defiant West German Federal Assembly conducted the voting.

East Germany had closed the highway linking Berlin with Helmstedt at 7 a.m. GMT on March 5, re-opened it to traffic three hours later and then closed it again at 1 p.m.

*H. Indus Valley Civilization—New Light: A team of Finnish scientists announced in Copenhagen on February 24 the penetration—by logic, intuition and computer—of the language of India's ancient Indus Valley civilization that vanished about 4,000 years ago and left a mysterious legacy of thousands of inscriptions that defied deciphering until now.

The team, sponsored by the Scandinavian Institute of Asian Studies in Copenhagen said that the breakthrough came only during February and had already provided a key that threw open the doors to new understanding of the Indus Valley people who built beautiful, well-planned cities with large public baths and the earliest known covered drainage systems in Asia.

"Our key already gave the answer to the mystery of the origin of the Hindu caste system", said Dr. Asko Parpola, one of the four Finnish researchers on the team. "It also proved for certain that the bearers of the Indus culture were Dravidians."

He said that the deciphered Indus Valley inscriptions showed that the caste system existed long before the Aryans came to India. The caste system was governed by religious taboos against pollution of the body and the soul which also helped explain the prominence of big public baths in the Indus civilization.

The announcement by St. Luke's Hospital said that the exact cause of Mr. Karp's death would not be known until a post-mortem was completed. "But it is suspected that the patient suffered acute rejection complicated by pneumonia and kidney failure."

Karp (47) lived for three days with the artificial device before it was exchanged for the heart of a 40-year-old woman.

ASIAN RECORDER

June 18—24, 1969

Regd. No D-727
Vol. XV No. 25

INDIA

SUMMARY: President Zakir Husain Passes Away; Aeronautics Committee's Recommendations; Losses In Public Undertakings; SSP Annual Conference; Naxalites' Plans.

A. Dr. Zakir Husain Passes Away—Mr. V. V. Giri Sworn-In As Acting President: Dr. Zakir Husain, the third President of the Indian Republic and a distinguished statesman, educationist and scholar, died in New Delhi on May 3.

Dr. Husain, who had not been keeping well after his hectic tour of North-East India, had a severe heart attack from which he did not recover.

It was in the bathroom that Dr. Husain collapsed. Doctors who had come for a routine check-up and for taking an electro-cardiogram made intense efforts to resuscitate him but to no avail.

According to the official version issued later, Dr. Husain was preparing to go from his room to another room where the doctors were waiting to examine him. He suddenly collapsed as a result of "a massive heart attack and died within three minutes in spite of all efforts by the doctors to revive him."

Dr. Husain (72) would have completed two years as President on May 13. He was the first President of the Indian Union to die in harness.

The Government declared a 13-day State mourning. Flags were flown at half-mast during the period of mourning, and all official receptions were cancelled.

Dr. Husain was buried on the grounds of Jamia Millia on the outskirts of Delhi on May 5.

The funeral was attended by a galaxy of foreign dignitaries who had come specially for it. Among them were the Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, the Prime Ministers of Yugoslavia, Afghanistan and Nepal, the Chogyal of Sikkim, the Duke of Kent representing the Queen of England and Mr. George Romney, on behalf of the US President.

A 31-gun salute was fired and 24 service buglers—18 from the Army and four from the Navy and two from the Air Force—sounded the Last Post. After a brief pause of five seconds, the buglers sounded the Rouse.

The Chinese Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Chen Chao-yuan, was among those present at the Jamia Millia burial ground. Earlier, the Chinese Charge d'Affaires had called at the Durbar Hall of Rashtrapati Bhavan and placed a wreath on the body.

The Chinese flag at the Embassy flew at half-mast.

A black-bordered Gazette of India Extraordinary issued by the President's Secretariat said that in Dr. Zakir Husain's death the country had lost "a person of great intellectual and moral eminence who embodied man's heritage of nobility, goodness and truth".

Dr. Husain's wisdom and healing touch, it said, were of immense value to the nation during periods of stress and strain. "His vision and adherence to principles, his grace and dignity, his high aesthetic sensibility, his understanding and compassion added a new lustre to the high office he held and earned for him the affection and admiration of all sections of the people".

Only one Viceroy and a Governor-General of India had earlier died in office. The last one to die was the Viceroy, Earl of Mayo, in 1872. He was stabbed by a convict while inspecting the Settlement at Port Blair in the Andaman Islands.

Earl Elgin, a Governor-General, died in 1863 after he had suffered a heart attack while crossing a suspension bridge in Dharamsala, then in Punjab. A physician was sent from Calcutta, who reached there after Earl Elgin had died.

Provision For Begum Husain:

The Government of India announced on May 9 that Shahjehan Begum, widow of Dr. Zakir Husain, would get a yearly pension of Rs. 15,000.

She would be entitled to a house at concessional rent and medical facilities of her choice. She was allotted the Motilal Nehru Marg house, once occupied by Mrs. Lalita Shastri.

Mr. V. V. Giri Sworn-in As Acting President:

Immediately after Dr. Husain's death was announced on May 3, the Vice-President, Mr. V. V. Giri was sworn-in to act as President by the Chief Justice, Mr. M. Hidayatullah,

Mr. Giri flew back to the capital from Bhopal after being informed of the death of Dr. Zakir Husain.

Mr. Giri was sworn-in under Article 65 of the Constitution which lays down that "in the event of the occurrence of any vacancy in the office of the Presidency by reason of his death, resignation or removal or otherwise, the Vice-President shall act as President until the date on which a new President enters upon his office".

A new President has to be elected as soon as possible and, in any case, not later than six months from May 3. The new President will hold office for a full five-year term.

This is in accordance with Article 62(2) which says: "An election to fill a vacancy in the office of President, occurring by reason of his death, resignation or removal or otherwise, shall be held as soon as possible after, and in no case later than six months from the date of occurrence of the vacancy; and the person elected to fill the vacancy shall be entitled to hold office for the full term of five years upon his office."

Such an eventuality has occurred for the first time and, pending election of the new President, Mr. Giri will have all the powers and immunities of the President. Article 65 (3) says: "The Vice-President shall, during, and in respect, of the period while he is so acting as, or discharging the functions of President, have all the powers and immunities of the President.."

Mr. Giri took the oath of office in the following words: "I, Varahagiri Venkata Giri, solemnly affirm that I will faithfully execute the office of President of India and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and the law and that I will devote myself to the service and well-being of the people of India".

A Press communique said later that "Mr. V. V. Giri, Vice-President of India, has assumed charge as acting President of India in pursuance of Article 65(1) of the Constitution."

According to constitutional experts, Mr. V. V. Giri is President, not "acting President".

The Constitution, it is explained, does not provide for an "acting President" and all that Article 65 says is that the Vice-President "shall act as President" in the event of "the occurrence of any vacancy in the office of the President by reason of his death, resignation or removal or otherwise" till the election of a new President.

They drew attention to Para 3 of the Article and the Second Schedule which makes it clear that the Vice-President, when he acts as President, will have all the powers and immunities of the President and shall be entitled to the same emoluments, allowances and privileges.

Mr. V. V. Giri's Life-sketch:

Mr. Varahagiri Venkata Giri was born at Berhampore, Orissa, on August 10, 1894. After graduating from the Kallikota College, Berhampore, he joined the National University of Ireland, Dublin, from where he emerged as a barrister-at-law. Soon after his return to India, Mr. Giri joined the Indian National Congress. He made trade unionism his special field. He was among those who were responsible for the formation of the All-India Trade Union Congress, of which he was President twice. A long period of his public life was devoted to building up the All-India Railwaymen's Federation. He was its General Secretary for seven years, and President for another seven years. Elected to the Madras Assembly in 1937, he was Labour and Industry Minister in the first popular Ministry in Madras during 1937-39. He was re-elected to the Madras Legislature in the General Elections in 1946 and held the portfolio of Labour for about a year in the Prakasam Cabinet. After the resignation of the Cabinet in 1947, he served as India's High Commissioner in Ceylon till 1950. In 1952, Mr. Giri was returned to the Lok Sabha from the Pathapatnam constituency, in Madras State, on the Congress ticket. He was India's Labour Minister from May, 1952 to September, 1954. He was Governor of Uttar Pradesh during 1957-60, Governor of Kerala during 1961-65 and Governor of Mysore during 1965-67. He was elected Vice-President of India on May 6, 1967.

Tributes:

Speaking on behalf of a nation in mourning, the acting President, Mr. V. V. Giri and the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, gave a call for re-dedication to the ideals Dr. Zakir Husain stood for.

In a broadcast to the nation, Mr. Giri described Dr. Husain as "a real Ajathasatru" (one who has no enemies) and said: "The best way of paying our homage to the sacred memory of this illustrious and noble son of our Motherland is to remain united in this hour of calamity and to re-dedicate ourselves anew to the noble task of fulfilling the sublime ideals of secularism and nationalism—the guiding goals of our Motherland."

Mrs. Gandhi, in her broadcast, recalled the words Dr. Husain had spoken on his being elected President in May, 1967: "The whole of India is my home and its people my family." Today, she lamented, that family and that India mourned his passing away.

In Madras, the former President, Dr . S. Radhakrishnan, described Dr. Husain as "a great gentleman and a distinguished educationist."

The former Governor-General, Mr. C. Rajagopalachari, said: "There was no worthier citizen in India than Dr. Zakir Husain."

On May 5, the two Houses of Parliament passed an identical resolution pledging to promote the high ideals of patriotism, national unity, secularism and the service of humanity which the late President, Dr. Zakir Husain, had always upheld.

They expressed their profound sense of sorrow at his sudden death and pledged themselves to uphold the ideals that had distinguished his career as an educationist, patriot and President.

Members of both Houses, led by the Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy, and including the Prime Minister and her Cabinet colleagues, drove straight from Parliament House to Rashtrapati Bhavan to pay homage to Dr. Husain. Both Houses earlier adjourned without transacting any other business as a mark of respect to Dr. Husain's memory.

Plans For New President's Election:

The Chief Election Commissioner, Mr. S. K. Sen-Verma said on May 7 that a notification inviting nominations for the office of the President would be issued in good time.

This, he explained, was necessary to avoid all exigencies calling for commencement of the election proceedings afresh.

He pointed out that Article 62 (2) of the Constitution contained a mandatory provision that the election to fill a vacancy in the office of President "shall be held" as soon as possible after, and in no case later than, six months from the date of occurrence of the vacancy.

Section 7 of the President and Vice-President Elections Act of 1952 lays down: "If a candidate whose nomination has been made and is found to be in order on scrutiny dies after the time fixed for nomination and a report of his death is received by the Returning Officer before the commencement of the poll, the Returning Officer shall, upon being satisfied of the fact of the death of the candidate, countermand the poll and report the fact to the Election Commission and all proceedings with reference to the election shall be commenced anew in all respects as if for a new election."

Countermanding of poll and commencement of the election proceedings afresh would mean postponement of the election by at least a month or so.

Section 4 of the President and Vice-President Elections Act stipulates that a minimum of 28 days and a maximum of 35 days would be required to hold the poll from the date of issue of the Gazette notification calling for nominations.

Section 4 of the Act says: "The Election Commission shall, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint for every election—(A) the last date for making nominations which shall be a date not later than the 14th day and not earlier than the eighth day after the date of publication of the notification. (B) A date for the scrutiny of nominations which shall be a date not later than the third day after the last date for making nominations. (C) The last date for the withdrawal of candidates which shall be the third day after the date of the scrutiny of nominations. (D) The date on which a poll shall, if necessary, be taken which shall be a date not earlier than the 15th day after the last date for withdrawal of the candidates."

The value of all MLA's votes, as on May 7, 1969, was stated to be 4,30,847 and MPs' 4,30,848, totalling 8,61,695 votes, out of which the Congress Party has approximately 4,48,525 votes.

To-date there are 10 vacancies in Parliament (four in the Lok Sabha, six in the Rajya Sabha) and 35 in State Assemblies.

The electoral college of the Presidential election, according to Article 54, consists of: (a) the elected members of both Houses of Parliament; and (b) the elected members of the Legislative Assemblies of the States.

Under the formula given in Article 55, the value of a vote of each Member of Parliament has been worked out as 576. The value of Assembly members' votes differs from State to State, as given in the table below:

States	Vote Value per Member	Elected Members	Total Votes
Uttar Pradesh	174	425	73,950
Bihar	146	318	46,428
Maharashtra	146	270	39,420
Tamil Nadu	144	234	33,695
Kerala	127	133	16,891
Andhra Pradesh	125	287	35,875
West Bengal	125	280	35,000
Orissa	125	140	17,500
Gujarat	123	168	20,664
Rajasthan	110	184	20,240
Madhya Pradesh	109	296	32,264
Mysore	109	216	23,544
Punjab	107	104	11,128
Assam	94	126	11,844
Haryana	94	81	7,614
Jammu and Kashmir	59	75	4,425
Nagaland	8	46	368

In the last election, Dr. Zakir Husain had secured 4,71,244 votes, while his nearest rival, former Chief Justice Mr. Subba Rao got 3,63,971 votes. The total of other six candidates' votes was 2,833.

During the 1967 Presidential election, Parliament was not in session and the Election Commission issued special permits to 86 MPs to cast their votes in their respective States, 22 of them having later applied for cancellation of their permits.

Though some Union Territories like Himachal Pradesh, Manipur and Pondicherry have Legislative Assemblies, the elected members of these Assemblies will not be able to participate in the Presidential election, Union Territories not being covered under Article 54 of the Constitution.

B. Indian Withdrawal From Nathu La—Chinese Ultimatum Denied: On May 11, China accused India of making up the story of a Chinese ultimatum for withdrawal of Indian troops from Nathu La border pass in order to aid the Soviet anti-China campaign.

An Indian Defence Ministry spokesman had said on April 26 that on April 23, China had given a 24-hour ultimatum to withdraw its troops from Nathu La or else the Chinese would "open fire." He said the Indian troops had stayed and the situation remained normal.

The official New China News Agency (NCNA) said a responsible member of the Chinese Foreign Ministry's First Department of Asian Affairs had lodged a strong protest at a meeting with Mr. B. C. Mishra, Charge d'Affaires ad interim of the Indian Embassy in Peking. "The Chinese Government and people hereby lodge a strong protest with the Indian Government against its lies and slanders and acts of provocation."

The NCNA said what the Chinese troops on the China-Sikkim border actually told the Indian troops on April 23 and 24 was that they could send five unarmed men into Chinese territory to retrieve Indian linoleum which blew across the border on April 21.

"The Indian troops replied in a broadcast on April 24 that they would not come to get back the linoleum and at the same time uttered some highly offensive words."

It said the Indian Foreign Ministry also had protested that three Chinese uniformed personnel crossed into Indian territory on March 30. "This is likewise sheer fabrication and trouble-making."

"Recently," it added, "Indian planes have intruded into China's air-space on many occasions, and even penetrated deep into China's Yatung and Gyantse areas for provocations. Indian troops carried out large-scale military manoeuvres in Sikkim and Indian military personnel have incessantly intruded into Chinese territory by crossing the China-Sikkim boundary at Jelep La.

"Obviously, it is none other than the Indian Government itself that is carrying out incessant provocations and creating tension along the China-Sikkim boundary and the Sino-Indian border."

C. East Pakistan Rifles Fire On Fishermen: Two Indian fishermen were killed when men of the East Pakistan Rifles fired indiscriminately on a group of fishermen at Kaliani Beel on the India-Pakistan border near Bongaon in 24-Parganas district on April 30.

A spokesman of the Border Security Force said that one of the fishermen died on the spot and the other in hospital.

D. Security In Indian Ocean Area: The Deputy External Affairs Minister, Mr. Surendra Pal Singh, said in the Lok Sabha on May 1 that India and several other South-East Asian countries were making efforts to keep Big Powers from interfering in or dominating the Indian Ocean.

He said that India was aware that certain Big Powers felt that their global responsibility extended to the Indian Ocean as well as other areas. The Government's policy was opposed to this. Many of the countries in the region also felt the same way.

The question arose in the context of the projected British naval withdrawal from Singapore in 1970 and the reported suggestion by Indonesia for a common policy by South-East Asian countries for naval arrangements.

Mr. Surendra Pal Singh, however, made it clear that India's policy of opposition to any defence pact continued. The ultimate responsibility for the defence of a country rested with that country itself and, he said, the Defence Ministry was taking steps to strengthen the Navy.

India, he added, had not been approached by Indonesia with any proposal regarding joint naval activities in the Indian Ocean. The Government's policy favoured the exclusion from the Indian Ocean of any interference or domination by any Power and it would like the Indian Ocean to become an area of peace and co-operation in future. "We have reason to believe that the Indonesian Government holds similar views."

E. Mrs. I. Gandhi On Nuclear Umbrella: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, rejected in the Rajya Sabha on May 1 a suggestion that India should ask both USSR and USA for a nuclear 'umbrella' against any nuclear threat from China. "I do not think that would be in our interest."

She said that if there was a nuclear attack on India, "then it will not be confined to India and China alone. The whole world will be entangled in that and that will change the picture. However, I would like to say that we are considering all these things."

India, she added, was going ahead with research and other work in atomic energy for peaceful purposes. "We think that the danger to us is far more from conventional weapons. Whatever we want to do, it is important to strengthen our industrial and economic base before we are able to undertake anything."

Now India had set up a net-work of monitoring stations to detect both underground and overhead nuclear explosions. China has had eight nuclear explosions since 1964.

F. Nuclear Agreement With France: French atomic energy officials announced in Paris on May 7 an Agreement to help India build a fast neutral nuclear reactor and train Indian engineers and technicians.

They said India planned to build a "fast breeder" similar to France's 20,000 thermal kw (20-megawatt) "rhapsodie" experimental fast neutron nuclear reactor—a revolutionary new type of plant which produces more fissile matter than it consumes in producing energy.

"Rhapsodie" two years ago put France in the four-nation nuclear club with USA, the Soviet Union and Britain producing fast reactors, costing about £13,500,000 and a further about £7,000,000 for plutonium.

The French "fast breeder" reactor is the principal plant in the Cadarache complex, popularly known as the "Valley of the Reactors". The name rhapsodie is a contraction of "rapide" and "sodium".

G. West German Credit For IFC: The Industrial Finance Corporation of India (IFCI) was sanctioned on April 11 a further line of credit of DM5 million by the Kreditanstalt fur Wiederaufbau (West German Bank for Reconstruction), Frankfurt, Main.

This was the seventh line of credit from the Kreditanstalt to IFCI and increased its resources in Deutsche marks to DM97.50 million.

Against these lines of credit, the IFCI had already sanctioned sub-loans aggregating DM14.74 million (about Rs. 14 crores) for assistance to industrial concerns in India in a large variety of industries such as heavy and industrial chemicals, paper ceramics, glass, steel tubes and metal castings, electrical cables and equipments, cement, sugar, textiles, synthetic yarn, plywood and hardboards, rubber products, automobile components and motor vehicles, high tension and low tension porcelain insulators etc.

H. Accumulation Of PL 480 Funds – Experts' Recommendations: A team of experts has warned the Government that the "final accumulation of PL 480 funds in US hands in India" will be a "major source of potential inflation" and has suggested that these funds be "frozen permanently."

While the team admits that so far the impact of PL 480 transactions on money supply and on the general price level is neutral, it predicts that as projects under PL 480 agreements mature and repayment of capital together with interest is made by the Government into the American account in the Reserve Bank of India, a very large volume of liquidity will pile up in US hands. "Assuming that grain imports are stopped at some date in the future," (according to the Government's present plans, concessional food imports will be stopped during the Fourth Plan period), "re-spending of these accumulated funds by USA, if allowed, can become an obvious source of inflation."

The expert team, appointed in 1968 by the Finance Ministry at the recommendation of Parliament's Estimates Committee, says the problem which India will face will be similar to the one faced by Europe after the War. These liquid funds "kept on putting inflationary pressures on the prices of all commodities and assets and distorted the normal operation of the economy, leading the European Governments to take special measures to overcome the problem".

The team has, therefore, suggested two alternatives to cushion the Indian economy from this potential inflationary impact. The Government of India must either "freeze the funds permanently" through mutual agreement, or obtain a a grant from USA. "In that case, the accumulated amounts or agreed parts thereof can be annihilated and the economy cushioned from their impact. The matter would be akin to the burning of currency notes at retirement."

To reduce the impact of American withdrawal when grain supplies from USA are stopped, the team hopes that "expenditure on US uses will be properly phased" and that the Government would have "previous knowledge about the annual expenditure flows from this source". "This will enable the Government to plan its budget deficits and surpluses appropriately, but there is no denying that other things being equal, the impact of this expenditure will clearly be inflationary."

I. Sale Of Indian Properties In Pakistan—Protest Notes: On April 28, India again protested strongly to Pakistan against the sale, already effected as well as proposed by the latter, of Indian properties seized during the September, 1965 conflict and re-iterated the invitation to Pakistan to discuss the subject of return of property and assets taken over by either side.

The latest Note—India had so far sent about 15 Notes to Pakistan on this subject since the first reported sale of certain Indian properties in 1966—was handed over to the Pakistan Government by the Indian High Commission in Islamabad following publication of advertisements in newspapers inviting tenders for the purchase of some of these properties in March last.

The value of Indian properties seized by Pakistan was estimated at Rs. 109 crores and that of Pakistani properties seized by India at Rs. 27 crores.

To the many Notes protesting against the sale of Indian properties and requesting the suspension of sale, the Pakistan Government had replied only once—on August 12, 1967. Pakistan then took the plea that "assets seized during the war become the property of the seizing Government whose legal right to their disposal is unquestionable."

The first reported sale of six tea gardens in East Pakistan had been effected, according to the Pakistan Observer, within four months of signing the Tashkent Declaration under which the two countries had "agreed to discuss the return of the property and assets taken over by either side in connexion with the conflict."

The Pakistan Observer reported on December 25, 1969 that 190 Indian vessels seized by Pakistan were to be handed over to the local shipping companies at nominal prices. In February, 1967 about 10,000 tonnes of seized Indian cargoes were offered at an auction at Khanpur and Narayangunj in East Pakistan.

In two Notes handed over on April 28, the Indian High Commission in Islamabad conveyed India's strong protest against the sale of 188 Indian cargo vessels and the transfer of the proceeds of Rs. 10 crores to the Naval Prize Fund at Rawalpindi, as reported by Dacca's Ittefaq, and the notice published in Karachi's Dawn of March 19, 1969, inviting tenders for the sale of the assets of certain Indian properties, for example, industrial units, commercial firms, tea estates, and so on.

The Note said that the Government of India believed that all Indian assets and properties in Pakistan were in the nature of a continuing trust and any attempt on the part of Pakistani authorities to dispose of them unilaterally would not only be a flagrant violation of the Tashkent Declaration but also against all norms of international law and practice.

L. Aeronautics Committee's Recommendations: The development of a new Mach-II supersonic aircraft to succeed the HF-24 and establishment of a composite unit for design, development and production of guided missiles were among the key recommendations of the high-powered Aeronautics Committee, whose report was presented to Parliament on May 15.

The Committee, headed by Mr C. Subramaniam, had been asked to examine the growth of the aeronautics industry and to recommend the lines along which it should progress in future to cater to both military and civil needs.

The Committee said that development of the new aircraft—estimated to cost between Rs. 30 and 40 crores —"would be the most important task of the aeronautical industry in India over the next 10 years". It was confident that Hindustan Aircraft Limited was substantially in a position to undertake this task.

Obviously because of the difficulties encountered in developing a suitable engine for the HF-24 with UAR collaboration, the Committee recommended that the new "advanced technology aircraft" should be built around a proven engine. Simultaneously, an engine should be designed indigenously and the responsibility for this should rest with Indian hands.

But it ruled out development of an indigenous bomber for the next 15 years and it also came to the conclusion that no new fighter-bomber was immediately necessary, thereby making it clear that no fresh licensed production with foreign collaboration was necessary.

So far as civil aircraft were concerned, the Committee ruled out indigenous production to meet Air-India's and Indian Airlines' needs for 100-plus passenger planes. But it considered it possible to manufacture a medium type of aircraft to replace the F-27 (Friendship) and HF-748 (Avro). It also stressed the importance of developing an agricultural aircraft.

The Committee recommended that "foreign assistance should be obtained judiciously" to develop both guided weapons and helicopters. At present there was no alternative to licensed production of helicopters and, in the Committee's opinion, 'the development of guided weapons should receive intensive attention in the next five years."

In fact, such was the importance that it placed on development of guided weapons that it recommended production of guided weapons should be a composite facility with responsibility for design and development as well as production. However, work should be shared out among existing defence establishments and the "new missiles unit should be confined to final assembly testing and delivery."

The Committee also recommended the establishment of an Aeronautics Requirements Committee, an Aeronautics Production Board and an Aeronautics Committee (for research and development).

The Aeronautics Requirements Committee should draw up a long-term plan of aeronautics' need for defence. Based on a ten-year forecast, a firm plan of requirements should be drawn up each year for five years adopting the concept of a rolling plan. The formulation of long-term requirements should be based on a long-term assessment of threats.

The Aeronautics Production Board should replace the existing Aircraft Production Board and take over all functions relating to production of aircraft missiles, etc. The Aeronautics Committee should be set up to undertake the direction and high-level co-ordination of the research and development effort in the field of aeronautics, including guided missiles.

Aeronautics, like electronics, should be recognized as a major industry and allotted as a subject to the Department of Defence Production in the Ministry of Defence.

M. Losses In Public Undertakings: According to a performance report presented to Parliament on May 13, Hindustan Steel (HSL) led the 28 losing public undertakings with its net deficit of Rs. 38 crores in 1967-68.

The total losses of the 28 undertakings in the year under review amounted to over Rs. 84 crores, as against profits of Rs. 49 crores made by 39 other undertakings in the same year.

Thus, the overall loss of the public sector, in which an investment of Rs. 3,333 crores had been made on 83 undertakings up to the end of March, 1968, was reduced to Rs. 35 crores. The loss in the previous year was only Rs. 10 crores. Fifteen of the undertakings were under construction, while LIC results had not been included in this review.

Hindustan Steel alone, with its massive capital outlay of over Rs. 1,000 crores, showed an increase of Rs. 19 crores in its net loss, thus nearly doubling its deficit of Rs. 19.72 crores in 1966-67.

The reasons for the increase in its losses were attributed to the rise in manufacturing costs, even though it was admitted that the sales realisation of HSL went up by Rs. 12 crores as a result of the increase in the selling prices of steel from May, 1968.

Ranking second among the losing concerns was the Heavy Engineering Corporation at Ranchi. Its net loss in 1967-68 was Rs. 13 crores, followed by the Neyveli Lignite Corporation with Rs. 6.11 crores, the Heavy Electricals, Bhopal, with Rs. 5.62 crores, Mining and Allied Machinery Corporation, Durgapur, with Rs. 5.44 crores and Bharat Heavy Electricals with Rs. 5.20 crores.

The other undertakings which showed losses included the Hindustan Machine Tools in whose case the net profit of Rs. 137,00,000 in 1966-67 was converted into a loss of Rs. 69,00,000. Similarly, the National Projects Construction Corporation suffered a loss of Rs. 33,00,000 in 1967-68 as compared to its profit of Rs. 12,50,000 in the previous year. Hindustan Zinc also made a loss of Rs. 9,00,000 as compared to a profit of Rs. 2,50,000 in 1966-67.

Some of the other undertakings still in the red were Indian Drugs and Pharmaceuticals, Central Inland Water Transport Corporation, Hindustan Photo Films Manufacturing Corporation, National Mineral Development Corporation, National Coal Development Corporation, Indian Airlines Corporation, National Instruments, Electronics Corporation of India, Central Road Transport Corporation, Central Fisheries Corporation, Praga Tools, Hindustan Salts, National Buildings Construction Corporation, Modern Bakeries and Janpath Hotels.

Profits In 39 Undertakings:

Of the 39 public undertakings showing profits in the same year (1967-68), the Oil and Natural Gas Commission ranked first with a net surplus of Rs. 12.78 crores, followed by the Indian Oil Corporation with Rs. 10.95 crores. Third came the Shipping Corporation of India with Rs. 5.47 crores. Air-India came fourth with Rs. 2.54 crores, and Bharat Electronics fifth with Rs. 2.11 crores.

Other profit-making undertakings included the Fertilizer Corporation, STC, Hindustan Aeronautics, Bharat Earthmovers, MMTC, Cochin Refineries, Hindustan Teleprinters, Hindustan Antibiotics, Moghul Lines, Mazagaon Dock, Hindustan Cables, Ashoka Hotel, Indian Rare Earths, Nepa Mills, FACT, Travancore, Food Corporation, Engineers India, Hindustan Insecticides, Garden Reach Workshops, Sambhar Salts, Hindustan Housing Factory, Tungabhadra Steel Products, Hindustan Shipyard, Goa Shipyard and Hindustan Steelworks Construction Corporation.

The public sector undertakings provided employment to 5,50,000 people and earned foreign exchange worth Rs. 48 crores by exports. They also helped save foreign exchange by producing items which would have had to be imported.

N. SSP National Conference:

The fourth National Conference of the Samyukta Socialist Party (SSP) began in Jabalpur on May 8.

Members of the youth wing of the SSP, the Samajwadi Yuwajan Sabha vociferously objected to the move, shouted anti-merger slogans, rushed to the rostrum and disrupted the proceedings.

Moving his amendment to an official resolution, Mr. Joshi called upon the P-SP leaders to help in bringing about a merger on the basis of the Kota resolution.

He said that present political trends in the country favoured such a move and urged those forces which believed in the tenet of socialism and eradication of the economic and social ills in the country to come together and dislodge the Congress from power at the Centre.

Mr. Jagdish Joshi (MP) supported the amendment. This was resented by a section of the delegates who tried to stop him from proceeding further.

Mr. Durai Babu (Tamil Nadu) opposed Mr. Joshi's plea for merger and said that the P-SP's role had not been consistent in the political field. The P-SP had been seeking co-operation with parties like the BKD and the Swatantra to damage the position of the SSP.

Annual Report:

The General Secretary of the SSP, presenting his annual report to the National Conference on May 8, regretted that the SSP, which was a constituent in non-Congress Governments in some States, did not show "courage of conviction and rocklike firmness" in carrying out its major programmes like abolition of land revenue and replacement of English.

The party members had to face great opposition in the working of this programme though it was accepted in principle by the SVD Governments.

Referring to the rapidly growing "infection of defection," the report said that if anti-Congressism were to fall a prey to defection, then the healthy trends of political life in the country could not be insured.

The report cautioned that the Conference had to take a firm decision on the prevailing major political issues like anti-Congressism so that the partnership of the party in the SVD Governments might not get drowned in the glamour of power and privileges. "It must be clearly understood that non-Congressism is ultimately socialism."

It said that the aim of non-Congressism was the establishment of non-Congress Governments in the States, but the main aim should be setting up a non-Congress Government at the Centre. It pointed out that in such States where SSP was a partner in the coalition Governments, there was no direct conflict with the Centre.

The SSP, it said, was pledged to "storm the strong citadel of the Congress at the Centre" and appealed to the State Governments to extend their co-operation in that direction.

Policy Resolutions:

On May 9, the SSP National Executive adopted two policy resolutions.

The political resolution marked some major shifts in policy. It said that the party was now more for a programme-oriented action rather than participation in non-Congress Governments. The emphasis was on what Mr. Madhu Limaye described as "mass politics" rather than "parliamentary and election politics" which involved, according to the Executive, "summit manipulations".

Another important departure from the stance of the party was that extra-parliamentary activities needed further "refinement", inasmuch as there should be no scope in the party programme for "a ritualistic programme of civil disobedience." In its place, the party should try to secure mass participation in its agitations on the deeply-felt grievances of the people like drinking water facilities and minimum wage for agricultural labour.

Another outcome of the Executive's political resolution was that the party would first mobilize public opinion and then launch an agitation and not vice versa.

A view propounded in the Executive on the general political situation in the country was that in place of the Congress, the Opposition parties were getting polarized, thus strengthening the Congress. The Executive, however, felt that the policy of non-Congressism should continue.

In another resolution, the Executive demanded a new Constituent Assembly on the basis of adult franchise to frame a new Constitution in the light of the new situation in the country.

The Executive felt that the two contradictory trends of a weak Centre and strong States and a strong Centre and weak States were irrelevant, anti-people and anti-democratic. It was of the opinion that while concentration of power at the Centre would only add fuel to tension, it was also not prepared to accept the contention of the States to be all powerful sub-nations. This would inevitably encourage demands for separate States. The Executive, therefore, demanded complete decentralization of power.

It was of the opinion that apart from the questions of Centre-State relations, decentralization and regional autonomy, basic questions such as fundamental freedoms, limitation of property, language, the parliamentary system and similar other issues had cropped up and hence the need for a new Constituent Assembly.

Both the resolutions were later adopted by the National Conference.

In another resolution, the party decided to hold its next annual convention before December 31, 1970.

According to the SSP constitution, the party should hold its next convention before December 31, 1969. The resolution said that as the present convention had been delayed by about five months, it would not be possible to hold the next convention before December, 1970. The convention would be held on the basis of membership registered till June 30, 1970. By yet another resolution the National Conference urged the Government of India to secure the release of Dr. Telo Mascarenhas, Goan freedom fighter, from a Portuguese jail.

P-SP Stand On Merger:

Meanwhile, in a statement issued at New Delhi, the P-SP Joint Secretary, Mr. Surendra Mohan, expressed his disappointment over the SSP's rejection of the policy of democratic socialist consolidation.

While welcoming Mr. S. M. Joshi's stand for socialist unity, he said it was unfortunate that the Party had stuck to an obsolete and moth-eaten policy of negative and sterile anti-Congressism.

Later, the P-SP General Secretary, Mr. Prem Bhasin, told newsmen at Kanpur that with the defeat of the out-going Chairman, Mr. S. M. Joshi's amendment, the SSP "has closed the door on SSP-P-SP merger."

He alleged that "so long as leaders like Mr. Raj Narain, Mr. Madhu Limaye and Mr. George Fernandes were controlling the SSP, consolidation of socialist and democratic parties will never materialize."

Mr. S. M. Joshi Clarifies Reasons For His Resignation:

The former SSP Chairman, Mr. S. M. Joshi, explaining the reasons for his resignation, informed the National Conference that since he felt he could not fulfil the responsibility entrusted to him, he was forced to take leave.

After he had accepted the chairmanship, he said it was decided amongst the leaders to run the party affairs on joint responsibility. But this understanding did not last long and differences on policy matters began to crop up.

He said it was a settled fact that the collective intelligence would certainly go to make up to some extent the void created by the death of Dr. Lohia, but the qualities of collective leadership were not there and at a later stage cracks in the party were visible. The conflicts ended in disciplinary actions, especially against erring members who had joined the Mandal Ministry in Bihar.

He said that some party leaders did not also like his going abroad during the satyagraha.

Mr. Karpuri Thakur Elected Chairman—Other Office-bearers:

In another direct fight, Mr. George Fernandes secured 319 votes against 191 polled by Mr. Brijraj Singh.

The following 23 members were elected to the National Executive of the party from among 75 candidates. O. Mr. S. K. Patil & Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon Elected To Lok Sabha: Mr. S. K. Patil and Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon, rejected by their traditional Bombay constituencies in the 1967 General Elections, were returned to the Lok Sabha on May 11 with massive majorities from constituencies separated by almost the entire breadth of the country from Gujarat and West Bengal.

Mr. Patil (Congress) defeated the 1967 Swatantra winner, Mr. Manubhai Amarsey, in Banaskantha (Gujarat) by a margin of 1,00,149 votes in a triangular contest. The third candidate, the Left-backed Independent, Mr. Himmatsinhji, forfeited his deposit.

Mr. Menon (Independent), backed by the ruling United Front, defeated the Congress nominee, Mr. Krishna Das Roy in Midnapore (West Bengal) by a majority of 1,06,767 votes. Here, too, a third candidate lost his deposit.

Originally fixed for May 4, the Banaskantha by-election was postponed, following President Zakir Husain's death, to May 11 coinciding with the Midnapore poll.

Counting of votes in Banaskantha was completed on May 12, but the declaration of the result was withheld until May 13 pending investigation of the Swatantra candidate's allegation that ballot boxes had been tampered with.

Mr. Amarsey, who had won by a margin of 4,416 over his nearest Congress rival in a triangular contest in the General Election had later been unseated by a court verdict, necessitating the present by-election.

Mr. Menon retained for the West Bengal United Front a seat won by the Bangla Congress nominee, Mr. Sachidanand Maity, in 1967. Attacked by his Congress rival as an "outsider," Mr. Menon, the first non-Bengali ever to be elected to the Lok Sabha from the State, vastly improved upon his predecessor's majority of 43,283.

The winning margins of both Mr. Patil and Mr. Menon exceeded confident predictions made by their supporters. Mr. Patil was helped by large-scale defections from the Swatantra Party in Banaskantha since the last General Election. Mr.

Menon's majority of over 100,000 was much larger than the overall majority of about 15,000 votes registered by UF candidates in the Assembly constituencies, which comprise the Midnapore Lok Sabha constituency, in the mid-term election in February.

The following are the details of voting in the two by-elections:

Banaskantha:

Electorate: 4,43,136; votes polled: 2,05,621; invalid votes: 12,510.

Mr. S. K. Patil (C) 1,42,175; Mr. Manubhai Amarsey (Swa) 42,026; Mr. Himmatsinhji (Ind) 8,910.

Midnapore:

Electorate: 4,91,117; votes polled: 2,80,923; invalid votes: 4,614.

Mr. Krishna Menon (Ind) 1,87,850; Mr. Krishna Das Roy (C) 81,083; Mr. Riazuddin Pathan (Ind) 7,376.

With his victory, Mr. Krishna Menon staged a successful comeback to the Lok Sabha, after two defeats—first in the General Election in 1967 and subsequently in a by-election, both from the Bombay North constituency.

Mr. Menon, who was returned on the Congress ticket from Bombay North to the previous Lok Sabha, resigned from the ruling party following denial of the party ticket for the same constituency in the 1967 General Election which he fought as an Independent with the backing of Leftist parties.

IRAN

A. Talks On Soviet-Iranian Railway: A conference, which discussed Soviet-Iranian railway communications, ended in Tehran on April 25.

The two sides considered the question of improvement in the work at the frontier stations Ulfa-Soviet and Ulfa-Iranian, the building and exploitation of facilities for changing the guage of railway cars at Ulfa-Iranian station, the building of the Astara-Iranian railway station and of a bridge across the frontier river.

The Soviet Union offered to render the necessary technical and economic assistance to Iran in designing and building railway tracks in the town of Astara.

The two sides considered the question of electrification of the Iranian railway line from Tabriz to Ulfa and worked out the procedure for designing and building work.

They noted with satisfaction that in the first quarter of 1969 average daily transfer of railway cars between USSR and Iran was 190 as against 163 in 1968. The turn-over of freight wagons of the Soviet site at Ulfa-Iranian station was speeded up from 5.5 days to two days.

A Protocol on the proceedings of the conference was signed by Mr. V. S. Gavrilov, the Deputy Minister of Railways of USSR, and by Mr. N. Alinus, the Director-General of Railways in Iran.

B. Army Chief Replaced: It was stated in Tehran on May 3 that Gen. Bahram Aryana, Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces Supreme Command, had been replaced by his deputy, Gen. Fereydoun Jam, on the Shah's orders.

No reason was given for the change.

C. River Dispute With Iraq—Mr. A. Zahedi's Statement: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Ardeshir Zahedi, accused Iraq on May 9 of stirring up the Shatt-al-Arab river dispute with his country for "internal political reasons."

Answering questions at a news conference in Hong Kong, Mr. Zahedi said the Iraqi Government was very unpopular at home. "It's a terrible dictatorship."

He added: "The Iraqi Government is very weak. They have had many coups d'etat. Since they are so weak and unpopular they have to create something in order to divert the people's attention."

Iran, he said, wanted to settle the dispute peacefully and according to international law. But, should the latter resort to military action, his country would repulse the attack with all the might at its disposal. "We shall defend our country if they do anything. We have been rather tolerant in the past. I don't think we shall be in the future."

He also accused Iran of ill-treating Iranian nationals, of whom there are about 700,000 in the country. Many Iranians, including casual visitors to Iraq, had been arrested and tortured.

On the Persian Gulf, he said that his Government hoped Britain's military pull-out would be permanent. Iran did not want Britain to return through the back door, nor did it want any other Power to take Britain's place.

Iran told the UN Security Council on May 9 that the Iranian Government was prepared to conclude "immediately" a new Treaty with Iraq under which the sovereign rights of both countries in the Shatt-al-Arab river would be safeguarded.

IRAQ

A. Recognition To East Germany: Baghdad Radio announced on May 1 that Iraq had decided to extend full recognition to East Germany.

The Radio said that this decision was taken in recognition of East Germany's support of Arab causes.

Iraq is the first West Asian country to extend full recognition to East Germany. Like most Arab countries, it broke off relations with West Germany in 1965, when West Germany announced its intention to establish diplomatic relations with Israel.

B. Government Clashes With Kurds: The Government admitted on May 5 that Kurdish tribesmen in northern Iraq were again fighting security forces.

It was the first official confirmation of reports spreading through West Asia that Mullah Mustafa Barzani was on the warpath once again.

A spokesman for Iraq's ruling National Revolutionary Council said in a Press statement that "renewed anti-Government hostilities in the North " had erupted. He called Barzani "a traitor fighting with Israeli arms and an agent of imperialism and the rulers of Iran."

The statement was issued by Brig. Saadoum Gheidan, Commander of the Baghdad Garrison and one of the pillars of the regime.

C. Ten Spies Executed: Baghdad Radio disclosed on May 15 that ten men—five civilians and five soldiers—convicted of spying for Israel, the United States and Iran had been executed.

The Radio said the civilians were hanged at dawn at Baghdad central prison and the soldiers were shot by a firing squad at a camp near Baghdad.

The civilians were Abdel-Hadi al-Bejjari, Abdullah Mohammed, Saleh al-Bokhari, Jaafar Hassan al-Haj Aziz, Sadek Mekki Jaafar and Abdel-Razzak Farhan.

The servicemen were Lt. Jawad Majid al-Haddad, Fl./Lt. Usama Hashem al-Kilani, Lance Corporal Majid Ahmed al-Alwan, Private Wajih Mohammed al-Dulaimi and Private Yassin Ahmed Fares.

The bodies of the executed were not publicly displayed as in previous cases. Baghdad Radio said that the bodies of the civilians were handed over to the medico-legal department.

These executions brought to 38 the number of men, including nine Jews, executed in Iraq since January 27 after being convicted of espionage.

ISRAEL

A. President Nasser Ready To Accept "Reality" Of Israel: President G. A. Nasser said in an interview published in Time Magazine (US) on May 12 that he accepted the "reality" of Israel, and so would his people, if there was a humanitarian solution to the West Asian problem.

President Nasser was asked: "Are you ready to accept the existence of Israel if there is a withdrawal (of Israeli troops) and a permanent settlement?"

He replied: "I accept the reality of Israel, and so will my people, if there is a humanitarian solution. Call it Israel, or whatever they want to call it, and I will recognize it."

On prospects for a settlement, he said: "It has been almost two years since the occupation of Sinai, and there is a continuing occupation. We have agreed to a peaceful solution, implementing the November 22, 1967 Security Council resolution. Until now, Israel has not accepted it. She says she will not leave the occupied areas until we sit down with her to talk peace. But we refuse to sit. It is not called for in the Security Council resolution. If we sit now, we sit as defeated people, sitting only to capitulate. This we cannot do."

He ruled out any international occupation of the Sinai by a UN force pending further negotiations and dismissed any possibility of territorial adjustments in Sinai, under Israeli occupation since the 1967 war.

Regarding possible internationalization of Jerusalem, he said: "In any internationalization, the Jews, with a well-organized and rich world-wide community, might take advantage of us. We are for complete withdrawal from Arab Jerusalem. Without that, there can be no peace. We were not planning for war in 1967, but we must plan for war now in case everything else fails."

Asked if he was confident he was now getting correct information about Egypt's military capabilities, in contrast to the reported situation before the 1967 war, he said: "I was not handling military matters before the 1967 war. Now I am handling them directly. I am confident I am not being misled."

President G. A. Nasser's Warning:

Addressing a May Day meeting in Helwan on May 1, President G. A. Nasser warned that UAR planes could reach civilian targets in Israel and said that the raid on the Nile on April 9 gave him the right to send them.

He said in the past few weeks, UAR gunners had knocked out 60 per cent of Israeli fortifications along the Suez Canal. "And we shall go on until we destroy the rest."

It was the UAR leader's second pointed reference in just over a month to the possibility of strikes on civilian centres and came after a month of steady escalation along the Suez Canal which had again brought the West Asian crisis to flash-point.

In a confident and aggressive mood, he said that the UAR army was ready to move into occupied Sinai, but would not be pressurized into striking until the time was ripe.

He accused the Americans of trying to split the Arab ranks by proposing separate peace settlements with Israel.

Israeli Reaction:

Israeli military observers in Tel Aviv said on May 3 that Israel and UAR were dangerously close to full-scale war after President Nasser's May Day speech.

They said that tension had never been so critical along the Suez Canal front since the Six-Day War of 1967, and further escalation seemed inevitable.

Israel's army commanders, they said, took seriously President Nasser's promise to begin raids on Israeli civilian targets and continued heavy shelling of Israeli lines along the Canal.

Mrs. G. Meir On West Asian Situation:

The Israeli Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, declared in her State of the Nation message in the Knesset (Parliament) on May 5 that while Israel's armed forces were ready for any eventuality, she did not believe the Arab nations were prepared for a full-scale war.

She said: "Occasionally, our region is portrayed as being on the point of an explosion which may spread beyond this area. There is no justification for this contention. We live in this region and we are perfectly familiar with the actual state of affairs.

"To the best of our judgment, the Arab countries cannot at present permit themselves to wage a total war."

She added that while this assessment "had a firm foundation". Israel's forces "are ready for any eventuality—even for the eventuality of a mistake in this forecast."

She dismissed King Hussein of Jordan as a West Asia peace-maker and called for action by Jordan to "cease all acts of aggression."

She declared: "If the Jordanian authorities are anxious for the safety of their citizens, civilians and soldiers, let them not evade their duty to put a halt to sabotage activity.

"If this criminal activity continues, we shall not be able to absolve the Jordanian authorities from responsibility."

Referring to King Hussein's recent visit abroad, during which he had made several peace proposals, Mrs. Meir stated: "What is needed here is not pious speeches outside Israel but vigorous action in Jordan itself."

She recalled King Hussein"s six-point plan presented before the Washington Press Club on April 10 and said: "Arab propaganda gave King Hussein's speech the mighty name of a peace plan, but it contains not one word about a peace treaty or normal relations between States. Any one glancing at those six points will soon realize they contain nothing but an Arab interpretation of the Security Council resolution (of November 22, 1967)."

Israel And Atomic Bombs:

Mrs. Golda Meir re-iterated in Jerusalem on May 9 that Israel had no atomic bombs and described recent Press reports of Israel's would-be nuclear power as "absolute fiction."

She said: "Israel has no nuclear bomb. Israel has no intention of using nuclear bombs. Every once in a while this fiction comes up about Israel either just about to have an atomic bomb, or that Israel already has nuclear bombs. Now we are presented with five bombs. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if in a few months we'll be presented with a few more. But all this is absolute fiction."

She was referring to a report in Germany's Der Spiegel news magazine on May 7 to the effect that Israel already had five or six bombs.

Cairo newspapers said that reports that Israel had manufactured nuclear bombs were lies and part of the Jewish State's "psychological warfare" against the Arabs.

Israel, they said, had "spread this lie through the foreign Press and, in the meantime, denied it according to a plan designed to affect the morale of the Arab people."

According to the West German news magazine Der Spiegel on May 8, Israel had become the world's sixth nuclear Power and had built atomic bombs, with French help, at a secret plant deep in the Negev Desert.

The magazine said that at least five, and possibly six 20-kiloton bombs had been produced at the closely guarded plant near Dimona. Security was so stringent that a damaged Israeli Mystere jet fighter which strayed into the Dimona area during the June, 1967 war was shot down.

It said that most of its information was obtained first-hand. A spokesman noted that the Israeli Government had refused to comment on the report and said Israeli newspapers had been told not to reproduce the magazine's report, although Der Spiegel is freely on sale in Israel.

It said that "last January NBC aired a programme alleging that Israel's first nuclear bomb was almost ready. Israel issued an immediate denial. It appears NBC missed the exact date by only 18 days. The bombs were completed during early February."

The account said that Egyptian Intelligence became aware of the bombs' completion in late February this year. President Nasser immediately issued a call for help to the Soviet Government and requested that Soviet nuclear arms be stationed on Egyptian soil.

Mr. A. Eban On French Aircraft Supply:

The Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, told Parliament on May 12 that the Government was continuing to bring pressure on France to deliver the 50 Mirage-V aircraft paid for before the Arab-Israeli war of June, 1967.

The planes, he said, had long been ready for delivery but had been held up because of the French arms embargo. Israel had not asked for the return of the money paid for the aircraft. If the money had been refunded France would have had the right to sell the aircraft to any country, including an Arab country.

UAR Attitude To Cease-Fire Line:

Cairo newspapers declared on April 26 that the Suez Canal could be considered the cease-fire line between the Egyptian forces and Israel.

The new theme, apparently reflecting a definite policy decision, was hammered home in several editorials after a month of almost daily artillery duels across the Canal and the beginning of commando raids in Sinai by special units of the regular Egyptian army.

The view-point that the Canal was no more than an accidental dividing line between Israeli and Egyptian forces was first stressed in conversations the Foreign Under-Secretary, Mr. Salah Gohar, had with Gen. Odd Bull, Chief United Nations West Asian Observer, in Cairo earlier.

Expanding on the theme, Al Ahram,' which is usually considered to reflect official thinking, said that the UN Security Council's resolution of June 7, 1967 "did not specify a certain line complying with the present positions held by Israeli forces and which Israel since that date has been continuously working to fortify".

The cease-fire resolution, it said, was simply a "preliminary decision" aimed at putting an immediate stop to the fighting and was intended to be followed by measures for the withdrawal of Israeli troops.

It said that the UAR Government's attitude could be summed up in the following six points:

(1) UAR agrees to all UN resolutions including those of the Security Council dated June 7, 1967 and November 22, 1967.

(2) UAR has already said it will apply all decisions of the UN aimed at a West Asian settlement.

(3) UAR considers that the above two resolutions are closely linked and that the parties concerned must apply both, and not just one resolution.

(4) The UN Security Council must urge Israel to apply the November 22, 1967 resolution, which includes the demand for Israel to withdraw from occupied territories: moreover, since the two resolutions are linked and any cease-fire must conform to international laws, such a withdrawal must be followed by a separation of the belligerent forces.

(5) So far, Israel has agreed only to the June 7, 1967 cease-fire agreement.

(6) Continued Israeli occupation of Arab territory is against the November 22, 1967 resolution.

The Fighting:

Fighting in West Asia continued between regular Israeli forces and Egyptian or Jordanian forces, some sporadically and some more seriously. Arab commandos contributed their share.

On April 24, Egyptian and Israeli troops clashed for nearly two hours across the Suez Canal. Cairo Radio, quoting a military spokesman, said that the Israelis opened fire south of the Bitter Lake, using artillery and tank guns and Egyptian troops returned the fire.

Also, on April 24, a 30-minute artillery duel raged in the south of the Jordan Valley after Israeli forces opened up with automatic weapons and mortar-fire on Jordanian positions.

On April 26, according to a Cairo military spokesman, Egyptian commandos infiltrated Israeli lines and knocked out fuel and ammunition depots in a dawn attack in Sinai

The attack was the fifth by what are called "special units" of the regular Egyptian Army in the past week. Other groups crossed the Suez Canal in boats to strike at Israeli posts along the fortified east bank. Previously, commando attacks in Sinai were understood to be confined to non-army guerrilla groups.

A report from Tel Aviv said that several rocket shells fired from Jordanian territory on April 26 landed near the frontier town of Beit Shean, south of the Sea of Galilee. Israelis immediately returned the fire. There were no casualties.

On April 25, Gen. Odd Bull, Chief UN Observer in West Asia, held the United Arab Republic responsible for the daily tank and artillery battles with Israeli troops across the Suez Canal.

Three new reports to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, indicated that UAR had again initiated battles on April 22 and 23. Gen.

Bull had repeatedly blamed UAR for recent exchanges along the Canal. He reported to U Thant that on April 23, "all observed firings were by UAR forces. No firing by Israeli forces were observed." Eleven observation posts said that the UAR forces used rifles and sub-machine-guns sporadically through most of the day.

Several leading Western nations, including USA, expressed their grave concern over the explosive developments across the Suez Canal.

According to a Jordanian spokesman, 20 Israelis were killed or wounded in a two-hour artillery duel in the southern Jordan Valley.

He said that two Israeli tanks, five military vehicles, a military tractor and an observation post were destroyed and an artillery position silenced.

On April 26, Israel sent UAR an ultimatum threatening severe military action if incidents across the Suez Canal were not discontinued. The ultimatum was conveyed to the Egyptian Foreign Minister through an envoy of a Western Government on April 25.

Israeli jets swept across the Jordan River on April 29 to silence Arab posts which had shelled Israeli troops south of the Sea of Galilee.

An Israeli military spokesman said that five Israeli soldiers were wounded during the earlier bazooka and mortar attacks from across the River.

According to a report by the UN Control Post Observers, UAR was responsible for most of the shooting along the Suez Canal during the week-end. Gen. Odd Bull said that, according to the investigations of the individual UN control posts, UAR troops were the first to fire in nine cases on April 26 and in 13 cases on April 27. Israeli troops had fired four times on April 26 and twice on April 27.

Israel protested to the Security Council on April 28 about the use of Iraqi artillery during an alleged attack against villages and civilians in the Israeli-Jordan Valley on April 19.

The Israeli protest said that as a self-defence measure Israel had attacked "saboteur centres", Jordanian and Iraqi military positions and two Egyptian-operated radar stations.

According to an Israeli Army spokesman, Israeli commando units struck 193 kilometres inside UAR on April 29, blasted a dam and a bridge and destroyed high-tension electric cables supplying Cairo.

The Israeli Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir's office said that the raid was in retaliation for the violation by UAR of the 1964 cease-fire Agreements.

The raid—almost an exact copy of the last commando incursion to UAR six months ago—struck at two main areas of the Upper Nile, below the Aswan High Dam.

Two parallel high-tension cables 100 yards apart carrying 500 kilo-volts of power to Cairo were cut. The lines were 180 km south of Cairo at a place identified as Naj Hamadi. There were six main pylons and a control centre in the complex. Four transformer stations 30 km farther north were hit in the 1968 attack. The Naj Hamadi Dam—also hit last year—was attacked and "heavily damaged". The Dam stretches 300 yards across the Nile and is 20 yards wide.

The Army spokesman emphasized that—contrary to UAR reports that the targets were bombed—the raids were by commando units. "They met no resistance whatsoever".

UAR confirmed the raid and said that two Israeli war-planes bombed targets in the Nag Hamadi and Edru region, along the Nile. A UAR military spokesman claimed that UAR anti-aircraft batteries fired on the planes forcing them to withdraw, without causing any damage.

The incident took place as sporadic firing continued along a 30-kilometre stretch of the Suez Canal—scene of an artillery, tank and automatic weapons duel earlier on April 29.

Israeli jets swept across the River Jordan on April 29 to silence Arab posts which had shelled Israeli troops south of the Sea of Galilee.

Four Israeli soldiers were wounded in an exchange of fire with Egyptian forces across the Suez Canal on May 1. The firing, north of El Qantara, was started by Egyptian troops on the west bank of the Canal.

Jordanian and Israeli forces exchanged gun fire for 40 minutes in the northern Jordan valley on May 1.

Egyptian and Israeli forces exchanged intermittent fire for 3½ hours across the Suez Canal on May 2. The Israelis opened fire against Egyptian positions in El Tina, north of Qantara. Egyptian forces returned the fire and the clash continued intermittently.

An Israeli spokesman said that two Israelis were killed and four wounded in a series of clashes between Israeli troops and Arab guerrilla bands, which came from Jordan, in the former Syrian Golan Heights during the night and in the morning on May 2.

An Israeli officer and a soldier were shot dead in a gun battle in the region of El-Hamma, in the southern region of the Golan Heights seized by Israel in the 1967 war. Four Arab guerrillas were killed in the clashes at both ends of the Golan Heights.

Israeli Air Force planes bombed and strafed a "saboteur base" near Shnoesh in Jordan on May 4. This was an El Fatah Palestinian commando base 30 km east of the Arava area, which is south of the Dead Sea. The saboteurs at the base had recently carried out several raids on Israeli territory.

Meanwhile, an Israeli military spokesman denied reports from Cairo of a 16-hour artillery, mortar and small-arms battle with Egyptian forces across the Suez Canal on May 3.

An Amman report said that a number of Israeli planes raided southern Jordan on May 7. The Israeli planes attacked the Al Harir area south-east of Al Tafila in southern Jordan. There were no casualties among Jordanian forces or civilians.

Earlier, on May 7, Jordanian and Israeli forces clashed in the northern Jordan Valley.

UAR and Israeli forces fought a two-hour artillery battle across the Suez Canal on May 7. The Egyptians started shelling the eastern side of the Canal, about ten km north of El Qantara and subsequently extended the shelling towards El Qantara itself.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that Israeli war-planes streaked into south Jordan on May 7 to attack an El Fatah guerrilla base. It was the second raid on an alleged saboteur camp in south Jordan in three days. On May 4, an encampment said to belong to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine was hit south-west of Shaubak.

A terse announcement said: "A few planes struck at Bir al Harir, 6.5 miles south-east of Tafila and 20 miles over the border from a point south of the Dead Sea. All the planes returned saely." Bir al Harir is about 10 miles north-east of Shaubak.

In Cairo, an Egyptian military spokesman said an Israeli observation aircraft had been shot down and was seen crashing in flames east of Port Fouad near the Suez Canal.

In Tel Aviv, a spokesman reported the breaking up of two Arab sabotage rings based in Gaza Town and in El Aris in northern Sinal.

An official communique issued in Tel Aviv on May 9 said that 36 Palestinian terrorists had been killed and eight captured between April 19 and May 7.

In Haifa, three Israeli Arabs were given prison terms from four to seven years on charges of spying for Syria on May 8.

Commando units of the Israeli regular army crossed the Jordan River and demolished 12 buildings used by the Arab saboteurs.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that the commandos. who penetrated two km within Jordan territory, did not suffer any casualties. It was the second raid across the cease-fire line within 12 hours. Israeli Air Force planes had strafed the Arab saboteurs' camp in southern Jordan on May 8.

Two more Israeli soldiers were killed and four wounded in artillery duels along the Suez Canal cease-fire line on May 8. It was the second day of Israeli casualties on this scale.

An El Fatah spokesman said that commandos of El Fatah, the Arab *guerrilla organization, carried out a series of attacks on Israeli positions on May 10. He said that the comman*dos launched a surprise attack on an Israeli police post at Sweima bridge, two km north of the Dead Sea, and on an advance military position in the same area.

Jordanian forces opened fire with artillery and tanks early on May 12 on Israeli positions on the West Bank of the Jordan.

Israeli planes flew into Jordan on May 12 to attack an Arab guerrilla base, while fighting on the Suez Canal continued throughout the day.

The planes attacked Tabaqat Fahi, ten km across the Jordan River cease-fire line, opposite the Beisan Valley settlement of Kfar Ruppin, 24 km south of the Sea of Galilee. The raid lasted 15 minutes and all the planes returned safely to Israel.

It was Israel's fourth reported air raid on alleged sabotage of bases in Jordan in May.

On the Suez Canal, two soldiers were killed and another wounded in intermittent fighting on May 13 along the 20-mile stretch of waterway between El Qantara and Port Fuad.

Israeli commandos tried to cross the Suez Canal on May 14 under cover of darkness but were repulsed, a UAR military spokesman said.

The spokesman said that three Israeli groups started across in three rubber dinghies, just north of Le Cap, a small village north of El Qantara in the marshy regions in the northern sector of the Canal. The UAR sentries spotted the boats, opened fire and sank one. The other two boats turned and fled back to the Israeli-held side. The Israelis then opened artillery fire in apparent retaliation for their failure to land on the UAR-held west bank. The artillery duel spread to El Qantara, El Shat and Port Said.

B. Future Importance Of Suez Canal: The President of the Baltic and International Maritime Conference, Mr. Gerhard Hansen-Stahl, said in Munich on May 7 that if and when the Suez Canal was re-opened to shipping of all nations, it would hardly resume its old importance.

Addressing the annual Maritime Conference, he said the second closing of the Canal in 12 years—this time with 15 ships bottled up inside —had caused "a profound disturbance in the pattern of trade. The cost had been heavy to shipowners and consumers alike."

He said there were marked changes in movement of goods and new areas supplying consumer countries —in particular European areas—as a consequence of the new freight rate structure.

"One thing is certain. If and when the Canal is re-opened to shipping of all nations, it will hardly resume its old importance. Warned by bad experience in the past, shipowners all over the world have in the meantime adapted themselves to the changed conditions.

"The vast shipbuilding programme of giant tankers and bulk carriers is only one of these consequences.

"It will be a sad thing for everyone if the Canal—which has been of such vital service to trade and humanity for a century—should fall into disuse. But it could happen."

PAKISTAN

A. Election Commission's Future: In a BBC televised interview on May 28, the President, Gen. M. Yahya Khan, claimed that his military Government was determined to hold free and impartial elections to hand over power to the elected representatives of the people.

He said that the social and industrial reforms being carried out in the country were designed to ensure the general welfare of the people.

Yet, he took the first steps on the same day to disband the Election Commission.

According to authoritative reports, all the permanent employees serving with the Election Commission have been asked to go back to their parent departments from which they had come on deputation, and the temporary employees were given termination notices.

F-M. Ayub Khan had set up the Election Commission soon after the promulgation of the 1962 Constitution which he gave to the country. It was responsible for the conduct and supervision of elections to the Provincial Assemblies, the National Assembly and the office of the President of the country.

On April 26, in a talk with the editors of newspapers in Dacca, Gen. Yahya Khan had said that before elections could be held, there was the need to create a national basis of discipline. "Fundamentals of political conduct and behaviour should be agreed upon before political activity can be resumed."

He had further said that he would go ahead with the task of setting the election machinery in motion only after the climate for the resumption of political activity had been created.

CHINA

A. Acceptance Of Soviet Proposal For Talks: On May 11, China accepted a Russian proposal to resume regular meetings of the Sino-Soviet Joint Commission for Navigation on Border Rivers, which last met in 1967 in the Chinese city of Harbin.

[Until now, however, China had not responded to two Russian Notes of March 29 and April 14, recommending extensive negotiations to settle the actual border dispute between them]

The Soviet proposal sent to China on April 26 had called for new talks on navigation on the Amur, Ussuri, Argun and Angacha rivers as well as Lake Khanka.

The Peking telegram to Moscow accepting the talks proposal was released by the official Hsinhua news agency.

The telegram suggested that the forthcoming meeting be held in the Soviet city of Khabarovsk at a date to be fixed in mid-June. The message referred to Khabarovsk as Poli, its old Chinese name.

Signed by the chief Chinese representative on the joint commission, Mr. Chan Fa Ping, the telegram charged the Russians with "slander" for having accused Peking of declining to attend a meeting last year.

The message expressed doubt about the extent of Soviet sincerity in convening the forthcoming meeting, but added: "Nevertheless, proceeding from its consistent stand of safeguarding normal navigation ...on the boundary rivers, the Chinese side has still decided to send its delegation to this meeting.

"The Chinese side hopes that the Soviet side will adopt a positive attitude.... Our side considers that it is necessary for both sides to make good preparations in order to make a success of this meeting."

In his report to the opening session of the Communist Party Congress in Peking on April 1, Marshal Lin Piao, Vice-Chairman, disclosed that the Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, had tried to discuss the border problem by telephone on March 21.

Marshal Lin added that Peking had rebuffed Mr. Kosygin, telling him that telephone communication was "unsuitable," and advising the Soviet Government to use "diplomatic channels" if it had anything to say. As a result, Moscow had issued its March 29 statement, to which "our Government is considering its reply."

Russian Press Criticism:

Several anti-Chinese articles appearing in the Moscow Press on May 7 centred on the Sino-Soviet border dispute.

This followed an indirect warning to China given by Mr. Kosygin in New Delhi the previous day when he cautioned India against the "desire for hegemony" of certain of its neighbours. It also coincided with the announcement that President N. Podgorny would visit Mongolia and North Korea.

Mr. Kosygin's statement and the proposed visit of Mr. Podgorny were seen by Western observers as part of a fast developing diplomatic offensive aimed at increasing China's isolation and strengthening Soviet positions, particularly in North Korea.

Pravda devoted an article to the situation on the frontier between Kazakhstan and China, where, it said, Chinese guards shouted quotations from Mao across the border.

The Literary Gazette emphasized the unfortunate situation of the minority populations of Sinkiang, denouncing the "massive colonization" of the region by the Chinese and the humiliations heaped on the local population.

The same newspaper revealed for the first time that on May 29, 1962, the Chinese massacred more than 200 Kazakh and Uighur residents of Sinking Province who wanted to visit their relatives on the Soviet side of the border. The dead included women and children.

Red Star in a commentary on the recent Ninth Congress of the Chinese Communist Party imputed to China a kind of international claustrophobia, declaring that the Chinese were constantly being told they were surrounded by enemies, an argument reminiscent of Stalin's pre-war obsession with capitalist encirclement.

Red Star said: "Behind the smoke-screen of danger threatening from everywhere, society (in China) is being militarized on an unparalleled scale. Branches of production are termed 'fronts'. Factories are 'divisions and regiments,' shops are 'battalions and companies.' The factory administration is the 'command'."

The Chinese Army, according to Red Star, was now in full control of the economy. For the first time, the newspaper stated that shipments of Soviet weapons, including artillery, in transit for Viet-Nam via China were rifled by the Chinese.

The paper re-affirmed charges that a large proportion of the more than 20 million city dwellers forced into rural settlement had been sent to national minority border areas to speed up assimilation. Red Star added that Red Guard newspapers in China had frankly described the "Cultural Revolution" as a military dress rehearsal for the preparation of a prolonged war and a world war.

It said that Mr. Mao Tse-tung himself had made this clear when he issued his appeal: "Prepare for hardship. Prepare for war."

B. Bid For Control Over Intellectuals: Peking made on May 4 a new attempt to strengthen control over young intellectuals.

Three of China's leading publications, the Peking People's Daily, the Red Flag, a fortnightly magazine, and the Liberation Army Daily, carried a joint editorial article urging the intellectuals to "integrate themselves with the workers, peasants and soldiers".

The article was to commemorate the anniversary of the May 4 movement—a campaign launched in 1919 to protest at the way China was treated at the peace conference preceding the signing of the Treaty of Versailles.

The article, however, defined the true role of the intellectual in China.

The part played by young students and Red Guards in assuring victory for the Maoists in the Cultural Revolution should be acknowledged as tremendous, the newspapers said. "The revolutionary cause needs the participation of as many intellectuals as possible." However, the editorial warned that "many intellectuals often vacillate and lack a thoroughly revolutionary spirit."

To remedy this, they called on the educated classes to seek re-education "for a long period of time" at the hands of peasants, workers and soldiers.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Discharge Of President's Functions Bill; Nagas' Convention; CPI-CP(M) Unity Talks; INTUC Annual Session; Nehru Award.

A. Discharge Of President's Functions—Bill Passed: The President (Discharge of Functions) Bill was passed by the Rajya Sabha on May 19.

The Bill, which provides for the discharge of the functions of the President of India by the Chief Justice of India in the event of both the President and Vice-President being incapacitated or otherwise rendered incapable of performing their duties, was passed by the Lok Sabha earlier.

The debate on the Bill yielded some arguments against the Chief Justice discharging the functions of the President and for the Speaker of the Lok Sabha to discharge the functions of the President.

According to the Bill, the person discharging the functions of the President shall have "all the powers and immunities of the President and be entitled to such emoluments, and allowances and privileges, as may be determined by Parliament and until provision in that behalf is made such emoluments, and allowances and privileges, as are specified in the Second Schedule."

The Statement of Objects of the Bill says: "Under Article 70 of the Constitution, Parliament may make such provision as it thinks fit for the discharge of the functions of the President in any contingency not provided for in Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution. Article 65 provides for the Vice-President acting as President or discharging his functions during casual vacancies in the office, or during the absence of the President.

"The Constitution does not provide for cases where a vacancy occurs in the office of the Vice-President or where the Vice-President is unable to discharge his functions while acting as President or discharging the functions of the President. The Government, therefore, considers it necessary to make provision to cover such cases."

B. Restrictions On Import Of Stainless Steel And Synthetic Fabrics From Nepal: According to an official notification issued in New Delhi on May 21, restrictions have been imposed on the import of stainless steel and synthetic fabrics from Nepal.

Stainless steel and synthetic fabrics from Nepal will be allowed only in accordance with the "regulatory arrangements" agreed on between the Governments of India and Nepal in November, 1968, when it had been agreed that Nepal would restrict the exports of stainless steel and synthetic fabrics to the level, both in terms of quantity and value, obtaining in 1967-68.

Exports of stainless steel utensils and synthetic fabrics from Nepal proved a lucrative business because of the scarcity of these goods in India. These goods were manufactured in Nepal through joint ventures by Indian and Nepalese businessmen for whom it was a profitable proposition to export these goods to India.

In 1967-68, Nepal exported about Rs. 1.8 crores worth of stainless steel utensils to India. The value of synthetic fabric exports was estimated at about Rs. 2 crores. Since imports of raw material to manufacture these goods are controlled in India, this country naturally did not like large exports of these commodities from Nepal.

At the time the November Agreement was entered into, a spokesman for the Government of India had stated that if Nepal failed, by its own export control measures, to limit the out-flow of these goods to the 1967-68 level, India would be forced to consider imposing import controls on the entry of synthetic fabrics and stainless steel utensils. Hence, the present restrictions.

C. Nagaland Nationalist Organization's Convention: Addressing the annual convention of the ruling Nagaland Nationalist Organization in Kohima on May 21, the State Chief Minister, Mr. Hokishe Sema said that the morale of the underground Nagas had been shattered beyond recovery after the recent capture of several China-trained hostiles.

He said that with the return of the NNO-led popular Government for a second term, the turn of events in Nagaland had gone completely against the hostiles. During the last three months, 420 out of a total of 555 hostiles who returned from China had either surrendered, or were captured or killed. Contrary to rumours, the actual number of hostiles who went to China for training and arms was only 555.

He said that the first group led by Thinochillie consisted of 148 persons. Of them, eight had surrendered and five had been captured. The rest were still at large.

The second group consisting of 331 men led by "Gen." Mowu Angami and Issac Swu had returned from China fully armed. Of them, 290 including some Burmese insurgents had been captured.

The third group led by Dosai had been arrested by the Burmese and 76 of them handed over to the Indian authorities. He did not know how many of them were killed.

Resolutions:

The NNO annual convention concluded its two-day session on May 22 with a resolution to take the initiative for a satisfactory political settlement acceptable to the Nagas and the Government of India.

This was the first time that the ruling NNO was taking the initiative for a settlement with a pledge to make contacts with the underground Nagas and bring about a settlement.

A resolution passed at the end of the session said that "being fortified by the public conference and realizing the profound desire of the people for peace and a permanent settlement, the NNO will take active and positive steps for a settlement".

Two other resolutions—one on the implementation of the 16-point Delhi 1960 agreement and the other a strongly-worded warning to Assam on the border dispute—were also adopted.

It also suggested that the Five-Year Plan for Nagaland should come under special review by the Planning Commission in 1970. It asked for more funds as a special case so that the State could provide more roads, water and electricity.

It also urged the Centre to transfer the law and order responsibilities, entrusted with the Governor, to the Nagaland Government immediately.

E. CPI-CP(M) Joint Talks For Unity: In a brief joint statement issued on May 27 at the end of their three-day talks in Calcutta to find ways to heal their divisions and come together again, the CPI and the CPI (M) expressed their agreement that efforts must be continued for improving relations between the two parties and their relations with other parties constituting the United Front Governments in Kerala and West Bengal.

The meeting was the first of its kind at the national level since the two parties split into two in 1964.

It was described by Mr. C. Rajeshwara Rao, general secretary of the CPI, as a "very good beginning."

The joint statement noted that differences existed between the two parties on the recent developments in Kerala and West Bengal and on "several other important issues," which were not named, but both sides agreed that the United Fronts in the two States should be consolidated and strengthened and that necessary steps for this purpose should be taken.

Both sides attached great importance to the prevention of clashes as well as to the elimination of the atmosphere that gave rise to them and to the avoidance of unfounded accusations.

The statement indicated that the two parties had decided to take up the matter with the respective State committees of the parties before any decision was taken on the issues under dispute.

It was also stated that the two delegations had agreed to meet again and continue discussions on problems of united action and united mass movements as and when such meetings were decided upon by mutual consent.

The statement was signed by Mr. P. Sundarayya on behalf of CPI(M) and Mr. Rajeshwara Rao on behalf of CPI.

Mr. Rajeshwara Rao explained that the joint meeting did not discuss the possibility of the two Communist Parties coming closer at the national level. In other words, the ideological dispute between the two parties was kept out of the purview of the present meeting. The emphasis was on efforts to preserve the United Fronts in Kerala and West Bengal and the need for greater understanding between the two parties towards this objective. He added: "As far as we are concerned, I think the current talks are an advance towards better understanding of the two parties."

F. Another Maoist Extremist Party Contemplated: It was learnt in Calcutta on May 18 that the Left Communist extremists who have kept away from the newly-formed Communist Party of India (Marxist-Leninist) plan to form another party.

Their party will also be a Maoist party but different from the CPI (M-L) which, they allege, is distorting Maoism and following the middle-class revolutionism of Che Guevara, the late Cuban revolutionary.

These dissident Naxalites have parted company with the CPI (M-L) mainly on the question of formation of a party at this stage. They say that a revolutionary communist party cannot be formed by a mere dramatic announcement but through a series of processes, including formulation of a programme and a tactical line.

Alleging that the CPI (M-L) has neither, they say that the notions of a "peasant-based" party, a "guerrilla-based" party, or a "village-based'" party were contrary to Marxism-Leninism. The leadership of the working class should not be equated with city-based revolution. The latter has to be avoided, but the idea of a struggle based solely on poor and landless peasants in the rural areas and on guerrilla warfare has also to be shunned. Such tactics cannot bring about revolution. The stress on peasant politics and peasant-based party betrays a kind of "Narodnik thinking."

The leader of the dissident group is Mr. Parimal Dasgupta, a former secretary of the Calcutta district committee of the CPI(M). He was the convener of the Naxalbari Peasants Struggle Assistance Committee which was the first open sign of an impending split in the CPI(M) in West Bengal.

G. Companies Bill Passed: The Rajya Sabha adopted on May 19 an official Bill banning donations by companies to any political party and abolishing the managing agency system.

The Bill, passed by the Lok Sabha a few days earlier, also abolished the offices of Secretaries and Treasurers in companies.

Both measures had received wide support from all sections in both Houses.

Some members also wanted the Government to curb monopolists, check unaccounted money and prevent underhand donations by companies.

The Minister for Industrial Development and Company Affairs, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, said that acceptance of the amendment would amount to "over legislation". He did not think that any one would be "foolish enough" to donate knowing fully well that be would face punishment.

Mr. Bhupesh Gupta (CPI) unsuccessfully fought for his amendment which sought to abolish the managing agency system on July 1 this year and not April 3, 1970 as provided for in the Bill.

The Bill had passed through a Joint Select Committee earlier.

H. INTUC Annual Session: In his Presidential address at the 18th annual session of the Indian National Trade Union Congress (INTUC) in Quilon on May 19, Mr. Abid Ali called upon workers to transform themselves into crusaders for fighting the evils of regionalism, linguism, sectionalism, indiscipline and corruption as well as anti-national and anti-social elements.

He said: "Instead of political parties dominating industrial workers, a time is coming when industrial workers will influence and shape party policies."

Political parties must remember that those days were gone when they could use industrial labour for their self-interest. A new situation was emerging. The industrial working force, though in a minority in comparison to the total population, was very much potent and articulate today. It also controlled the nerves and life-lines of the nation.

He said that if relations between political parties and industrial workers were to remain harmonious and cordial, institutional relations must be established between the parties and trade unions.

To improve industrial relations, he suggested a "five-year truce" under which employers and workers' organizations should agree to refer to voluntary arbitration all unresolved disputes. To end linguistic fanaticism, he suggested re-constituting the country into four or five zones based on administrative convenience.

Referring to the poor performance of the public sector undertakings, he called for a re-appraisal with regard to their performance, services and industrial relations. The public sector was deteriorating and developing into a "State bureaucratic capitalism." It was high time that the working of the public sector was streamlined instead of merely degenerating into an "asylum for some highly placed but inefficient civil servants, either on the verge of retirement or re-employed after retirement."

New Office-bearers:

On May 20, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda was elected President of INTUC for 1969-70.

The Vice-Presidents are: Mr. Michael John, Dr. (Mrs.) Maitrayee Bose, M.P., Mr. Kashinath Pandey, M.P., Mr. V. V. Dravid and Mr. N. M. Barot (all re-elected).

Mr. G. Ramaņujam and Mr. A. N. Buch were re-elected General Secretary and Treasurer, respectively.

Resolutions:

In a resolution adopted on May 20, the INTUC demanded the appointment of a Third Pay Commission by the Government of India for its employees, including industrial workers.

It said that the appointment of such a commission was highly overdue as the Second Commission was set up some 12 years ago.

In another resolution, INTUC appealed to the Government to bring comprehensive legislation governing relations between employers and employees in all essential services, not only in the Government or the public sector, but also in the private sector, to replace the present legislation governing employees in essential services.

It said that strikes by these employees could be avoided only by making available self-contained and more effective machinery to deal with employer-employee differences. Such machinery should provide primarily for direct negotiations, and failing this, for arbitration. Where arbitration was not available, disputes should be referred to compulsory adjudication at the instance of the State or either party.

I. Take-over Of Cooch-Behar Land By West Bengal Government: The West Bengal Government took over on May 6 about 15,000 bighas of land from the Maharaja of Cooch-Behar.

A notice was served on the Maharaja under the Estate's Acquisition Act under which the Maharaja was entitled to retain only 75 bighas for his own agriculture and 60 bighas for his homestead.

Of the about 15,000 bighas taken over, about 12,000 bighas were cultivable paddy land. Besides, there were 400 bighas of land adjacent to the Maharaja's palace and few big buildings in Darjeeling.

The State Land Revenue Minister, Mr. Hare Krishna Konar said that "the take-over of the Maharaja's land is a severe blow to feudalism." He said "the take-over is legal and fully justified." The Congress Government had desisted from taking over the lands "for its own class interests" and offered an excuse that the 1948 agreement on the accession of the State guaranteed the ruler protection from such take-over.

He said that the first United Front Ministry in 1967 had planned the take-over of the Maharaja's lands. Immediately after assuming power for a second time, the Ministry examined all legal aspects connected with the take-over.

Restraint Order By Calcutta High Court:

On May 14, the Calcutta High Court granted an interim injunction restraining the West Bengal Government from taking possession of the personal properties of the Maharaja of Cooch-Behar in terms of its recent acquisition order.

The Court also asked the State Government to show cause why its order dated April 25, 1969 should not be set aside.

The application was moved under Article 226 of the Constitution on behalf of the Maharaja.

The Government order had directed him to give up possession of some of the land which, according to the Government, was vested in the State of West Bengal under the Estate Acquisition Act.

It was contended that the petitioner had entered into an agreement with the Governor-General of India on August 28, 1949, whereby the administration of the State of the Maharaja was transferred to the Dominion of India. This agreement guaranteed that the personal properties of the petitioner could not or did not vest in the State of West Bengal at any time.

The petitioner submitted that the order was bad in law and ultra vires of the provisions of the West Bengal Estate Acquisition Act, 1953, as the Maharaja could be called an "intermediary" within the meaning of the Act and his properties, therefore, could not be called 'estate.'

J. Minimum Wages Fixed For Manganese Mine-workers: The Government by a notification on May 21 fixed the minimum rates of wages for unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled supervisory and clerical workers in manganese mines.

The minimum rates of wages of the same categories or workers in respect of scheduled employments in agriculture and construction industries in the Central sphere and bauxite and gypsum mines were also revised.

For fixing wages in agriculture and construction industries the country was divided into five areas. The minimum wages for unskilled labour in agriculture vary between Rs. 2.50 and Rs. 3.70 a day and in construction industry they are from Rs. 2.40 to Rs. 3.50 a day.

A cartman is an "unskilled" worker. A coachman is "semi-skilled", while a "driver" becomes fully "skilled." Accordingly, minimum wages for these classes of farm workers were fixed.

Agricultural labourer, grazier, grass-cutter and weighman were classified as unskilled and their minimum wages range from Rs. 2.50 in 'D' areas to Rs. 3.70 in 'A' areas.

The cultivator, ploughman and bullman were classified as semi-skilled and their minimum wages range from Rs. 3.30 in area 'D' to Rs. 4.90 in area 'A'.

More than 6,00,000 workers in agriculture and construction and mining industries in the Central sphere were covered by the notification.

K. BKD Wins UP Lok Sabha By-election: The Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD) candidate, Mr. Sripati Misra, was declared elected to the Lok Sabha on May 19 in the by-election from the Sultanpur parliamentary constituency in Uttar Pradesh.

Mr. Misra, who was locked in a direct fight with the Congress candidate, Dr. Kailash Nath Singh, won the election by a margin of 249 votes. Mr. Misra polled 48,041 votes against Dr. Singh's 47,792.

The vacancy was caused by the death of a sitting Congress member, Mr. Ganpati Sahai.

The following are the details:

Electorate: 5,74,379.

Votes polled. 98,915.

Mr. Sripati Misra (BKD): 48,041.

Dr. Kailash Nath Singh (Cong): 47,792.

Invalid votes: 3,082.

Mr. Misra, who had been elected to the UP Assembly in the 1967 General Election as a Congress candidate, was the Deputy Speaker during the brief non-Congress regime. He was, however, defeated in the mid-term poll from Lambhua, one of the five Assembly constituencies constituting the Sultanpur parliamentary constituency.

L. Nehru Award For 1967: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, veteran freedom-fighter and close associate of Mahatma Gandhi, has been selected for the 1967 Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding.

The 80-year-old Pakhtoon leader, popularly known as "Frontier Gandhi," at present in Kabul, will arrive in New Delhi in September to receive the Award.

The jury which made the selection said it was "most appropriate" that in the Gandhi Centenary Year, the Award should be made to a person whose life and work truly reflect Gandhiji's ideas and ideals.

Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan had languished for several years in jail—first for his part in India's freedom struggle and later, after Partition, in Pakistan for his fight for Pakhtoon rights.

Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan was the third distinguished person to receive the Nehru Award. U Thant, UN Secretary-General, and Dr. Martin Luther King (posthumous) were the earlier recipients.

The Award carries an amount of Rs. 1,00,000 in cash convertible in foreign currency and a citation.

IRAN

A. World Bank Aid For Private Industry: The World Bank announced on May 7 a loan of $40 million to the Industrial Mining and Development Bank of Iran (IMDBI) to help private industry in the country.

The loan would provide most of the foreign exchange IMDBI may need over the next one or two years for loans to a wide variety of industrial enterprises. The loan, guaranteed by the Government, would bear interest of 6-1/2 per cent. Repayment would conform approximately to repayments received by IMDBI on its own subloans from Bank funds, which would not extend for periods beyond 15 years.

In recent years, private industry had recorded a growth rate of 10 per cent.

IMDBI, a privately-owned institution, had become Iran's major source of long-term finance for private industry since its establishment 10 years ago. Almost all its foreign exchange resources had come from World Bank loans, now aggregating $105 million.

Since it began operations, IMDBI had approved loans and equity investments totalling $147 million (11 billion rials) for 271 industrial projects, which had included those for the manufacture of metal products, transport equipment, sugar, cement, food processing, wood and paper products, electrical goods, petroleum products and chemicals.

IMDBI had also taken a leading role in promoting new industries by feasibility studies, project preparation and finding foreign partners for its Iranian clients. In addition, it assisted in establishing the Tehran Stock Exchange.

Iranian economy had in recent years sustained rapid economic growth creating a favourable climate for private investment. As a result, IMDBI's volume of business had risen sharply, particularly in its 1968-69 fiscal year when it approved loans and investments totalling the equivalent of $51 million (3.8 billion rials), compared to $34 million in 1967-68.

Iran's Fourth Plan (1968-73) laid particular emphasis on rapid industrialization and IMDBI would play an important part in this development.

IMDBI had shown good profits and paid a dividend of 10 per cent for the 1967-68 fiscal year, compared with 8 per cent in 1966-67.

B. CENTO Ministerial Conference: The CENTO Ministerial Council held a two-day session in Tehran on May 26 and 27.

A communique issued later said that Kashmir was one of the subjects discussed.

The other subjects discussed included the Arab-Israeli conflict, the Viet-Nam problem, the Greece-Turkey dispute over Cyprus and Iran's row with neighbouring Iraq over navigation rights in the Shatt-el-Arab waterway.

The communique said: "The Council expressed the hope that present tension would ease and that the causes thereof would be resolved in a peaceful and satisfactory manner in keeping with the principles of international law, equity and justice.

"Ministers from the United States, Britain, Pakistan, Turkey and Iran reviewed international developments in a broad exchange of views marked by cordiality and understanding."

Iran's Foreign Minister, Mr. Ardeshir Zahedi, noted that his country had been able to "normalize" its relations with the Soviet Union and he urged a broadening of CENTO's mandate.

He warned that the instability of the Leftist regime in Iraq constituted a serious threat to the peace of the oil-rich Persian Gulf.

IRAQ

A. Plot To Overthrow Government Smashed—US Charged: An official spokesman made the charge in an interview with the Baghdad correspondent of the official Syrian news agency on May 22 that the American CIA had plotted the overthrow of the Iraqi Government.

He said: "The Iraqi Government has smashed a new espionage and political sabotage ring operated by the CIA in Iraq."

He alleged that former army Brig. Midhat el Haj Sirri was "the active leader" of the alleged plot.

Brig. Sirri, a former Mayor of Baghdad, had attempted suicide in prison immediately after his arrest a week earlier.

The Government had earlier announced on May 19 that it had smashed a plot to overthrow President Ahmed Hassan el Bakr.

JAPAN

A. Increase In Exchange Reserves: Foreign exchange reserves which had hovered around the $2 billion mark since 1965, topped $3 billion to a total of $3,005 million by the end of February.

Japan's GNP also advanced to second place after USA among countries with free enterprise economy.

A major cause of the rapid reserve-increase, which was achieved in the brief period from July, 1968 when the reserves stood at the $2,072 million mark, was the growing competitive power of the nation's exports. Favourable economic conditions in USA boosted exports to score a surplus of $2,500 million in the trade account last year—a two-fold increase over the previous period. A brisk inflow of foreign capital, reflecting increases in impact loans, flotation of foreign bonds and foreign investment in Japanese securities, also contributed to the growth of currency reserves.

With the present economic boom, the nation's foreign exchange reserves were expected to increase further to reach the $3.5 billion mark by the end of June.

The unexpected rapidity of these increases led to a belief that the trend may be a temporary one. However, Government opinion was that the increases were soundly based on improved economic conditions, such as stabilization of export prices, growth in overseas sales of heavy and chemical industrial products, and a general strengthening of the economy during the 1960's.

However, Fuji Bank economists pointed out that the present ratio of reserves to imports ($12,989 million for 1968, customs clearance basis) was still low compared to other advanced nations. Therefore, a minimum level of $3,000 million should be maintained to cope with economic fluctuations overseas and to bolster international competitive power.

KUWAIT

A. Indian Ocean Region Satellite Services Conference: About 30 countries, including India, were represented at the opening of a conference on communications satellite services in the Indian Ocean region on May 17.

The other countries were: Bahrain, Britain, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Pakistan, USA and West Germany.

The conference discussed technical aspects of establishing a global communications satellite system.

A ground station for satellite signals, constructed by Japan's Nippon Electric Company, was completed in Kuwait in July, 1968.

The Director of the International Tele-communication Satellite Consortium (INTELSAT), Mr. W.H. Wood, said that the five initial participants in the system were: Kuwait, Britain, Japan, Bahrain and Indonesia. Others to join this year were Australia, Thailand, India, Italy and West Germany.

The opening of the conference, held under the auspices of INTELSAT, coincided with International Tele-communications Day.

NEPAL

A. Mr. K. Bisht On Relations With India: In an informal talk at a dinner given to delegates attending the Indian Travel Convention in Khatmandu on May 18, the Prime Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht said that recognition of Nepal's national aspirations was not forthcoming in an adequate measure from India. This was so even as he admitted the basic soundness of relations between the two countries.

He spoke of the inadequacy of transit facilities given to his country to carry on trade with the rest of the world and the Susta controversy as the most long-standing irritants dogging Nepal's relations with India. Somehow India, he added, did not seem to understand Nepal's desire to expand her channels of trade with other countries, particularly Pakistan. The existing transit facilities were inadequate and, as the pace of Nepal's development gained momentum, he feared his country would face serious difficulties on this score.

He was of the view that India had missed an opportunity of solving the Susta dispute "without undue controversy". As Foreign Minister, he had approached the Government of India long ago with the plea that the missing boundary pillars be replaced quickly without allowing a controversy to develop. "But the response came too late". By then, certain elements in India had made an issue of it. He, however, agreed that the dispute was not of a political nature, it was essentially a matter for the experts of the two countries.

He wanted everyone, including India, to recognize the fact that Nepal had "a right to go its own way"; her foreign policy was guided by her own needs and her own genius. As a small country sandwiched between two mutually hostile giants, it was his country's desire to have good relations with both. As for relations with India, these were traditional and lasting.

He made it clear that Nepal did not want to develop relations with China at the cost of India. "Naturally, we want to have the friendliest of relations with China, but this will not be at the cost of our relations with India."

He did not share Indian apprehensions about Chinese intentions in building the Kodari Road linking Khatmandu with Tibet. He brushed aside suggestions that the Chinese virtually controlled the road. If everyone was not allowed to proceed beyond a certain point on the road, it was because "the road is not yet complete."

His assertion contradicted the general belief in Khatmandu that the road was practically complete and in actual use. Indeed, according to these reports, the Chinese observed strict control over the road. Mr. Bisht re-iterated that the road would be thrown open to all when his attention was drawn to the apparent conflict between restrictions on the movement of Indians on this road and Treaty obligations which guarantee free movement to citizens of one country in the other.

B. Trade And Consular Relations With North Korea Established: The Government announced in Khatmandu on May 20 its decision to establish trade and consular relations with North Korea.

The Government's decision to allow North Korea to establish a trade and consular office in Khatmandu followed a visit recently by that country's Consul-General in New Delhi.

However, within hours of this decision, a South Korean delegation headed by the country's Consul-General in New Delhi arrived in the Capital on May 21.

Mr. Woon Sang Choy, the South Korean Consul-General in New Delhi, sought an interview with Foreign Ministry officials shortly after his arrival to press for extension of trade and consular facilities to his country.

A factor that should go in favour of the South Koreans is the deterioration in China's relations with North Korea. Normally the Nepalese Government may not have been inclined to provoke a possible diplomatic clash with Peking.

Peking's relations with North Korea have not been very cordial since February 1, 1967, when the Premier, Mr. Kim Il Sung was accused by China of ingratitude. In June the same year, China refused to join in the Korean War anniversary celebrations. The North Koreans retaliated by taking action where it hurt the Chinese most: it practically banished Mao's Thought and his works from the country.

PAKISTAN

A. Annual Plan Targets: Pakistan's Annual Development Plan approved by the National Economic Council on May 7 for next year envisages a growth rate of 6.5 per cent as against the current year's estimated growth rate of 6 per cent.

The Council, which met under the chairmanship of Presiden Yahya Khan in Rawalpindi, set the target for East Pakistan at 7 per cent and that for the West Wing at 6 per cent.

An official spokesman told newsmen after the meeting that the target for wheat had been set at 70,00,000 tons as against this year's 65,00,000 to 68,00,000 tons. The target for rice output in East Pakistan was set at 1.23 crore tons as against this year's 1.09 crore tons. The production of cotton in West Pakistan was put at 32,00,000 bales and output of jute in East Pakistan at 70,00,000 tons.

Radio Pakistan said that the Plan envisaged a growth rate of 10 per cent in the overall manufacturing industries and a 12 per cent growth rate for large-scale industries. The target for export earnings was set at Rs. 450 crores as against the current year's target of Rs. 415 crores.

The spokesman hoped that the general price index would register a downward trend with the fall in the price of wheat.

B. Rise In Productivity: Radio Pakistan reported on May 6 that the country's gross national product for 1967-68 had registered an increase of 8.3 per cent, compared to a rise of 5 per cent in the preceding year.

Quoting the annual report of the State Bank of Pakistan, it said that industrial production in 1967-68 was estimated to have increased by 10 per cent as against 10.5 per cent in the preceding year.

The export earnings also recorded a further rise during the year.

D. Iraq's Support On Kashmir Issue Denied: A communique issued in Rawalpindi on May 16 at the end of a three-day official visit by the Iranian Premier, Mr. A. A. Hoveida, said that Indo-Pakistani relations were "stalemated" because India had refused to settle the Kashmir question.

It said that Mr. Hoveida had expressed the hope that Pakistan's efforts for a "just and peaceful settlement of Indo-Pakistani disputes will be successful and lead to good relations between the two neighbours."

The communique quoted the Iranian Prime Minister as saying that his country backed the right of self-determination of the people of Kashmir "in accordance with UN resolutions."

But, on May 23, the Iranian Government denied that Mr. Hoveida had stated during his recent visit to Pakistan that his country would support Pakistan "in any conflict."

Mr. Hoveida and the Iranian Foreign Office expressed surprise when their attention was drawn by the Indian Ambassador in Tehran to Pakistani Press reports of Mr Hoveida's alleged statement. They categorically stated that no such statement had been made.

They also explained that Iran's position with regard to Indo-Pakistan disputes were stated in the communique at the time of the Shah of Iran's visit to India. There had been no change in Tehran's position since then.

F. Expansion Of Sui Gas System: The natural gas pipe-line system in the northern part of West Pakistan is proposed to be so expanded as to assure supply of 30 million cubic feet of gas daily, to be used mainly as raw material for the Dawood Hercules urea fertilizer plant now under construction near Lahore.

The use of natural gas production of fertilizer is an important element in the Government's plans for agricultural development both to increase productivity and to save foreign exchange now spent for fertilizer imports.

The World Bank announced on May 7 a loan of $8 million to help the expansion scheme which will cost a total of $18 million.

The loan will be made to the Sui Northern Gas Pipelines for a term of 20 years, including a three-year grace period, with interest at 6½ per cent. It will be guaranteed by the Government.

[Natural gas constitutes by far the most significant known mineral fuel reserves of West Pakistan. One of the largest fields is Sui which is the main source of supply for two pipeline systems —one serving the southern region, including Hyderabad and Karachi, operated by the Sui Gas Transmission Company, and the other serving the north, including Multan, Lyallpur, Lahore and Rawalpindi, operated by the Sui Northern Gas Pipelines Limited. Earlier World Bank loans had been made to both companies for the construction of their pipelines.]

With the assistance of the Bank loan, Sui Northern Gas Pipelines (SNGPL) will increase the capacity of its system from 172 to 207 million cubic feet per day. Provision has also been made for completing the automation of the pipeline system and for a modest expansion of the existing distribution system to serve small industry and household requirements in certain urban areas. The works include the installation of high-pressure transmission pipelines and compressor units, the construction of a new compressor station, and additional low-pressure distribution facilities.

[SNGPL, a limited liability company, is owned one-third each by the West Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation, the Burmah Oil Company and individual Pakistani shareholders. Its pipeline system extends over 600 miles from the Sui and the Dhulian oil fields to the north. Most of its sales are to large industrial consumers and to the West Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority for the generation of electric power. The Dawood Hercules plant will be the second fertilizer plant to which it will deliver gas and is expected to account for 20 per cent of the Company's projected sales when the plant is in operation.]

G. F-M. Ayub Khan Asked To Render Account Of Muslim League Funds: The former President, F-M. Ayub Khan, who is also President of the Muslim League Party, was on May 19 asked "to render an account of partv funds" by a prominent leader of the party from East Pakistan, Mr. Wahiduz Zaman.

In a letter to the party chief, Mr. Zaman also asked F-M. Ayub Khan to give a public statement about money collected in the name of the party for his election as President in 1965 and later. He also demanded that F-M. Ayub Khan should explain how these funds were collected for the party and how they were spent, because the "party never authorized him party funds without consulting its executive committee."

Mr. Zaman alleged that F-M. Ayub Khan, during his Presidency of the party, "never gave any account of funds to either the executive committee or the convention of delegates and acted in an arbitrary manner."

F-M. Ayub Khan was given a week by court order to show why he should not be removed from the Presidency of his former ruling Muslim League Party.

The court also ordered 48 others, including the World Bank Vice-President, Mr. Mohammed Shoaib, a former Finance Minister, to show cause why F-M. Ayub Khan should not be removed.

H. Rise In Wages Of Low-paid Workers: The West Pakistan Provincial Government issued a directive to employees on May 5 calling on them to up-grade the wages of low-paid workers to a specified minimum.

The Government said that it was basing the directive on increases already given to its own employees. Workers getting Rs. 100 per month should immediately get a 20 per cent increase.

It also directed that workers getting between Rs. 100 and Rs. 200 should received 15 per cent increase and those between Rs. 200 and Rs. 500 should get a 10 per cent raise.

The Directive was in line with the policy of President Yahya Khan's Government to give a better deal to the low-paid workers who suffered most under the 10-year regime of former President Ayub Khan.

THAILAND

A. Mr. T. Khoman On Chinese Moves: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, alleged on May 8 that Chinese forces had moved into northern parts of Laos and Burma. They had de facto control over the Phong Saly province of Laos and "construction battalions" in the Kachin State of Burma.

According to him, the Laotian province of Sam Neua, on the border with North Viet-Nam, had been similarly occupied by Hanoi's forces.

He said that these developments in South-East Asia, after Peking's re-affirmation of support for so-called wars of national liberation, indicated Asian communist plans and moves for the future. Strategic roads were being built in northern parts of Burma and Laos for the expansion of the communists southwards.

Hill tribes in Phong Saly and Sam Neua had been forced to leave for southern areas and communist hill tribes had moved in to replace them. North Viet-Namese forces were now in virtual control of the Ho Chi-Minh Trail, running down eastern Laos and the vicinity, leaving the Laotian Government in control of populated centres. But the Government-controlled areas of Laos were also more or less encircled by the communists.

[Air Chief Marshal Dawee Chulasaphya, Chief of Staff of the Thai armed forces and Minister of Communications, also said in a Press interview that the Chinese had filled Phong Saly and Kachin with civilians and troops. He added that the Thai Government was studying measures to increase defence arrangements in areas close to the Burmese and Laotian borders.]

S-EATO's Role:

Mr. Thanat, in an interview published in the Bangkok Post the same day (May 8), said that the South-East Asia Treaty Organization (S-EATO) should change its emphasis from a military to a political role if it was to be saved from impotence.

S-EATO, which was due to hold its 14th annual council meeting in Bangkok later in May, should be able to take political and diplomatic steps for the preservation of peace and stability in the region.

He expressed keen disappointment over the military role so far played by the pact. "The military capability of S-EATO is a fiction," he declared. "S-EATO has no military structure, only a military frame-work. It has no combined forces like NATO. There has been no instance of collective defence action, there has only been individual action by individual members."

Mr. Thanat's statement came amid speculation that some members would propose a drastic re-organization of the pact during the meeting of the Council.

Mr. Thanat noted that "two to three members" of S-EATO had ceased to take part in its military activities. He did not name them, but he was believed to be referring to Britain, France and Pakistan. He indicated that he would submit his proposal for a change in emphasis of S-EATO's role to the council meeting.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Mr. R. Nixon's Eight-Point Peace Plan: In his first major address on Viet-Nam since taking office in January, President R. Nixon of the United States, on May 14, proposed an eight-point plan which provided for internationally supervised elections in South Viet-Nam following a staged, verified withdrawal of all foreign forces from the country.

The address from the White House was carried "live" by the three American national television networks and the nine national radio links. But, Mr. Nixon hoped that the "new initiatives" he proposed would enable his countrymen to look back on his speech "as that critical turning point" which moved the world towards peace.

He said: "'The United States has suffered over a million casualties in four wars in this century. Whatever faults we may have as a nation, we have asked nothing for ourselves in return for those sacrifices... We are proud of this record and we bring the same attitude in our search for a settlement in Viet-Nam.

"In this spirit, let me be explicit about several points:

"We seek no bases in Viet-Nam.

"We insist on no military ties.

"We are willing to agree to neutrality for South Viet-Nam if that is what the South Viet-Namese people freely choose.

"We believe that there should be an opportunity for full participation in the political life of South Viet-Nam by all political elements that are prepared to do so without the use of force or intimidation.

"We are prepared to accept any government in South Viet-Nam that results from the free choice of the South Viet-Namese people themselves.

"We have no intention of imposing any form of government upon the people of South Viet-Nam, nor will we be a party to such coercion.

"We have no objection to re-unification if that turns out to be what the people of South Viet-Nam and the people of North Viet-Nam want....

"To implement these principles, I re-affirm now our willingness to withdraw our forces on a specified time-table. We ask only that North Viet-Nam withdraw its forces from South Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos into North Viet-Nam also in accordance with a time-table. We include Cambodia and Laos to ensure that (they) would not be used as bases for a renewed war....

"To make very concrete what I have said, I propose the following specific measures which seem to me consistent with the principles of all parties:

"(1) As soon as agreement can be reached, all non-South Viet-Namese forces would begin withdrawals from South Viet-Nam. Over a period of 12 months, by agreed-upon stages, the major portions of all United States, allied and other non-South Viet-Namese forces would be withdrawn.

"(2) At the end of this 12-month period, the remaining United States, allied and other non-South Viet-Namese forces would move into designated base areas and would not engage in combat operations.

"(3) The remaining US and allied forces would complete their withdrawals as the remaining North Viet-Namese forces were withdrawn and return to North Viet-Nam.

"(4) An international supervisory body, acceptable to both sides, would be created for the purpose of verifying withdrawals, and for any other purpose agreed upon between the two sides.

"(5) This international body would begin operating in accordance with an agreed time-table and would participate in arranging a supervised cease-fire in Viet-Nam.

"(6) As soon as possible after the international body was functioning, elections would be held under agreed procedures and under (its) supervision.

"(7) Arrangements would be made for the release of prisoners of war on both sides at the earliest possible time.

"(8) All parties would agree to observe the Geneva Accords of 1954 regarding South Viet-Nam and Cambodia and the Laos Accords of 1962."

NLF Reaction:

In its first official comment on the proposals made by Mr. Nixon the National Liberation Front (NLF), the political wing of the Viet-Cong, in a statement issued in Paris said: "Faced with the just character of the overall 10-point solution advanced by the South Viet-Nam National Liberation Front, which appeals both to the heart and to reason, and faced with the favourable public reaction to that solution, President Nixon pretended to show goodwill by making his statement of May 14.

"In fact, the United States will cling to its old, unjust and unreasonable proposal for mutual withdrawal of troops, placing on the same footing the aggressor and those who resist aggression, a proposal which we have already rejected many times".

In Saigon, President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Viet-Nam issued a statement endorsing the US eight-point plan.

"Resume" Of Developments Since Paris Deadlock:

Meanwhile, the following is a resume of developments since the Paris peace talks were deadlocked (see pages 8531 and 8656):

At the 22nd session of the Paris peace talks on September 18, 1968, Mr. Cyrus Vance, deputizing for the chief American delegate, Mr. Averell Harriman, rejected North Viet-Nam's call for US negotiations with NLF as South Viet-Nam's legitimate representatives. The same day, North Viet-Nam's chief negotiator, Mr. Xuan Thuy, rejected US proposals to re-establish the demilitarized zone as a step toward peace.

On October 24, 1968, President L. B. Johnson of the United States said there was still no break-through in the Paris negotiations, but made it clear that the new peace effort was still very much alive. In Paris the same day, the spokesman for the North Viet-Namese delegation, Mr. Nguyen Thanh Le, said a US end to bombings would mean "something new immediately." Two days earlier (October 22), at the end of several rounds of meetings with the American Ambassador, Mr. Ellsworth Bunker, President Thieu said he would not oppose "conditional halt to bombing of North Viet-Nam."

A communique issued by Mr. Xuan Thuy in Paris on November 1, 1968 said that Mr. Harriman had told him on October 30 of President Johnson's intention to order a halt to all military attacks on North Viet-Nam. He added that a meeting of North Viet-Namese, South Viet-Namese, American and NLF representatives would be held in Paris not earlier than November 6. In his offer to halt all bombings, President Johnson said USA expected "prompt, productive, serious and intensive negotiations."

On November 4, a delegation of NLF, headed by Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, arrived in Paris to take part in the peace talks. The previous day (November 3), President Ho Chi-minh of North Viet-Nam said in a broadcast that North Viet-Nam's ending of a "war of destruction" was only an "initial victory" and called on the Viet-Cong to continue their offensive "unremittingly."

For several days the South Viet-Namese Government went on refusing to sit with NLF around the conference table in Paris. At last, on November 26 it was announced that the South Viet-Namese Government would attend the Paris talks. The announcement, which came after considerable American pressure, added that South Viet-Nam would take the lead and be the main spokesman on all matters "which are of principal concern" to it while, as far as the US side was concerned, the talks would not be four-sided but would comprise only two delegations. However, on November 27, the NLF spokesman, Mr. Dung Dinh Thao, said in Paris that his side would attend the talks as "an equal partner in and challenge the Saigon Government's claim to be the South's legal spokesman."

The same day (November 27, 1968), President Thieu named Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky as the overall co-ordinator at the Paris talks without actually sitting in on sessions.

Air Vice-Marshal Ky and a five-man delegation left Saigon for Paris on December 7, 1968. The delegation consisted of Mr. Nguyen Thi Vu, Mr. Vuong Van Bac, Mr. Nguyen Xuan Phong, Mr. Nguyen Ngoc Huy, and Mr. Nguyen Trieu Dan of the Prime Minister's office. The delegation was to be led at the conference by Mr. Pham Dang Lam, South Viet-Nam's, chief observer at the preliminary Paris talks.

On December 11, 1968, NLF announced nomination of Mr. Tran Buu Kiem, member of the party's Central Committee and head of its Foreign Relations Commission, as head of its eight-man delegation to the Paris talks.

In a New Year message addressed to "American friends who oppose the US imperialist war of aggression in Viet-Nam," President Ho Chi-minh of North Viet-Nam said the only honourable solution to the war was that USA shoud withdraw all its troops and those of its allies and let South Viet-Namese settle their own affairs without foreign interference and in accordance with the NLF political programme.

Following the elections in USA, changes were announced in the American delegation. On January 5, 1969 President-elect Nixon designated the US Ambassador to West Germany, Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, to replace Mr. Harriman on January 20 as delegation chief with the Attorney-General, Mr. Lawrence Walsh, succeeding Mr. Cyrus Vance as deputy. The enlarged Paris talks could not begin till then as the parties could not agree to the size of the table and seating arrangements.

A break-through in the stalemate came on January 16 when agreement was reached on the opening of the enlarged peace talks. North Viet-Nam's chief spokesman, Mr. Le, described the talks as a "round table peace conference" with four sides sitting where they chose as independent equals.

At the first session of the enlarged peace conference on January 25, North Viet-Namese and NLF delegates demanded US withdrawal, suspension of the Saigon Government and formation of a "peace cabinet" to represent Saigon in the talks. Mr. Lodge proposed immediate re-establishment of the demilitarized zone as the first step in mutual withdrawal of foreign troops from South Viet-Nam. At the end of two sessions, both sides reported "no progress."

At the third session Mr. Kiem, chief NLF negotiator, demanded the removal of the Saigon Government as a first step towards peace. Mr. Thuy of North Viet-Nam insisted that political and military matters were inseparable.

Mr. Lodge called for withdrawal of all external military forces to give South Viet-Namese room for political self-determination. Mr. Pham Dang Lam of South Viet-Nam supported Mr. Lodge's demand that the demilitarized zone be restored.

Meanwhile, the Saigon Government and the Viet-Cong agreed to a cease-fire during Tet (lunar new year), but immediately afterwards the Viet-Cong mounted attacks inflicting heavy casualties on the American side. An announcement by the US Command in South Viet-Nam said on February 27 that the latest casualties had pushed towards the 10,000 mark the number of Americans killed since the Paris talks began in May, 1968.

The talks were adjourned on March 6 after four hours (the shortest since the beginning of the enlarged session), when the South Viet-Namese delegation claimed that the Viet-Cong attacks were not conducive to a "proper atmosphere." Leaving Paris for Saigon, Air Vice-Marshal Ky said he would have no reason to return should the attacks continue. In the meantime, the US Defence Secretary, Mr. Melvin Laird, arrived in Saigon for a one-week on-the-spot assessment. He said USA might have to increase its war budget to strengthen South Viet-Namese forces.

On March 13 in Paris, Mr. Kiem said the current Viet-Cong offensive—then in its third week—would continue without let-up and warned USA against any adventurous act under the pretext of "appropriate response."

Six days later, in Washington, Mr. Laird told the Senate Armed Services Committee that USA planned to call for more funds to help South Viet-Nam modernize its armed forces in readiness for US withdrawal, but expressed belief that there would be no reduction until all North Viet-Namese troops had been withdrawn. On March 30, in a copyrighted interview with the US World and News Report, Mr. Laird expressed support for a coalition government in South Viet-Nam resulting from a free and independent election.

The North Viet-Nam News Agency said on April 28 that an American unmanned reconnaissance plane had been shot down by North Viet-Namese Ground Forces. It claimed that this had brought to 3,281 the total US aircraft shot down over the North.

Earlier, on April 27, the South Viet-Namese Government sent a protest Note to the International Truce Supervisory Commission condemning terrorist acts by North Viet-Nam resulting in the deaths of 653 civilians in March.

NLF's 10-Point Plan:

The peace talks in Paris suddenly came to life on May 8 when, for the first time since the opening of the four-party talks in January, Mr. Tran Buu Kiem, the NLF delegate, produced a detailed plan for ending the war which appeared to make important concessions to the American and South Viet-Namese points of view.

However, the first reactions to Mr. Kiem's 10-point peace plan were negative. Mr. Nguyen Xuan Phong, the South Viet-Namese delegate, said the plan contained nothing new, while Mr. Lodge insisted on the principle of "mutual withdrawal" of United States and North Viet-Namese troops, which was not included in the plan.

Mr. Kiem's 10 points were as follows:

(1) Restoration of Viet-Namese people's "fundamental national rights" as recognized by the 1954 Agreements.

(2) Withdrawal "without posing any condition whatsoever" of American and allied troops and weapons.

(3) "The question of the Viet-Namese armed forces in South Viet-Nam shall be resolved by the Viet-Namese parties among themselves."

(4) The holding of "free and democratic general elections" in South Viet-Nam for a new Constitution, and a coalition government "reflecting national concord and the broad union of all social strata."

(5) "During the period intervening between the restoration of peace and the holding of general elections, neither party shall impose its political regime on the people of South Viet-Nam.

"The political forces representing the various social strata and political tendencies in South Viet-Nam that stand for peace, independence and neutrality, including those persons who, for political reasons, have to live abroad, will enter into talks to set up a provisional coalition government based on the principle of equality, democracy and mutual respect with a view to achieving a peaceful, independent, democratic and neutral South Viet-Nam."

(6) "South Viet-Nam will carry out a foreign policy of peace and neutrality." This would include "diplomatic, economic and cultural relations with all countries, irrespective of political and social regime, including the United States", and acceptance of economic and technical aid "with no political conditions attached from any country".

(7) "The re-unification of Viet-Nam will be achieved step by step, by peaceful means, through discussions and agreement between the two zones, without foreign interference." In the meantime, the two zones would "reach agreement on the statute of the demilitarized zone, and work out modalities for movements across the provisional military demarcation line.

(8) Both zones would observe the clauses in the 1954 Agreements restraining them from joining military alliances, allowing foreign troops or bases on their soil, or recognizing the protection of any country, alliance or bloc.

(9) There should be negotiations on the release of prisoners of war (the Americans have persistently demanded this), but the United States Government must "bear full responsibility for the losses and devastations it has caused to the Viet-Namese people in both zones"' i.e. it must pay reparations.

(10) Withrawal of American and allied troops should take place under international supervision agreed between the parties.

Western diplomatic observers were inclined to see the plan as involving a change in the presentation of the NLF's position, rather than in the position itself. The plan still called for unconditional American withdrawal, and Mr. Kiem in his speech again demanded that USA "cease maintaining the present warlike, corrupt puppet administration in South Viet-Nam."

He likewise affirmed the Front's support for "the struggle of the urban population in South Viet-Nam for the replacement of Thieu-Ky-Huong", thus evidently distinguishing those Saigon leaders from the "persons of goodwill who stand for peace, independence and neutrality", with whom the Front was ready to talk.

Saigon Government's Reaction:

A Government communique issued in Saigon on May 9 said that South Viet-Nam was ready to discuss the NLF's 10-point plan.

The communique said that the proposals by the Front resembled the proposals put forward by Saigon on certain points. It added: "Discussions of these problems could be started now at the Paris peace talks or following procedures that the South Viet-Namese Government has suggested.

"These procedures would also offer an appropriate opportunity for the discussion of other basic problems. In this way, more rapid progress could be made towards an overall solution to the present conflict."

But, the communique said that "on several essential points the Communist position, which continues to be based on the five-point programme of the so-called National Liberation Front and Hanoi's four-point programme, has changed very little."

It made it clear that "their insistence on a provisional coalition Government was not acceptable to Saigon."

Fresh Attacks By Viet-Cong:

On May 12, Viet-Cong troops struck throughout South Viet-Nam with the highest number of attacks since the devastating Tet offensive of 1968.

However, the intensity and severity of the latest attacks were far below the level of those in 1968 which left the nation paralyzed for weeks.

In most of the 159 attacks reported by the US Command, the Viet-Cong unleashed rockets and mortar shells, but there were at least half-a-dozen ground assaults which resulted in heavy fighting. While the majority of the targets were allied military positions, a Govrnment spokesman said that seven provincial capitals and 21 district towns came under fire.

B. Economic Reconstruction Plan: According to a despatch from Saigon carried by The New York Times on May 12, a joint team of American and South Viet-Namese economists and consultants, in a report submitted to President Nguyen Van Thieu, has concluded that South Viet-Nam can achieve economic self-sufficiency within a decade with the assistance of $2.5 billion in foreign aid.

The amount is equivalent to the current monthly cost of the American war effort in Viet-Nam.

The team, including Mr. David E. Lilienthal, formerly of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Minister of State, Mr. Vuoe Thuc, and several other specialists submitted the report recently to the President (see page 8532).

The report suggested that South Viet-Nam's foreign assistance needs could be met by an international consortium. The authors recommended that an informal international conference be held, with the participation of several Asian nations, under the sponsorship of the Asian Development Bank. Specifically, they suggested that Japan and Formosa participate, since both countries had made a profit from war trade.

As a basic policy for the post-war period, the planners recommended an open free-enterprise economy financed largely by private investment, rather than a centrally directed system. This recommendation was based on the assumption that the ultimate peace settlement would result in a non-Communist regime in Saigon. The report did not consider the complications that might arise if a coalition or Communist-dominated government came to power.

The planners outlined a programme designed to increase the per capita income of the country by one-third and the gross national product by 50 per cent over the next ten years.

Their principal recommendations included:

(1) Interest rates should be increased immediately to encourage savings and reduce the amount of cash in circulation. while the piaster should be devalued with a "once-and-for-all" adjustment that would restore its position in the foreign exchange market.

(2) The present system of taxation, which the planners described as "basically unproductive, inequitable and inefficient," should be totally revised.

(3) The armed forces, which planners acknowledge would have to be kept at roughly the current level for at least five years, should be engaged in economically productive activities, such as road-building, when they were not required for security operations.

(4) A central institute of planning and development should be established to replace the Directorate-General of Planning, which the report said had been ineffectual, and the National Planning Council, which it said had been denied "the necessary executive support to discharge its functions."

(5) Agricultural production, particularly rice, should be stimulated with an eye towards resuming exports by the 1980s. In this connexion, the planners argued that a too-zealously applied land reform programme would have an adverse effect on the production of certain crops—such as rubber—which could not be grown economically on a small scale.

(6) Industrial production should be expanded, with the highest priority placed on products to equip the agricultural sector. The planners forecast that capital investment of $759 million would be required over an eight-year period.

(7) The nation's infra-structure—its roads, communications, railroads and ports—should be repaired and expanded in a three-phase programme that would make maximum use of the existing military facilities and maintenance equipment. The planners calculated on the assumption that the vast majority of equipment brought into the country by the allied military would be turned over to the Government.

(8) A programme of population control should be instituted "The conclusion is inescapable," the report said, "that Viet-Nam must take effective measures to limit population growth or accept reduced standards of living."

CAMBODIA

A. Relations With USA: The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, announced in Pnom Penh on April 16 that diplomatic relations would be resumed soon with the United States—beginning with an exchange of Charge d'-Affaires—following a US recognition of Cambodia's frontiers.

A subsequent US Government statement said: "The United States of America recognizes and respects the sovereignty, independence, neutrality and territorial integrity of the Kingdom of Cambodia within its present frontiers." However, observers pointed out that USA had not fully endorsed the Cambodian position on the frontiers.

[Cambodia broke diplomatic relations with the United States in 1965 on the ground that American troops had intruded into the country from South Viet-Nam. USA was accused of bombing Cambodian border villages.]

At a news conference on April 30, the Prince rejected a recent American statement on Cambodia's frontiers because, he said, reservations made by US spokesmen removed all value from the statement.

He said that recognition of Cambodia's frontiers by any other countries who had made similar reservations would also be rejected and relations with them broken immediately.

However, on May 1, the US Government re-affirmed its willingness to recognize Cambodia's present frontiers and declined to comment on Prince Norodom Sihanouk's claim that there were "reservations" in the US position.

A State Department spokesman, Mr. Robert J. McCloskey repeated that the US statement on Cambodia "speaks for itself. I have no comment and do not intend to make any comment."

Charges Made To UN:

On May 5, Cambodia protested to the UN Security Council against the violations of her territory on April 28 by one aircraft and two helicopters of the American-South Viet-Namese forces.

The protest was contained in a letter sent by Cambodia's representative to the UN, Mr. Outh Sambath.

The letter said when Cambodian ground fire shot down the helicopters, "several aircraft and helicopters intervened, again violating Cambodian air-space, to save the pilots and occupants of the machines, while ground units of American-South Viet-Namese forces strengthened their positions opposite the place in question."

The letter also denounced what it called "ignoble manoeuvres" by certain American newspapers and military men "seeking to present Cambodian positions and soldiers as foreign camps and troops on Cambodian territory to justify eventual aggression or raids against Cambodia."

B. Recognition Of East Germany And NLF: Cambodia gave full recognition to East Germany on May 8. The Government also decided the same day (April 8) to confer Ambassadorial status on the South Viet-Nam National Liberation Front's representative.

East Germany was the first Socialist State to recognize Cambodia's border and had constantly asked to be treated on a par with the Federal Republic.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk told a news conference in Pnom Penh on May 11 that the existence of the Germanies was a fact that might last for some time and Cambodia had done no more than the Soviet Union, Rumania and Yugoslavia, which had given both the East and West German Embassies equal treatment.

He said the move was in no way aimed at West Germany, a country to which Cambodia was grateful for its generous aid. He hoped that Bonn would understand and treat him as it treated Yugoslav President Tito or Rumanian Head of State Nicolae Ceausescu. He would be extremely disappointed if it were otherwise.

CEYLON

A. New Pension Scheme: A wide variety of self-employed people have started paying into a new-type pension scheme under which the contributor is not tied down to periodic premium payments. He pays what he can.

It enables, for instance, a farmer to make a big contribution after a particularly good harvest without being committed to a time for his next payment.

On the other hand, professional people like doctors and lawyers, and also probably private sector employees on fixed incomes, will make regular payments.

This "pensions for the people" scheme, inaugurated by the Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake, is operated by the State-owned Ceylon Insurance Corporation in association with the People's Bank.

Pension units are purchasable in blocks of Rs. 500 or multiples of Rs. 500. The prospective pensioner knows in advance the number of such blocks he will have to purchase to assure him of a pension of so many rupees on retirement. The minimum pension under the scheme is Rs. 600 a year.

The pensioner may at any time purchase extra blocks of Rs. 500, thus correspondingly increasing his pension entitlement. But, if he failed to pay the premia needed to ensure minimum pension, the Corporation would exercise its right to terminate the contract at pension age, refunding contributions at not less than 90 per cent of their commuted value.

The normal retiring age is 55, but the prospective pensioner may nominate any later age, with a corresponding adjustment in the premium or amount of pension.

According to the Chairman of the Ceylon Insurance Corporation, Mr. G.V.S. De Silva, the pensions policies issued for every purchase of a Rs.

500 block would never lapse. Those unable to make lump sum payments of Rs. 500 would be able to open a pension scheme savings account at any branch of the People's Bank. The deposits would earn interest and when they totalled Rs. 500 the amount would be transferred to the Insurance Corporation or the issue of a national pension policy.

If a person was not able within three years to accumulate Rs. 500 in the special savings account, the amount would be conveyed into a normal savings account.

B. Grant Of Indian Citizenship For "State-less" Persons: The High Commission of India has granted Indian citizenship to about 37,500 "Stateless" persons of Indian origin, and the Government of Ceylon to about 450 persons under the Indo-Ceylon Agreement of 1964.

This information was given by Ceylonese and Indian officials at a seminar organized by the Ceylon Workers' Congress at Colombo on April 21 and 22.

[Under the Agreement, India has accepted responsibility for the grant of citizenship to 5,25,000 and Ceylon to 3,00,000 persons together with their natural increase.]

The seminar was organized to clarify the procedural aspects of grant of citizenship by India and Ceylon and repatriation of persons granted Indian citizenship over the agreed 15-year period.

Mr. P. A. Piyasekera, Deputy Controller of the Department of Immigration and Emigration, said that in the grant of Ceylon citizenship, preference would be given to spouses of Ceylon citizens by descent and registration, persons who had applied for Ceylon citizenship under the Indian and Pakistani (Residents) Citizenship Act 20 of 1949, persons born in Ceylon and persons whose family members were already citizens of Ceylon. Length of residence in Ceylon would also be a guiding factor in considering applications.

Mr. P. L. Sinal, First Secretary, Indian High Commission, said that 8,200 persons, granted Indian citizenship under the Agreement, had gone to India. They were apparently persons with their own resources and very few of them had asked for Government assistance.

Persons granted Indian citizenship can apply to the Government of Ceylon for a Residence Permit.

Mr. M. A. J. Wanigaratne, Deputy Controller of the Department of Immigration, said that the permits would be issued for one year. Extension would be granted if the requisite number of persons had left Ceylon during the previous year under the Agreement. If the permit was not extended, the person would be given adequate time to settle his affairs.

As against 37,500 persons granted Indian citizenship, notices had been sent to 20,000 persons inviting applications for Residence Permits.

CHINA

A. Border Dispute With Soviet Union—Willingness For Talks: A Government statement issued by the official Hsinhua news agency on May 24 asserted that troops of the Soviet Union were continuing to fire into Chinese territory at the Ussuri River frontier between the two countries, but nevertheless expressed a willingness to enter into border negotiations.

The statement declared that "to this day" the firing, from light and heavy machine-guns and heavy artillery, had not ceased.

It also alleged that a Soviet representative had demanded negotiations and a Chinese withdrawal in return for a cease-fire.

The statement accused the Soviet Government of carrying out "provocations" in other sectors of the border. These were not defined, but persistent rumours have emanated from the Soviet Union of unrest along the area of the border where China's Sinkiang Province meets Soviet Kazakhstan.

However, while making these new accusations against the Soviet Government, the statement said the Chinese Government was "still ready to seek an over-all settlement of the Sino-Soviet boundary question through peaceful negotiations" and was "against resort to the use of force." It proposed that a date and place for a meeting be discussed and decided upon through diplomatic channels.

The statement came in response to a Soviet proposal on March 29 for wide-ranging border talks, which Moscow had followed up with another call for a meeting on April 12.

According to Hsinhua, on April 14 "the Chinese Government told the Soviet Government in explicit terms: we will give you a reply, please calm down a little and do not get excited."

Talks On Navigation:

Earlier, on May 23, replying to a Chinese proposal made two weeks earlier, the Soviet Union suggested June 18 as the starting date for talks by the Joint Navigation Commission of Frontier Rivers.

[The Commission, set up in the 1960s to deal with problems arising out of the use of the rivers that serve as the frontier in the Far East, held its last session in 1967. On April 28, the Russians sent a telegram to the Chinese proposing that the Commission meet again.]

The Soviet suggestion was seen by observers as a bid to negotiate differences over the river frontier that had reached a climax during the fighting on the Ussuri River island of Damansky, or Chen Pao to the Chinese.

The Soviet telegram proposed Khabarovsk, near the Amur River, as the site for the talks and blamed the Chinese for their failure to hold a meeting last year.

On May 11, the Chinese replied to the Russians, denying that they were responsible for the break-off of talks and proposing mid-June for their resumption. The Chinese accepted Khabarovsk as the site, but named it as "Po Li"—the Chinese name for the city.

Izvestia, the Soviet Government newspaper, printed the text of the telegram sent on May 23 by Mr. A. Smirnov, head of the Soviet side of the mixed Commission, to his counterpart, Mr. Chen Fa-ping. Mr. Smirnov said that the 1967 meeting, held in Harbin (China) had produced no results, because "the Chinese side tried to put on the agenda questions outside the competence of the Commission." He added: "The Chinese side did not show willingness to hold the meeting last year." This was a reference to Chinese efforts to pressure the Russians to admit that all the Soviet Far Eastern territory in principle rightly belongs to the Chinese.

B. Big Economic Progress Claimed: The official Hsinhua news agency on May 11 reported a newspaper article in which the author claimed that big increases in both agricultural and industrial production had been made since 1949 when the People's Republic was established.

It said that in the 19 years which had elapsed after the People's Republic was founded, industrial production had gone up more than a dozen times, while agricultural crops had risen several-fold. During this period, "earth-shaking changes" had been wrought in China's national economy. No output figures were, however, made public.

The claim about the country's economic progress was made in an article carried by the authoritative People's Daily acclaiming China as a country with neither internal nor external debts.

The author of the article was identified only as Tasi Cheng.

In expanding its industrial structure, it said, China had established such new branches of production as building of aircraft, motor vehicles and tractors and in the fields of electronics, petroleum and chemicals. An independent and fairly comprehensive modern industrial system was taking shape in the country. (Although the extent of industrial expansion claimed, namely, over a dozen times, sounds very impressive, it must be remembered that China had very few industries to speak of before the Communists took over.)

The article said that even when China had to take foreign loans during the early years of the Communist rule, only a limited amount of national bonds had been issued and a small amount of foreign loans taken.

It quoted Marshal Lin Piao, Mr. Mao's designated successor, as telling the recent Ninth Congress of the Chinese Communist Party that by the end of 1968 the Government had redeemed all national bonds. China was reported to have repaid debts to the Soviet Union about five years ago.

The income from State-owned enterprises made up more than 90 per cent of the country's total financial income.

The article added that China had made new studies in industrial production by setting up new branches of industry for building aircraft, motor vehicles and tractors and in the fields of electronics, petroleum and chemicals.

The article compared China with India, USA, the Soviet Union and Mongolia, which it said were heavily in debt. "It ideally reflects the absolute superiority of our country's socialist system, and the economic vitality of new China" under Mr. Mao's leadership. "The majority" of the countries ruled by "imperialism, revisionism and reaction" were heavily in debt and were confronted with growing political and economic crises.

C. Mr. Mao Tse-tung Receives Diplomats: Mr. Mao Tse-tung and Marshal Lin Piao set up a new diplomatic precedent on May 1 when they received a number of newly appointed foreign Ambassadors on Tien An Men rostrum in Peking during a May Day parade.

Never before had newly appointed foreign Ambassadors been formally received by the Communist Party Chairman in such a public place. Receptions were always held in Mr. Mao's residence or working place. Why the Tien An Men rostrum was selected for him to greet the new Ambassadors was not quite clear.

Received on this occasion were the new Ambassadors from Albania, Pakistan, Cambodia, Zambia, Sweden, Congo (Brazzaville), Tanzania and Guinea. Of the eight Ambassadors, those from Albania, Pakistan, Cambodia, Sweden, Congo and Guinea were accompanied by their wives. Present at all these receptions was the Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, who is also a member of the Standing Committee of the Chinese Communist Party Politburo and Mr. Kang Sheng, another member of the Standing Committee.

HONG KONG

A. Remission Of Sentences On Communist Prisoners: The Governor, Sir David Trench, signed on May 9 warrants allowing remission of sentences on 11 Communist prisoners jailed for offences in 1967.

The remissions meant that all Communist Press workers would be freed this year. After the 1967 disturbances they had been sentenced to over four years' imprisonment.

Among them was Mr. Wong Chak, one of the 11 journalists and Press workers whose arrest was considered to have led to the house arrest of the Reuter news agency correspondent, Mr. Anthony Grey, in Peking in July, 1967. Mr. Chak's sentence was due to expire in February, 1970. He is now expected to be released in September or October this year. The other 10 persons will be released about the same time.

Foreign Office officials in Britain said that the clemency move was part of a general review of 143 cases in Hong Kong involving prison terms exceeding four years for participation in the 1967 disorders.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Indian Envoys In West Asia Meet; Constitution And Presidential Take-over At Centre; CPI(M) Criticizes Chinese Communist Party; Kerala Cabinet Rift; CPI Red Guards; Jana Sangh-Swatantra-BKD Merger Talks; P-SP Resolutions.

A. Conference Of Indian Envoys To West Asia And North Africa: Addressing a five-day conference of Indian Ambassadors in the countries of West Asia and North Africa in New Delhi on May 27, the External Affairs Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, said that what "remains to be settled" in the Kashmir issue "is the continued occupation of a part of Kashmir as a result of Pakistan's aggression which India had referred to the UN."

He blamed Pakistan's obdurate adherence to "outmoded ideas for a religious State" for her recurrent troubles and said even the Kashmir question represented in the final analysis "the inherent dichotomy" between the approaches of India and Pakistan—secularism and theocracy. Therefore, there should be no doubt in the mind of any one of there being any settlement (with Pakistan) by India giving away Kashmir.

He said that it would be difficult for India to revise her policy of not establishing diplomatic relations with Israel, though recognizing it as a sovereign State, until there was "a revision of her wrong policies against the Arabs, particularly the Palestinians".

He referred to the "difficulties" President Nasser was facing in the Arab world and called for "a continuous effort to forge unity among the progressive forces and the will of peoples of these areas to remain independent". Unless this was done, there was the danger of the progressive forces being isolated and put into great difficulty.

Mentioning that the countries of West Asia and the North Africa region constituted one single bloc of Islamic nations, he said even when India was being divided on a religious basis and when the entire atmosphere was supercharged with violence and hatred, India's leaders, Mahatma Gandhi and Mr. Nehru, had played a historic role in maintaining a certain balance in the country. They had succeeded in preserving the secular and democratic structure in free India against tremendous odds. This was no mean achievement and could not be taken for granted after two decades.

Decisions:

On May 28, a series of concrete measures in the fields of economic, cultural and political relations were spelt out by the conference of Indian Ambassadors in West Asia and North Africa to bring India closer to the individual countries in this area.

As had been the tendency in the past couple of years, the conference laid emphasis on the development of trade and economic relations between India and the countries of this region. A pre-requisite of this, which the conference recognized, was building up of an image of India as a country with a broad industrial base capable of establishing economic relations on the more sophisticated levels. To do this, the conference felt that export houses should set up showrooms in different countries and that the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry should send a delegation to the region to convey a comprehensive idea of the industrial progress made in India.

The conference decided that India should participate in the Asian Trade Fair at Tehran as well as in Algeria. It recommended that consideration should be given for the establishment of warehousing facilities in free ports so that the supplies were readily available in the region.

The Ambassadors were also of the view that the establishment of a direct shipping line with the countries of the region would promote exports.

B. Australian Collaboration In Sheep Farming: The Indian and Australian Governments agreed on May 29 to co-operate in the establishment of a large sheep breeding farm near Hissar in Haryana.

The aim of the project is to breed high-quality sheep in numbers large enough to have a significant impact on meat and wool production in India.

The farm will provide pure-bred Australian Corriedale sheep for cross-breeding with indigenous sheep at Central and State Government farms in other parts of India. The high-quality crossbred sheep from these farms will be distributed through extension centres.

The Hissar farm will also provide training in sheep husbandry, including training for extension officers to ensure that sheep owners get the maximum benefit from the scheme.

C. Possibilities Of India-Colombia Joint Industrial Projects: It was disclosed in New Delhi on May 23 that India and Colombia had agreed in principle to study the possibilities of joint industrial projects.

The two countries also agreed that studies conducive to the signing of a Trade Agreement between the two countries should be finalized in the shortest possible time.

A declaration signed by an Indian economic and trade mission on a visit to Latin American countries, with the Government of Colombia, also underlined the interests of the two countries in increasing mutual trade.

D. Nepalese Subsidiary Of IOC Formed: The Central Cabinet formally approved on May 27 the formation of a Nepalese subsidiary of the State-owned Indian Oil Corporation, the first such foreign venture IOC had begun.

The formation of a subsidiary became necessary in view of the Nepalese Government's insistence in this regard. The Nepalese Government did not want a wholly Indian-owned company to operate in that country. It was to meet this objection that the Indian Government agreed to the formation of a subsidiary company with an element of Nepalese participation in it.

The new company will control distribution and marketing of IOC's petroleum products in Nepal. IOC, even now, is the largest single marketing and distribution net-work in Nepal.

E. Presidential Take-over Of Central Administration Not Envisaged By Constitution: Speaking over All-India Radio on May 28, the Law Minister, Mr. P. Govinda Menon, maintained that the Constitution did not envisage any take-over of the Central Administration by the President.

In his view, the President, as the King or Queen in the United Kingdom, could not carry on the administration without the advice of a Council of Ministers. The President would be going "out of his way" if he were to dismiss a Ministry.

Mr. Menon told a questioner that the President's position as the supreme commander of the armed forces was "symbolic and notional" and it did not give him any special powers to govern the country with the help of the armed forces.

He said the UK convention, under which the Queen or the King, as the case might be, could not function without the aid and help of the Cabinet, would apply to the Centre but not the States. There was a definite provision for President's Rule in the Constitution about States under certain circumstances.

On Centre-State relations, he agreed that a "national dialogue" to remove irritants would be good, but pointed out that "none of the statesmen of the States" had identified so far the issues on which they would want constitutional amendments.

As regards financial relations between the Centre and the States, he favoured the idea of a "permanent finance commission," but was of the view that there was little scope for amending the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution which specified the spheres of taxation. He said there could be no consensus regarding transfer of any one of the Central sources of revenue to the States as this would impoverish many States. "I am sure," he said, '"that the Deputy Chief Minister of West Bengal and the Chief Minister of Kerala, although they both belong to the Marxist Party, will not and cannot come to an agreement regarding the transfer of income-tax from the Centre to the States."

[Prev. ref. 8115:INI:T, 8270:INI:G, 8399:INI:N]

F. CPI(M) Criticizes Chinese Communist Party: The CPI(M), in its Politburo statement on the Ninth Congress of the Communist Party of China (CPC), in Calcutta on May 28 implied that the CPC had ceased to be a Communist Party. It characterized the CPC as a party built on "faith" rather than "the science of Marxism" and "the principle of democratic centralism."

The CPI (M) also made it clear that it had "broad agreement" with the CPC's general line as enunciated in the latter party's letter to the Communist Party of the Soviet Union on June 14, 1963. The recent Congress proceedings had suggested that the CPC had deviated from this "general line" and hence from Marxism-Leninism.

What had angered the CPI(M) so much were two CPC documents —Marshal Lin Piao's report and the party's new constitution (see page 8968). Giving its own emphasis in italics, the CPI(M) statement quoted the constitution as saying: "Comrade Lin Piao is Comrade Mao Tse-tung's close comrade-in-arms and successor." The CPI (M) also found that the CPC had fanatically desired to elevate Mr. Mao to the rank of Marx and Lenin. Naming Marshal Lin Piao as successor to Mao in the party constitution appeared "really strange and monstrous" to the CPI(M). This amounted to replacing the democratic principle of election of leaders by the principle of succession, according to the CPI(M).

While accepting Mr. Mao's great contribution towards the success of the revolution in China, the CPI (M) found no reason why the thoughts of Mr. Mao should be added to Marxism-Leninism with a hyphen. The CPI(M) statement quoted liberally from Lenin to show that Mr. Mao, in putting forward the theory of continuing the revolution under the dictatorship of the proletariat, had not contributed anything new but had only followed what Lenin had stated and Stalin practised.

The CPI(M) also sought to find reasons for the decline of "a great revolutionary party" like the CPC. The statement said that the CPC had been committing grave mistakes because "it is in the course of a life-and-death struggle" created by the contemporary geo-political situation. The CPC had the task of building socialism in a huge and under-developed country and it faced "the most vicious blockade organized by the world imperialists on the one hand and the extremely strained relations with the Soviet Union under its present revisionist leaders on the other". C. Kerala Cabinet Rift—Mr. P. K. Kunju Resigns: The resignation of the Kerala Finance Minister, Mr. P. K. Kunju, plunged the State into a Cabinet crisis on May 13.

The Marxist Chief Minister, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, told newsmen that he had accepted the resignation of Mr. Kunju, and would take over the Finance portfolio. He also said that he would soon order a judicial probe of corruption charges against Mr. Kunju under the Commission of Inquiries Act.

He said that he had found no prima facie case against the KTP Minister, Mr. B. Wellingdon, and the Marxist Minister, Mr. M. K. Krishnan. It was after examining the papers laid on the table of the Assembly that he had come to this conclusion. He affirmed that he was prepared to re-open any case if more tenable evidence was supplied against the Ministers.

Mr. Kunju told newsmen later that he would have resigned immediately after receiving the Chief Minister's official letter asking him to resign. But he had waited for the decision of the Co-ordination Committee which had met during the last two days and ended in confusion.

He added that it was necessary on his part to prove his honesty. He had made many sacrifices in the political field for nearly 40 years, and had always acted with integrity and unselfishness. He alleged that Mr. Namboodiripad did not even extend to him the courtesy of discussing the allegations against him.

He said the Chief Minister had set a precedent in the matter in 1968 when allegations were made against the CPI Minister, Mr. T. V. Thomas. Mr. Namboodiripad had then announced that Mr. Thomas' party would decide on any action necessary against him.

In reply to Mr. Kunju's statement, Mr. Namboodiripad said the allegations against Mr. Thomas were political. There was a difference between corruption charges and political allegations. There could be a compromise on political issues but not on corruption.

He said he had examined the statement regarding the assets and the liabilities of Mr. Kunju and also the papers laid on the table of the Assembly. He had then sought and obtained a clarification in writing from Mr. Kunju. He thought no personal talk with Mr. Kunju was necessary.

Inquiry Commission:

Mr. Justice P. Govinda Menon, a retired Judge of the Kerala High Court, was appointed on June 5 as the one-man Commission to inquire into allegations raised in the Assembly against Mr. P. K. Kunju, who resigned as Finance Minister on May 13.

Mr. Justice Menon was requested to submit his report by September 30, 1969.

The Chief Minister, Mr. E.M. S. Namboodiripad, announced on June 5 that he had not found on examination any basis for the allegations of corruption made on the floor of the Assembly against the Health Minister, Mr. B. Willingdon and the Forest Minister, Mr. M. K. Krishnan.

Kerala United Front Differences:

The Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, admitted to a correspondent in Calcutta on May 22 that the United Front in Kerala was facing a crisis. "After all, when two of its constituents threaten to walk out, you cannot call it anything short of a crisis."

He would not, however, like to forecast how events might develop in Kerala. Nor would he give his own assessment as to how much of this crisis could be attributed to a desperate bid on behalf of all the partners to expand and consolidate themselves politically and organizationally. He brushed aside questions by saying: "I would not like to enter into that question at this stage."

Asked how serious was the threat to the UF, he said that that depended on the seriousness with which CPI and JSP would pursue their threats. He took particular note in this connexion of the CPI's declaration that if the 13 points raised by it were not given effect to within the next three months, it would quit the Front to make it clear that some of these points involved basic policy issues on which "we CPI (M) can never compromise". However, there were a few others which were factually correct and, therefore, could be discussed; in fact, he himself had initiated certain steps in regard to these.

One of the points on which the CPI(M) saw no scope for compromise related to large-scale mechanization of agricultural operations. The CPI Minister in charge of Agriculture, Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair, according to Mr. Namboodiripad, maintained that for increasing food production, large-scale mechanization was necessary. Considering the back-log of unemployment in the State, he said, CPI(M) believed that mechanization would result in large-scale unemployment in the at local levels agreements had been reached between farmers and agricultural workers on the limited use of mechanical devices like tractors. But as a matter of policy, CPI (M) could not agree to large-scale mechanization.
